Mr. Perkins. I opened the Body on the 4th of May, and, on Inspection, I found one Wound about an Inch and an Half Diameter; on the lower Part of the Left Side, it passed through the Spine of the Os Ilium, about an Inch and an Half below the Ridge of the Hip-bone; I put in my Probe seven or eight Inches, by which, and likewise upon Inspection, I found it run horizontal, a little upon the ascending. I put my two Fingers into the Cavity of the Bone, and shewed the Jury how it was; and observed on the contrary Side four or five Blisters, which I think to be occasioned by the Force of the Powder from the other Side; but the Shot did not go through the Skin.

Court. I ask you, whether these Blisters were higher or lower than the Wound?

Perkins. Four or five Inches higher, my Lord.
Mr. Brown. Do you think these Blisters were occasioned by the Shot?
Perkins. I apprehend they were, because there were no other Blisters on any other Part of the Body.

[Mr. King the Coroner called again.]

Q. Was any Application made to you, at any Time, to send Mr. Annesley a Prisoner to Newgate?

Mr. King. Yes, I think it was Mr. Giffard; he came along with another Gentleman, whose Name, I think, is Carrington.

Q. What, Captain Carrington?

King. I believe it was: I said, I think the Gentleman is secure enough (there was a Lord mentioned, but I cannot remember that he was named: Mr. Giffard wisely kept him from saying who it was): I thought it was too severe to send him to Newgate; and said, that Sir Thomas Reynolds was the Justice of Peace who committed him, and he had taken sufficient Care about it.

[Paul Keating sworn.]

Q. Do you know any thing of Egglestone?

Keating. Yes.

Q. Where did you come acquainted with him?

Keating. At the White Horse in Piccadilly.

Q. What Countryman are you?

Keating. I came from Ireland on board a Merchantman from Waterford: I was recommended to the Earl of Anglesea, to say what I know as a Witness about the Estate.

Q. How came you to the White Horse?

Keating. There was one Lawler, that came over in the same Ship. When I came to Town, I went and inquired for him at the Earl of Anglesea's, and he sent me to the White Horse in Piccadilly to live, and there I came acquainted with Egglestone.

Q. After your Acquaintance, do you remember any Conversation with him, about what he was to have for swearing in this Cause?

Keating. I do, my Lord, remember mighty well; a little Time after he came to the Inn, he and I got acquainted together, and went out a-walking to see the Town, and particularly on a Sunday Morning; the Sunday after he came to Piccadilly.

Q. What Month was that in?

Keating. In the Month of May: I believe it was the second Sunday in May. As we were walking abroad, I asked him how he came to live there; says he, I am here at the Expence of the Earl of Anglesea.

Court. This is not proper: If you can call any body to contradict Egglestone you may; but this is reflecting upon a noble Person's Character.

Q. Did he tell you how he came to be at that Inn?

Keating. He told me, that Mr. Williams, who keeps the White Horse, brought him from Staines; and that he should be very well provided for, if he would prosecute the Gentleman who is now in Custody for this Murder; and he desired I might contrive some way that he might get the Money secured; and I wrote two or three Drafts of Notes for 200 l. and he took Copies of them.

Q. How came he to take Copies of them?

Keating. Because I did not care my Hand should be known. I have a Copy of one of them in my Pocket. [Reads.]

I Promise to pay to Mr. Thomas Egglestone [that is his elder Brother] or his Order, at or upon the 10th Day of June next, the Sum of 200 l. Sterling, for Value received from his deceased Father and him in Carpenters Work, &c. Witness my Hand this 10th Day of May, 1742.

This was to be signed either by Williams, or my Lord Anglesea.

Q. Do you know of any Discourse with Patrick Lawler?

Keating. Yes; he is my Lord Anglesea's Servant.

Court. What Lawler said is not Evidence, unless to contradict him, and he has not been examined.

Q. Have you ever seen the Earl of Anglesea at the White Horse?

Keating. He is there often.

Q. What, has the Earl of Anglesea any Thing to do there?

Keating. His Coach and Horses are kept there.

Q. How long have they stood there?

Keating. They stand there constantly.

Mr. Serj. Gapper. What was that Note for?

Keating. It is only a Copy of what I wrote for Egglestone; for, as I told the Court before, I did not care that my Hand should be seen in any such Thing as Bribery and Corruption.

Mr. Serj. Gapper. Where was this Note signed?

Keating. I cannot say whether it was signed or not; he told me it was to be signed.

Q. Did not you put this into Egglestone's Head?

Keating. No, upon my Oath, I did not.

Mr. Brown. Did not you receive Money to go somewhere, and you and he went and spent the Money?

Keating. I received a Crown to go to Woolwich.

Q. How came you not to go to Woolwich?

Keating. I had not a mind to go.

Mr. Serj. Gapper. So you had a mind to make Egglestone drunk with this Crown?—Keating. That is a different Case.

Q. Did not you treat him?—Keating. Yes, I did.

Q. What Reason had you to treat him?

Keating. Because he had no Money of his own.

Mr. Serj. Gapper. So you had a Crown to go to Woolwich, and did not go?—Keating. I did not go, indeed.

The Evidence for the Prisoners being gone through,

Court. If the Jury should be of Opinion that the Gun went off by Accident, the Homicide must, in Point of Law, be either Manslaughter, or Chance-Medley: I should be glad, in that Case, to make it Chance-Medley; but, in order to that, it must appear, that what Mr. Annesley was doing was perfectly lawful, otherwise he will be guilty of Manslaughter.

The other Prisoner, Redding, had certainly, by virtue of his Deputation, and by force of the Acts of Parliament made for the Preservation of the Game, Authority to seize the Deceased, who was clearly acting in Violation of those Laws. But it is doubtful whether the Authority of a Game-Keeper, being personal, the other Prisoner acted lawfully in assisting him.

The Substance of the Arguments by the Counsel for the Prisoners (viz. Mr. Hume Campbell, Mr. Serj. Hayward, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Wyrley, and Mr. Smith) was as follows.

My Lord, although a Game-Keeper's Authority be personal, we submit to your Lordship, that, as the Deceased was confessedly doing an unlawful Act, Mr. Annesley's catching at the String of the Net, which the Deceased had thrown away, and which might be only to prevent its falling into the Water, was not such a Trespass in him, as will alter the Nature of the Consequence, and make that Manslaughter, which appears to have been, in fact, a most unfortunate Accident.

We humbly apprehend, My Lord, that it is not necessary, that the Act Mr. Annesley was about, when the Accident happened, should be strictly legal; if it was an Act of an indifferent Nature, not an unlawful one, we hope it will be sufficient to excuse him from the Guilt of Manslaughter.

If a Man throws a Stone into a Place of publick Resort, and kills another, that will be Manslaughter, because the Act itself was unlawful, supposing that dismal Consequence had not followed it.

But if a Man is playing at Bowls, and undesignedly kills another, there, as the first Act was of an indifferent Nature, the Law will not impute the Accident consequential to it as a Crime.

As to Mr. Annesley's entering the Close that belonged to Sylvester, whatever it might be with regard to him, it was an Act of an indifferent Nature with respect to the Deceased, who claimed no Property in the Ground, and consequently had no more Right to be there than Mr. Annesley, unless you will suppose him to have had the Owner's Consent, which, as it was not proved, may and ought, with equal Justice, to be supposed in Favour of the Prisoner.

The young Man's Evidence being put out of the Case (and considering the Manner in which he contradicted himself, and has been contradicted by others, what he says, we apprehend, ought to stand for nothing), Mr. Annesley's Act appears to be no more than stooping to prevent the String of the Net from falling into the River; in doing of which, suppose a Pistol had gone off in his Pocket, would it not be the hardest Case in the World, to say that this Accident should make him guilty of Manslaughter?

But allowing it necessary that the Act Mr. Annesley was doing must be lawful, we hope to shew your Lordship, that Mr. Annesley's Interposition in this Case was so.

There are two Acts of Parliament relating to the Game applicable to this Case; the one made in the 22d and 23d Years of Charles II. Chap. 25. and the other in the 4th and 5th Years of William and Mary, Chap. 23.

The first recites, that divers disorderly Persons, laying aside their lawful Trades, betake themselves to the stealing of Conies, Hares, Pheasants, Partridges, and other Game, with Nets and other Engines.

For Remedy whereof it enacts, That all Lords of Manours may, by Writing under their Hands and Seals, authorize one or more Game-Keeper or Game-Keepers, within their Manours; who, being so authorized, may seize such Nets, or other Engines, as shall be used by any Person or Persons prohibited to keep or use the same.

Then it recites, that divers idle, disorderly, and mean People do betake themselves to the stealing of Fish out of Ponds, and other several Waters and Rivers, to the great Damage of the Owners thereof.

Therefore it enacts, That if any Person or Persons shall use a Casting-Net in any River, &c. without the Consent of the Lord or Owner of the said Water; and being thereof convicted before any Justice of the Peace, shall give the Owner such Satisfaction (not exceeding treble Damages) as the Justice shall appoint, or be committed to the House of Correction. And that it shall be lawful for the Justice to destroy all such Nets, or other Engines, wherewith such Offenders shall be taken or apprehended.

The other Act of Parliament recites, That divers good and necessary Laws had been made for Preservation of the Game; notwithstanding which, or for want of the due Execution thereof, the Game had been very much destroyed by many idle Persons, who afterwards betake themselves to Robberies, Burglaries, or other like Offences, and neglect their lawful Employments.

For Remedy whereof it enacts, That no Person or Persons shall have or keep any Net or Engine for taking of Fish, except the Owner or Occupier of a River or Fishery. And that it shall be lawful for such Owner or Occupier, and all and every other Person or Persons, by him or them for that Purpose appointed, to seize, detain, and keep, to his and their own Use and Uses, every Net or Engine which they shall find used, or in the Custody or Possession of any Person or Persons whatsoever, fishing in any River without the Consent of the Owner or Occupier.

Now the Question which your Lordship puts upon us to argue, is, Whether a Person duly authorized under these Acts of Parliament, being resisted in the Execution of his Office, can legally call any other Person to his Assistance?

Your Lordship will consider we are arguing in favour of Life, and therefore will construe these Laws in the most beneficial Manner for the Prisoner, and the rather, because such Construction will tend to put the Laws themselves in force, which were intended for securing Men in their Property from the Violation of idle and disorderly Persons.

These Acts suppose the Offenders to be desperate People; for it describes them to be such as afterwards betake themselves to Robberies and Burglaries; and likewise supposes (what is also true in fact) that they go in Numbers to destroy the Game.

That Circumstance seems to imply, that a Game-Keeper, or other Person duly appointed, may, in such Cases, call in other Persons to his Assistance.

To construe the Law otherwise, would render it ineffectual; for it is absurd to suppose, that every Lord of a Manour, or Owner of a Fishery, should appoint as many Game-Keepers as there may be Persons inclined to invade his Property. This would entirely tend to defeat the Security intended by the Law, and therefore can never be agreeable to the Meaning of the Legislators.

As these are late Acts of Parliament, it cannot be expected that we should produce Cases directly in Point, and Resolutions of the Judges, on the Construction of those Acts in this Question.

But suppose, upon some of the Acts of Parliament made against Smugglers, an Officer of the Revenue, or at the Common-Law a Constable, being

being resisted in the Execution of his Office, calls in other Persons in the Neighbourhood to his Assistance, and Mischief or Death ensues; might not those Persons avail themselves of the Authority vested in the Officer or Constable, so as to be justified in what they do, for the manifest Support and Execution of the Law?

A Man has undoubtedly a Right to drive away Cattle, which he finds Damage faitant in his Ground. Suppose then he should desire a Stranger to assist him, could the Owner of the Cattle maintain an Action against the Stranger for the Trespass, in driving his Cattle?

Suppose, in the present Case, the Deceased had not unfortunately been killed, and had brought an Action against the Prisoners for an Assault, might not the Defendants (one of which was Game-Keeper) have pleaded specially, and justified under the Act of Parliament? And surely, whatever in Pleading would have been a Justification in such a Case as this, will be a sufficient Excuse.

But we apprehend, that, in all Cases where the Law makes Offences punishable by Justices of the Peace, whoever sees a Person committing such an Offence, has a Right, without any special Authority, to take him up, and carry him, together with the Instrument of his Offence, before a Justice, in order to his Conviction; and that whatever is necessary for this Purpose is lawful.

If this was not Law, Offenders would, in most Cases, escape with Impunity; for, observing themselves to be discovered, they would hardly stay till the Observer could resort to a proper Authority; and, being mean and unknown Persons, might never afterwards be found.

Even the young Man, who was so very forward in giving his Evidence, admits that his Father and he were actually fishing; that is, committing an Offence against these Acts of Parliament; that Redding, who had a legal Authority, came up first to the Deceased, and demanded the Net; that the Deceased refused to deliver it; and that, whilst they were struggling for the Net, Mr. Annesley came up and snatched at it.

Upon the Whole, we hope Mr. Annesley was well warranted to go to Redding's Assistance; and that the unhappy Accident, that fell out at that Time, shall not be imputed to him as a Crime, but construed to be no more than Chance-Medley.

The Substance of the Arguments by the Counsel for the Prosecutor, viz. Mr. Serj. Gapper, Mr. Serj. Wynne, Mr. Brown, and Mr. Johnson, was as follows:

My Lord, the Counsel for the Prisoners have undertaken to justify under two Acts of Parliament.

As to the 22d and 23d of Charles II. we beg Leave to observe, that the Clause empowering Lords of Manours to appoint Game-Keepers, with Authority to seize Nets, does not extend to Fisheries. The Clause which relates to Fishing, only directs that the Offenders shall be punished, upon Conviction, before a Justice of Peace; but does not empower any one to seize either them or their Nets. The regular Way, undoubtedly, is to lay a Complaint before a Justice of the Peace, who is to grant his Warrant for apprehending the Offender, and then, upon Conviction, he may destroy the Net. Besides, it was sworn by old Redding, that this was his Fishery; if so, Sir John Dolben had no Authority at all to appoint a Game-Keeper to take care of it, and, consequently, even the Deputation itself is void.

But if it was not void, yet still the Power is personal, and cannot be delegated to another, and therefore cannot serve to excuse Mr. Annesley, who appears to have acted officiously, without being called upon by any Body.

As to the other Act of Parliament, the 4th and 5th of William and Mary, that no ways relates to Game-Keepers; but only impowers the Owners or Occupiers of Fisheries, or Persons by them for that Purpose appointed, to seize the Nets; so that this Power is confined to old Redding himself, and it does not appear he has appointed either of the Prisoners; and therefore, as they had no Authority at all, they were Trespassers, and must answer for the Consequences.

As to the liberal Construction of the Acts of Parliament, which the Gentlemen contend for, we say, that, at the Common Law, every Man had a Right to fish in Rivers; and consequently those Statutes are an Abridgment of the Common Law, and therefore to be strictly construed. By the same Rule of Construction, which they insist upon, any Man may claim a Right to come every Day, and search another's House for Nets and Engines for destroying of Game. But what Murders, besides other Inconveniences, must be the Consequence of such an unlimited Power, we leave all the World to judge.

We admit that this is a new Case, and therefore the Cases put of a Constable, whose Office is as ancient as any in the Kingdom, are by no means parallel. We insist, therefore, that the Prisoners, at least Mr. Annesley, having been Wrong-doers, must answer for the Consequence, which being the Death of one of his Majesty's Subjects, make them guilty of Manslaughter, supposing the Gun went off by Accident.

Then Mr. Hume Campbell said in Reply:

My Lord, I beg Leave to trouble you with a few Words, on Behalf of the unhappy Gentleman who stands charged before you with a Crime which affects his Life.

If that Consequence was the Motive for the Charge, he may rely upon the Justice of this Court as his Security; to your Justice he has surrendered himself, and equally trusts in that and his Innocence.

In arguing the Point now before the Court, I may take it for granted, that the Gun went off by Accident, without Mr. Annesley's knowing it; and only consider, whether his interposing to assist Redding was or was not lawful.

My Lord, I take it for a general Rule, that all Persons, on Request, not only may, but are bound by their Duty and Allegiance, to assist legal Officers in the Execution of their Duty.

I shall not repeat any of the Evidence; the Court will remember, that a Request of the Game-Keeper's, or what amounts to such, has been proved.

I mentioned the Case of a Constable, which the Gentlemen of the other Side endeavour to distinguish from that of a Game-Keeper, by saying, that his Power is great, and that his Office is very ancient. I admit both these Positions; but insist, that his Power does not arise from the Antiquity, but from the Legality of his Office.

A Game-Keeper is a legal Officer, particularly appointed under the Acts of Parliament for the Preservation of the Game: He is for that Purpose fully empowered to put the Laws, relating to the Game, in Execution; Nobody can legally resist him, and consequently the Deceased and his Son were doubly criminal; first, in breaking the Law, and then in resisting the legal Officer, who came to put that Law in force.

What did Mr. Annesley do in this Case? He stooped to take up the Net, which the Deceased had unlawfully thrown into the Water, to prevent the Game-Keeper from seizing it.

Egglesstone had abandoned it; and will any one maintain, that when a Trespasser throws away the Instrument of his Crime, it is unlawful in another Person to take it up? Nay, the Assistant of him to whom the Statute gives it?

They say a Man may as well go every Day into People's Houses, under Pretence of searching for Nets, &c. No, they cannot do that by Law; every Man's House is his Castle; and the Law has provided, that he shall not be molested there without a special Authority. Nor is there the same Reason for that, as there is for seizing Offenders in the actual Commission of the Offence. The very Case they put, implies the Offender may be found and come at by the ordinary Forms; but in the other, he may not be known, and will hardly stay till you apply for a Warrant to apprehend him.

So that the Necessity of the Thing makes that reasonable and lawful in the one Case, which, for Want of that Necessity, is not so in the other.

That a special Authority, my Lord, is not necessary in all Cases, will hardly be disputed; a Constable, if the Law is broke in his Presence, may, by Virtue of his general Power, take Cognizance of the Offence, and arrest the Offender.

In the present Case, the Game-Keeper, who is a legal Officer, and in Nature of a Constable for this particular Purpose, saw the Deceased fishing, and consequently had a Right, without any special Warrant, to seize him, and when resisted, to call Mr. Annesley to his Assistance.

It is said, the Acts of Parliament are an Abridgment of the Common Law, and therefore should be construed strictly. My Lord, no Man, by the Common Law, had a Right to fish in another's Property. It was an Offence at the Common Law; it is Malum in se; and the Statutes, that have been mentioned, only make that Offence punishable by a Justice of Peace; as they tend therefore to secure the Property which a Man had at the Common Law, they are an Addition to the Common Law, fixing a Punishment for the Breach of Law; and therefore to be so construed, as will best answer so salutary an End.

If it is a new Case, as the Gentlemen seem to lay a Stress upon it, let us consider what will be the Consequence of your Lordship's Determination, if it should be against us.

The Law, my Lord, I apprehend, will become vain and idle; for if Offenders get together in any Number, it will be impossible for a Game-Keeper to restrain them.

Nay, my Lord, the Law itself will become a Snare to all who have not the Act of Parliament in their Pocket, to tell them they must not interfere; for suppose a Person, legally appointed under an Act of Parliament, going to do his Duty, is resisted, can it be imagined that his Fellow-Servant, his Neighbour, or his Friend, would not think himself justified, nay bound to assist him, when he sees his Authority thus trampled upon?

At most, my Lord, it could be only an imprudent Act in Mr. Annesley to interpose; but we hope your Lordship will not construe it to be such an unlawful Act as will make him a Trespasser, and so guilty of Manslaughter.

Your Lordship will please to observe, that it depends intirely on the Credit of Egglesstone, whether this Gentleman did any Thing or not. Before your Lordship directs the Jury as to this, it is my Duty to acquaint your Lordship, that there is an Indictment on the Coroner's Inquest, and likewise an Indictment on the Black Act, against the Prisoner Mr. Annesley.

Court. That is for shooting maliciously: But there is no Evidence tending that Way.

Mr. Serj. Gap. My Lord, we desire to call some Evidence to support the Character of John Egglesstone.

Q. For what? We have called no Witness to impeach it.

Court. Have you not examined every Witness that has appeared to the Boy's Character? If you could have called more, it is to be supposed you would have done it.

[John Gardner sworn.]

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Do you know this young Egglesstone?---Gard. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. How long have you known him?

Gard. Seven or eight Years.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. What is he, as to his Honesty and Veracity?

Gard. He is like other Boys, sometimes good, sometimes indifferent.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. I do not mean as to a little Unluckiness: But do you think, from his general Behaviour, that he would forswear himself?

Gard. No, I do not think that he would.

[Thomas Sylvester sworn.]

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Do you know this Egglesstone?

Syl. Yes, I have known him about three Years; he lived by me at a Butcher's.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. What was he, as to his Character and Behaviour?

Syl. He was sometimes idle, and given to Play.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Do you think he would forswear himself?

Syl. No, I do not think he would.

[Samuel Sylvester called.]

Mr. Serj. Wynne. How long have you known this Boy?

Samuel Syl. I have known this Boy a good while.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. What is his general Character; do you think he would forswear himself?---Samuel Syl. I have had no Conversation with him, so I do not know what he is.

[William Palmer sworn.]

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Do you know young Egglesstone?---Palmer. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. How long have you known him?

Palmer. I have known him as long as I have known any Person of his Age: He came of very honest Parents.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Do you think he would forswear himself?

Palmer. I do not think he would forswear himself.

Q. Upon your Oath, do you not think he is much addicted to Lying?
Palmer.

Palmer. Why, that is not taking a false Oath.

[Patrick Lawler sworn.]

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Do you know Paul Keating?

Lawler. I have known him ever since the 18th of March last.

Q. What is his general Character?

Lawler. I do not know his general Character; but I know he has behaved very bad of late.

Q. Did you never offer him any Money to keep out of the Way, and not appear at this Trial?

Lawler. No, not I; but he said he would give them a Rowland for their Oliver.

Q. Do you know what he meant by that?

Lawler. No; only that he said if my Lord Anglesea did not give him Money, he would turn Evidence on the other Side.

Q. What did you think he meant, when he said, if my Lord Anglesea did not give him Money, he would turn Evidence on the other Side? Why surely my Lord is not concerned in this Prosecution! But pray, Sir, you have given a bad Account of Mr. Keating, how came you and he acquainted?

Lawler. This Keating and I came over together from Ireland in the same Ship; he told me, there were some Evidences on board that were coming over to swear away my Lord Anglesea's Estate: Said he, there are three Women and two Men, and I have discovered the whole Thing, how they are bribed to come here; and if I come to London, said he, I will give my Lord Anglesea an Account of it.

Q. Pray, Sir, tell us what became of Keating when he came to Town?

Lawler. Soon after he arrived he found me out, and so I told Mr. Jans I thought he might depend upon this Man, because I had seen him in Bristol; said I, I speak to you about this Man out of Charity; for he is very poor: Then says Mr. Jans, Let him go to the White-Horse in Piccadilly; and then he wanted Cloaths and Money; and, says he, If they do not give me Cloaths and Money, I will swear that the Earl of Anglesea was to give a Note to young Egglestone to swear upon this Trial.

Q. What do you think he meant by his giving a Rowland for an Oliver? Whether it respected this Cause, or related to my Lord Anglesea's Estate?

Lawler. I cannot tell what he meant.

Then the Court proceeded to sum up the Evidence as follows:

Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoners at the Bar, James Annesley and Joseph Redding, stand indicted for the wilful Murder of Thomas Egglestone, by giving him one Wound on the Left-side of the Belly, in the Parish of Staines, of which he instantly died: The Indictment sets forth, that Annesley fired the Gun, and gave the Wound, and that Redding was assisting and abetting him in the doing of it: And they stand a second time indicted on the Coroner's Inquest for the same Murder; and there is another Indictment against the Prisoner Annesley, for feloniously, wilfully, and maliciously shooting this Man, against the Statute of the Ninth of King George the First. The first Evidence that is called by the Prosecutor is John Egglestone; he says his Father and he went a-fishing up the River, till they came to Samuel Sylvester's Ground; that they had a Net, and the String of the Net was about his Father's Arm; that when they got about the Middle of the Field, they saw the Prisoners coming up; that Redding came up first, and went to lay hold of the Net, and his Father threw the Net into the River, about two Yards from him; and that Annesley then came up and said, Damn your Blood, deliver your Net, or you are a dead Man, and fired directly: and that he shot him near the Bottom of the Belly on the Left-side; that his Father said, You Rogue, what have you done? I am a dead Man; that he, the Witness, took a Knife out of his Pocket, to cut the String of the Net from his Father's Arm, and leaped into the River, and dragged the Net to the other Side of the River; and that Annesley said, The Rogue has got his Net, let us go on the other Side; that he saw Bettesworth, Fisher, and Bowles, on the other Side of the River, and told them he believed his Father was dead; that they came over the River, and advised him to get a Surgeon; upon which he went to one Charles Cole, but he did not come: that then he went for Ruffel the Constable, to search for the Prisoners, and says they found the Prisoner Annesley in a Place about five or six Foot above the Floor, in an Out-house, upon some Rubbish; that they carried him to the Round-House; that he staid there all Night, and the next Day they carried him to Hounslow: He says the Gun was cocked, but he cannot tell when he cocked it: He says Sir Thomas Reynell came into Hounslow while they were there; and that by his Order they went to the Grey-Hound at Laleham; and that one Lane, Chester's Son-in-Law, offered him 100*l.* a Year; that Mr. Annesley said he had not 100*l.* a Year; to give him, for he had more to provide for; but he might have 50*l.* a Year, if he would not come against him: He said he had no Conversation with one Duffell, but that he had with Dalton; he says, he has sometimes dined at Williams's Table; and that he did not tell Paul Keating he was to have 200*l.*

The next Witness that is produced is John Bettesworth: He says, that Egglestone and his Son were in Sylvester's Ground, on the other Side of the River, and he saw the Prisoners come out of Redding's Ground into Sylvester's, and when they were in the Middle of the Ground they ran after them: He says, Joseph Redding was too nimble for Egglestone's Father; but whether he had him by the Collar, he cannot say: He says, that the Gun went off soon after Mr. Annesley came up to old Egglestone: He says, he saw the Smoke and Fire of the Gun; and came up soon after Egglestone's Father was shot. He says, he and Fisher, and Bowles, crossed the Water; and that Annesley and Redding ran away; that Egglestone was not quite dead when he came over, but was not able to speak; and says, he saw the Net on the other Side of the River: He says, there was a Place in a Wash-house, about six Foot from the Ground, and there they found Mr. Annesley; that it is a Place where they put Hoops, and other Rubbish: He says, that when Mr. Annesley was taken, he said, he wished to be killed, for being instrumental in the taking away an innocent Man's Life. That about half an Hour before this Accident happened, he saw Mr. Annesley offer to shoot at a Crow.

John Fisher is called next; he says, he saw young Redding in the Ground with another Man; but cannot say that Annesley is the Man; and that he saw there, two Men running after Egglestone and his Son; that Redding laid his Hand, he thinks, on Egglestone's Shoulder; and there was a Sort of a Scuffle between them; and he that carried the Gun carried it in a Form to shoot; and he that carried the Gun was very near Egglestone when the Gun went off: and he says, he saw Joseph Redding, and the other Man, go away; and he says, he was at this Time 169 Yards off. It seems the Ground has been measured, and that is the Reason they are so particular in it: he says, Egglestone had Money offered him in his hearing; he would have had a Hundred a Year; but Mr. Annesley said, he could not give him an Hundred a Year, for he had other People to do for: But he would give him Fifty; and that Egglestone afterwards said, he would not sell his Father's Blood; and he said, that Egglestone afterwards told him, he believed the Gentleman did not do it wilfully; but that the Boy, being afterwards asked how he could swear against the Gentleman, when he had said he believed he did not do it wilfully; he said, he did not remember any thing of what he had said to him; and he says he has been in the same Story ever since the Accident happened, excepting that one Time.

The next Witness, Gentlemen, is Samuel Sylvester; and he says, when Mr. Annesley came out of that Place where he was found, he trembled very much: he says, he rents this Land of one Sanders, who took it of Redding's Father: he says, Egglestone used to work sometimes with his Father in the Business of a Carpenter, but that he has lived some time at the White Horse, in Piccadilly.

This is the Substance of the Evidence for the Prosecutor.

The Prisoner Mr. Annesley, in his own Defence, says, that he is very sorry for the Accident that has happened; that these Persons were poaching in the Manour that belongs to Sir John Dolben; that they did go up to them, but that you cannot suppose he had any Spite against a Man he never saw in his Life; he says that he had a Gun in his Hand, and that the Gun went off by Accident. The other Prisoner Redding says, he is Game-keeper to Sir John Dolben; that he saw these Men fishing, and went to take the Net; that he heard the Gun go off, and saw the Man fall down, and then he said to Mr. Annesley, Lord bless me, I hope you have not killed the Man! and that it was done accidentally.

To prove their Case, they called the following Witnesses. The first is, Mr. Staples; he says, this is Sir John Dolben's Manour, and that he has held Courts there.

The next Witness, Gentlemen, was Thomas Burlingson, and he proves a Deputation of the second of July 1741, from Sir John Dolben to Joseph Redding the younger, and thereby he is appointed his Game-keeper, to seize the Nets, &c. of any Person who shall destroy any Game, or Fish, in his Manour; and in the Book which is kept for the Entry of these Things for the County of Middlesex, it appears that the Entry was made the 29th of January 1741, which was before the committing of this Fact.

Then Redding, the Father of Joseph Redding, is called, and he says, the Fishery belongs to Sir John Dolben, who is Lord of the Manour; that he lett the Ground called Hare Mead to Sanders; and that the same is now in the Possession of Sylvester. That he himself was in Chantry Mead (which is next to the Hare Mead) when this Accident happened: That when he came up to them, his Son said, he was afraid the Man was killed, and asked Annesley how he came to do it? To which Annesley answered, He did not think of the Gun's going off; he says, they seemed very much troubled and concerned: being asked the Position of the Gun when it went off, he says, Mr. Annesley held the Gun in one Hand, and that it hung down by his Side.

The next Witness, Gentlemen, is William Duffell; and he says, that some Hours after the Accident happened, John Egglestone came into his House; and the Man that brought him to his House, desired him to speak the Truth; and the Account the Boy gave at that Time was, that Redding came up to his Father, and demanded the Net, and that his Father said he should not have it, and threw it into the River; that then Mr. Annesley came up, and the Gun went off, and his Father was shot. He says, that Abraham Egglestone particularly asked the Boy whether he saw Mr. Annesley pull the Trigger of the Gun? and that he said he could not tell; that then he asked him if there were any Words between them? and he said, No; that then this Witness said, it was a strange Thing that Mr. Annesley should shoot his Father, and have no Words with him: That being asked in what manner the Gun was held, Egglestone, with a Stick which he had in his Hand, shewed them in what Manner Mr. Annesley held the Gun: He says the Stick was in his Hand, hanging down by his Side. He says, that Egglestone then was asked, if he thought Annesley did it wilfully, and that he said he could not tell. Being asked as to the Boy's Character; he says he has but an indifferent Character, that he cannot speak in the Praise of him, and has heard his Father often complain of him.

The next Evidence is John Dalton; and he says, that the next Day after the Accident, he went to Laleham, and there Egglestone told him, he believed it was an Accident, and not done designedly. He says the Boy has but an indifferent Character, but believes he would not forswear himself.

The next Witness is Richard Chester, and he says, that he asked the Boy at Laleham, whether it was accidental or wilful; and that he said he believed it was an Accident; for he did not believe any Gentleman, in cool Blood, would designedly shoot another; he says he had a Whip in his Hand, and desired Egglestone to shew him how Mr. Annesley held the Gun; that he took the Whip in his Hand, and shewed him; that he held it in his Hand, hanging down by his Side; and he says he saw Egglestone speak to Mr. Annesley; that he shook Hands with him, and drank a Glass of Wine, and said he did not think he did it designedly.

Mr. Paterson was then called to prove what the Boy said before the Coroner; but his Examination being taken down in writing, I did not think proper to allow of Parole Evidence.

Then Mr. King the Coroner was called; and he produced the Minutes of the Depositions, taken the 4th of May at Laleham, before the Inquest. The Minutes have been read, by which it appears that Egglestone deposed, that as his Father and he were fishing in Sylvester's Ground, Redding came up, and laid hold of his Father, and demanded his Net, which his Father refused; that then Annesley came up and said, "Damn your Blood, surrender your Net, or you are a dead Man;" that he held up his Piece against his Shoulder, and shot him directly: And his Father said, "You Rogue, you have shot me, I am a dead Man." And, Gentlemen, his Deposition before the Coroner likewise says, that when he saw his Father was shot, he took his Knife, and cut the String of the Net; and that that then Mr. Annesley went to strike him on the Head, with the Butt End of the Gun. And he swears in his Deposition, that he was not offered any Money by any Body. Then they produced Mr. Eusebius Williams, and he says, John Fisher told him, that John Egglestone had said he did not believe Mr. Annesley killed his Father wilfully, but that it was done by Accident.

Then James Bethune, a Surgeon, is produced, and he says he saw the Body; that he examined and probed the Wound; and he says it was an Inch and an half below the Ridge of the Hip-bone, and an Inch and an half wide; and that when he put his Instrument downwards, it would not go in; but it would go in when the Probe was put upwards, or cross the Belly.

The next Witness is John Perkins, a Surgeon: he says he opened the Body the 4th of May, to be inspected by the Coroner's Inquest; and there was a Wound an Inch and a half Diameter. He put in his Probe seven or eight Inches, and found the Wound a little horizontal, about an Inch and an half below the Hip-bone; he says there were Blisters on the other Side of the Body, and they were four or five Inches higher than the Wound. Mr. King says, that Mr. Giffard, who is the Solicitor in this Prosecution, made Application to him to commit Mr. Annesley to Newgate; but he thought that was too severe, as Sir Thomas Reynell was a Justice of the Peace, and had taken sufficient Care of him.

Paul Keating says, he became acquainted with Egglestone at the White Horse in Piccadilly, which is kept by one Williams; and that he, at Egglestone's Desire, drew a Note of 200*l.* for him, and that the Boy, Egglestone, took a Copy of it.

Gentlemen, this is the Evidence given in Behalf of the Prisoners; and there has been Evidence given to support the Character of John Egglestone.

John Gardener, he says he has known him seven or eight Years,---that he is like other Boys, sometimes good, and sometimes indifferent, but he does not think he would forswear himself.

Sylvester was called again, to Egglestone's Character; he says he has known him about three Years, that he was sometimes given to play, but believes he would not forswear himself.

William Palmer says he has known him from a Child, and does not think he would forswear himself.

Patrick Lawler says, he has known Paul Keating since the 18th of March; that because he could not be supplied with Cloaths, as he expected, he was to swear, that the Earl of Anglesea was to give a Note to young Egglestone.

This is the State of the Evidence on both Sides.

Now, Gentlemen, you are to consider, whether the Fact is Murder, Manslaughter, or Chance-Medley: Murder, Gentlemen, in Point of Law, is, when a Person kills another with express Malice and Design, or with implied Malice, as when it is without any Offence or Provocation; but if there is a sudden Fray, and in that Fray and Heat of Blood, a Person is killed, that is Manslaughter; now there are several Things in the Course of the Evidence proper to come under your Consideration; you will observe that Egglestone swears Mr. Annesley said, "Damn your Blood, deliver your Net, or you are a dead Man," and that immediately the Gun went off, and the Man was shot; if he let the Gun off designedly, if this was the Case, though on a sudden, he can be guilty of no less than Manslaughter; but then you will consider what different Things the Boy has said; he has declared several Times, he did not believe he did it designedly; and according to what the Surgeons say, it is not probable to me, that this Wound could be given in the Situation he says Mr. Annesley was in; for the Wound goes upwards; and if he held his Gun as the Boy has said, the Wound could not have been as it is: Besides that, he is expressly contradicted in the Fact itself by old Redding, who swears he saw the Gun go off, and that it was hanging by Mr. Annesley's Side. Gentlemen, as I said before, the Question you are to consider of, is, whether this is Manslaughter, or Chance-Medley in Mr. Annesley; for as to Redding, he must certainly be acquitted; and as to Murder, I cannot think there is any Evidence to make Mr. Annesley guilty of that; but as there was some Blood, there may be Reason to consider, whether it is not Manslaughter: On the other hand, if Mr. Annesley was carrying his Gun by his Side, and it went off accidentally, then it will be Chance-Medley.

[Then the Jury having considered of their Verdicts, without going out of Court.]

Clerk of the Arraignment. Gentlemen of the Jury, are you agreed in your Verdicts?---Jury. Yes.

Clerk. Who shall say for you?---Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk. James Annesley, hold up your Hand.---Joseph Redding, hold up your Hand.---Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoners. How say you, is James Annesley guilty of the Felony and Murder, whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman of the Jury. Not guilty of Murder, but guilty of Chance-Medley.

Clerk. How say you, is Joseph Redding guilty of the same Felony and Murder, whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman of the Jury. Not guilty of the Murder, but guilty of Chance-Medley.

Clerk. How say you, is the said James Annesley guilty of the Felony and Murder, wherewith he stands charged upon the Coroner's Inquisition, or not guilty?

Foreman of the Jury. Not guilty of the Murder, but guilty of Chance-Medley.

Clerk. How say you, is the said Joseph Redding guilty of the same Felony and Murder, wherewith he stands charged upon the Coroner's Inquisition, or not guilty?

Foreman of the Jury. Not guilty of the Murder, but guilty of Chance-Medley.

Clerk. How say you, is the said James Annesley guilty of wilfully shooting at Thomas Egglestone, against the Form of the Statute, or not guilty?

Foreman of the Jury. Not guilty.

Clerk. Gentlemen of the Jury, hearken to your Verdicts, as the Court has recorded them. You say that James Annesley is not guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, but is guilty of Chance-Medley.

You say that Joseph Redding is not guilty of the same Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, but is guilty of Chance-Medley.

You say the same upon the Coroner's Inquisition.

You also say that the said James Annesley is not guilty of maliciously shooting at Thomas Egglestone, against the Form of the Statute. And you say All.

XXV. The Trial of the Right Honourable RICHARD Earl of ANGLESEA, FRANCIS ANNESLEY, Esq. and JOHN JANS, Gent. for an Assault on the Honourable JAMES ANNESLEY, DANIEL MAC KERCHER, and HUGH KENNEDY, Esquires, and WILLIAM GOOSTRY, Gent. before the Honourable Richard Mounteney, Esq. second Baron of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer, and St. George Caulfield, Esq. his Majesty's Attorney-General, Justices of Assize for the Leinster Circuit, on Friday, Aug. 3d, 1744, at Athy, in the County of Kildare in Ireland*.

The Court being set at Eleven o'Clock, the JURY were called over, and answered to their Names; of whom the following Twelve were sworn, to try the Issue joined between the Parties.

John Digby , Esq.	Mr. George Bradford .	Mr. Edward Harman .
Henry Dickson , Esq.	Mr. William Leban .	Mr. James Tyrrell .
John Bagot , Esq.	Mr. John Berry .	Mr. Thomas Tyrrell .
Mr. Thomas Sherlock .	Mr. Samuel Mills .	Mr. Edward Ward .

ANGUS BYRNE, one of the Persons indicted for the Assault, is called into Court, and appears.

Clerk of the Crown. You stand indicted, for assaulting William Goostry, Gent. on the 16th of September last, do you submit or traverse?

Angus Byrne. I do submit.

Clerk. You likewise stand indicted for assaulting Hugh Kennedy, Esq. do you submit or traverse?---Angus Byrne. I submit.

Clerk. You likewise stand indicted for assaulting Daniel Mac Kercher, Esq. do you submit or traverse?---Angus Byrne. Submit.

Clerk. You likewise stand indicted for assaulting James Annesley, Esq. do you submit or traverse?---Angus Byrne. Submit.

Court. The Gentlemen of the Jury must have Pen, Ink and Paper.

Clerk of the Crown reads the Indictment, which is as follows:

County of Kildare. THE Jurors for our Lord the King, upon their Oath say and present, that Francis Annesley of Ballysax, in the County of Kildare, Esq. the Right Honourable Richard Earl of Anglesea, Joseph Lawson, late of the City of Dublin, in the County of the City of Dublin, Yeoman, John Jans, late of the same, in the said County of the said City, Gent. Angus Byrne, otherwise called Angus Byrne, late of the same,

* Though this Trial was not till August 1744, after the Trial in Ejection, (in Ireland) between Mr. Annesley and the Earl of Anglesea, which began November 1743, Part of the Anglesea Estate) yet as THIS ASSAULT was in September 1743, previous to that Trial, we insert it here, as proper to follow Mr. Annesley's Trial, (in England) the Murder, and precede the other Trial in Ejection.

the Traversers by those Gentlemen. And though this, my Lord, upon the Face of the Record, appears to be but an ordinary and common Assault, yet, if these Examinations are true, it will appear, that, had not the Hand of Providence very signally interposed in Preservation of their Lives, instead of a common and sudden Affray, it would have been a Crime of another Nature, it would have been a Crime of the deepest Dye, for which the Traversers must have stood a Trial for their Lives. I do not mean, my Lord, when I say it would be a Crime of another Nature, by that to bring it home as such to all the Traversers; no, I believe there may be one of them who had not such a wicked Intention; but as to others, it will appear to be a concerted, premeditated Assault, not to be satisfied by Bloodshed and Battery, but to pursue the Prosecutor, Mr. Annesley, to Death. If these Examinations are true, this is but one of the many Attempts that Lord Anglesea—

Mr. Spring. My Lord, I must submit it to your Lordship's Judgment, how proper this Gentleman is at this Time in this very elaborate and affecting Harangue. The Offence for which the Traversers are indicted is an Assault, which arose from an ordinary and common Quarrel at a public Meeting; but this Gentleman tells your Lordship that there was an Intention in the Traversers, or some of them, to commit what they are not now charged with, something of another Nature, which he makes a Crime of the deepest Dye. Pray, my Lord, how does this appear? Or, what Right has he upon the present Occasion, to assert any such Thing? There is no Indictment for such an Intention, nor any Foundation for such an Assertion; and therefore I humbly pray your Lordship will order that Gentleman, in conducting this Prosecution, to confine himself to his Duty, and direct him to open Evidence that is proper, and no more.

Mr. Harward. My Lord, I am very unfortunate, to be so often taken down by Gentlemen of great Experience and Knowledge, and must apply for your Interposition, else I shall not know how to proceed.

Court. Go on, Mr. Harward.

Mr. Harward. I was going on, as I apprehended I had a Right to do, and as I have observed to be the constant Practice in all Cases of this Kind, not to confine myself to the bare Assault, but to shew it in all its concomitant Circumstances, that the whole Truth of the Fact may appear to the Court; and the Reason why Experience justifies every body to do this is, because the Fine which the Court is to impose is discretionary, and will be greater or less in proportion to the Nature of the Offence; and therefore every thing is proper to be laid before the Court, that may be an Ingredient in their Consideration for the imposing that Fine. I say, then, my Lord, that this Assault, when it comes to be considered upon its Circumstances, will not appear to be the Effect of a sudden Passion, but to have proceeded from an implacable Enmity, that has pursued this unfortunate Client of mine from his Age of nine or ten Years old to this Day. I choose rather to read, as to this, the very Words of the Examinations in my Hand, than to trust to my own Representation of the former Attempts on his Life—

Mr. Spring. My Lord, I must call upon that Gentleman again to confine himself to the Fact and the Circumstances relative thereto, and hope, if he continues to offer any Thing so extremely improper, your Lordship will take notice of it, and direct him not to proceed.

Court. I think you go too far back, Mr. Harward.

Mr. Harward. My Lord, to be sure I am in your Lordship's Judgment, and therefore it is, when I understand it, I shall pursue it.

Court. It is extremely proper to mention the Circumstances attending this Fact, and the Nature of the Case, for the Reason you mention, that it may have a due Consideration in the Sense of the Court.

Mr. Harward. I desire to know, my Lord, whether I have a Right to say any Circumstances before the Court and the Jury, to let them see whether this Assault was a premeditated Thing or not.

Court. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Harward. Now, my Lord, I can shew, out of these Examinations, that it was a premeditated Thing; for this Assault happened to be committed on the 16th. The first Day of the Meeting of Gentlemen on the Curragh of Kildare, to see the Diversion of the Races, was on the 14th of September; on the 14th and 15th there was no actual Assault committed; but there was a Behaviour, there was Language given, that was introductory, and pointed out most plainly what the Consequence would be, that in reality happened the third Day. I would be in your Lordship's Judgment, whether or no these two preceding Days are not connected with the following ones.

Court. Extremely proper.

Mr. Harward. Why then, I submit to your Lordship's Directions, and I shall not take the Liberty of mentioning of any of the former Attempts, or Injuries of the highest Nature, that my Client has suffered—

Mr. Spring. My Lord, this is for no other Purpose but to inflame the Minds of the jury, and to captivate the Populace. There is no Injury, no Attempt of any Kind, real or pretended, but that on the 16th, that is to be considered by the Jury.

Court. The Jury will be told, by and bye, that the single Point they are to consider is the Fact of the Assault only. Go on, Mr. Harward.

Mr. Harward. I did mention that I would not enter into a Narrative of the former Attempts, but confine myself to the Passages of this Day. This Gentleman, as Son and Heir to the late Lord Altham (I hope the Counsel will give me the Liberty of telling who he is)—

Mr. Spring. There is no Occasion for that neither, at this Time.

Court. Go on, Sir, in stating the Case.

Mr. Harward. I say then, that Mr. Annesley, along with these other Gentlemen (some of them Men of Profession), came into this Kingdom in the latter End of last Summer, in order to assert and sue for that, which he apprehended to be his Right, the Anglesea Estate in this Kingdom: Mr. Annesley had brought an Ejectment for Recovery of Part of it, lying in the County of Meath, which was then depending; and Lord Anglesea had Notice of this, and knew the Errand these Gentlemen came of, to assist Mr. Annesley in his Affairs. He met them on the 14th at the Curragh; and the first Thing (for I shall mention the Facts in order of Time, as they happened, from the first to the third Day of the Races), the first Person that my Lord did the Honour to take notice of, was Mr. MacKercher.

My Lord stood in a Circle of the Gentlemen of this Country, and of many of his own Attendants brought from another Country; and seeing this Gentleman, Mr. MacKercher, who came to attend Mr. Annesley's Affairs, the first Thing that he was pleased to do was, to point to Mr. MacKercher, and say, See yonder that Rogue, that Scoundrel, and that Villain MacKercher: It is not above a Month ago, though he is now dressed up like a Gentleman, since I saw those very laced Cloaths hanging in Monmouth-street, in London. Mr. MacKercher (who is a Gentleman, and will appear in the Course of this Trial to have Resolution of another Kind) took no Sort of Notice of this publick Insult, as it was not his Business to venture the Conduct and Success of his Friend's Affairs in a rash, hot Quarrel, but very prudently passed it calmly and quietly by. That Day, my Lord, nothing more, that was remarkable, did happen: This was upon a Wednesday, I think the 14th. On the 16th, as these Gentlemen, for whom I am Counsel, were all in a Knot, they and their few Friends kept close together upon this Curragh, which is of great Extent, many Miles over; but no Place whatever could serve my Lord Anglesea's Coachman, but to ride through and through them, to endeavour to trample down these Gentlemen and their Horses with his Coach-and-Six, and hunted them wherever they moved; and whenever he came near Mr. Annesley, this Coachman (you will guess easily by whose Directions) used to cry out, There he is, there's the Sh-e-boy, black your Ball; and some other opprobrious Language I can't now recollect. And by this repeated Insult of driving these Gentlemen wantonly from Place to Place, and calling out to them in that opprobrious Manner, this Man was determined, with his Coach and Six, to be upon the Back of them, wherever they removed to avoid him. My Lord, he is indicted also, but does not appear, though he still is the Coachman of Lord Anglesea; his Name is Joseph Lawson. My Clients, my Lord, observing this Behaviour, like prudent Men, they began to be more than ordinary upon their Guard, and to fear the worst. As they were but few, and Strangers in the Kingdom, they thought that sticking together would be the only Means left in their Power to preserve them: But all Precautions were in vain. My Lord observing, that neither abusive Language, Words which must have pierced to the Heart of the meanest Vassal, nor the Coachman's driving his Coach at them, could have raised these Gentlemen's Tempers to take any Notice of it, another Expedient occurred to my Lord, to put his Purposes in execution. Mr. MacKercher, upon these repeated Abuses of himself, and of Mr. Annesley, having waited upon Lord Anglesea, with all the Address and Good-Manners imaginable, told him (without making the least mention of what happened to himself the Day before) That he was come to acquaint his Lordship with the Rudeness of a Coachman of his to a Gentleman in the Field, and hoped his Lordship would do in it what became a Nobleman and Gentleman. Lord Anglesea asked, Who the Gentleman was? He is told, Mr. Annesley. Upon that, my Lord, instead of having any Feeling whatsoever for the Transgression of this Coachman of his, A Gentleman, Sir, says he, a blackguard Shoe-boy! I won't turn off my Coachman for any Abuse either to him or to you; and you are a Rogue and a Villain, and he is a Bastard, the Son of Juggy Landy, by my Brother. With this, one of the Traversers, Mr. Francis Annesley, a Relation to my Lord, without any Provocation, gave Mr. MacKercher a Stroke over the Head with his Whip. Then my Lord began to insult him in a higher and louder Tone, and made a Proclamation to the Company, getting up and resting himself on his Stirrups, that his Voice should reach them all, that this Mr. Annesley was a Bastard. I do, says he, declare before you all, that that Fellow is no Gentleman, but a Bastard of Juggy Landy's, a Kitchen-maid; and continued his Abuse of Mr. MacKercher with the most scurrilous Language. As soon as Mr. Francis Annesley saw that his Relation's Blood was a little up, he repeated the Blow, and with the Butt-End of his Whip struck Mr. MacKercher on the Forehead, which stunned him in some Measure. This Blow was followed by some others; but however, Mr. MacKercher did not consider his own Safety, but turned about to take care of that which concerned him more than any Misfortune that could have attended himself; and there having laid his Eye upon Mr. Annesley, Mr. Gosstry, and Mr. Kennedy, desired them to make the best of their Way off, or they would be murdered, and that he would follow; but before these Gentlemen could turn their Horses to gallop off, Mr. Francis Annesley was too nimble for them, and made a Stroke at Mr. Gosstry, which cut him to the Skull; and he, with many other Persons, repeated these Blows, until there was scarce a Part of him which did not feel the Weight of Mr. Annesley's Arm: He was stunned and knocked down by the first Blow, and continued under Cure of his Wound for a Month after. Mr. Kennedy, another of these Gentlemen, without the least Provocation, endeavouring to shift for himself, was most unmercifully beat by the Traversers, assisted by several other Persons unknown; and when stunned and knocked down, my Lord laid on him, until some of the People of the Country cried out to him, For shame, for shame, for shame, don't kill him. Mr. Jans, my Lord's Agent, I had like to have forgot, had not the least Hand in this Affray, but punctually observed his Lord's Orders, who cried out, Knock them down, kill the Villains. When they had thus levelled down Mr. Annesley's Friends, who were his Guard, my Lord then thought it the proper Time to look out for him, and called out, Where is the Dog, where is the Son of a Whore? kill him. Mr. Annesley, according to the Intimation given him by Mr. MacKercher, that he was to be murdered, set Spurs to his Horse, and got out of the Croud; but a Servant of my Lord Anglesea's, upon my Lord's Inquiry where Mr. James Annesley was, said he had galloped off. As soon as Lord Anglesea heard that Mr. Annesley had galloped away, who had no Hand in this Affray, or ever exchanged one Word with my Lord, I say, as soon as Lord Anglesea discovered that he had got safe out of the Croud, and that his Friends lay in the Condition I have now mentioned, he cried out to his Friends and Servants, Follow the Rogue, pursue the Rascal, tear him Limb from Limb, and all that will support him. He directed them, my Lord, to destroy not only him, but any who should have Humanity to endeavour to protect him. Then this noble Lord's Influence over this Croud will appear to be so absolute, that, to the Number of Forty or Fifty of them pursued this helpless Gentleman. He had a Horse, happily for him, of great Speed, and he made as good Use of it; he soon outstripped Mr. MacKercher, who followed him, and so got out of the Field, with this numerous Train of People, some with Sticks, some with Staves, others armed with Pistols and Hangers, pursuing of them both. Mr.

Mac Kercher was nearest to them, and overtaken by them; but however it will appear, that he was not intended to be the Victim of this Rabble that did pursue. I don't say that any of the Traversers did pursue, but I say of this Rabble that did pursue, as they understood Mr. Mac Kercher not to be the devoted Head, though they overtook him, and he was the only Man that could have given the Lord Anglesea the least Offence, they passed him by, but made all the Speed after Mr. Annesley they possibly could; and indeed, when he got into a Road that was leading to a neighbouring Town or Village, to Newbridge, where he lay the Night before, to seek for Protection, this enraged and furious Mob, thus armed and pursuing, came so close, as that he thought it would be safer, or at least more decent, to die with his Face toward them, than to be destroyed, behind his Back. He was called out to by some People, that had nothing to do with the Affair, that there were People with Pistols at his Back, ready to shoot him; upon this, he turned his Horse, and in the Turn the Horse's hind Feet fell into the Ditch, and the Horse fell upon this unfortunate Gentleman in the Ditch, and bruised him in a very terrible Manner. Whilst he lay speechless in this deplorable Condition, up came this Mob; and had it not been that one Mr. Archbold, who is a Gentleman of great Humanity, and well deserves the Influence he has in that Country, interposed and rescued him, half dead already in the Ditch, from their Violence, there had been a speedy End put to all this Gentleman's Right and Pretence to the Annesley Estate, by an End being put to his Life. My Lord, we will shew your Lordship the Condition that this unfortunate Gentleman was in; how he lay in the Ditch till he was taken away speechless and senseless to Newbridge, in a Chaise, being not able to ride or stand, and his Life despaired of, for some Months.

Now, my Lord, I have only one other principal Fact, concerning this Matter, to trouble you with, which I am instructed to charge Lord Anglesea with in the most express Terms; and that is, when the Mob had returned from the Pursuit into the Field where Lord Anglesea was, some of them seeing him impatient to know what was done, they cried out to him, By G—d, my Lord, he is killed, he is dead. I cannot, without Violence to myself, mention what is said to have dropped from that Lord upon the Occasion, and would be pleased I could mistrust the Truth of it; but I am instructed to say he could not conceal the Emotions of Joy which he felt on these glad Tidings, but cried out, I am glad of it, then all is well. So, my Lord, this that was intended to be the most tragical Scene, and came within a Hair's Breadth of it, I say, by the Interposition of Providence, falls out to be this Day but a finable Offence; therefore I shall not trouble your Lordship any further with the Circumstances of this Fact; they will come out more emphatically upon the Testimony of the Gentlemen, who have had more Reason to have felt them than I have. We shall examine but a few out of many Witnesses, and shall endeavour to lay this Matter before your Lordship, without taking up more of your Time than an Offence of this publick Nature can deserve from a Court of Justice.

Mr. Mac Manus. My Lord, as the Case has been stated to you, I shall trouble your Lordship but with a few Words; which are, that as the Circumstances of this Assault will be a great Aggravation of the Crime, so will they increase the Punishment: And this, my Lord, will, in Evidence, appear to you to be an Offence of as rude, angry, and revengeful a Nature, as ever appeared in a Court of Justice. We have the Happiness to have alive at this Day the Gentlemen thus assaulted, to shew your Lordship and the Jury the Danger and Violence of this Assault. I shall call one of the Gentlemen—Mr. Mac Kercher, who will tell you in what Manner and by whom he was assaulted, and (what will still more heighten this Offence) the Quality and Dignity of the Offenders, the Time and Place where committed. My Lord, the Curragh of Kildare was the Place where this Assault was made; the Time when it was given, when thousands of Persons were assembled at a public Horse-Race; one of the Offenders, a noble Peer of this Kingdom; and another of them in the Commission of the Peace; and the Manner of it, which he will tell you, will appear to you to be without any the least Provocation. This, Gentlemen of the Jury, will very particularly and very fully appear to you, from the Evidence which we shall lay before you.

Mr. Morgan. Here are four Persons, my Lord, concerned in the four several Indictments now depending, and they are all included in each Indictment; but, I hope, if it appears that any one or more of them is not affected by the Evidence that shall be given on Behalf of the Crown upon any one particular Indictment, such Person or Persons shall be allowed to give Testimony on Behalf of such of the Traversers as shall be affected by the Evidence given on Behalf of the Crown on such particular Indictment. Suppose, for the Purpose, it should appear, upon the Indictment for the Assault upon Mr. Mac Kercher, that one or more of the Gentlemen mentioned in that Indictment is not guilty of the Charge laid in that Indictment, it would be against Reason that such innocent Person should not be admitted as a competent Witness on that Indictment, and highly injurious to such of the Traversers (as may be affected by the Evidence on Behalf of the Crown) not to have the Benefit of that Person's Testimony, who, by the Evidence on Behalf of the Crown, has no Guilt imputed to him on that particular Indictment; and may, perhaps, be able to give as good an Account of the Matters charged in that Indictment as any Witness on Behalf of the Crown can pretend to give. For this Reason, and in as much as these several Indictments are but mere Accusations, I humbly conceive, that, after the Evidence for the Crown is given, the Jury should be sent out to consider of their Verdict, as to such of the Traversers separately, as we apprehend shall not be affected by the Evidence given on Behalf of the Crown on any one particular Indictment, and if they are acquitted, that we may be at Liberty to examine them as Witnesses for the other Traversers on that Indictment.

Court. This will be almost an Impossibility; it will be an impracticable Thing, as this Case is stated by Mr. Harward, to keep the Indictments separate; but, however, I don't see that the going on with them all together will affect you in this Point.

Mr. Morgan. If the Gentlemen concerned for the Crown shall not, in the Course of their Examination, particularize the Indictment to which they produce this or the other Witness, but examine each Witness to all the Indictments generally; from thence a Necessity arises, on our Part, to take Notice what Witness or Witnesses spoke to this or that Indictment, and to what Person or Persons mentioned in this or that Indictment; for otherwise, according to this Scheme of including four Persons in four several Indictments, a Man may lose the Benefit of the Testimony of most material Witnesses, nothing more being necessary to be done to him of that Benefit, than to have his Witnesses included in the same Indictment with himself, be they never so innocent of the Charge contained therein; the Consequences of which must be very fatal, if the Law has not prescribed some Method, whereby such Witnesses, notwithstanding such Indictment, are to be at Liberty to be examined; and I must leave to rely upon it, that such Method is known in Law, and is what I have before mentioned.

I say therefore, my Lord, if this Prosecution is to be managed and proceeded upon in that Manner, though any one or more of these Traversers should be guilty as to three of the Indictments, yet he or they can't be examined for any of the other Traversers upon all or any of those three Indictments; because all the Traversers being upon their Trial upon the four Indictments at one and the same Time, and the Examination on Behalf of the Crown being applied to all the four generally, such guilty Person as to three of the Indictments, being guilty as to the fourth, cannot be examined upon any of them, because by that means he may possibly set about swearing himself off of the Charge of the fourth Indictment, which perhaps by the Evidence on Behalf of the Crown might be brought Home to him. Suppose, for the Purpose, that Mr. Jans is innocent as to the Assault upon Mr. Mac Kercher, yet your Lordship will not suffer him to be examined upon that Indictment, because there is another Indictment upon which he is on his Trial at the same Time, and upon which he may possibly be found guilty.

Court. You won't be under any Difficulty at all by proceeding upon all the Indictments together; for suppose now, Mr. Jans shall be affected with Evidence given upon two of these Indictments, but with none upon the third; why then I shall tell the Jury, that to such an Indictment, and such an one, they are to receive Evidence against Mr. Jans; and to such not.

Mr. Harward. I apprehend this Course that we are proceeding in is the proper one, that the Court may be thoroughly satisfied of the Nature of the Fact.

1. Daniel Mac Kercher, Esq.

Mr. Malone. I desire, my Lord, that the Traverser, who has now submitted to the Indictments, may go out of Court, whilst the other Witnesses are examining.

Angus Pyne is ordered to withdraw.

Mr. Mac Manus. 2. Mr. Mac Kercher, were you assaulted at the Races of the Curragh by any and what Persons—and in what Manner? Tell the whole Affair.

Mr. Mac Kercher. As well as my Memory can suggest, after so great a Distance of Time, I will. Upon the 14th, the first Day of the Races, Mr. Annesley—

Court. 2. Of what Month?

A. Of September, my Lord—Mr. Annesley, several other Gentlemen, and I, came to the Curragh, for the Diversion of the Place.

Mr. Mac Manus. What, Mr. Annesley?—A. Mr. James Annesley.

D. Go on, Sir.

A. We had not been long there, when passing by a Tent where the noble Peer, who is one of the Traversers, stood with some other People—Raise your Voice.

My Lord, we had not been long upon the Race-Ground, when Lord Anglesea, who was standing at a Tent with several other People, called out to me in particular, (pointing to me) That Mac Kercher, though he appears here like a Gentleman, is an arrant Scoundrel; and the Coat you see upon his Back, I saw not above a Month ago in Monmouth-street. As I looked on this of too low a Nature to deserve Resentment, and as I came there with a firm Resolution not only of keeping the Peace myself, but had recommended it to all along with me, I took no Manner of Notice of this Insult. After the Diversion was over, we retired to Newbridge; and on the Friday, the last Day of the Races, we returned again to the Curragh with the same View as before, of seeing the Diversion of the Place only; we arrived there as the first Course was at an End; we were no sooner descried by Lord Anglesea's Coachman, than he immediately drove his Coach and Six full butt at us.

2. At whom, Sir?

A. At Mr. Annesley, the other Gentlemen of our Company, and myself.—This he repeated three or four different Times, which we often avoided; at length, when he found we could not be provoked by that Behaviour, he began in a gross and insolent Manner to insult Mr. Annesley.

2. Who did?

A. The Coachman.—Calling him Shot-Black, Shoe-Boy; when he found that Mr. Annesley did not seem to take any Notice of it—he repeated the Insult, and at length pointed out to him, There he is, the Shoe-Boy.

2. Who did he point to, Sir?

A. To Mr. Annesley, my Lord.—Though I thought this a very great Insolence, and scarce to be bore, yet I would not resent it upon the Fellow, as he was a Servant; but thought it more advisable to complain to Lord Anglesea, to the noble Peer his Master, and expected proper Redress from him. Accordingly I went to look for him, and it was some Time before I found him. At length I was told, that he was at the Winning Post, in the Middle of a great Circle of Gentlemen, and others, who had assembled there in relation to some Disputes that had happened about the Horses. I came up in the civillest Manner I could, and said, My Lord, I leave to speak with your Lordship aside; I was unwilling to expose the Fact before the Crowd, and for that Reason I called him aside, to acquaint him of it in a proper Manner; whether he misapprehended me or no, I can't tell; but he replied, This is no Time nor Place; you see I have no Pistols before me. I told him, for what I have to say to your Lordship, every Time and Place is proper; I come only with a Complaint against one of your Servants, who has insulted a Gentleman; and I should be glad to know, my Lord, whether it is your Orders or Approbation he behaveth so. My Lord asked me, who the Gentleman was that was insulted. I pointed out to Mr. Annesley, who was behind out of the Circle, and out of the Crowd, and said, That is the Gentleman, my Lord. To which he replied, He a Gentleman! a Shoe-Boy, G—d, a Blackguard and a Thief. One or two who stood by the noble Lord upon that, said, What, my Lord, will you turn off your Servant for that Scoundrel? I have omitted something, my Lord, I beg Pardon; I likewise

A. The Assault was very publick, it is proper the Satisfaction should also be so, therefore it is expected that you should strip your Servant, and turn him off in the Field.
 Mr. Baron Mauleverer here lets the Jury know what Mr. MacKercher had hitherto said; and then says, Repeat that again, that the Jury may bear the very Words.

Mr. MacKercher. I said, That as the Assault was very publick, that it was expected his Lordship should give adequate Satisfaction, which was, that he should strip the Servant of his Livery, and turn him off on the Ground; or Words to that Effect.

Mr. Harward. Are you positive that you explained yourself in such a Manner that he could not mistake you?—A. I am satisfied I did.

Court. Q. And after this it was some Gentlemen said, What, will you turn off your Servant for that Scoundrel?

A. It was after this that some Gentlemen interfering, said that.

Mr. MacManus. Q. Do you know who said that?

A. I can't be positive, but I think it was the same Person that struck me afterwards; I think it was Francis Annesley.

Q. Are you sure it was he?

A. I say, Sir, I can't be positive.—Lord Anglesea then said, No, by God, I won't; and you are a Villain, a Scoundrel, and a Thief; and a great deal more of the like decent Sort of Language he gave me.

Court. Q. Whom did my Lord apply to when he said that?

A. To me. You are a Villain, a Scoundrel, and a Thief; as near as I can recollect, those are the very Words. With that I believe I might say, in Return, That his Lordship lied, and that he durst not single himself out and tell me so. Whereupon five or six Persons, whom I don't know (but Mr. Jans was one of them) called out, My Lord, you shan't go fight such a Scoundrel; here are Abundance of People to go out with him. My Lord, I don't know whether it was precisely at that Point of Time or not, when a Gentleman came and struck me on the Head; but I think it was.

Mr. MacManus. Q. Who was that Gentleman?

A. It was Mr. Francis Annesley, of Ballyfax.

Q. Do you see him in Court?

A. That is the Gentleman.

Court. Q. With what did he strike you?

A. With the Butt End of a Whip; which Stroke occasioned a Contusion; and there was a little Bit of the Skin broke, which occasioned a Bleeding.

Q. What further passed, Sir?

A. I returned the Blow, my Lord, with the Lash End of my Whip. I had a Cafe of Pistols before me, but would not make use of them in the Crowd. Then Lord Anglesea, finding himself so well supported, raised himself up in his Stirrups, accosted the Populace, and all that were present there, and poured out a great deal of scurrilous Language against Mr. Annesley.

D. Go on, Sir.

A. Declared, That he was not his Brother's lawful Son, but a Bastard of Juggy Landy's, and a Shoe-Black. When I perceived Lord Anglesea attended by so great a Crowd, who seemed all to side with him, I began to be apprehensive that there might be some Danger of a Design against Mr. Annesley, and thereon I called to Mr. Gooltry and Mr. Kennedy, who were two of our Company, to come away. I myself turned about my Horse immediately, and went in Quest of Mr. Annesley. I had no sooner turned my Horse, but I heard Lord Anglesea (for I know his Voice very well) call out distinctly, There is one of the Villains, knock him down.

Mr. MacManus. Q. Did you see my Lord Anglesea when he said so?

A. I did not; but I know his Voice perfectly well.

Q. Are you positive you know his Voice?—A. I am positive I know his Voice, if one Voice can be distinguished from another.

Q. What were the Words?

A. There is one of the Villains, knock him down.

Q. Did you hear him name any Person's Name?

A. I heard him name Mr. Gooltry, and say, that That Gooltry is one of the greatest Villains, knock him down. And I apprehend that it was then that Mr. Gooltry was struck, though I did not see it.—I went in Quest of Mr. Annesley, and when I found him, carried him a little aside from the Crowd. We had not been there half a Minute, when one of my Servants and a Gentleman or two, Strangers to me, came up to us, and with great Emotion and Concern said, For God's Sake get away, get you gone as fast as you can, there is a Design to murder you all.

Q. Who were they that said so?

A. There was a Groom belonging to us; but I don't know the others.

Mr. Bagot. Was it the Groom or the Gentlemen that desired you to get away?

A. The Groom came first, and desired us to go off; I did not give Credit to what he said, being resolved to wait there till our Company joined us; but immediately there came up two Gentlemen, and said, For God's Sake, Gentlemen, get away as fast as you can, for there is a Design to murder you.

Court. Who was with you at this Time?

A. Mr. Annesley only.—The two Gentlemen varied in their Expression a little; for the one said, Go off, for there is a Design to murder Mr. Annesley and you; and the other said, For God's Sake go off, for you will all be murdered. Upon which I desired Mr. Annesley to put Spurs to his Horse, and we galloped away at a gentle Canter. We had not gone above fifty or sixty Yards, when we perceived People moving after us, which made us whip and spur our Horses; but Mr. Annesley was mounted on a Horse that had more Speed than mine, and he made a great deal of Way before me. There was a Gentleman passing by, one Mr. Hacket, mounted upon a good Horse, and I desired him to keep close to Mr. Annesley. After we had passed over the Sod, the Curragh Ground, and had entered into the Road, a Lane leading to Newbridge, a good Way up the Lane, there I found Mr. Annesley lying in a Ditch.

Q. Whereabouts was that?

A. A good Way up the Lane, leading from the Curragh to Newbridge, speechless and senseless, and, as I imagined, dead, my Lord. I found him with several People about him, to the Number of Nine or Ten.

Q. Do you know those Persons?

A. Why really there are two that I can now recollect; one Mr. Archbold, quite a Stranger to me at that Time, and a Gentleman, who is an Attorney in Dublin; I think his Name is Keravan, or Cocbran.

D. Go on, Sir, if you please.

A. There was a Surgeon called for.

Q. Do you know who the Surgeon was?

A. That Gentleman, Mr. Hacket, who I had spoke to, and who had passed me.—I don't know whether he had Lancets himself, or borrowed Lancets, but he attempted to bleed Mr. Annesley, and he could get no Blood. In this Condition Mr. Annesley continued for about three Quarters of an Hour, to the best of my Judgment; and there being no Carriage, nor he able to get on Horseback, I rode directly to the Inn, to order the Coach which had brought us from Dublin; but before the Coach was ready, he was brought to the Door of the Inn in a Chaise. I don't know whether I ought to go any further, or to relate what passed the next Day, which had still a darker and more wicked Complexion.

Court. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Morgan. I hope your Lordship will think, that as these Indictments are Indictments for Assaults committed upon the 16th of September, any Thing that happened after that Day is not proper to be given in Evidence, and more especially as they are not laid with a Continuando, and therefore submit it to you, whether it should not be given in Direction to the Gentlemen of the other Side not to travel into the Transactions of any subsequent Day. I think every Fact before that Day relative to the Fact laid in the Indictments is proper to go to the Jury; but any distinct Transactions of the following Day, no way relative to such Fact, are not proper to go to them, and therefore ought not to be admitted as Evidence, and more especially as the Traversers can't be supposed to be prepared in any Defence thereto, not being charged with any Thing but what was previous to the 17th. I apprehend that Mr. MacKercher is just about giving an Account of what happened on the 17th, which I conceive is no way material or relative to these Indictments, and therefore hope that the Evidence only that he can give to the very Facts laid in the Indictments will be admitted, and looked upon as proper Evidence, and no other permitted by your Lordship to go before the Jury.

Court. I hope you won't unnecessarily lose Time about Matters that are obvious, and need no Debate. To be sure, any thing not relative to the Fact is improper to be given in Evidence, or to come into the Consideration of the Jury; but any thing relative to the Fact, which can help to explain it, whether before or after it happened, is extremely material for the Consideration of the Court and the Jury. This Case, or Cases of the like Nature, I have heard practised a hundred and a hundred times; for I did, for three or four Years together, constantly attend in a Place where such Cases as this were carried on, and I found it always the Practice for every thing tending to shew and explain the Fact, whether it happened before or after the Committal of it, to be allowed as proper Evidence.

Mr. Spring. My Lord, I own it is very proper for every thing to be given in Evidence relative to the Fact; but nothing can relate to, or be the Occasion of this Fact, but what happened before it was committed; and therefore it is highly improper to take in any supplemental Transaction of the following Day, no way relative to the Fact for which the Traversers stand indicted, and which can only serve to inflame the Minds of People. I think it enough for us to have prepared ourselves for any Actions that happened before the 16th, and not be called upon to answer for any Thing that occurred after Indictments were laid, and no way relative to it. This has been the constant Practice, and I think it to be as clear as any thing in the whole Course of the Proceedings of the Law.

The Counsel for the Traversers were over-ruled in their Objection.

Mr. Maloni. I desire, since Mr. MacKercher is permitted to proceed, that he may be confined to the Transactions of the next Day, which are relative to the Fact only.

Court. I shall take care to confine him to such Evidence as is proper. Go on, Sir.

Mr. MacKercher. We went early to Bed, with a Design to get up in the Morning betimes, and return to Dublin; but before we could get out of our Beds in the Morning, we were alarmed by the Landlord of the House and his Servants, who acquainted us, that the Ways were beset all round the House with a great Number of People with all Sorts of Weapons; and that he apprehended it was with a wicked Design against the Life of Mr. Annesley, and the other Gentlemen; that some of them, he knew, belonged to Lord Anglesea, and others to Mr. Francis Annesley.

Court. What was that Man's Name?

A. Burchell.—We got out of our Beds, and expecting the worst, put ourselves in a Posture of Defence.

D. Go on, Sir.

A. This alarmed us a good Deal, my Lord, and we got out of Bed, and put ourselves in a Posture of Defence. The same Advices were repeated over and over again to us.

Q. By the same Persons, or by others?

A. By the same and other Persons.—Several Gentlemen that lodged in the same House that Night, who were not of our Company, were very much alarmed, got their Horses, and rode away.

Q. Do you know who they were?

A. I don't know, my Lord: Mr. Hacket and one Mr. Carrick stayed; perhaps they can give you some Account of them.—We were likewise told, before we could venture down Stairs, that the Passage was occupied by three, four, or more of Lord Anglesea's People, armed in a very extraordinary Manner.

Q. From whom had you that Information?

A. From the Landlord, from Burchell.—My Lord, as our Company was not very numerous, and consequently not able to defend ourselves long against such a Multitude, we fell upon a Stratagem, which was, to make the Landlord whisper among them, That we expected a Troop of Horse from Dublin. In a short Time after he acquainted us, that he had whispered it about, and he believed it would have the desired Effect, for some of them were frightened. I then ventured down Stairs; I no sooner came down, but I was seized upon by one Michael Lacy (attended by a Constable), who is a principal Agent of Lord Anglesea's, as I am informed. I asked the Constable at whose Instance I was arrested; Lacy answered me, it was at my Lord Anglesea's, and produced a Warrant from one Mr. Benjamin Fish, a Justice of Peace of that Part of the Country. I told Lacy, that my Lord Anglesea had no Occasion to bring all this Crowd together with Arms to seize upon Gentlemen, who were always ready to submit to the King's Orders wherever they appeared, unless he had some wicked Design to execute under that Colour. However, I desired him to walk up Stairs, that I would follow him, and give Bail.

Q. What

Q. What was the Warrant for?

A. For an Assault. Lord Anglesea had sworn Examinations against me, Mr. Gosfry, and Mr. Kennedy, for an Assault the preceding Day upon the Curragh, wherein he had sworn that he was in Fear and Danger of his Life, as I was told.

D. Go on, Sir.

A. Lacy walked up Stairs, and I shewed him Mr. Gosfry and Mr. Kennedy, the other Gentlemen that were charged with the Assault; they likewise submitted. We breakfasted, and ordered the Coach to be got ready to carry us before a Justice of Peace, to give Bail; they struggled hard to have us go back towards the Curragh to give Bail; but we told them, that, as we were going forward to Dublin, it was more reasonable we should give Bail to a Justice on the Way; in which we prevailed, and went into the Coach.

Q. Who went into the Coach?

A. Mr. Kennedy, and I, and Mr. Carrick, one of the Gentlemen that was to be our Bail. We would not so much as carry a Sword, or any Sort of Weapon, as we looked upon ourselves to be in the Condition of Prisoners, and respected the Laws. Mr. Annesley rode with Pistols, as he was not charged with any Assault; Mr. Gosfry, the Servants, and Mr. Hacket, rode along with him. We had not gone far from Newbridge, in our way towards Naas, when the Coach was stopped, and Mr. Gosfry came up and alarmed us.

Q. Who stopped the Coach?

A. Mr. Gosfry---and told us, that there was a Man there that was going to shoot Mr. Annesley, and desired we would take him into the Coach. I forgot to acquaint your Lordship, that Lacy followed us likewise, armed with Pistols.

Q. On Horseback?—A. On Horseback.

D. Go on, Sir.

A. When we were about half-way, we were met by several People from Naas, who had been informed of our Danger, and came to our Assistance; and in this Order we went to Naas, with all this Croud attending us.

Q. How many met you from Naas?

A. There were, I believe, about fourteen or fifteen People.—We sent for the Magistrate of the Place, one Mr. Bonner (who is now here in this Town), told him what had happened, and desired that one Angus Byrne, who at that Time called himself a Servant to Lord Anglesea, and carried a rifled-barrelled Piece, might be examined for what Purpose he carried it. Before the Magistrate would proceed to Examination, he would see whether the Piece was loaded or not. It was a Screw Barrel; the Barrel was unscrewed in the Presence of the Magistrate, as I was told by Mr. Hacket and Mr. Carrick, who unscrewed it, and they extracted eight Bullets. Then Angus Byrne was called into the Room, where there were nine or ten Gentlemen present, and examined. He was asked, Whose Gun that was? He answered, It is my Lord Anglesea's. What were you to do with this Gun? I was desired to pursue Mr. Lacy's Directions. What Directions had Mr. Lacy? To that he answered in general, In case there had been a Rescue; without explaining himself any further. Then he was asked, In case of a Rescue, what was he to do with this Gun, loaded as it was with eight Bullets? Lacy upon that came up, and told him, Sir, answer no more Questions, you are not obliged to answer. Then Lacy, pretending to be Lord Anglesea's Servant, and claiming the Gun as Lord Anglesea's, the Gun (indeed contrary to my Opinion) was delivered to him by the Advice of another Gentleman who was present. Mr. Bonner, not thinking himself sufficiently authorized to take Bail in a Case of so high a Nature where a Peer was concerned, referred us to Mr. John Bourke, a Gentleman in that Neighbourhood; from whence, after Bail given, we proceeded to Dublin. I have narrated the principal Facts, as near as I could recollect them, my Lord, and have nothing further that is material.

Mr. Harward. Mr. Mac Kercher, If I don't mistake it, you have mentioned that you were apprehensive, I think, upon the Information of a Servant, and two Gentlemen that you don't know, who came up to you upon the Curragh, to tell you to get away as well as you could; that you might be killed; you say, you were apprehensive that you and your Friends there would be murdered; what I desire is this, that you will satisfy the Court and the Jury, what your Reasons were for apprehending there was that Design?

A. Why really, Sir, I had several Intimations long before that Time, of Lord Anglesea's Designs, of which I could give many Instances, were it proper, on this Occasion; and I saw him that Day supported by a great Number of People, who bore no agreeable Countenances to Mr. Annesley, or any of our Company; these I thought Grounds sufficient for my Apprehensions.

Q. You gave an Account of a rifled-barrelled Gun the next Day; were there any other Arms when those People came to apprehend you, and who had them?

A. Yes, Sir, I perceived one Man, that belonged to Lord Anglesea, with a Pistol on each Side of his Breast. He was one of his Servants, as I perceived by the Livery.

Cross Examination.

Mr. Spring. You were pleased to say, that on the 14th, the first Day of the Curragh Races, you were insulted by Lord Anglesea?

A. Mr. Mac Kercher. Yes.

Q. Did not you go the first Day attended by a great Number of Gentlemen and Servants, all armed? The first Day, Sir?

A. I believe there were about three of the Gentlemen armed, and two Servants.

Q. Were they armed with Pistols and Back-swords, or with Pistols, Blunderbusses, and Carbines?

A. I can't recollect whether there were any Blunderbusses, or not.

Q. Were the Servants armed?—A. They were, and always were when we travelled in England, as well as there.

Q. Is it the Custom to go to Races armed?

A. I don't know that it is the Custom. Any Gentleman that pleases may carry Arms, if he will; I have known it the Custom in Scotland for Gentlemen to ride with Furniture and Pistols; and I saw some at the Curragh that Day.

Q. Is it the Custom in England or Ireland?—A. I believe not of late the general Usage; but any body may, if they please, ride in Furniture.

Q. You said just now, Sir, that you were insulted the first Day?

A. I did so.

Q. Can you take upon you to say, that it was Lord Anglesea called out, and gave you the opprobrious Language you mentioned?—A. I can take it upon me positively to say it was he, because I saw him and heard him.

Q. You saw him and heard him?—A. I did.

Q. Pray, Sir, had not you Reason from thence to conclude, that if you went thither, you should meet with the same Treatment the next Day?

A. I own, I might have Reason from Lord Anglesea's Behaviour, and Attempts before that Time, to apprehend every Thing that's evil; and it was for that Reason that we always went very well armed.

Q. You went therefore apprehensive of ill Treatment?

A. No, Sir, I did not say I was apprehensive of ill Treatment there more than at any other Place, because I looked upon us not only to be under the Protection of the Law, but also securer, where all the Gentlemen of a Country were assembled, who would not suffer us to be insulted.

Q. But I would know, had not you Reason to expect the like Treatment again?—A. I had all the Reason in the World to expect it from Lord Anglesea; but was determined to keep out of his Way, if possible.

Q. You'll recollect the Preparations you made the Night before, for any possible Event that might happen?

A. We made no extraordinary Preparations.

Q. Were there no fresh Chargings?—A. We always charge our Carbines, if we have any, and Pistols every Morning, when we ride.

Q. Were not your Servants Blunderbusses charged?

A. I know not that they had any.

Q. Pray, Sir, recollect the Directions you gave for their loading their Arms.

A. By your ensnaring Question, you seem to take for granted that I gave particular Directions; but I gave no particular Directions.

Q. Did you give any general Directions?

A. I always gave general Directions for having our Arms loaded, and in good Order, every Morning.

Q. Did any of your Company load any of those Arms?

A. I don't recollect that they did.

Q. Did not you load some of those Arms yourself?

A. I loaded none; I leave that to the Servants to be done every Morning.

Q. What! to load every Morning?—A. Not to load, but prime; to see that the Arms are tight, and in good Order.

Q. You say, that Friday you met my Lord Anglesea's Coachman; explain, did he drive round you, or at you?

A. He made several Pushes at us directly, so that if we had not avoided him, he must have run over us, and have done us Mischief. He made several Pushes at our Company within the Rails, which obliged us, in order to avoid him, to go without the Rails; and he followed us without the Rails, and made several Pushes at us there also.

Q. How far was Lord Anglesea from this Place?

A. I don't know where he was at that Time. I went in quest of him afterwards, and was a good while before I could find him, and in the end found him at the Winning-Post.

Q. How far was that from the Place where you were insulted by the Coachman?—A. He pursued us all over the Place.

Q. What Place?

A. The Place where the Company resort, by the Winning-Post; the other Side of the Winning-Post from Burchell's.

Q. But he could not drive at you, without driving at others at the same Time?—A. He drove at our Company directly, and followed us when we avoided him.

Q. You looked upon this Treatment as an Affront, and without Question resented it in such a Manner as Men of Honour would, not on the Servant, but on the Master, and went to look for Lord Anglesea, to get Satisfaction in the way usual among Men of Honour?

A. Quite the contrary, Sir; I went with a Resolution to keep the Peace.

Q. Had you no Directions from Mr. Annesley to go to call Lord Anglesea to Account?—A. I had no Directions.

Q. Then you did it of your own Head, I suppose?—A. I did.

Q. I say, you went to find out Lord Anglesea either by Directions, or of your own Head?—A. If you will let me know your Meaning, if you will speak so as to be understood, I shall give you an adequate Answer.

Q. Did you go up to Lord Anglesea of yourself?

A. I went of myself, Sir.

Q. Did not you know that my Lord Anglesea had not only at that Time insisted that Mr. Annesley was the Bastard Son of Juggy Landy, but knew your Errand into this Kingdom?

A. What if I did? what is that to the present Purpose?

Q. Answer the Question, Sir; Did not you believe that?

A. I heard he had; I believed it.

Q. Could you, Sir, then expect from Lord Anglesea in Reason, any kind of Apology, or Satisfaction, or Correction of his Servant, for saying of Mr. Annesley what Lord Anglesea himself always insisted he was?

A. I did, and ought to have expected it; and much more in the Case of Mr. Annesley than of any other, if my Lord Anglesea had acted properly.

Q. You were his Champion, I suppose, and must have Satisfaction for the Affront done him?

A. I did not turn Champion for him; a Man turns Champion for another that goes to fight his Battles; I did not go for that Purpose, but in order to avoid a Breach of the Peace.

Q. Could you expect that Lord Anglesea could submit to turning off his Servant for saying That, that he himself had said to all the World?

A. I have repeated it two or three Times, that I did, and had Reason to expect it, if Lord Anglesea had acted as a reasonable Man, and a Man of Honour.

Q. But you knew Lord Anglesea said, he was the Son of a Kitchen-Maid, could you then expect from him, consistently with his constant and repeated Declarations, that Lord Anglesea should strip his Coachman for an Affront offered to such a Person?

A. What Lord Anglesea said proves nothing, nor is it any Way pertinent to the present Purpose. I thought it not only consistent, but what Lord Anglesea of all Men in the World should have done. Nor did what Lord Anglesea thought or said, give his Servant or himself a Right to insult Mr. Annesley in so publick a Manner.

Q. Did you imagine it reasonable for any Person to strip his Coachman at such a Time and Place, and turn him out of his Box?

Q. I looked upon it to be as gentle a Chastisement as the Nature of the
 A. admitted of.
 Q. Must my Lord Anglesea have driven his Coach home himself?
 A. I saw Lord Anglesea on Horseback.
 Q. Was not your Intention, in case he refused, to tell him he must
 Mr. Annesley or you?
 A. No really; I had no such Intention.
 Q. Was it not to provoke him to a Quarrel?
 A. I do say it was not.
 Q. Yet you expected, when you went to make a Demand of this and, that he would have complied with this Request of yours?
 A. If I had been of that Disposition, I should have done it the first Day.
 Q. You mentioned the Words Public Satisfaction; had you no other than to receive it by his stripping his Servant?
 A. Sir, I have told you three or four Times I had not.
 Q. Did not you strike my Lord Anglesea that Day?—A. I did not.
 Q. Did not you break his Head, Sir?
 A. I did not, Sir; I heard Lord Anglesea swore I did.
 Q. Did you see any body else strike him?
 A. I did not; nor do I believe he was struck that Day.
 Q. Did not you come up in a very violent Manner, and force your way through a Crowd to come at him?
 A. I believe I might, I believe I did press through the Crowd.
 Q. Did not you apprehend that Lord Anglesea knew you were the friend of Mr. Annesley?—A. I am persuaded he did.
 Q. Did you not, upon some Conversation between Lord Anglesea and you, raise your Hand?
 A. Why really I do not know whether I did or not; for it is pretty common and habitual with me when I speak to raise my Hand in this manner.
 Q. And you do not know whether it was raised or not?
 A. I believe there is no Man that is obliged to stand like a Statue when he speaks.
 Q. Did not you say that James Annesley was Earl of Anglesea, and you Impostor?—A. I did not name the Earl of Anglesea that day.
 Q. You did not tell him that he was an Impostor?—A. I did not.
 Q. Did you turn your Whip in your Hand?
 A. I do not know how I held my Whip.
 Q. I ask you, Sir, whether during that Conversation with Lord Anglesea, whether with or without Provocation, you did not tell him that he was an Impostor?
 A. I now recollect; I remember very well, when he called Mr. An- nesley a Shoe-black, a Barbador, and a Thief; I told him, he lied, he was no Barbador, he was the lawful Son of Lord Altham, that before two Months went out, it would appear to the World to be so; and in that I have the Satisfaction to think I have spoke prophetically.
 Mr. Spring. You are somewhat too early, you must wait further for the Completion of your Prophecy.
 A. And you, Sir, are too hasty in forming Conclusions.
 Q. Pray, Sir, you remember the next Day to have seen Michael Lacy?
 A. Yes, Sir.
 Q. Did not you thank that Lacy for his Civility to you?
 A. Why really I believe I did; I believe I might thank him for executing the Warrant peaceably, for I was persuaded, from the Apparatus I saw there, his Orders were otherwise; but even in that I cannot help saying that I was obliged to temporize so far.
 Q. Did not you thank him at Naas?
 A. No, not at all, it was at Burchell's, for putting the Warrant in execution as he did peaceably, for we expected worse Usage.
 Q. Do you recollect that you desired my Lord to turn aside with you?
 A. I believe it was the first Word I said to him.
 Q. Did not you say after, that he dared not?
 A. After he had called me a Scoundrel, a Thief, and Villain, I told him, that he durst not for the Soul of him single himself out and tell me so.
 Q. Was not that before you was struck, Sir?
 A. I believe it was before. I cannot well remember, but I think it was.
 Q. In what Manner was Lord Anglesea armed? What Arms had he?
 A. I saw none about him.
 Q. Did not you see his Pistols?—A. I saw none.
 Q. How was Mr. Francis Annesley armed?
 A. I did not observe him so particularly; I know he was armed with a Whip, which I felt the Weight of.
 Q. Did you see any of Lord Anglesea's Company armed?
 A. I saw some People armed that were of his Side, that were about him, and who seemed to take Part with him.
 Q. Are you sure they were of his Company?
 A. I concluded they were, as most of them seemed to side with him.
 Q. You mentioned something you apprehended from their Countenances that you withdrew yourself from thence, from Mischief; describe the terrible Faces?
 A. By their Countenances, I apprehended some Mischief might happen; but I am not so good a Painter as to humour you in drawing the Attendances they were in.
 Q. Who were the Persons who pursued Mr. Annesley and you?
 A. I can't tell you particularly who they were, being a Stranger; I saw there were a great many.
 Q. Did you know none of them?
 A. There were two Gentlemen I knew, whose Names I am sorry you do not mention, for I did not intend it, Sir Kildare Barrowes and Mr.
Erren that pursued Mr. Annesley.
 Q. Don't you believe that they pursued out of Curiosity?
 A. I don't know their Intent; but I know I was treated rudely by some of them.
 Q. Well! but you can't point out any of Lord Anglesea's Retinue or servants that pursued you at this Time?
 A. I can't, except Mr. Jans; he was one of the Company; I was a stranger, and did not know the rest.
 Q. Was he one of the Pursuers?
 A. I don't know; I did not observe him; he might be there for all I know.
 Q. Did you observe Mr. Lacy there?
 A. IX.

A. I did not observe him, yet he might be there for what I know.
 Q. But you concluded they were his People, because they pursued you?
 A. I concluded so, and do so still.
 Q. Mr. Archbold too, I suppose, was one of the Pursuers?
 A. I don't know whether he was, or not. I found him where Mr.
Annesley lay, and might, for aught I know, have come the contrary Way, from Newbridge.
 Q. When you came up to where Mr. Annesley was, you found some People attending him, did any body strike him?
 A. I did not see any strike him, nor would I tamely have seen it.
 Q. Did you see any Servant of Lord Anglesea's in Livery there?
 A. I did not see any of his Livery there, but I have been told since they were there.
 Q. You know Angus Byrne?—A. I do.
 Q. How long have you been acquainted with him?
 A. I have been acquainted with him ever since that Affair of the Cur- ragh happened.
 Q. Did not you invite him into your Service?—A. I did not.
 Q. And he is not your Servant?—A. He is not.
 Q. Was not he in England with you?
 A. He was in England, but not a Servant.
 Q. How did he live there?
 A. He lived upon my Bounty there, but not a Servant.
 Q. Did not you invite him into England?
 A. I never invited him there, but received him when he came.
 Q. Did not you bring him over again?—A. I did.
 Q. Did not you give him some Advice about submitting to these Indictments?—A. I did not.
 Q. Did he never complain to you that Lord Anglesea had used him ill?
 A. He never did.
 Q. Did not he tell you that Lord Anglesea had sent him to Gaol?
 A. He did not; he only told me that Lord Anglesea owed him his Wages.
 Q. Had you ever Angus Byrne at your House on College-Green?
 A. Yes, Sir, since we came last into this Kingdom.
 Q. He was there?—A. He was.
 Q. Did you never threaten to send him to Gaol, if he did not do as he was directed?
 A. I gave him no Directions; but did at first, immediately after the Assault, and before he made his Declaration, threaten to send him to Gaol.
 Q. What do you mean by his Declaration?
 A. A Declaration that he made in Dublin, when he first turned Evidence for the Crown.
 Q. Did you take any Declaration in Writing from him?
 A. I did not.
 Q. Did you know whether Mr. Livingstone did or not?
 A. I do not know.
 Q. Did he take down in Writing, in your Presence, any Thing this Man had to swear?—A. I do not know that he did.
 Q. Do not you believe he did?
 A. I cannot frame any Belief about it.
 Q. Is Mr. Livingstone an Agent of Mr. Annesley's?
 A. He is a Friend of his, but no Agent.
 Q. Is he not an Assistant in his Affairs?
 A. He has a Share of the Trouble of his Affairs.
 Q. Did not he take in Writing what that Man had to say? Recollect.
 A. I cannot recollect he did.
 Q. Were these People, that you call Servants of Lord Anglesea, that surrounded the House, in the Livery or not?
 A. I understood Lacy to be his Servant and chief Agent, but I saw none in his Livery, save one.
 Q. Did you see any in his Livery on the Curragh?
 A. I saw one in a Livery, that I took to be his Livery.
 Q. Did Burchell tell you that any of Mr. Francis Annesley's Servants were at the Inn in Arms?
 A. I do not recollect whether they were Servants or not, he said his People were in and about it.
 Court. Is it your Belief or Opinion, that if you had not made the Application to Lord Anglesea, whether this Pursuit, and every Thing that happened after, would have happened?
 A. I could then frame no Judgment about it, my Lord; I have since, indeed, in my own Mind, from what I have seen, been thoroughly persuaded that something of the Nature would have happened; and that the Provocations given us, were intended on set Purpose to draw us in.
 Q. You are asked to your present Opinion?
 A. I am of Opinion now that it would have happened some Way or other, I was not then.
 Mr. Spring concludes from thence that Mr. MacKercher solicited it.
 Court. The Jury desire to know whether your Pistols, when you were upon the Curragh, were charged and primed, or not?
 A. I believe they were.
 Q. Whether when you and my Lord were discoursing together you put your Hand to your Pistols?
 A. I do not remember I did, and I am positive I did not.

2. HUGH KENNEDY, Esquire.

Mr. Callaghan. Where were you upon the 16th of September last?
 Mr. Kennedy. Upon the Curragh of Kildare.
 Q. Inform the Court and the Jury of the Transactions of that Day; tell what happened to Mr. Annesley, Mr. MacKercher, and yourself.
 A. When we came first upon the Curragh, we were told there was a rising Ground upon the other Side of the Field, from which we might better see the Diversions; accordingly we made towards it; in our Way we were insulted by the Coachman of my Lord Anglesea, who drove at us, pointing to Mr. Annesley, and calling him Shoe-black. Mr. MacKercher perceived him sooner than I did; he asked me if I had seen him? I told him I had. Immediately after that we perceived him making up to us with his Coach, which he drove again at us, and repeated it several Times. Perceiving he continued still to drive at us, Mr. MacKercher then said, he would see where Lord Anglesea was, to complain of the Abuse of his Coachman: Accordingly,

diggly, we went in search of him, and were for some time before we could find him. We found him at the Winning-Post, where Mr. MacKercher went up, and in the mildest Manner possible told him, he wanted to speak to his Lordship. All the Words they had together I cannot distinctly repeat; but thus much I heard, that when Mr. MacKercher told him he wanted to speak to him, he said, It was not a proper Place. Mr. MacKercher told him, Every Place was proper for what he had to say to his Lordship, which was, to complain of the Insolence of his Coachman, and to desire he would give Satisfaction for the Affront he had given a Gentleman on the Field. Lord Anglesea asked, What Gentleman was affronted? Mr. MacKercher pointed to Mr. Annesley, and told him that Gentleman. Upon which Words arose between them, which I cannot distinctly repeat at this time; but in consequence of those Words, soon after I saw Mr. Francis Annesley of Ballyfax strike Mr. MacKercher over the Head, so that the Blood came. Lord Anglesea, quickly after that happened, raised himself in his Stirrups, and made use of the Language already repeated, That Mr. Annesley was not his Brother's lawful Son, but the Bastard of Juggy Landy, a Shoe-Black, and to that Effect. Soon after which Mr. MacKercher desired Mr. Goofry and me to retire; as soon as we heard him desire that, we turned our Horses to follow him. Immediately on the Turn of my Horse, Lord Anglesea struck me a violent Blow on the Head, so as to stun me.

Court. With what?—A. With the Handle of his Whip, my Lord.

Q. During what Part of the Transaction was this?

A. Immediately after the Language that passed between him and Mr. MacKercher.

Q. Did he say any thing before he struck you?

A. I believe he might say, There is one of the Villains.

Q. Did he name any Man?

A. I believe Mr. Goofry, There is that Villain Goofry, or to that Effect.

Q. Was it at the same time that he struck you that he said those Words?

A. A very short time before I was struck he said those Words.

Q. Describe the Stroke you got.

A. The Stroke I got was on the back Part of my Head with the Butt End of his Whip.

Q. Did it do you any Hurt?

A. It stunned me to that Degree that I almost fell upon my Horse's Neck.

Q. What was the Consequence of that Stroke?

A. There was a very great Effusion of Blood followed.

Q. What ensued upon that?

A. Immediately after that Blow, it was followed by a Number more from other People which knocked me down on my Horse, so that I should have fallen to the Ground, if I had not been supported by the People on each Side of me.

Q. Who gave those Blows?

A. I cannot tell, my Lord, I was knocked down in a good Measure, by the Blow Lord Anglesea gave me.

Mr. Callaghan. Tell what you remember happened after you recovered yourself.

A. As soon as I recovered and sat strait on my Horse again, Lord Anglesea came from the Company he was with, and struck me seven or eight Times running over the Head.

Court. With what?—A. With his Whip.

Q. Which End of his Whip?

A. It was the Lash End the last Time he struck, but he repeated his Blows so long that the People cried out Shame, saying, 'Tis a Shame to abuse a Gentleman so, or to that Effect; and soon after that he had done, and I rode off the Sod.

Mr. Callaghan. Was there any Conversation between my Lord Anglesea and you before you got that Stroke from him?

A. I never spoke to Lord Anglesea in my Life, Sir.

Q. Had he spoke to you before he gave you the Blow?

A. I do not know that he did.

Q. Did you give him any Provocation to strike?

A. I gave him no Provocation at all.

Q. I think you said you saw Mr. Francis Annesley strike Somebody; who was it he struck?—A. I did, I saw him strike Mr. MacKercher.

Q. With what, Sir?—A. With the Butt End of his Whip.

Q. Was that Stroke a moderate Stroke, or given with such Violence as carried an Intent of doing Mischief?—A. His Forehead immediately swelled pretty big, and a little Blood came from it.

Q. Before Mr. Annesley gave the Stroke, did you see Mr. MacKercher give him any Provocation to strike him?—A. I saw no Provocation that Mr. MacKercher gave, for I believe he did not speak to him at all.

Q. Do you believe that Mr. MacKercher could have given him Provocation without your seeing it?—A. I think not, for I was pretty near him, and must have observed it, if any had been given.

Q. Tell what passed after the People cried Shame, and you got off the Sod.

A. My Finger was almost broke by one of the Blows, and that occasioned my Whip to fall from my Hand.

Court. Explain yourself, Sir.

A. Immediately after my Lord Anglesea struck me, I was struck by a Number of other People whom I did not know, and among them I got this Wound on my Finger, which occasioned me to lose my Whip.

Mr. Callaghan. What became of you after this?

A. As soon as I could, I rode down the Hill in quest of Mr. Annesley and Mr. MacKercher; I found Mr. MacKercher just by where Mr. Annesley lay; I did not stay to speak to him, but went on to Mr. Annesley, whom I found fallen in the Ditch, lying senseless, speechless, and pale.

Court. What Number of People were about him in the Ditch?

A. Ten or a Dozen.

Q. Did they appear to be Friends, or any of the People you apprehended he was in Danger from?

A. I cannot say who they were, or what their Intention might be, I was a Stranger, and could not distinguish.

Q. Was it at that Time in the Power of any body to do him Mischief?

A. He had been so long in the Ditch when I came up, that they had got a Surgeon to bleed him.

Q. But do you think it was in the Power of those People to hurt him?
A. I believe they might if they had a mind, had not Mr. MacKercher and others of Mr. Annesley's Friends come up.

Mr. MacManus to Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. Kennedy. Where did you leave Mr. Goofry?—A. I left him, I believe, upon the Curragh; I cannot say, I did not see him after I was struck.

Q. Was he assaulted by any one?

A. He was wounded at the instant of Time I was.

Q. Did you see any Body strike him?—A. I cannot say distinctly that I did, but he was wounded about the same Time.

Q. After you took Mr. Annesley to Newbridge that Night, did you observe any thing on the Saturday after?

A. Yes, we were alarmed very early that Morning before we were up, the Landlord and others coming to tell us that the House was beset by a Number of People, who, they said, they believed had evil Intentions; upon which we got up, and did the best we could to make our Defence in case they attacked us. This continued for some Time, till at last Mr. MacKercher went down Stairs, to see if what we had been told was true; when he found it according to the Information he had received from the People of the House, that there was a Number of People armed about the House. Mr. MacKercher returned very suddenly, and with him one Lacy and a Constable, and told us, that there was an Action brought against him at the Suit of Lord Anglesea—

Mr. Callaghan. What do you mean by an Action?

A. A Warrant granted by a Justice of Peace.—The Person then told me he had the same against me and Mr. Goofry. What for, Sir? we asked him: He told us, on my Lord Anglesea's Affidavit that he was assaulted by us, and put in Fear of his Life.

Q. When Mr. MacKercher, and Lacy, and the Constable came up with the Warrant, what happened then?

A. Lacy told me and Mr. Goofry that he had a Warrant against us.

Q. And what did you do upon that?

A. We submitted directly. Soon after we had breakfasted, we disarmed ourselves, and went into the Coach, and were carried to Naas.

Q. Who went into the Coach?

A. Mr. MacKercher, Mr. Carrick, and myself.

Q. Did Mr. Annesley go into the Coach on the Road?—A. He did.

Q. How came that?—A. Mr. Goofry called out to us to take him in, for it was not safe for him to be there.

Q. Did Mr. Goofry give any Reason for his saying that?

A. He gave it as a Reason for taking him into the Coach, that it was not safe for him to ride, for that one of those Fellows was going to shoot him.

Q. When you came to Naas, what happened then?

A. We sent for the Sovereign of Naas to give in Bail, and there this Mr. Lacy, who came along with us, followed us into the Room, when this Person that appeared here, Byrne, was questioned in regard to his Gun.

Q. What kind of a Gun was it?

A. The Gun was a screw-barrell'd Gun, such as Game-keepers use.

Q. Who questioned him about it?

A. He was questioned by Mr. MacKercher what he was to do with it. He answered, to follow Lacy's Directions; and soon after Lacy stopp'd him, and bid him answer no more Questions.

Q. Was that Gun charged?

A. The Gun was unfcrewed before us in the Room, and from it taken eight Bullets.

Q. In your Presence?—A. I was present.

Q. Did any body claim that Gun back again?—A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How many Bullets were there?

A. There were eight, Sir, said by all the Gentlemen in the Room. I did not count them, but I believe there was that Number.

Q. By whom was the Gun claimed?—A. By Lacy, as Lord Anglesea said.

Q. Had Mr. Lacy any Arms?

A. I cannot say as to that; I do not remember; I think he had.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Morgan. Pray, Sir, was you at the Curragh the 14th of September?

Mr. Kennedy. I was, Sir.

Q. Did you see Lord Anglesea there?—A. I did.

Q. Was he in a Coach, or on Horseback?

A. I think he was in a Tent.

Q. On the 14th?—A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Recollect yourself whether you saw him in a Coach at any Time that Day?—A. I did not, to the best of my Memory.

Q. Do you know his Coach?—A. I can't say I did then.

Q. Why then, how can you take upon you to say that the Coach—Six which haunted you was his?

A. I had particular Reason to know it then, from hearing from the Coach-box the Man's Insults to Mr. Annesley.

Q. On the 16th you knew it, but not on the 14th?—A. I did, Sir.

Q. Did you see Lord Anglesea more than once on the 14th?

A. But once.

Q. Recollect whether you saw his Coach driving more than once the 14th?—A. I did not see it more than once.

Q. Now I ask you whether any Violence, or Attempt of Violence was made on the 14th?—A. There was none that I was privy to.

Q. How long, how many Hours was you on the Curragh?

A. I can't be precise as to the Time.

Q. Was you one Hour?—A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was you two?—A. Yes, I believe we were there or thereabouts.

Q. Where did you lie the Night before the 14th, on Tuesday Night?

A. In Dublin, Sir.

Q. What Hour did you come to the Curragh on the 14th?

A. I can't call to mind exactly.

Q. Where do you say you were the Night before the 14th?

A. We came from Dublin to the New-Inn the 14th.

Q. Did you lie at the New-Inn the Night before you went to the Curragh?

A. We did not.

Q. Did you inquire, or any of your Friends inquire, whether my Lord Anglesea was to be at the Curragh or not?

A. I do not remember that the Question was put by any of us.
 Q. Did you converse with any Body in relation to his being at the Curragh?—A. I remember none.
 Q. Had you at any Time after any Conversation about him?
 A. Yes, undoubtedly, having so many Remembrances of him with our Blows and broken Heads.
 Q. Had you any particular Conversation of him between the 14th and 16th?—A. We had not that I remember.
 Mr. Spring. Q. Now, Sir, I would ask you, whether any Body prevented Mr. Mac Kercher's going up to my Lord Anglesea, when he came to the Croud where my Lord stood?
 A. I can't say I saw any body prevent him.
 Q. Do you know one Chapman?—A. No really, I don't.
 Q. How near was you to Mr. Mac Kercher when he had the Conversation with my Lord Anglesea?—A. Not so far as I am now from you.
 Q. I ask you, Sir, whether the Words that pass'd between them were not loud Words?
 A. They were not loud of Mr. Mac Kercher's Side, because his Words were intended for nothing but to be peaceable and quiet; the Words became louder afterwards; Lord Anglesea was particularly loud enough.
 Q. I ask whether Mr. Mac Kercher did not challenge my Lord to fight?
 A. Mr. Mac Kercher's Words I can't distinctly repeat.
 Q. Well, but I ask whether he did not challenge my Lord to fight?
 A. After many Insults that Mr. Mac Kercher had met with, I believe he might say, That he dared not single himself out, and tell him so.
 Q. But did he not challenge him in direct Words?
 A. I do not apprehend he made use of any Words that imported a Challenge to Lord Anglesea.
 Q. You say you heard part of the Words that passed, did you hear Mr. Mac Kercher give my Lord the Lye before he was struck?
 A. I really cannot say whether it was before or after; I rather believe it was before he was struck. I cannot say positively, but it was after my Lord had given him abusive Language.
 Q. You mentioned your going to Newbridge after you had received your Abuse?—A. I did, Sir.
 Q. Now I ask you, Whether you saw any, and what Number of People riding to Newbridge, as if in Pursuit of any Body?
 A. When I came to the Place where Mr. Annesley was lying, I saw Forty or Fifty People, Horse-men and Foot, who I suppose had pursued.
 Q. Did Mr. Mac Kercher and you ride to the Place where Mr. Annesley lay, together?—A. We did not.
 Q. How far distant might you be?
 A. I did not see Mr. Mac Kercher till I came up to where Mr. Annesley was, and the Distance between Mr. Mac Kercher and Mr. Annesley was about the Length of this Court, or better.
 Q. Did you see any and what Number of People pass by you, that seem'd to be in pursuit of any Body?
 A. I cannot say; a good many People rode past, but I could not tell with what Intent.
 Q. What did you apprehend they rode for?—A. I really do not know.
 Q. Now do you imagine they, or any of them, were riding in pursuit of Mr. Annesley?
 A. I do not know. I rather believe they were the Pursuers, otherwise what should make them go after him?
 Q. You said at first that you saw some Forty or Fifty People, on Horseback and Foot, round the Place where Mr. Annesley was; who do you imagine they were, Friends or Enemies?
 A. For aught I know they might be the Pursuers, I cannot say.
 Q. Did you see any one of them offer Violence?—A. I did not then.
 Q. Did you see any Body lay hold of him, other than in a friendly Manner to assist him?—A. I cannot say I did.
 Q. Did you inquire of Mr. Annesley if any Body had hurt him?
 A. Mr. Annesley was not capable of speaking.
 Q. But when he came to himself, did you ask him how he came by any Hurt?—A. I did.
 Q. What did he then tell you was the Occasion of that Hurt?—A. The principal Occasion was the Fall of his Horse into the Ditch upon him.
 Q. And what occasioned his Horse to fall into the Ditch?
 A. The Occasion of his Horse's falling was that of his being close pursued; and when he perceived that, he pulled the Horse back, in order to defend himself, and he fell into the Ditch upon him.
 Q. Before Mr. Mac Kercher and you went up towards my Lord Anglesea, to complain of the Coachman, were you cautioned not to do it, for fear of entangling yourselves in a Quarrel?
 A. I cannot say that I had any particular Caution from any Body.
 Q. Did you hear any such Caution given to Mr. Mac Kercher?
 A. When I came down the Hill, I was advised by some People to go off the Ground, or else I should be murdered.
 Q. I ask again, did you or Mr. Mac Kercher receive any Caution not to go to Lord Anglesea?—A. No, I did not; nor do I know that he did.
 Q. Do you know one Abraham Robinson?—A. I do.
 Q. Recollect whether he caution'd you or Mr. Mac Kercher not to go?
 A. He gave me none.
 Q. Did he Mr. Mac Kercher?
 A. I know not, I did not hear him say any thing to him.
 Q. Now then I ask you, whether at any Time during this Affray you struck any Body, and who?—A. I know not, indeed, Sir.
 Q. But did you strike any Body?
 A. The Blow I received made me incapable of striking any Body?
 Q. Did you strike any, and what Person before you received that Stroke?
 A. I cannot say, in the Hurry particularly, whether I did or no: I know this, I never altered the Position of my Whip: If I happened to hit any Body, it was with the Lash of my Whip.
 Q. How can you be particular concerning what Mr. Mac Kercher did, and cannot recollect what you did yourself?
 A. That was some Time before the Confusion happened, so that I could better judge then than afterwards.
 Q. Was not the Time that Mr. Francis Annesley struck Mr. Mac Kercher a Time of Hurry and Confusion?

A. There was no Hurry and Confusion till that Blow, which occasioned it all.
 Q. Did you, or did you not, strike any Body, before you were struck yourself?
 A. I cannot really say; but after my Friend was struck, perhaps I might.
 Q. Do you not believe you struck, before you were struck?
 A. Yes, I believe I might, when I saw Mr. Mac Kercher struck.
 Q. Who was it you did strike?—A. Why, Sir, I cannot tell.
 Q. Did not you strike Lord Anglesea?—A. I did not.
 Q. Can you be certain you did not?
 A. I am positive I could not, for he was rather behind me than otherwise.
 Q. You say, you believe after your Friend was struck you did strike; can you recollect who you struck?
 A. Why really I cannot positively say, I struck one of those who struck Mr. Mac Kercher.
 Q. And yet you are positive you did not strike Lord Anglesea?
 A. I can be positive I did not strike Lord Anglesea before he struck me.
 Q. Endeavour to recollect who it was you struck?
 A. I cannot recollect who the Person was I did strike, for in a Minute's Time we were all in Confusion. I am sure it was not Lord Anglesea I struck, I knew him.
 Q. Might you not have struck Lord Anglesea then, as well as another?
 A. It was impossible, for he was behind, and his Blow prevented me from striking any Body.
 Q. Did not you strike Mr. Francis Annesley?
 A. I cannot tell; more probably him than another, as he struck Mr. Mac Kercher.
 Q. You know Mr. Goofry?—A. I do, Sir.
 Q. Did you see him strike any Body?—A. I believe I did.
 Q. Who?
 A. I believe I saw him strike Mr. Francis Annesley, after he had struck Mr. Mac Kercher.
 Q. Are you positive it was not before?—A. No; it was not before.
 Q. Had Mr. Goofry received any Blow before that?
 A. He received a violent Blow, and I cannot say whether before or after.
 Q. Did you see any of Lord Anglesea's Servants upon the Ground that Day?—A. I think I did.
 Q. Do you know his Livery?
 A. I cannot be positive as to that, I know what is deemed his Livery.
 Q. How were your Servants armed that Day?
 A. As they are when we travel.
 Q. How is that?—A. One or two of them had Pistols before them.
 Q. Do you believe they all had?
 A. I really cannot say positively whether they all had or not.
 Q. You can say whether you believe they had or not?
 A. I believe they had not all.
 Q. Had any of them a Blunderbuss?—A. Not that I know of.
 Q. A Musquet or a Gun?—A. No.
 Q. Had not every one of them Back-Swords?
 A. I cannot call to mind; I believe not.
 Q. Do you travel with Back-Swords?—A. No.
 Q. Tell how the Servants were armed.
 A. They were armed so far as to have Pistols before them, but I believe they had no Blunderbusses nor Back-Swords; to the best of my Memory and Belief they had not.
 Q. Jury by the Court. Did you see Mr. James Annesley ride off the Curragh? Was he in your View?
 A. He was in my View when Mr. Mac Kercher called to Mr. Goofry and me to come away, he was just by us, but he was quickly lost to me, because on my coming away I received the Blow that stunn'd me.
 Q. What might be the Space of Time between his going off the Ground and his lying in the Ditch?—A. About ten Minutes.
 Q. Can you tell what was the Space of Ground from the Place you saw him in the Ditch?—A. A Quarter of a Mile.
 Q. What Time might a Man ride that in?
 A. A Man might gallop it in five or six Minutes,
 Mr. Malone to Mr. Mac Kercher.
 Q. After those Words of the Coachman that you went to complain of, was you, or was you not advised not to go to Lord Anglesea?
 Mr. Mac Kercher. I believe I might.
 Q. By whom?
 A. Who the Person was I cannot really recollect; but my particular Reasons for going, notwithstanding that Caution, was, that I saw the Insult was continued, and not to be discontinued, unless my Lord Anglesea gave Directions to his Coachman to desist.
 Q. Was there any new Insult offered after you received the Caution?
 A. Yes, while I was in search of Lord Anglesea.
 Q. What Distance was you from Lord Anglesea when you received the Caution?
 A. I do not know where Lord Anglesea was at that Time that I was in quest of him.
 Q. But at what Distance did you find Lord Anglesea from the Place where you were cautioned not to go to him?
 A. I cannot tell that; I had occasion to traverse the Ground several Times after I had received that Caution before I could find him.
 Court to Mr. Kennedy.
 Q. Did you see any Persons pursue Mr. Annesley?
 Mr. Kennedy. I cannot say I did see any Persons pursue him, for soon after I received my Blow.
 Q. Did you see any People riding that Way?
 A. I saw a great many People galloping down the Hill, which they told me was after Mr. Annesley.
 Q. Did you ride in Arms that Day?
 A. I had no Arms that Day, I rode a hunting Saddle.
 3. JOHN KIRWAN.
 Mr. Morton. Where were you on the 16th of September last?
 Mr. Kirwan. I was upon the Curragh.
 Q. Whereabouts on the Curragh?

A. A good Piece this Side of the Winning-Post.
 Q. What Winning-Post?—A. On the Curragh.
 Q. What Part of the Curragh?—A. Upon the high Ground.
 Q. Tell what you observed to pass there that Day.
 A. What I observed was my Lord Anglesea was talking to the Gentlemen about him.
 Q. Do you know any of the Gentlemen?
 A. I do not know their Names.
 Q. What did you hear my Lord Anglesea say?
 A. I heard him telling, That this young Gentleman was only a Bastard got by the Kitchen-Maid. And with that two or three came up and told him that he was gone off the Sod, and with that he bade them follow him, and tear him Limb from Limb, and every one that takes his Part.
 Q. Who did he say this to?—A. I took one of them to be his Servant.
 Q. Why so?—A. Because he wore his Livery.
 Q. Are you sure he was his Servant?
 A. I could not swear that he was his Servant, but I took him to be so. But he came back and told him that he was killed. That's well enough, says my Lord.
 Q. Go on, and tell your Story.
 A. That's all that I heard, and I have no Benefit to tell any more than what I saw, and it is against my Will that I came here at all,—for I had no Mind to meddle, but I was brought to it.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Malone. Where do you live?—Mr. Kirwan. I live at Newbridge.
 Q. What do you follow?—A. I follow Dealing.
 Q. What Dealing?—A. In Linen Cloths.
 Q. Are you a married Man?—A. I am.
 Q. What Family have you?—A. I have two.
 Q. Two what?—A. Children.
 Q. Do you hold any Land?—A. I do.
 Q. From whom?—A. From Mr. Brown.
 Q. How much?—A. Not much.
 Q. Tell how much?—A. Only three Acres.
 Q. What Rent do you pay?—A. Three Pounds a Year.
 Q. Do you owe any Rent?—A. I owe no Rent.
 Q. What Day was it you were at the Curragh?
 A. It was the 16th of September I was at the Curragh, as I understand.
 Q. How come you to understand it to be the 16th?
 A. Because I took Notice of it.
 Q. Can you write?—A. I cannot write.
 Q. Did you make any Memorandum of it?
 A. I made no Memorandum of it then.
 Q. How do you know then it was the 16th?
 A. Because I am sure of it. Are not you sure that you have that Paper in your Hand?
 Q. Suppose I am, that is nothing to the Purpose; upon your Oath, Sir, what Day of the Week was the 21st of September?
 A. I do not know that.
 Q. Were you at the Curragh the 14th?—A. I was.
 Q. Was you on the 15th?—A. The 15th and 16th too.
 Q. Did you see the Horses run?—A. I did.
 Q. How many were there?
 A. Four, and sometimes three; that's nothing to the Purpose, Sir.
 Q. Yes, but it is, Sir; I ask you how many Horses ran that Day?
 A. I do not know, I remember that there were many running.
 Q. But I ask you how many?
 A. I do not know, but I believe there was three.
 Q. What Colour were they?—A. Some of them were bay.
 Q. Was there any white Horse ran?—A. No.
 Q. Any grey Horse?—A. No.
 Q. Did you make any Betts?
 A. I made no Bett, I drank my Belly-full.
 Q. Had you drank your Belly-full that Morning?
 A. I did not drink much that Morning.
 Q. What Time of the Day was it that you heard Lord Anglesea say those Words?
 A. I had not my Watch about me; about the Time we drive the Cows home.
 Q. What Time is that? About duskish?—A. Thereabouts, Sir.
 Q. How long before it was duskish?—A. I cannot tell.
 Q. Was it two Hours?
 A. Indeed, Sir, I had not my Watch about me.
 Q. Have you a Watch, Sir?—A. No, Sir.
 Q. What Time of the Day was it that you heard my Lord Anglesea say he was a Bastard?—A. I cannot tell.
 Q. But you must tell; Recollect.
 A. About the Time of the Cows driving home.
 Q. Did you stay upon the Sod after that?—A. I did, a good while.
 Q. Was there any Race after?
 A. No, no Horses ran, not as far as I can understand.
 Q. What did you do after that?
 A. I went into a Tent to take a Glass of Ale after.
 Q. Do you know Lord Anglesea's Livery?—A. Yes.
 Q. What Colour is it?—A. He gives red.
 Q. Red! Why Man, he that you saw in red might have been a Soldier for what you know?
 A. I do not know but the Man that I saw was a Soldier, but he had his Livery on him.
 Q. Was the Man that you took for his Servant dressed in red?
 A. I did not take him to be his Servant then, but I took him to wear his Livery.
 Q. You said he wore my Lord's Livery?—A. I did.
 Q. Did you at that Time understand that he was his Servant?
 A. I took him to be his Servant.
 Q. Why?—A. Because he wore his Livery.
 Q. What Livery?—A. Facing with red.
 Q. What Colour was the Outside?
 A. Blue, Sir, and was faced with red; and this was red. [Pointing to his Vest.]
 Q. Red Inside? What the Lining?
 A. No, the Facing. [Pointing at the same Time to the Cuff of the Sleeve and the Vest.]

Q. Was there any Lace upon the Livery?
 A. I believe there was; I did not take sharp Notice.
 Q. Had you ever seen any of his Servants before?
 A. I saw several of his Servants before.
 Q. Are you sure you know his Livery?
 A. I know his Livery pretty well.
 Q. Had you seen that Man before that Time that you took to be his Servant?
 A. I do not know whether I saw that Man's Face before that Day.
 Q. You live at Newbridge?—A. I do.
 Q. Does any Gentleman there keep a Servant in blue Livery?
 A. I cannot tell whether there be or not.
 Q. Did you at that Time understand the Man to be a Servant to Lord Anglesea?
 A. I took him to be his Servant, because he wore his Livery.
 Q. What Cloaths did my Lord wear that Day?
 A. My Lord wore brown that Day, a brown Coat.
 Q. What Sort of Hat had he?—A. He had a laced Hat.
 Q. Had he Lace upon his brown Coat?—A. I do not remember.
 Q. I ask you if he had Lace on his Coat?
 A. I do not know; I believe he had.
 Q. What Sort of Lace?
 A. I do not know whether Silver or Gold Lace.
 Q. Was he in his Coach, or on Horseback?
 A. He was on Horseback, riding a bay Mare.
 Q. Do you know any of the Company that was about him?
 A. I cannot tell any Man that was about him.
 Q. Do not you live near that Place?
 A. I live within a Mile or two of it.
 Q. And yet you did not know any of the Gentlemen?
 A. I did not know one of them.
 Q. Can you name any one Man that was present when my Lord made that Declaration?—A. I cannot, I did not take Notice.
 Q. Did my Lord ever speak to you before that Time?—A. He did.
 Q. Did he ever eat or drink with you?
 A. I never drank or eat with him, he would not be so great with the like of me.
 Q. Do you know Mr. Francis Annesley of Ballysax?
 A. I did hear of him.
 Q. Do you know him?—A. I know him.
 Q. Was you ever at his House?—A. I was at his House.
 Q. Do you know his Servants?—A. I do not.
 Q. Nor his Livery?—A. No.
 Q. Do you know Mr. Steel?—A. I do.
 Q. How far does he live from you?
 A. He lives about three Miles from where I live.
 Q. Was you ever at his House?—A. I was.
 Q. Do you know his Livery?—A. No.
 Q. Nor Mr. Francis Annesley's Livery?—A. No.
 Q. Can you name the Livery of any Man that lives near you?
 A. I cannot, Sir.

4. Mr. JOHN ARCHBOLD.

Mr. Callaghan. Where was you on the 16th of September last?
 Mr. Archbold. At the Race of the Curragh.
 Q. Did you see any Thing particular that happened that Day between Lord Anglesea and any other Gentlemen?—A. I did.
 Q. Give an Account of it; tell your own Story?
 A. I will, Sir. I was drinking, my Lord, in a Tent, on the 16th of September at the Curragh, and I heard some People cry out, Knock that Son of a Whore Kennedy down. With that I thought it was a Friend of mine that had been at the Curragh that Day, that was in danger; upon which I immediately got on Horseback, and saw Mr. Jans and Lord Anglesea beating this Mr. Kennedy, and Kennedy had his Head down in this Manner, and they were fleaking him, beating him, my Lord, very severely: And seeing this, I went up to Jans, and laid my Hand upon his Arm, and said, I wonder you would be guilty of beating a Man in this inhuman Manner, and whatever the Fact is you beat him for, he cries out, I have nothing to say to it; that ought to satisfy you. I myself did not understand what the Quarrel was about; but after I had spoke to Jans, he went to my Lord Anglesea, and he said, My Lord, it is not worth your while to beat him, let him alone. With that my Lord desisted, and I went to Mr. Kennedy, and told him, You had better get off in the best Manner you can, for you'll be murdered if you stay here. Mr. Kennedy said, he could not go for his Friends, he could not leave them. With that the Mob said, Mr. Annesley is gone off the Field: And with that Lord Anglesea said, Follow the Son of a Whore, and knock his Brains out. With that the People rode off after him, and we rode after the Crowd from the Place where we stood, towards the Turnpike-Road to Newbridge; and by the Time I came up, Mr. Annesley was fallen into the Ditch with his Horse, and some Gentlemen came up, and were for striking him as he lay there; and I said, I believe he is dead already, and there is no need to kill him again. And with that I alighted, cherished him, and opened his Stock, and the Surgeon came to bleed him, but could get no Blood; and I got a Chair, and sent him to Newbridge, and within an Hour or two after I went to see him.
 Q. Did you think, when you saw him in the Ditch, that he was dead?
 A. I did believe he was so hurt, that he would not recover in a good while.
 Q. Did you hear any Directions given by Lord Anglesea to any Persons?
 A. I only heard him say what I have said already.
 Q. Repeat that again.
 A. When the Mob cried out Mr. Annesley's gone off; my Lord Anglesea said, Follow the Son of a Whore, and knock his Brains out.
 Q. Did any Body pursue upon that?
 A. I cannot say whether it was upon his saying it or no that they followed him, but there was a great many People followed him upon his saying so.
 Q. Do you know who those Gentlemen were that would have struck him, if you had not prevented them?—A. I do.
 Q. Who? Name them.—A. Mr. William Warren of Grangebagg.
 Q. Did any body strike him?
 A. No, not one; I believe I prevented that pretty much.
 Q. Do you believe any body would have struck him, if you had not been there?

A. Upon my Word, I believe some would have struck, if I had not prevented it; for Mr. Warren was alighting in order to strike him; and I told him, Do not strike him, for he is killed already, I believe; and you are a Gentleman of Fortune and Figure in this Country, and not proper to be seen in such a Riot as this.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Green. Did you see any other People pursue Mr. Annesley besides Mr. Warren?—A. I saw several.

Q. Did you see any in Lord Anglesea's Livery?

A. I cannot tell; I did not take Notice whether any in Livery pursued him, or not.

Q. Did you stand by him for any time after you came to the Ditch?

A. I did, till I put him into the Chair.

Q. Did you see any of Lord Anglesea's Servants there?

A. I did not observe if any Servant of Lord Anglesea's was present, or not.

Q. Recollect who you found at the Ditch.

A. I found Sir Kildare Borrowes, Mr. William Warren there; and so was Dillon, Ash—and a good many Acquaintance.

Q. How soon after his Fall into the Ditch did you come up?

A. He was some time down, I believe, for the Horse had got up before I came.

Q. Did you see Mr. Annesley soon after this at Newbridge?

A. I turned back at that Time when I put him in the Chair, and saw the other Heat at the Curragh, and after that went to Newbridge.

Q. Had he no Bruise, or Cut, or Stroke with a Whip, that you perceived?—A. He had not, that I perceived; nor did I look.

Q. Was he in his Senses when you put him into the Chair?

A. He was not.

Q. Did he tell you then, that he got ever a Stroke from any body?

A. He did not tell me that he got ever a Stroke. How could he tell me then, when he was senseless?

Q. There was a Heat, you say, after he fell?

A. There was, Sir; I went back to see the Heat.

Mr. Digby. Did you see any body pursue him before he fell down?

A. When I came up he was in the Ditch; there were a great many running that Way.

Q. Did you know any of them?—A. I knew Mr. William Warren, and Sir Kildare Borrowes, and spoke to Mr. Warren not to strike him.

Q. Did you see Mr. William Warren's Horse run away with him that Day?—A. I did not observe his Horse run away with him.

Mr. Malone. Do you think the People you saw there intended to do him any Harm?—A. God knows whether they intended him Harm, or no.

Q. Do you believe all the People you saw there were bent to do him Mischief?

A. I believe there were several, among such a Concourse of People, that did not: Sure, if they were all bent to murder him, he would have lost his Life indeed!

Court. You said, that you heard Lord Anglesea say, Follow-the Son of a Whore, and knock out his Brains?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. Give your Opinion, whether any Pursuit happened in consequence of those Words?

A. My Opinion of the Matter is this, that I saw them pursue him as soon as Lord Anglesea spoke; but I do not know whether they followed him out of Curiosity, or by my Lord Anglesea's Means; how can I know their Intention?

Mr. Spring. Was it not usual for a Crowd to follow him wherever he appeared?

A. Why, I cannot tell; I never saw him till the Race-day before.

Q. Was he not followed to whatever Part of the Ground he went the first Day?

A. I only saw him come on the Ground from the Turnpike-Road with his Servants, and I was shewed him there, and do not think I saw him after, that Day.

Q. When you came up, did you see Mr. Warren attempt to hurt Mr. Annesley?

A. Mr. Warren was alighting when I came up, and said some Words that made me think he meant to hurt him in that Manner; and what Reason should I have to speak to him, to beg he would not hurt him, if he did not attempt it?

Q. What was it he did say, that made you imagine he intended to hurt him?

A. I think that he called out to Sir Kildare Borrowes; I was in such a Hurry of Spirits, that I cannot tell well what happened, but I think, by the Words Mr. Warren said, they were something tending to hurt Mr. Annesley; upon which I begged of him not to alight; and he did not, nor did not strike.

Q. Did you observe Lord Anglesea's Dress that Day? Had he a plain or a laced Coat on?

A. I cannot tell you; I do not remember whether it was a plain or a laced Coat, but I know he was on Horseback, and Jans went up to him, and bid him give over beating Mr. Kennedy.

Q. Did you ever see Lord Anglesea before?

A. I have seen him very often.

Q. Are you acquainted with him?—A. I know him by Eye-sight, but have not the Honour of being acquainted with his Lordship.

Q. At the Time you heard Lord Anglesea make use of the Words you mention, how far was you from him?—A. No farther than I am from you.

Q. Was there not a great Crowd about him?

A. The Crowd was dispersed pretty much upon Mr. Annesley's going off.

Q. Can you judge whether they followed Mr. Annesley thro' Curiosity, or at my Lord's Instigation?

A. I could not judge whether through Curiosity, or at his Instigation; they followed as soon as he ordered them.

Q. You said, that the Crowd went away and followed Mr. Annesley?

A. I do not say all; but a great many followed him.

Q. Do not you believe they attended him out of Curiosity?

A. I told you before, that I could not tell whether out of Curiosity, or at my Lord's Instigation.

Q. Did you know any other Person present to have heard those Words?

A. I did not stay to look about me, but rode off directly.

Q. But do you know any body that was there present?

A. Upon

A. I do not know any body that was by, for I did not stay to examine who was by.

Q. When you came up to him in the Ditch, would any Gentleman have done him Hurt, but for your Interposition?

A. If I had not thought Mr. Warren had a Design to do him Hurt, I should not have said the Words I said to him.

5. Mr. WILLIAM HACKET.

Mr. Morton. Where were you on the 14th and 16th of September last?

Mr. Hacket. On the 14th I was in Dublin, and the 16th I was at the Curragh.

Q. Do you know what happened the 16th between Mr. Mac Kercher, Mr. Annesley, and my Lord Anglesea?

A. I was in a Tent drinking a Bottle of Wine with some Gentlemen, and a Boy came in and said, The young Earl was killed. Immediately on hearing that, I ran out, got my Horse, and followed them. There was a cry out, He's gone that Way, pursue him, pursue him! Upon which I followed as fast as I could, and came up to Mr. Mac Kercher, and said, Why don't you go on faster, Sir? He said, My Horse has no Speed. Pray, Sir, do you follow Mr. Annesley, and keep close to him till I come up, for he will be murdered. Upon that I followed as fast as possible, but he was fallen in the Ditch, and many about him before I got to him. I saw he was very much hurt, upon which I attempted to bleed him; he was quite senseless and speechless, and though I made two Punctures in his Arm, he would not bleed, and after that he was sent off to Newbridge.

Q. Was he recovered before he was sent to Newbridge?

A. He was not recovered.

Q. Did he say any Thing?—A. He did not speak a Word.

Q. When did you see him after this?—A. I saw him that Night after.

Q. In what Condition did you find him then?

A. He had recovered his Senses.

Q. Did you stay any Time with him?—A. I lay there that Night.

Q. Do you remember any thing remarkable to have happened further?

A. The next Morning I got up early, and went out to look at my Horse. And Mr. Mac Kercher was apprehensive of some Danger, and said over-Night they would go away very early. I went into the House again after I had seen my Horse, and a Boy came in and said, The House was surrounded, and that the Gentlemen in the House were way-laid. I told Mr. Mac Kercher what the Boy said, upon which he and some more went down Stairs to see if it was true, and then they were assured of it.

Q. How do you know that?

A. I went out with them to the Ditch of the Garden to see if we could perceive any People, and then we saw them plainly. We came in again, and then the Landlord told them the same Thing.

Q. What followed after this?

A. Some time after that, Mr. Mac Kercher was taken up on a Warrant by one Lacy and a Constable, and they came up Stairs together, and then he took Mr. Goofry and Mr. Kennedy. Then we got ready, and were going to Naas to give in Bail there; and when we were a good Way from Newbridge, one Angus Byrne came up in full Gallop with a Gun in his Hand; Mr. Annesley was then on one Side of me, and Mr. Goofry on the other; and he laid his Gun upon his Thigh when he came up, and he immediately turned about and gave his Whip to a Countryman, came close to me, and laid his Hand upon the Cock of the Gun. I cannot say positively I heard it snap, but he made a Noise as if he cocked the Gun.

Court. How was the Gun directed?

A. The Muzzle was directed towards Mr. Annesley, cross the Pommel of the Saddle.

Q. Did you perceive him touch the Cock of the Gun?

A. I saw him put his Thumb upon the Top of it.

Q. Can you say that he cocked it?

A. I cannot be positive; I did not see it cocked, but I heard it snap: upon which I made Mr. Annesley alight; I called out to the Coach to stop and take him in, and Mr. Goofry came up to us.

Q. What kind of a Noise was it you heard?

A. It was the Sound of a Gun cocking.

Q. Did Mr. Annesley alight and go into the Coach?—A. He did.

Q. Who advised him to go into the Coach?

A. I did, and I believe Mr. Goofry did.

Q. Why so?—A. Because I thought that the Man intended to shoot him, Mr. Mac Manus. You said Byrne gave his Whip away?—A. I did.

Q. With what Intention did he do that?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Was it in order to be the more ready to shoot?

A. I suppose it must be so, Sir; it looks as if it was.

Q. Did you say any thing when he gave away his Whip?

A. Not a Word.

Q. In what Manner did he give it away?

A. He rode up in a Hurry, gave his Whip to the Man, and turned back immediately.

Q. What further happened after this?

A. After that we met some People on the Road, who came from Naas to meet us, and they conducted us to Naas.

Q. What became of Byrne?

A. He turned back immediately after Mr. Annesley got into the Coach.

Q. How soon after this Man had given away the Whip, and put his Hand to the Gun, did Mr. Annesley go into the Coach?—A. Immediately.

Q. Did you see him take his Whip again?—A. I did not.

Q. Did he go with you to Naas?

A. He came up to us again, and went there with us.

Q. What happened after you got to Naas?

A. When we were going to give in Bail for the Gentlemen; Byrne came in and laid down the Gun upon a Bed in the Room where the Gentleman that took the Gentlemen in Custody from the Constable was; I think he was Sovereign of Naas. I went in, Mr. Carrick and that Gentleman was there, and we were desirous to see if the Gun was loaded; and it being a Screw-barrelled Gun, immediately I unscrewed it, and took out eight Bullets.

Court. Who unloaded the Gun?

A. I unloaded it myself; unscrewed it, and took out the Shot.

Q. What kind of Shot.—A. Large Swan-Shot.

Q. How many of them?

Z z

A. There

A. There were eight; I brought them in to the Gentlemen.
 Q. How big were they?—A. They were very large.
 Q. How large? Describe them.
 A. They were thus big. [The Witness describes them to be as big as the tip of his little Finger.]

Mr. Bagot. Were they cast in a Mould, or were they rough and uneven?
 A. They were quite round.

Mr. MacManus. Tell what happened after that.
 A. Then the Sovereign took the Gun, and Byrne was examined with what Intent he carried the Gun, and whose it was? He said, It belonged to my Lord Anglesea, and he was to follow the Directions of Mr. Lacy, in order, if there was any Rescue intended, to prevent it. They then asked him what he was to do with it in case of a Rescue? He was going to answer, when Lacy stopped him, and said, You have answered it already, and answer no more Questions.

Q. Had Lacy any Arms?
 A. When the Men from Naas were coming up, Lacy took out a Pistol upon the Road, and I said to him, Sir, Mr. MacKercher told you before we came out, that we expected a Guard from Dublin or Naas, and you need not fear any Rescue.

Q. What kind of a Pistol was it?—A. It was a Pocket Pistol.
 Mr. Bagot. Did you observe Lord Anglesea's Coach driving at any Person on the Curragh?—A. Really, Sir, I did not mind, I was in a Tent drinking a Glass of Wine.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Morgan. You say when you heard this Noise of the Gun, that the Muzzle was presented to Mr. Annesley?—A. Yes, the Gun lay upon the Pommel of the Saddle with the Muzzle towards him.

Q. Which Side of you was Byrne on?—A. The Left.
 Q. And where was Mr. Annesley?—A. On the Right.
 Q. You rode then between Mr. Annesley and Byrne, when Byrne came up?
 A. I did.

Q. At the Time you heard this Noise of the Cocking, would not the Gun have shot you, or your Horse, if it had gone off?
 A. I believe it possible it might.

Q. Describe the Position of yourself.
 A. I had Mr. Annesley on the right Hand, and Byrne drove upon the left Side of me, and I got close to Mr. Annesley.

Q. In which Hand had Byrne the Gun?
 A. He had the Gun in his left Hand, and the Bridle in his right.
 Q. You said it was pointed to Mr. Annesley?
 A. It was lying on the Pommel of the Saddle, across the Horse's Neck, with the Mouth towards him.

Q. Could he have shot him before he got into the Coach, if he had had a mind?
 A. To be sure he might, if he pleased; but it would not have been possible for him to have escaped if he had shot.

Q. If the Gun had gone off, must it have shot Mr. Annesley?
 A. If it had gone off instantly as he came up, it might have shot me.

Q. What happened after Byrne came up?
 A. Mr. Annesley alighted, and Mr. Goostrey came up, we called to the Coach to stop, and he went in, and then Byrne turned about and went back again.

Q. Do not you believe that Byrne carried that Gun to prevent a Rescue, and for no other Purpose?—A. How can I tell?
 Q. What do you believe?—A. I protest, I cannot tell what to believe.

Q. Had the Gentlemen any Arms in the Coach?—A. They had not.
 Q. How many Servants attended Mr. MacKercher and his Company at Naas?—A. I know there was the Groom, and a Footman, and I really cannot recollect any more.

Q. Were there not five?—A. I cannot recollect any more.
 Q. Were the Servants armed there?—A. I know the Groom was.

Q. What did the People that came from Naas say when they came up?
 A. I cannot tell; some went on one Side of the Coach, some on the other, some on Horseback, and some on Foot.

Q. Did not you hear it rumoured by them, that we will attempt a Rescue?—A. I did not.
 Q. Did not you hear them cautioned not to attempt a Rescue?
 A. I did not indeed.

Q. Lacy took out a Pistol, you say?
 A. He had a Pistol in his Hand when the Men came up.

Q. Did the Men say any thing to him about his having his Pistol in his Hand?—A. They did not.
 Q. Did Lacy give any Reason for having that Pistol in his Hand?
 A. He gave me no Reason for it.

Q. Did you hear him give a Reason to any Body?
 A. I did not hear him give any Reason.

Q. Did not you hear him say that he took it out to prevent a Rescue?
 A. I did not.

Q. What did you say to him?
 A. I told him Mr. MacKercher said, before we came out, that we expected People from Naas, and that there will be no Rescue.

Q. What did he say when you told him there would be no Rescue?
 A. He made me no Answer to that.

Court. Before Byrne came up with the Gun, how were you and Mr. Annesley riding?
 A. Mr. Annesley was first, a little Distance before me; immediately upon Byrne's coming up and giving the Whip to the Man, I got up to Mr. Annesley.

Q. Was Byrne nearer than you to Mr. Annesley at any Time?
 A. I was nearer all the Time.

Q. How near was Byrne to you?—A. He was within a Yard of me.
 Q. If the Gun had gone off, could it have shot Mr. Annesley or you?
 A. It might as well have shot him as me; I believe it possible it might have shot me.

Q. On what Side of Mr. Annesley was you?
 A. I was on the left Hand Side of him after I joined him.

Q. In what Position had Byrne the Gun at his coming up?

A. It was upon his Thigh, and immediately upon his coming up he laid it across the Pommel of the Saddle.

Mr. Spring. At the Time that the Gun was pointed towards you, where was Byrne's Right Hand?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Did not you say that his Right Hand was upon the Bridle?
 A. At his coming up he had the Gun upon his Thigh in the left Hand, and the Whip and Reins in the other Hand; he gave his Whip away, and then held the Gun across the Pommel with his left Hand.

Q. In what Position was the Gun at his coming up?
 A. The Gun was pointed up into the Air at his coming up.

Q. Was the Bridle in his Right Hand then?—A. It must have been in the Right Hand, because the Gun was in the Left.

Q. Was the Time Byrne came up any considerable Time before you met the People coming from Naas?—A. Yes, it was.

Q. How long?—A. I cannot tell.
 Q. Was it ten Minutes?—A. Yes, it was, and more.

Q. A Quarter of an Hour?—A. I cannot tell exactly.
 Q. What was it Byrne did after he came up?
 A. He immediately gave the Whip away, and came up close to us, and immediately upon Mr. Annesley's alighting and going into the Coach, he turned back.

Q. Did you ever see Byrne before?
 A. I never saw him in my Life before.

Q. Did he say any thing to you?—A. He did not speak to me.
 Q. Did he know you at that Time?—A. He did not appear to know me.

Q. Did you know him?
 A. I did not know his Name till we came to Naas.

Q. How long after Byrne turned back was it that he followed you to Naas?—A. A good while.

Q. Was it an Hour?—A. I cannot say.
 Q. Half an Hour?—A. To the best of my Knowledge it was thereabout.

Q. Was it after the People met you?
 A. I believe it was, I cannot be positive.

Q. How long after?—A. I cannot tell exactly how long it was.

6. Mr. WILLIAM GOOSTREY.

Mr. MacManus. Were you at the Curragh last September?
 Mr. Goostrey. I was there the first and last Day of the Races.

Q. Give an Account of what happened there; tell the whole Affair.
 A. The 14th of September last we went to the Curragh, and there was but one Horse to run that Day, and there being no great Diversion, we rode a little up and down the Course that Day, and came off again.

Q. From what Place did you go to the Curragh?
 A. We went from Dublin to Newbridge Inn, and from thence to the Curragh.

Q. Did any thing remarkable happen to you on the 14th?
 A. We saw Lord Anglesea and other Gentlemen standing at a Tent as we rode up the Curragh, and when we were coming back again from the Course, just before we came to the End of it, Lord Anglesea said, See that Secondel MacKercher, though he now looks like a Gentleman, that Coat he has upon his Back I saw not a Month ago in Monmouth-Street. Mr. MacKercher said, Do not let us take any Notice of it, it is not worth while; so we rode off the Ground, and went to Newbridge; that was all that happened that Day. The next Day was Thursday; there was no Race that Day; and we went to Gentlemen's Houses in the Neighbourhood, where Mr. Annesley was known when he was young. On Friday we went to the Race again, and just as the first Heat was over, we came upon the Curragh, and went up to the Company. After some little Stay there, we left that, and rode on further; and as we were riding, the Coachman of Lord Anglesea came full gallop through the Middle of us; we got out of his Way as fast as we could; he turned short about again, drove at us, and we got on the other Side of the Rail to avoid him, and he came there with his Whip, and pointed to Mr. Annesley, crying, Shoe-boy, that's he, Shoe-black. Presently he came to us again.

Court. Which Side of the Rail?
 A. The Outside of the Rail, my Lord—and drove at us there. Mr. MacKercher then said, There is no bearing of this, we must either go out of the Course, or else speak to my Lord to chastize him.

Q. Were there other People on the other Side of the Rail besides you?
 A. There were other People there besides us, but very few.

D. Go on.
 A. Mr. MacKercher went up and down to find my Lord Anglesea, and we went up along with him to the Winning-Post, and there my Lord and others were standing; and Mr. Annesley was rather behind, out of the Crowd; five or six Horse Lengths behind he might be: So Mr. MacKercher said, with a low Voice, I want to speak with your Lordship. My Lord said, I have no Pistols, and was startled, and changed Colour a little, I thought, This was no Time and Place, he said further; to talk thus, I have no Pistols.

Mr. MacKercher said, For what I have to say to your Lordship, every Time and Place is proper; for all that I have to say, is against one of your Servants that used a Gentleman ill, or Words to that Effect. My Lord asked, Who the Gentleman was? Mr. MacKercher said, That's the Gentleman, Mr. Annesley. My Lord hesitated a little, and said, he was no Gentleman, but that he was a Bastard. Mr. MacKercher said further, We expect your Lordship will turn your Servant away on the Field, as it is a public Affront. My Lord then flew into a Passion, and called Mr. MacKercher a great many opprobrious Names; and Mr. MacKercher told him, he lied; with that Mr. MacKercher said, Your Lordship durst not single yourself out, and tell me so. With that Mr. Francis Annesley up with his Whip and struck Mr. MacKercher on his Forehead, and with that a little Blood came, and his Forehead swelled very much. Immediately upon that, I had a little Whip in my Hand, and I struck Mr. Annesley. Upon this it was over, and Mr. MacKercher said, Come, we will go away. There were some other Words passed afterwards between Lord Anglesea and Mr. MacKercher, and Mr. MacKercher said, turning to go away, Come along, Goostrey and Kennedy, it is not worth while to talk to a Man who dare affront a Gentleman, and refuseth him Satisfaction. I could not get away readily, being in a Crowd of People; and I believe a Minute or two elapsed before any thing further happened at all. When I was turning my Head to ride off, There's Gooltry, says my Lord, another of the Regent, as great a Regent as any in Ireland, knock him down. Upon which Mr. Francis Annesley struck me again, and a great many more struck me. I was stunned with the first Blow, and bled so prodigiously, that I was all over Blood. I got a Blow here [on his Wrist] that swelled as big as an Egg; and I had fallen off my Horse, if I had not been supported by a Crowd on each Side, who were so near me that I could not fall.

Q. What Distance of Time was there between the first Blow and the second, given by Mr. Francis Annesley?

A. It was two Minutes after the first Stroke, that Mr. Annesley struck again.

Q. Did he strike you of himself, or by any Directions from any Body?

A. He did not strike me till Lord Anglesea ordered him.

Q. Did you leave the Curragh immediately upon that?

A. I did not; I thought the Quarrel had been over, and had a Mind to stay to see the Sport. There were some English Horses to run, and I clapped my Handkerchief to my Wound, that I might stay and see the Diversion. I rode forward on the Ground, and immediately I heard the Pretender, as they called Mr. Annesley, was killed. Thinks I, I'll go down to the Starting-Post to see what is the Matter, and there I heard that Mr. Annesley was in the Lane leading to Newbridge; I rode after him, and when I came about half Way down the Lane, I saw a great Crowd of People about him, and found him lying senseless, his Arm stripped up in order to bleed him, but he would not bleed. I got a Chaise that was coming by, put him into it, and got a Man to go with him to hold him in the Chaise that he should not fall out of it, and so carried him to Newbridge. The next Morning we were to go early to Dublin; Mr. MacKercher said, it was very prudent to get to Dublin as early as we could. But before we were up, we were alarmed by the People of the House saying, That the House was beset, and that there were a hundred Men, fifty one Way, and fifty another, and that there were Men in the Entry that had Fire-Arms. We immediately got up, and had nothing but Pistols to defend ourselves: We thought them not sufficient to defend us against such a Number of Men, and sent to the Landlord to get us more Arms, if he could; who brought up a Case of Pistols and a Gun; and we were determined not to stir till we could get some Assistance. Mr. MacKercher and Mr. Kennedy went out to see if they could discover what Number of People there were in Arms; they returned immediately, and told us, They saw a great Number of People; so we were determined to secure ourselves in the Room till we should get Assistance. Some time after it was Day-Light, an Hour or two after, Mr. Kennedy went out into the Garden to try if he could see any Body; and when he returned, said, He saw none: I went down into the Garden, came back, and was told there was a Warrant granted by a Justice of Peace, on the Complaint of Lord Anglesea against Mr. MacKercher, and Mr. Kennedy, and myself. I asked Lacy, who came up Stairs to execute the Warrant, if he was a Constable; he said he was my Lord Anglesea's Steward; the Constable was hard by.

Q. Where was this?

A. In the House; they came up Stairs, and shewed the Warrant: Says I, What Occasion for all these People to execute a Warrant? Whose Complaint is this upon? I looked, and found it was a Complaint of Lord Anglesea's. Upon this Lacy said, We must go back to the Gentleman that had granted the Warrant, to give in Security. I said, No, we did not care for that, we have got enough of this Country, I am all over Blood, I don't like it so well to go into it again, and you see the Dress I am in, and I'll go to Dublin; and thinking there was some Dirt in my Wound, I had a Mind to go where I might have it searched and dressed, for there were two Gentlemen there that offered to bail us. Lacy would not go towards Dublin, but insisted on our going to the Justice that granted the Warrant. This occasioned us to dispute about it till the Constable whispered us, Naas is the County Gaol, Gentlemen, and if you say you will go to that Gaol, I must carry you there, whether they will or no. Upon this we told Lacy, That we insisted to go there, and if we did not give Bail, we would be secured there. There being so much Noise, and the Landlord cautioning us, that there might be Danger of going the Road, we sent for some People from Naas to come and meet us; so we got ready, and Mr. Annesley and I would not go into the Coach.

Q. Who went in the Coach?

A. Mr. Kennedy, Mr. MacKercher, and Mr. Carrick, went into the Coach; Mr. Annesley, Mr. Hacket, and I, rode on Horseback; when we had gone a little Way, riding almost all three a-breast, I saw several People follow, and a Fellow came galloping after us: I heard the Horse coming, and I looked, and saw a Fellow coming up with a Gun in his Hand, in a green Coat, and a luffy Man. I said, I wondered what that Man's coming after us in that Manner could mean. So I drops behind Mr. Hacket and Mr. Annesley a little, and let the Fellow come between us; he came close up to Mr. Annesley, and just as he was dropping back, I got up. Immediately I heard the Gun cock, as I thought, and I instantly dropped betwixt him and Mr. Annesley, and then Mr. Hacket and I called out, Mr. Annesley, you'll be shot; get into the Coach this Minute, or this Fellow will fire at you. Mr. Annesley upon that alighted, and got into the Coach, and the Fellow said he was going to Dublin. I spoke to the Servants to bid them not let the Fellow come between them and the Coach, and said to Mr. Hacket, Let us keep between him and the Coach to prevent any Mischief. When the Fellow saw that, he turned back again.

Q. Was he so near as to hear you give those Directions?

A. It was impossible he could avoid it.

Mr. MacManus. Were there any others that had Arms besides that Man?

A. There was a Country Fellow by, that had a Pistol, and Lacy had a Pistol too.

Q. What happened after that?

A. As soon as we had secured the Coach, the Fellow turned back, and Lacy kept behind, and just as they saw the Naas People coming, they galloped up again, and they went with us to Naas.

Q. What happened when you came to Naas? Tell what you observed there.

A. Then we came to examine the Man that had the Gun, and sent for the Sovereign, and desired him to examine that Man; so he was asked, Whose Gun that was? He said, Lord Anglesea's. He then was asked, What was he to do with it? He said, To follow Lacy's Directions. He then was asked, What Directions? He said, He fancied, in Case of Rescue, he was to make use of it. We asked, If Lacy gave him any Directions? He said, Yes. We asked then, What Directions? Before he could answer, Lacy stepped in, and bade him not answer any other Question.

Q. Did you give in Security there?

A. No; we went before the Justice of Peace, and gave in Bail.

Mr. Digby. You said that Mr. Francis Annesley struck Mr. MacKercher?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Mr. MacKercher, or any Body else, strike Mr. Annesley before he struck him?—A. He did not, nor Nobody else.

Q. Did you strike him?

A. I struck him after he struck Mr. MacKercher.

Q. With what?—A. With a Whip, upon his striking Mr. MacKercher.

Q. Did you apprehend the Quarrel a continued one, or that it was ceased?—A. The Beginning of the Quarrel was, Mr. MacKercher and Lord Anglesea's speaking together; and after Mr. Francis Annesley struck, it ceased for about two Minutes.

(Cross-Examination.)

Mr. Spring. Pray, Sir, do you recollect the particular Words Lord Anglesea made use of to Mr. Francis Annesley before he struck you?

Mr. Gooltry. I did not know Mr. Annesley at that Time, but a Gentleman said, that it was he that struck me.

Q. When Lord Anglesea used the opprobrious Language you mentioned, did not he say to Mr. Annesley, There is he that struck you?

A. I cannot say that I did hear him say that.

Q. Were not you near him?—A. We were Side by Side; Mr. Francis Annesley and I faced Mr. MacKercher.

A. Might not he have received a Blow from you without knowing who gave him that Blow?—A. Yes, I believe he might; and did not know, I believe, that I struck him; I dare say he did not see me, because he rode forwards to strike Mr. MacKercher.

Q. Do you believe he might have asked my Lord who struck him?

A. I can't tell.

Q. Was not he struck by Mr. Kennedy at the same Time?

A. He was not.

Q. Did not Mr. MacKercher lift his Hand in this Manner with his Whip, upon his talking to my Lord Anglesea?

A. No, Sir, he had his Whip in one Hand, and Bridle in the other, and spoke as coolly as any Man in the World could; and before he went up, said, He would have no Quarrel.

Q. Did not he lift up the Butt End of his Whip?

A. He did not lift it up.

Q. Did not Mr. MacKercher speak to my Lord Anglesea in such Manner as tended to a Breach of the Peace?

A. He did not, to my Knowledge.

Q. Did not he tell him, He dared not come aside with him, after he had given him the Lye?

A. He did not, until my Lord Anglesea had abused him, and called him Names.

Q. Were not you cautioned by Somebody not to go to my Lord Anglesea?

A. No Person cautioned us not to go up to him, that I heard of.

Q. Did you yourself caution Mr. MacKercher not to go?—A. I did not.

Q. Did not Somebody, in your hearing, tell Mr. MacKercher, It was your own Fault, if you had taken my Advice, this would not have happened?—A. No Person told him that, that I know of.

Q. Do you know Abraham Robinson?

A. I do. It was his Chaise carried Mr. Annesley to Newbridge.

Mr. Harward. We have a vast Number of other Testimonies of the Gentlemen of this Country to examine as to the Assault, and what happened at the Curragh, which we shall not trouble your Lordship with, for we have now taken up six Hours of your Time; and the only further Evidence that we shall lay before you to conclude this Scene, is to introduce the Person, who shall account for the premeditated Contrivance of this black Scheme; who the Persons were that were employed to execute it; whose Directions they were to have obeyed; and all the preparatory Steps taken in order to come at this Gentleman's Life. We shall trouble you but with this one Witness; and, as it is a Matter of great Concernment to the Publick to have detected, and to my Clients in particular, we shall crave your Indulgence and Patience to hear this Witness.

7. ANGUS BYRNE.

Mr. Harward. Mr. Byrne, begin to give an Account of what you know, and what Directions you received, and what Conversation passed between you and any other Persons at Killcullen-Bridge. Do you know the Earl of Anglesea?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you Huntsman to any Person, and who?

A. I was to the Earl of Anglesea last.

Q. Do you know Mr. Jans?—A. I do.

Q. When were you Huntsman to Lord Anglesea?

A. I parted from him the twenty-fourth of March last, Easter-Saturday was the Day, at his own House at Bray.

Q. How long have you known Mr. Jans?

A. Six Years, or thereabouts.

Q. What is he to Lord Anglesea?—A. I always found him in the Nature of an Agent, or a Man to take Care of his Business.

Q. You know Michael Lacy?—A. I do.

Q. What has he been to Lord Anglesea during the Time you knew him?

A. In the Nature of a House-Steward, and to sell my Lord's Woods.

Q. Do you remember any Races in September last?—A. I do.

Q. Where?—A. At the Curragh.

Q. Now give an Account, whether you saw the Earl of Anglesea, Mr. Jans and Lacy, before the Races at the Curragh, at Killcullen-Bridge, or any Place?—A. I did.

Q. Begin, where you first saw them, and tell gradually, from Time to Time, Day after Day, and Night after Night, what passed from the Time you first saw them, until you came to Naas.

A. I will, Sir. Wednesday, being the first Day of the Running, I came to Killcullen-Bridge, about Ten or Eleven o'Clock, and, as I was going to the Stable, my Lord and Mr. Jans were standing at Cavenagh's Door, as I passed by them to put up my Horse. In some time after Jans came to me to the Stable, and asked me, Where I had been? I told him, I came from the County of Wexford. He asked me, Had I left Mr. Colclough? I told him, I had. He then asked me, For what Reason? I told him,

On

On account of a sore Leg that I had, and was not able to do any thing. Upon that, he said, I am sure you must know a great deal of this Affair (meaning the Pretender, as they called him). It would do great Service to tell us what you know of it. I said, I know nothing of it, at present, I give my Word. Says he, You can be of Service to my Lord, if you please; you must have heard a great deal of it. I told him, I did not hear a Word of it, but only talking about Blifs, Mr. Colclough asked me, if I knew where he was, and I told him I did not. And then Lacy came up, and Mr. Jans went out; and Lacy came to me, and ask'd me, How I did? I told him, Very well; and with that I walked out of the Stable. Mr. Jans desired Lacy to fetch me in, and make me drink; accordingly I went in, got a Drink, and we came to the Curragh that Day.

Court. Who came to the Curragh?

A. Michael Lacy and I together, and saw the Running that Day. There was no great Sport, and then I came back to Cavenagh's, and lay there that Night. And, lying there, I got up in the Morning, and went into the Entry, and Lord Anglesea saw me; he was standing in the Back-side. So, Byrne, says he, how are you? Very well, my Lord, says I. I was a little angry with you, says he, I heard in England you swore some Things against me, about that Woman called Lady Anglesea, and I find they are Lies, and am sorry I was so long angry with you. You are come from Wexford, what News there? I told him, None strange. Says he, You shall go back to Camolin again; there are a good Pack of Hounds for you, but your favourite Hound Forrester is dead. You can be of great Service to me; I shall pay you what I owe you, and double the Quantity, and you shall stay a little, and Michael Lacy will stay two or three Days, for he has some Business with you. What is it, my Lord, says I? Lacy will tell you, says he, follow his Directions. So that was very well; my Lord went to Mr. Annesley's to Dinner at Ballyfax.

Mr. Harward. Were there any Promises made you at that Time by any Body?

A. My Lord told me, he would pay me what Money he owed me.

Q. Did he say nothing further?

A. He said, He would pay me what he owed me, and double the Quantity, and I should never want.

D. Go on.

A. So then my Lord went to Dinner at Mr. Annesley's, and some of the rest of the Gentlemen, I do not know how many; but Mr. Lacy, and one Cavenagh, a Dancing-master, staid at the Bridge; and Lacy, and Cavenagh, and Esquire Berkeley dined together.

Court. What Day was this?—A. Thursday, my Lord.

D. Well, go on.

A. Then Lacy ordered me to get my Dinner, and after I had dined, there was a Sneaker of Punch, and Bob Meakins brought it in.

Q. Who?

A. The Drawer.—And after that Mr. Lacy called me into the Parlour, and made me drink Wine.

Q. Who did?

A. Mr. Lacy and Mr. Berkeley of the County of Carlow; they gave me several Glasses of Wine each of them.—Lacy and I went to the Curragh on Friday, and we were at the Curragh a good while before the Running; and after the first Heat was over, and the Horses were starting the second Heat, Mr. Lacy and I were standing at the Starting-post; says he, G—d, I'll hold you a Crown that yonder is Mac Kercher and the Pretender. Where, says I? There, says he. So they passed up till they came almost facing the Starting-post, and turned off to the Right towards the Winning-post. Lacy said, he would shew them to me. With all my Heart, said I: So we rode after them and crossed them, and says he, That's Mac Kercher, and that's the Pretender; Would you know them again? I would, to be sure, says I. Take notice, says he, that you know them again. So we crossed them again; we came to the Starting-post, and the Horses being started I rode to the round Hill to see the Heat, and when the Heat was over, I went into a Tent and drank a Pot of Beer.

Mr. Har. When Lacy desired you to take notice of them, and asked whether you would not know them again, was there any Talk between any Persons about bloody Noses?

A. Yes. He said, They will have good Luck if they have not broken Heads and bloody Noses before they leave this Ground.

Q. Was that before, or after he desired you to take Notice of them?

A. It was after.

D. Now, go on.

A. So then, I tell you, we came to the Starting-post, and went round the Course; and I went into a Tent to drink, and while I was there I heard there was a Quarrel; and hearing that, I got up, and saw People galloping down towards Ballymanny; and when the Race was over, I went to Cavenagh's that Night again: So, coming there, I did put up my Horse, and had him turned out to Grass; and my Lord Antrim's Keeper, Arthur Cook, met me: We went in and called for a Bowl of Punch; we drank about the third Part of it, and Mr. Lacy came in. So, Angus! says he. Your Servant, Mr. Lacy, Will you sit down, says I, and take a Glass of Punch? I came in, says he, with Design to drink with you. So we drank till the Bowl was out, and I called to the Drawer to get another. Says Mr. Lacy, Angus, you shall drink no more, for you shall go to bed, I shall want you in the Morning upon earnest Business. So he went up Stairs and saw me go to bed.

Q. Pray, do you know of any Pistols or Fire-Arms that were a-charging that Night?—A. I will tell you by and bye.

D. Well, go on.

A. Then, Sir, when I went to bed I lay there till in the Morning Lacy came and called me up betwixt One and Two o'Clock; I got up and I dressed myself, and he waited till I dressed myself.

Court. What Time did you go to bed?

A. I went to bed between Ten and Eleven o'Clock, I believe; I got up, he brought me down Stairs into the Kitchen, where Mr. Jans was, and several other Gentlemen, and they were charging and priming Arms when I came into the Kitchen.

Q. Who were they?

A. There was Mr. Jans, Cavenagh the Dancing-master, one Williams of Piccadilly, a Gentleman they called Capt. Stewart, and my Lord's Nephew.

Q. What were they doing?

A. They were charging and priming of Arms.

Q. What Arms?—A. Pistols and small Pieces.

Q. What Pieces?—A. A Fuzee, travelling Pieces.

D. Well, go on.

A. Mr. Jans asked me, Would I drink? I told him, I would; To the Drawer brought a Mug of Ale, and Mr. Jans afterwards gave me a Case of Pistols. What am I to do with these? says I. You are to go along, says he, with Mr. Lacy, and you are to take his Directions; he'll tell you what to do. Then I told him, My Horse is at Grass, I must send out for him before I can go. Mr. Jans said, You must ride my Horse. I then called for my Surcoat-Coat. He said, I must not ride in it, but go as I was, it will be cumbersome to you.

Q. For what Reason?

A. I cannot tell.—So, with that, the Groom went out, and saddled Mr. Jans's Horse, and the other Horses, and Mr. Chapman, my Lord's Gentleman, and Michael Doyle the Groom, and Mr. Lacy, and I went out. I got Mr. Jans's Horse, and mounted him in the Road at the End of the Stable; and they all got on Horseback; and as we got to the Door, there was a Number of Fellows with Pitch-forks and Staves, I believe Twenty of them; and we turned along the Road towards Kinnah; and when we came as far as Caffle-martin, then I asked Lacy, Where we were going? He said, to Newbridge, to take Mr. Mac Kercher, Mr. Gooltry, and Mr. Kennedy, for the Assault at the Curragh, for striking Mr. Francis Annesley and my Lord. I said, I'm sorry you did not tell me this before, for I am sorry to have any Hand in it. Sure, said Lacy, you are not afraid; you need not fear, what are they to you? What are you to expect from them? If you wanted me to go with you, I'd go farther than this with you. So we went forward to Newbridge, and when we came near the House, the Signal was given, that none of the Fellows should go to the House but one Brennan, a Tenant of Mr. Annesley's of Ballyfax, as I heard after, the Constable, Mr. Lacy, and I.

Q. What was the Constable's Name?

A. I cannot tell his Name.—So when we went in, Lacy went into a little Room on the Left-hand-side of the Door, called for White-wine, asked me to come in, and we drank it together; and Brennan and the Constable went into a Room on the Right-hand as you go up Stairs, and got Ale, and they were there for a while; and by-and-bye comes down Stairs Mr. Mac Kercher, about half an Hour after we were there; and he came down, and that Time I pointed at the Constable, that That was Mr. Mac Kercher, and the Constable came up, and I said, That's he, that's your Prisoner, take him. So the Constable came up and said, You are the King's Prisoner. With that Lacy came out and told him he had a Warrant against him for an Assault on Lord Anglesea; and Lacy and the Constable went up Stairs with him; I did not. And the other Gentlemen above Stairs were taken. In about an Hour Mr. Lacy sent Chapman and the Groom to my Lord, to let him know that they were taken; and Doyle, the Groom, left the Gun and the Pistol he had behind, by Lacy's Directions. So, in some time after, I believe an Hour, the Gentlemen got into the Coach, and Brennan got Doyle's Pistol and put it in his Bosom; Mr. Lacy had his Case in his Pockets, and took the Gun in his Hand, and a Quarter of a Mile beyond the Bridge gave me the Gun.

Q. How near the Inn was this Bridge?

A. As near as from this to the Market-house.—So, a little while after, as I said, he gave me the Gun: Here's this Gun for you, says he, your Bread is baked, you shall be provided for while you live; and, says he, you are to use this Thing, fire at the Pretender, be sure do not miss him; we have Horses to carry us off, and never fear, if we are taken, we'll make a Rescue of it, we have People enough here to prove it for us.

D. Repeat those Words that he said to you.

A. Angus, says he, you shall be provided for, your Bread is baked, fire at him, and never fear, we have good Horses to carry us off, and if we are taken, we'll make it a Rescue; we have People to prove it for us, and there is none that can prove it against us.

Mr. Harward. When he gave you the Gun, what did he desire you to do?

A. He desired me to fire at Mr. Annesley.—I will not, says I, nor have any hand in it for all the World.

Q. What followed after that?

A. I believe we went about as far as Morrisstown, when there was a Mob met us in the Road. As soon as Mr. Lacy saw them, They are coming, says he, to rescue Mr. Annesley; Now is your Time, there is no fear, we can make it a fair Rescue, and go you on one Side of the Coach, and I'll go on the other, and if you miss him, I'll hit him. With that he took my Pistol out of my Holster. What do you take my Pistol for, said I? He said, You have another Pistol, and we'll have three Shots a-piece, says he. I have it not, for Brennan has it, says I, and I'll have no hand at all in any Man's Blood, and will not commit Murder. So I came up to the Coach-Door, and he to the other, and I did no more, and he fell back again.

Q. He made a further Application to you when he saw the People coming from towards Naas?—A. Yes, he did.

Q. Where was Mr. Annesley at this Time, on Horseback, or in the Coach?—A. In the Coach.

Q. How soon before this, or seeing the People coming from Naas, was it that Mr. Annesley got into the Coach?

A. I believe about a Mile beyond that Place, where we saw the People, but I cannot be sure.

Q. Well now, while Lacy was persuading of you by these Inducements and Promises to shoot Mr. Annesley, pray how many Miles might you have gone along with one another from the first Time that he began to discover his Mind, and give you Directions?

A. I believe near three Miles from Newbridge, better than half-way, before the People from Naas met us, there or thereabouts.

Q. You had gone a Mile after Mr. Annesley got into the Coach before you saw the People?—A. Yes.

Q. Whereabouts was it that Lacy first applied to you to persuade you to shoot Mr. Annesley?

A. He began that Minute after he gave me the Gun, and he held the Discourse till Mr. Annesley went into the Coach.

Q. After that did he renew his Applications?

A. He told me, that sure I did not fear, that I never was a Coward, and that I need not fear now, and that I might be done for as well as any Man in the World.

Q. By whom, pray?—A. He told me by my Lord Anglesea.

Q. Was there any mention of any thing, upon your Refusal, to contrive your Escape?

A. He said, That I need not fear if he was killed, for, says he, we have two good Horses to carry us off, and we have three Shots a-piece, and shall be brought off in case we are taken.

Q. By

Q. By whose Means did he promise you should be carried off?
A. He said these very Words; when I told him I would not do it, nor have any Hand in it, he said, You need not fear, for you'll be done for; never fear.

Q. Did you get to Naas?—A. Yes.

Q. Was you brought to any Magistrate there?

A. We were brought into the House of Drake there, and I went out with the two Horses to the Backside; and I came in, and gave the Gun to Drake to put up, and went into a Street-Seat, and called for some Drink. So, in some Time after the Sovereign came, and examined, Who gave me the Gun? I told them, Mr. Lacy. They asked, If it was my Lord's Gun? I told them, It was.

Q. And whose was it?—A. It was my Lord's.

Q. How long have you known the Gun?

A. I have known it these six Years.

Q. Is it a Gun of Value?—A. It is a Screw Gun.

Q. Did you charge that Gun?—A. It was not I charged it.

Q. Do you know who did?—A. I cannot tell who did.

D. Well, go on.

A. So then they asked me, What was I to do with it? Why, says I, I was to be directed by Mr. Lacy, and to do what he would have me. So then, Lacy said, You are not to tell any Thing to any Man here. Then I stayed there some Time, and I thought to go back to Killcullen-Bridge for my Wallet; and my Lord's Man comes up to me to Drake's House, and said, You must go to Dublin. Says I, John, I'll not go. Says he, My Lord says you must follow him to Rathcoole. So I went, and my Lord was going off as I got there. Mr. Jans gave me a Shilling to get my Dinner, and Lacy stayed with me. We went on to Dublin together, and I was hired the next Day by Lacy for the same Wages I had before from my Lord.

Q. Mr. Harward. What Day was it Lord Anglesea spoke to you at Killcullen-Bridge?—A. Thursday.

Q. Was this apart, or in the Place he met you in?

A. In private, in the Backside; I was standing in the Entry leading from the Kitchen, and my Lord was in the Backside; he called me, and said the Words I have told you before.

Q. Did he take you privately or not?

A. He took me about as far as from this to that Door, into the Back-Yard.

Q. Was any Person present when he spoke to you?

A. Nobody was there then.

Q. You did not charge any of the Arms?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you know who charged the Gun?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Did not you see People charging Arms that Morning?

A. I saw People in the Kitchen; they were priming of them.

Q. Did you see any body charge them?

A. I saw Mr. Jans charge them; it was he gave me the Case of Pistols. Mr. Digby. I would ask him whether, as Jans gave him the Pistols; he got any, and what Directions from Jans?

Q. He said, I was to follow Lacy's Directions, and I was to follow what he bade me.

Cross-Examination.

Q. Mr. Morgan. Did you refuse Lacy to have your Hand in Blood?

A. I did.

Q. Did not you consent to murder Mr. Annesley?—A. I never did.

Q. Did you not ride up to Mr. Hacket and Mr. Annesley, with your Gun rested upon your Saddle?

A. I did, and had it this Way on my Thigh.

Q. On what Account did you do so?

A. I rode up as Mr. Annesley was going into the Coach.

Q. How did you hold the Gun then?—A. It was upon my Thigh.

Q. Was your Hand upon the Cock?—A. It was.

Q. Was the Gun cock'd?

A. It was not cock'd; nor can I say that I did cock it.

Q. In what Manner did you hold the Bridle and the Gun?

A. It was in my right Hand I had my Bridle; I gave my Whip to the Constable, thinking it too cumbersome; I had my right Hand on the Bridle, and the left had the Gun with my Thumb on the Cock.

Q. Did you cock up the Gun?

A. I cannot say that I did cock it up.

Q. Was it cock'd?

A. I had the Cock half bent, and let it down again.

Q. How long was this before Mr. Annesley went into the Coach?

A. Just as he was going to alight.

Q. In how long Time after did you turn back?

A. A Man, one Bernard Neale, came to me, and kept me back.

Q. How long; half an Hour was it?

A. No; only the Coach went on a little before us.

Q. Did you go from Newbridge with an Intent to guard them?

A. I did.

Q. How near did you ride to the Coach all along, till you met the People?
A. Sometimes near, and sometimes at a distance, and was not above fifty or a hundred Yards at the most from it; never further, but sometimes nearer.

Q. How many Servants attended Mr. MacKercher and his Company?

A. I cannot tell; I took notice of one that kept by the Coach-door all the Way; there was such a Number of People along the Road, that I could not tell which were Servants, and which not.

Q. How many People might there be in all?

A. A good many, I cannot tell the Number; I believe the Matter of thirty or forty in all.

Q. What Number attended these Gentlemen along with you and Lacy to Morrisstown?

A. They attended them as well as I, and went all the Way to Naas.

Q. Did not you ride in company with them to Morrisstown?—A. I did.

Q. Where and when then had Lacy the frequent Opportunities you mention, to make the Applications to you to take away Mr. Annesley's Life?

A. Why, because we kept company together all along, and the rest went on before us; we went slow as our Horses could walk; the Constable was on one Side along the Coach commonly, and Brennan was before, and I took no Notice of the rest one above another.

Q. Now, Sir, I would ask you, did not you, between Newbridge and Morrisstown, frequently ride up to the Coach, and just behind it?

VOL. IX.

A. I did.

Q. With Lacy?—A. Yes; and he and I were constantly together.

Q. Mr. Spring. How far is Kinna from Castlemartin?

A. About half a Mile; it is not a Mile out.

Q. Did you not ask Lacy there, what it was you were going upon?

A. I did.

Q. Did not he tell you, to arrest the Gentlemen for assaulting my Lord Anglesea?—A. He did.

Q. Was any body in Conversation with you?—A. Nobody was by.

Q. Was not Chapman with you?—A. He was before us.

Q. Now, did Lacy at that Time communicate to you any Design of taking Mr. Annesley's Life?

A. Not at that Time, he did not.

Q. When, then?

A. Not till I went over the Bridge, and he gave me the Gun.

Q. How far was you from the Bridge of Newbridge, at the Time of his giving you the Gun?

A. Just beyond it; at the two Cabbins that are there.

Q. How many Yards do you think it was?

A. I cannot tell the Number of Yards.

Q. You know where King lives over the Way?—A. I do.

Q. Was it as many Yards as his House from this?

A. I cannot tell you to the Number of Yards; but it was just at the House on the right Hand.

Q. Are the Cabbins from the Bridge further than the Houses over the Way from this Court-House?

A. I cannot tell that; but it is hard by the Bridge.

Q. At the Time that he gave you the Gun, was the Coach on before you?—A. It was.

Q. How far?—A. Just afore us, and we rode up to it.

Q. Were all the other Attendants behind the Coach at this Time?

A. Some behind and some before.

Q. Were not the greater Part of them behind?

A. I do not know, for I never minded to reckon them.

Q. Did not they all leave the Inn along with you?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Did not a great many of them?

A. Yes, a great many; I do not know the Number.

Q. Did you perceive any body near you, when Lacy gave you this Gun between the Bridge and the Houses?

A. I do not know; I believe there was People, to be sure.

Q. Well then, did he tell you then you were to take away Mr. Annesley's Life?

A. Before I went three hundred Yards beyond it he did.

Q. You went from Rathcoole to Dublin with him?—A. I did.

Q. You were hired in Dublin?

A. I was, by Lacy, for Lord Anglesea.

Q. Did you, when you were hired, go to Lord Anglesea's House?

A. I did not go to Lord Anglesea's House, but kept my Horse upon the Merchant-Quay at my Lord's Inn, and there kept for a Week.

Q. Where did you go from that Inn?

A. I went to the Bull's Head, in Abbey-Street, and kept there.

Q. Where did you go from that?

A. I went to my Service; two Days before Christmas-Eve I left Town.

Q. Where did you go to?

A. I went to Camolin; my Lord gave me his Hounds and my own Horse, and said—There was another Mare, a black Chaise-Mare I might ride; but I did not like her, and I took my own Horse.

Q. How long did you stay there?

A. I stayed there till March, till after the Assizes of Naas, and that I heard there that I was indicted, and that Lacy was come home; I said it was very hard I should be obliged to run my Country, when I had done nothing to deserve it.

Q. How came you to leave my Lord's Service?

A. I asked Lacy first for Money to buy Shoes, and he would give me none; I then said, I would stay no longer; delivered up the Hounds to the Keeper, and the Horse, and so came to Michael Lacy's House in Camolin, got a Dram there, and came towards Dublin, and lay at Bray, and came the next Day to Dublin, and put up my Horse at the York-Minster. Then I went to my Lord's House, and when I saw my Lord, he asked me, What I came there for? I told him, I had neither Cloaths nor Money, and in dread of the Indictment found against me at the Assizes. Well, says he, stay in Town a little, and go to Camolin, and bring up some Hounds that I have given to my Lord Tyrone; and asked me, If Fortune's Hound was at home? and said, Fortune he would not give him. And one Morning, when my Lord went to Bray, I went to him for some Money, and found he was gone; and I went to him to Donnybrook: Sure, says I to one of the Servants, he would not go, and not leave me Money! Go to Donnybrook, says he, and you'll meet him there; he's gone in a Hackney-Coach, and is waiting till his own is ready. I accordingly went and met him, and I walked in my Boots. He asked, What brought my there, and made me wear Boots? I told him, Because I had no Shoes, nor Money to buy any, and came to get some from him. He swore he would give me none; and seeing that, I asked the Coachman to carry me to Dublin. My Lord said, Do not go; and said, He would give me half a Guinea, and bid me follow him to Bray, and that I should then go to Camolin, and carry the Hounds to my Lord Tyrone; and then he would make a Present of me and some Hounds to some Gentleman in England. After this, Joe the Coachman told him I made a great Noise for Money in Dublin; so my Lord came out again, and called me Mr. Byrne; when he called me Mr. I thought he was angry with me, and he came and gave me a Chuck under the Chin, and said, You Villain, do you make a Noise about my House? get about your Business. Green, his Nephew, bade me not go away; but to beg Pardon, and I'd get half a Guinea; and afterwards my Lord came out and gave me half a Guinea; and, Follow me to Bray, says he.

Q. Did you ever threaten my Lord, and tell him, It should be worse for him if he did not pay your Wages?

A. I never did.

Q. Do you know Thomas Stanley?

A. I do.

Q. Is he any Relation to your Wife?

A. I do not know but he was a Relation of my Wife's.

Q. What Character has he?

A. Aye, aye, he is a very honest Man.

Mr. Spring. I desire the Jury may take Notice, he says Stanley is a very honest Man.

Mr. Mac Manus. He does so; but every body may easily see in what manner he said it.

Witness. But he is a noted Villain in Dublin, and as any Man in Ireland.

Q. Do you know Mr. Francis Annesley?—A. I do very well.

Q. Had you any Conversation with him returning from the Wexford Assizes about Lord Anglesea?

A. I had; I told him at Killeullen-Bridge the gross Usage I had from my Lord, that I got no Money; and he said he would speak to Counsellor Annesley; and, says he, you shall be ordered your Wages.

Q. Did not you make use of some threatening Expressions if you were not paid?—A. I made no use of any threatening Expressions.

Q. Was you ever in England?—A. I was.

Q. How long was it that you went there after this Conversation?

A. About a Month, I am sure; I cannot tell what Time, for I have not the Day of the Month; I went soon after, but cannot tell the Time.

Q. What Business carried you to England?

A. I tell you. First, I went there to see two Sisters I have married there, and a Brother I have married there. Secondly, I was in dread of these Indictments, and as I was bred and born in this Country, and not noted for any thing that was bad, I went to England to beg the Gentlemen's Pardons, and try if I could clear myself.

Q. In what Part of England are your Sisters and Brother?

A. I have a Brother lives in the Coal-Yard, he is in the Guards; one of my Sisters lives at St. Mary Axe, next Door to the Hoop and Grapes; the other Sister is married to a Chairman.

Q. Was not this in April you went over?

A. I cannot swear to the Month, nor the Day I left Ireland.

Q. How many Weeks after you left Lord Anglesea was you in Dublin?

A. I cannot tell.

Q. Was it a Month?—A. I cannot swear; I believe it was a Month.

Q. Do you know Mr. Mac Kercher?—A. I do.

Q. Did you see him in England?—A. I did, in London.

Q. How long was you in London before you saw him?

A. I believe ten Days before I seen him.

Q. Was you inquired after by him, or did you enquire for him?

A. Indeed I enquired for him.

Q. When you met him, did not you give him the Account you have mentioned here?

A. I gave him no Account; I gave them to a Gentleman that drew them in Dublin.

Q. What Gentleman?

A. To the best of my Knowledge his Name is Baily.

Q. For what Reason was it that you never disclosed the Matter till April?

A. I would not then, but only that the Indictments were found against me in the County of Kildare.

Q. Who is Baily?—A. An Attorney.

Q. Where does he live?—A. I cannot tell the Place; to the best of my Knowledge he lives in Golden-Lane.

Q. Is not he now in this Town?

A. I cannot tell; I have not seen him to my Knowledge.

Q. Where do you say he lives?

A. To the best of my Knowledge his Office is in Golden-Lane.

Q. Is he a young Man, or middle-aged?

A. He is a young Man, a middle-aged Man, tall and long visaged.

Q. How came you to find him?—A. I sent a Man for him.

Q. Were you acquainted with him then?

A. I was acquainted with him two Days or three before.

Q. How came you acquainted with him?

A. A Friend of mine recommended me to him, that he was fit for my Service, that I should employ him to give my Testimony.

Q. Where did he draw this Testimony for you?—A. He drew it for me in the House of Robert Kennedy on the Blind-Quay.

Q. Who was present when he drew it?

A. Nobody was present but himself and me.

Q. Who wrote the Words you said?

A. He is the Person that wrote the Words himself.

Q. Was Mr. Mac Kercher in England when this was done?—A. He was.

Q. Was there no Draught of what you had to say drawn by your Directions before Mr. Baily drew that, by any one else?

A. I had myself drawn one before that.

Q. By whom?—A. I do not know the Man.

Q. Where was it drawn?—A. At Mr. Robert Kennedy's.

Q. The first Time?—A. The first Time and second Time too.

Q. Did you shew Mr. Baily any Draught, but what you gave out of your Mouth?—A. I did not, Sir.

Q. What did you do with your first Draught?

A. It was tore to Pieces.

Q. Had you any Paper drawn for you in England?

A. Not for me, indeed.

Q. Have you any Paper of Instructions about you what you were to swear?—A. I have not.

Q. Did you swear to the Examinations you gave in this Kingdom?

A. I did.

Q. Before whom?

A. I do not know the Master in Chancery, I forget his Name.

Q. Where does he live?—A. He lives about Chancery-Lane.

Q. Is Mr. Baily here?—A. I cannot say that he is here.

Q. Who advised you to go to that Master in Chancery?—A. Myself.

Q. Did any body attend you there?—A. Mr. Baily attended me.

Q. Did he read it and sign it?—A. He did.

Q. Who paid for that Swearing?

A. I did; I borrowed the Money from Mr. Robert Kennedy.

Q. Where did you live from the Time you left Lord Anglesea till you lived with him again?

A. I lived with Mr. Colclough, and Mr. Gerard in Dublin, and Mr. Marsh.

Q. How long did you live with Mr. Colclough?—A. About seven Months.

Q. Where did you live after that?

A. Lord Anglesea put me in the Marshalsea.

Q. For what?

A. I will tell you for what. I came to demand my Wages and my Wife's Wages, that lived with him seven Months, and my Lord would give me no Money at Bray, but said, my Wife was the vilest Woman upon Earth; and I said I was very sorry his Lordship thought so; and he gave me a Shake, and said, my Children were not my own.

Q. But what did he put you in the Marshalsea for?

A. He put me in for a sham Writ for sol. and I cannot tell what.

Q. Did you owe him any Money?

A. No; I owed him none; he owed me my own and my Wife's Wages.

Q. How long was it after that you were to kill Mr. Annesley?

A. It is near three Years; the latter End of this Month it will be three Years.

Court. What was the Reason of your giving your Whip to the Constable?—A. Because that I could not keep the Whip, the Gun and Bridle in one Hand.

Q. How long had you had the Gun before you gave the Whip to the Constable?—A. I did not go, I believe, a Quarter of a Mile before I gave it to him.

Q. You carried them that Way?

A. I did; but they were troublesome to me.

Q. You put the Gun, you say, out of your right Hand into the left?

A. I did.

Q. For what Reason?—A. Mr. Lacy was at me to fire, I would not, and I did it to let the Cock down again.

Q. Are you right-handed?—A. I am, my Lord.

Q. When you go a-fowling, on which Side do you put your Gun?

A. On my right.

Q. Always?—A. Always, my Lord.

Q. Your Gun was at first held upwards?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you after that level it?

A. I held it this way; directly foreanent the Coach-door the Gun pointed.

Q. When you shifted the Gun out of your right Hand into your left, and laid it upon your Thigh, how stood the Muzzle?

A. It stood this Way.

Q. Did it point towards Mr. Hacket or Mr. Annesley?

A. I cannot tell; but I had it this Way facing the Coach Door.

Q. Did you never rest it upon the Pommel of the Saddle?

A. I shifted it backwards and forwards.

Q. After you told Lacy you would not be concerned in Blood, how long did you continue to ride with him?—A. All along.

Q. Did you see Mr. Annesley alight?—A. I did.

Q. Who was by him then?—A. I cannot tell the Man's Name.

Q. What Posture had you the Gun in?

A. This Way. [Holding it in his left hand, with the Muzzle cocked upwards upon his Arm.]

Mr. Harward. My Lord's House-Steward, Michael Lacy, is indicted, we have had Warrants against him, and cannot find him; I want to know from this Witness, where this Michael Lacy now is, in whose Service, or upon whose Estate he lives.

Mr. Malone. He is now in this Town, and you shall have him.

Mr. Harward. Pray, Gentlemen, where is he?

Mr. Malone. You shall have him; we will bring him hither before this Trial is over. [He never was produced.]

Angus Byrne. I shall wait three hours in Court 'till I see him and talk to him.

STATE of the CASE.

Mr. Spring. May it please your Lordship and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel with the Noble Earl and the other Traversers of these several Indictments.

The Traversers, my Lord, stand charged with a Crime, which upon the Face of the Indictments appears to be no more than an ordinary Assault; but this Offence, though in its nature one of the lowest which the Law takes Notice of, has by infiniteS kill and Address been heightened into a Crime of a most enormous Size; but I hope we shall be able to shew to your Lordship and the Gentlemen of the Jury, that there is not the least Foundation in Truth for the Light, in which the Counsel for the Prosecutors have endeavoured to put this Transaction.

Our Case, my Lord, will appear to be this; That the Noble Earl and his Friends, who are now upon their Trials, happened to be on the 16th of September last on the Curragh of Kildare, to partake of the Diversions of the Place: Thither repairs Mr. James Annesley, attended by his Friends, Mr. Mac Kercher, and the other Prosecutors, whether with Intent to meet the Earl, and take hold of any Occasion that might offer of a Quarrel with him, their subsequent Behaviour will best explain.

The Earl and his Friends will appear to your Lordship to have repaired to this Race-place without any Preparation for what they did not expect, a Battle; they all go unarmed, as Gentlemen always do to a Horse-race, when nothing is intended but to partake of the Diversions of the Day.

The Prosecutors, one of whom had, as it is pretended, received ill Treatment two Days before from the Earl, and had consequently Reason to apprehend the like Treatment upon the next Interview, go to that very Place, where they were thus ill used, and where it was very notorious the Earl was: but they go prepared for every Event, prepared for that skirmish, which they had Reason to expect from the Earl's pretended Misbehaviour of the 14th; they go in a hostile Manner, in terroram populi, no less than five or six of them armed with Sword and Pistol, attended by a numerous Train of Servants armed in like manner with Pistols, cutting Swords, Carbines and Blunderbusses; they go thus armed and attended to see a common Horse-race. A Race, my Lord, is a Place of Entertainment, to which Gentlemen repair without any such hostile Preparations: I cannot tell indeed what may be done in North-Britain, but in England and Ireland we have no such Custom; the usual Manner of riding to Races, is on a Hunting-Saddle, and with a Snaffle Bit.

It will appear, my Lord, by positive Testimony, that the Words charged on Lord Anglesea, of the 14th of September, as spoken to Mr. Mac Kercher; he is a Dog, a Scoundrel, a Villain, and the Coat you see on his Back, I saw not a Month ago in Monmouth-Street, were not the Words of Lord Anglesea, they were Words uttered by another Person. These Gentlemen, two Days after these Words they complain of were spoken, repaired to this same Curragh. And here I must beg Leave once more to observe a Circumstance in itself most extraordinary: that the Prosecutors, aware of ill Treatment, aware that my Lord Anglesea intended to breed a Quarrel with them, alarmed, as they pretend, with the grossest Insolence that could be offered to a Gentleman and a Man of Honour, go to the same Place where they apprehended they had Reason to expect the like or worse Treatment. It might be expected, if these Gentlemen had not imagined they might have derived some Benefit, some Reputation to their Cause, I mean to Mr. Annesley's Claim to the Earldom and Estate of Anglesea, that they might have avoided a Quarrel with the Earl, however disposed he might have been to enter into one; but these Gentlemen, who had nothing in View but a Quarrel, go there designedly to seek one, which they at last brought upon themselves by their own Means, and without even the Concurrence of the Earl.

It will appear to your Lordship, that these Gentlemen, taking some Offence at some Expressions charged upon the Coachman of Lord Anglesea, taking Offence at his driving on the Plain, as he had a Right to do, go to my Lord and demand publick Satisfaction for the Offence his Coachman had given, by stripping him in the Field. It will appear, that Mr. MacKercher seeks out for Lord Anglesea, whom with Difficulty he found; that he was cautioned and advised not to do it; yet it will appear that he goes to Lord Anglesea; that he, who is the known Supporter of Mr. Annesley, calls to Lord Anglesea for publick Satisfaction for an Injury not done to himself, but to another; that as the Champion of Mr. Annesley, considering himself as well the Guardian of this Gentleman's Honour, as the Assertor of his Right, he went up towards my Lord, and, in a menacing and violent Manner, forces through a Crowd, and then, with his Whip lifted up ready to strike, cried out, My Lord, you will not turn him off! Step aside with me. Lord Anglesea, who knew the Man and his Business, which, considering all Circumstances, could be nothing but to quarrel, endeavours to avoid this Quarrel, declines going, and says to him, Sir, you can have no Business with me; and if you have, this is no proper Place to talk about it. Mr. MacKercher says, I have no Business but what may be done here, every Place is proper. My Lord then inquires what he wanted, and is answered, My Business is about your Coachman, who has affronted a Gentleman on the Field. My Lord asks, Who is the Gentleman? He is told the Gentleman is this very Person thus claiming his Honour and Estate; and that, as the Affront has been publick, the Satisfaction must be adequate, and you must strip your Servant, and turn him off directly, and drive yourself home. My Lord, this Treatment, which will appear to have been attended with Circumstances sufficient to aggravate it, if it had been quite of another Nature, will appear to be the Occasion of the Quarrel; it will appear that Lord Anglesea declined this Combat, to which he was very unequal, as he was not armed, and to which he was not obliged to expose himself: he refuses, my Lord, to turn off his Servant. Mr. MacKercher resents this; he raises his Whip in a threatening Manner, and loudly demands Satisfaction. I had almost forgot saying, that, during his whole Conversation, he held his Whip over the Earl's Head. These Circumstances and Menaces will appear, I apprehend, to be no less in Point of Law than that he first assaulted Lord Anglesea. Then it will appear that Mr. Francis Annesley, the Friend and Relation of Lord Anglesea, who saw the Head of his Family, his Friend and Landlord, thus assaulted, gives Mr. MacKercher a Blow. It will appear, that though Lord Anglesea did not strike Mr. MacKercher, yet Mr. MacKercher struck him and broke his Head. Mr. Annesley stands indicted for assaulting not only Mr. MacKercher, but all the other Prosecutors: It will appear that he, upon the giving of this Blow, received two Blows, one from Mr. Gosstry, and one from Mr. Kennedy, and both behind his Back. My Lord, Mr. Annesley will appear to have been thus assaulted by those two Persons, and yet this is he that is indicted for assaulting Mr. Gosstry and Mr. Kennedy. It will appear that Mr. Annesley called out, and desired to know who had struck him; and being informed who they were, then, and not 'till then, returned the Blows. With respect to Mr. Jans, it will appear that he is the Agent of Lord Anglesea, that he saw his Employer, we may call him his Master, struck and affronted; and that will be a proper Defence for him. As to the Assault upon Mr. James Annesley, there is no Evidence of any such Assault. I shall give your Lordship no further Trouble at this Time. If I have omitted any thing material, there are other Gentlemen joined with me in this Service, who will supply my Want of Recollection.

Mr. Morgan. I believe this is our Time to have the Benefit of the Testimony of some of the Traversers in Favour of others of them. As to the Indictment for assaulting Mr. MacKercher, Lord Anglesea, Mr. Francis Annesley, Mr. Jans and Lady stand charged with that Indictment; and I beg Leave to appeal to your Lordship's Notes, whether there be any Colour (from the Evidence given on Behalf of the Crown) for this Indictment as against Mr. Annesley and Mr. Jans; and therefore hope that they only will now be given in Charge to the Jury, and that the Jury may be directed to bring in their Verdict as to them, in order, that if they be acquitted upon that Indictment, my Lord Anglesea may have the Benefit of their Testimony upon the same. When that is done, we shall beg Leave to proceed in like manner upon the several other Indictments, as to such of the Gentlemen as we apprehend have not been affected by the Evidence given on Behalf of the Crown.

Court. Upon the whole Evidence, I take it, that the Assault upon Mr. MacKercher stands already proved against Mr. Francis Annesley only, by Mr. MacKercher, Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Gosstry; the Assault upon Mr. Kennedy stands proved against Lord Anglesea and Mr. Jans, by Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Archbold: As to the Assault upon Mr. Gosstry, the only Person that speaks to that is Mr. Gosstry himself, who says, Mr. Annesley struck him with his Whip two Minutes after he had struck Mr. Annesley; so that upon that Indictment Mr. Annesley is not guilty in my Apprehension, and may be admitted as Evidence to that.

Mr. Harward. I do not know, my Lord, what those Gentlemen would be at; I apprehend the Practice they would introduce is new and unwarranted. Here are in each of these Indictments my Lord Anglesea, Mr. Jans, Mr. Francis Annesley, and the out-standing Man indicted; there are four of them in each Indictment.

Court. It is my Opinion, the Gentlemen of Counsel for the Traversers may separate the Indictments.

Mr. Harward. My Lord, I do admit the Practice to be, that where it has appeared to the Court upon the Trial, that all the Persons who could give any Account of the Offence have been indicted, or Bills have been found against all the Persons present when the Offence was committed: If it appears upon the Trial, that some of those Persons have not been guilty of the Offence, for which they were indicted, I cannot say, but it may be the Practice in such a Case to separate the Indictments, and permit such as shall be found not guilty to give Testimony for the rest, who happen to be indicted; and that may be reasonable from the Necessity of the Thing, as there can be no other Evidence for the Traversers, there being no other Persons present at the Time of committing the Offence; otherwise the Consequence might be, that all would be found guilty where the Offence was privately committed, though, in fact, some of them were innocent. But where the Offence has been committed before Thousands, as here, and that four Persons only are indicted for this, and that after six Hours Examination it does appear most evidently, that each of these Four have had a Hand in the general Affray, though not in the Assault of every of the Prosecutors, I would submit it, if that be such a Case, as from the Necessity and Nature of it, where there can be no want of other indifferent Witnesses presumed, the Court will permit that one of them should be at liberty to give Evidence for the other. The Consequence of it may be, that they may acquit each other of the several Indictments, and they are not such equal and indifferent Witnesses as the Law requires, each of them being proved to have had some Hand in one Part or other of this general Affray, though not in the actual Assault of every of the Prosecutors, and the Evidence in the whole reaches every one of the Traversers. Can it be said, that those Gentlemen, against each of whom Evidence has been given, are so unbiassed as to be fit Persons to be examined as Evidence in the Case of each other? I humbly apprehend not; and that it may be an Inlet to Perjury, and in great measure defeat the End of all Publick Prosecutions for Breach of the Peace. I beg Leave to say, that Lord Anglesea is guilty of the Assault upon each of the Prosecutors: It has been sworn that he cried out, Knock them down, knock them down. By those Words he is a Trespasser against every Man that was knocked down there. I apprehend the Law to be, that he who directs a Man to be knocked down is a Principal, as well as the Man who commits the Fact. Has it not been sworn, that he not only encouraged, but also gave Directions to pursue Mr. Annesley?—Why, then, as to Mr. Annesley of Ballysax, does it not appear evidently, that he was the Person who rushed out upon Mr. MacKercher and struck him, and that afterwards he fell upon Mr. Gosstry? I think there can be no Doubt but that my Lord Anglesea and Mr. Jans have been most deeply concerned in this whole Affray, not only of assaulting Mr. MacKercher, but also of the rest. When my Lord was told by Mr. MacKercher, That he dare not for his Soul single himself out; Mr. Jans said, Sure you would not do it; are there not enough of us here to go out and to fight him?

Court. Upon three of these Indictments there has been no Evidence given that can affect Mr. Francis Annesley, and therefore he is at Liberty to be examined.

Mr. Harward. My Lord, I humbly apprehend, that neither Mr. Annesley nor any of the Traversers have the Liberty to be examined 'till they are acquitted. I apprehend, though they may not be affected by Evidence on this or that particular Indictment, that they are not thereby cleared of this Charge; because the Gentlemen of the Jury are to consider upon the Circumstances and the Evidence of this whole Case, whether they are all guilty or not? And the Court are no Judges of Facts, the Jury must determine, and are the proper Judges of them.

Court. But you will allow the Judge to say, that there has been no Evidence of such or such a Kind given that can affect such or such a Person?

Mr. Harward. That I do not dispute, my Lord; but what I say is true in Point of Law, that the Court have nothing to do with the Determination of the Fact; that is to be left to the Jury; and if so, why then, I say, that in this Case, the Court cannot foresee who shall be found guilty upon this or that Indictment, and who not.

Court. Why, shall I not tell the Jury, that there is no Evidence against such or such a Person, and that they ought to be acquitted?

Mr. Harward. You certainly will, my Lord; but, notwithstanding that Direction, may not the Jury be of another Opinion concerning this Matter, and may they not conceive, that all those People in general have been guilty, though no Evidence appears against Mr. Annesley in particular? Unquestionably they may. Now, if it should be done, perhaps your Lordship will not fine them above a Penny, unless the Jury can satisfy the Court, that they went upon their own Knowledge from the whole Evidence, which, in all probability, some of them will in the present Case. So that they are the Judges of the Fact; and, if so, I would submit it, whether or no the Court can say, in a Case of that Nature, We will let one of you be Evidence for another, and so the third for the fourth, and by that means shift and help one another quite out of this Prosecution?

Court. I am greatly surprised that the Time of the Court is taken up with contending about this Fact of separating the Indictments. You have debated it before, and it was mutually agreed, that that Point should be given to them. For my Part, I think in point of Law they have a Right to insist upon that, and when it was agreed upon that they should be allowed it, I thought that Method was come into in order to save Time. The Argument which is insisted upon, that where an Indictment is laid against a Person simul cum others, they shall be all tried together, concludes against that which I have known done over and over again, and which hardly escapes ever being done in case of an Action of Assault against A, with simul cum other People.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is an Indictment against Lord Anglesea, Mr. Francis Annesley, and Mr. Jans, for an Assault, suppose, against Mr. Gosstry; has not any one of these three Persons a Right to say Mr. Jans is put here to cut me out of my Evidence? They certainly have. I desire that Mr. Jans may be first tried, and that his Indictment may be disposed of before any other Proceedings be had against the other two; that if he be acquitted, he may be Evidence for them. And as this would be the Law and the Consequence in the Case of a Traverser, so the Law would be the same in in any other Case. Why then, this is clear that the Agreement has passed in this Manner; the Gentlemen of Council for the Traversers made their Objections to the Indictments being tried together, and those on the other Side replied. What was their Answer? It was, that where this or that Person was not convicted on any one Indictment, he should be at Liberty to give his Evidence for the others on that Indictment.

Mr. Mac Manus. Here are four several Indictments against the Traversers at the Bar for four Assaults; and they are jointly charged in each Indictment. And where an Offence arises from a joint Act, which is in itself criminal, the Defendants may be indicted jointly and severally, as that they, and each of them, did so and so, or jointly only. So is the Law. Now, my Lord, consider, how it has appeared in Evidence; it has most fully and clearly appeared, that all Parties indicted have, one and all, jointly contributed to this unlawful Act; and please to consider the Objection these Gentlemen make, that if they are deprived of this Benefit, they may want the most proper and material Evidence for their Defence; as if some Persons might have been here indicted in order to take off their Testimony. Your Lordship will please to observe where this Action arose, at the Curragh of Kildare, a public Place, where there were a Multitude of People assembled; so that there could be no Defect of Testimony at all on their Side, if any Persons did or could see or hear any thing for their Service; and Numbers of Persons did and must have seen this whole Transaction; Curiosity, Humanity, or some other Motive, must have engaged every Eye and every Ear. Then, where there were so many Witnesses that might be had upon this Occasion, who would either voluntarily, or might have been compelled to come, if material; there can be no Complaint of Want of Evidence, or that the Prosecutors have taken this Method to deprive them of their Testimony. And, my Lord, these Indictments were of the last Assizes, so there is no Surprise; the Gentlemen might have been fully prepared with any Evidence they thought necessary for their Defence, without this extraordinary, this new Method of splitting Indictments. And I do apprehend, in this case they are in no fort entitled to the Testimony of each other. It is a settled Point, that in Trespas, though one may act more violently, more injuriously than another; yet, when all join in an unlawful Act of this nature, the Act of one is the Act of all. And though A did not strike B, yet if he struck C, where the whole is, as here, one continued Affray, he cannot possibly be a legal and competent Witness against the Crown; the whole is given in Charge to the Jury; he has been in the Affray, and actually committed Acts of Violence; and it has appeared uncontroverted in Evidence, that every Person here indicted has been guilty of one Assault or another; and that all have been guilty of a publick and dangerous Disturbance of the Peace.

Court. It has not appeared upon the Evidence, that Lord Anglesea or Mr. Fane actually assaulted Mr. Mac Kercher.

Mr. Mac Manus. My Lord, all the Acts of Violence of the Day proceeded from the Directions of Lord Anglesea; menacing Words, lifting up of Hands, his raising himself up on his Saddle, commanding and inciting others to strike; he himself, as Mr. Kennedy and Archbold swear, violently striking Kennedy on the Head, and Fane joining him in the Strokes till the People cried out Shame; and though opprobrious, abusive Language may not be an Assault, yet, there are many Things that they carried into Action, not only by Words, but by Gestures, that prove the Assault. My Lord Anglesea was so near Mr. Mac Kercher at the Time when Mr. Annesley struck him, that he could have struck him himself. Every Thing was done by his Directions; and menacing Words, with a lifted Hand, are an Assault in Law; and I do insist upon it, in point of Law, that whoever excites, persuades, or procures another to commit a Trespas or Treason is a principal Offender, and equally guilty in Law, as he who strikes; and more especially so when all are present; and my Lord Anglesea and Fane were indisputably present, aiding and assisting the assaulting of Mr. Mac Kercher, and are in Law guilty of that Assault.

Mr. Callaghan. My Lord, as I do on the one Hand agree, that Traversers are not to be laid under extraordinary Hardships, and that Prosecutors by no means are to make use of any Contrivance, any Scheme to entrap Men, in order to deprive them of the Benefit of defending themselves; so, on the other Hand, they are not to elude the Rules of Justice, by becoming Evidence for each other. I put it upon the Gentlemen on the other Side to shew, that ever they met in any Law-Book, that where there was a Fact done in the Presence of many, and a few only charged with it, that, on the Trial of those few Persons, the Indictments should be separated, to make them Evidence, in case of their Acquittal, for one another. I am the bolder in this Assertion, because it is never done, but where extreme Necessity requires it; that Necessity can never happen, but when all that were present at the Time the Offence was committed, are charged in the Indictment with the Committal of it: The Necessity, therefore, of examining any of the People charged with the Offence, if acquitted, as Evidence for the rest, cannot be, but where there is nobody else to give Evidence. In that Case, it appears but just and reasonable; but, on the other Hand, if you let those four People be Evidence for one another, when many other Witnesses might be had, who must have seen the whole Transaction; there is no Prosecution of this nature that will not be eluded. But, my Lord, I will go further, and I do say that every Person charged here is guilty of every Indictment with which he is charged. Wherever there is an Affray or an Assault, let who will be the first Promoter, every Man that does any Act whatever, that is aiding and assisting in any manner, is guilty of every Act which is done by the rest, as much as if done by himself; where there are several People that commit an Affray, each is answerable for the Act of the other. There is a Charge against Lord Anglesea in every Indictment; it stands proved in Evidence he has beat Mr. Kennedy; there, my Lord, is a direct Charge; and, though it does not appear he actually struck the rest, yet it is uncontroverted the rest were struck on his Account, and by his Directions, and in Law he is as guilty of the Assault committed on them, as if he himself had actually beat them; I say, in point of Law he is guilty of all those Facts for which he is indicted. Let any one of them separately be tried before the Jury, and I will undertake to make them guilty in point of Law; and if so, I humbly submit it, whether they can be permitted to try these Indictments separately.

Court. Was it not agreed upon at first, that if any of the Traversers were acquitted of any of the Indictments, they should be Evidence for the rest charged with such Indictment?

Mr. Harward. Let us not be charged by the Court with a Breach of Consent. I will tell you very candidly what I meant, when the Objection was made. My Meaning was, that as all these Indictments were but upon a single Fact, if it should appear, through the Course of the Evidence, that any of the Traversers had no Hand at all in the Fact, but were idle Spectators there, I thought it reasonable that such Person, who did appear to be only a Spectator, should be examined as Evidence for the rest. That was my Meaning, my Lord; how I was understood I cannot account: But I beg leave to rely upon it for Law, and desire your Lordship's Consideration; Can any body that lifted his Hand up that Day in the Field, be innocent of this Assault? Can it be said that he is not guilty of all the Consequences of it?

Court. Well; but have they not a Right to be tried separately?

Mr. Harward. That is another Point, my Lord.

Court. Gentlemen of Council for the Traversers, you must go upon that Indictment, which the Jury are first charged with. The Traversers are first charged with the Indictment for assaulting Mr. Goofry.

Mr. Malone. The Indictment for assaulting Mr. Goofry, is in no fort proved against the Traversers. We have many Witnesses to shew, that before ever he was struck, he knocked Mr. Francis Annesley down, which indeed he very candidly admits himself; and this appears so clearly from his own Testimony, it would be mispending the Time of the Court for us to call our Witnesses to it. Your Lordship observes, that in two Minutes after Mr. Francis Annesley got up, and recovered himself, Mr. Goofry swears my Lord Anglesea said to Mr. Francis Annesley, That is he, that is Goofry, the greatest Rogue alive, damn him, knock him down. Mr. Goofry does not say, whether he heard Mr. Francis Annesley ask my Lord, who had knocked him down; but, from the Nature of the Things, it could not be otherwise; and the very Answer itself imports such a Question. A Gentleman is knocked down behind his Back (for so the Evidence is), and instantly, when he gets up, was it not most natural for him to enquire who struck him? It was to this Inquiry, most plainly, that Lord Anglesea gave that Answer; and then Mr. Francis Annesley goes up to Mr. Goofry, and returns his Compliment by breaking his Head. I submit it, therefore, to your Lordship, where a Witness fairly owns he first knocked me down, whether that is not such a sufficient Justification for my striking him, that I need not lay any other Matter before the Jury; for, if Mr. Francis Annesley, who gave the Blow, be not guilty of this Assault, it is impossible my Lord Anglesea, or Mr. Fane, who did not strike, should be guilty of it. Therefore, I hope your Lordship will acquaint the Jury, that there is no Colour for charging any of the Traversers with this Indictment.

Court. Mr. Goofry said, that he was struck, and was all bloody; but I heard none say that Lord Anglesea or Mr. Fane struck him, and Goofry did acknowledge that about two Minutes before he received the Blow he had struck Mr. Francis Annesley, and at the Time that he did strike him, did say, that he believed Mr. Francis Annesley did not know who it was that struck him, and that about two Minutes after my Lord Anglesea said, There is that Villain Goofry that struck you; upon which Mr. Francis Annesley struck him. This, as I remember, was Mr. Goofry's Evidence.

Mr. Harward. I now desire to know when it was that Lord Anglesea said, Knock them down, knock them down.

Mr. Callaghan. Mr. Goofry expressly swears, it was by the Directions of Lord Anglesea, that Mr. Francis Annesley struck him. He says, I thought the Quarrel was all over, there were above two Minutes between the Strokes, and then my Lord Anglesea said, There is the Villain Goofry, knock him down.

Mr. Malone. It does not appear from Mr. Goofry's Testimony, that my Lord said, Knock him down; the utmost Goofry said, was, that my Lord said, There is the Villain, that is he.

Court. I have nothing upon my Paper about his saying any thing concerning the knocking them down.

Mr. Bagon. My Lord, I have it upon my Paper, that Mr. Goofry said, There is Goofry, as great a Villain as any in Ireland, knock him down.

Mr. Mac Manus. We desire Mr. Goofry may have leave to inform your Lordship what he did say.

Mr. Goofry. My Lord said, There is Goofry, another of the Villains, as great a Rogue as any in Ireland, damn him, knock him down.

Court. You see, Gentlemen, Mr. Francis Annesley was struck by Mr. Goofry, on Evidence, two Minutes before he struck Mr. Goofry, can he then be found guilty of an Assault on Mr. Goofry?

Mr. Grattan. Mr. Goofry said, That there was Hurry and Confusion, and that during that Time he struck Mr. Annesley, and believes Mr. Annesley did not see him strike him. I take the Liberty to say, that if Mr. Annesley did strike Mr. Goofry, and did not see Mr. Goofry strike him first, it was the same Thing, in the Intention of his Mind, as if he had not struck him first: for, since he did not know who had struck him, and yet struck Mr. Goofry, it shews plainly he was determined to strike him, and nothing can justify Mr. Annesley for striking him, but the Provocation of his striking Mr. Annesley.

Mr. Callaghan. There is another Matter, my Lord, which is to be considered, that Mr. Annesley struck Mr. Goofry after his Passion was over. It is true, there is no limited Time for determining a Man's Passion, and a Man may in Passion commit an Act, and not be the Assailant. Your Lordship may remember many Cases in the Books to this purpose, which it is not necessary to trouble you with; but the Rule is, where a Man has cooled and come to temper, there the precedent Act, which was the Effect of Passion, is no Justification of the subsequent Act. Mr. Goofry's Evidence is: I did apprehend all that Matter was over; I do not apprehend the Stroke Mr. Annesley gave me was in consequence of the Stroke he had received, but of Lord Anglesea's Directions; and if so, Mr. Annesley is undoubtedly guilty of the Assault on Mr. Goofry.

Mr. Malone. As to the Indictment for the Assault on Mr. Goofry, we contend for it, that there is no Colour for charging the Traversers with that Indictment, and hope your Lordship will let it go to the Jury upon the Evidence of Mr. Goofry.

The Counsel for the Prosecutors were over-ruled in their Objection.

The Jury go to find whether Lord Anglesea, Mr. Francis Annesley, and Mr. Jans, are guilty of the Assault on Mr. Goostry, on the first Indictment; and, after a quarter of an Hour's stay, return into Court, and find

Lord Anglesea — Guilty.

Mr. Francis Annesley — Not Guilty. — Mr. Jans — Not Guilty.

Court. Gentlemen of Counsel for the Traversers, call your Evidence.
[Neile O'Neile is called to the Second Indictment, for assaulting Hugh Kennedy, Esq.]

Mr. Malone. There are three Gentlemen, my Lord, Lord Anglesea, Mr. Annesley, and Mr. Jans, indicted for assaulting Mr. Kennedy; they have traversed this Indictment, and Mr. Kennedy himself swears this Assault only on Lord Anglesea.

Court. And upon Mr. Jans; and there is not only his Evidence to prove it, but the Evidence of Mr. Archbold.

Mr. Malone. But there is no Sort of Evidence to affect Mr. Francis Annesley, and therefore, I hope your Lordship will direct the Jury to acquit him, that we may have the Benefit of his Testimony upon this Indictment.

Court. Have you any Objection, Gentlemen concerned for the Crown? You have not offered a Word upon this Indictment.

Mr. Harward. What I have offered before, is all any body can offer to this; and I believe it will soon be seen what the Consequence of it will be.

Court. I call upon you to know, whether you've any Objection to the examining Mr. Francis Annesley on the Indictment for assaulting Hugh Kennedy, Esq.

Mr. Harward. We have an Objection; we do object against examining him, and submit it to the Court.

Mr. MacManus. My Lord Anglesea and Mr. Francis Annesley mutually assisted each other; it is all one and the same Trespass, all one and the same Affray, each is Particeps Criminis, and the whole Scene is interwoven, and mixed together.

Mr. Malone. There is not a single Word of Evidence given, to prove that Mr. Francis Annesley was concerned in the Assault upon Mr. Kennedy, and Mr. Kennedy himself swore to that Effect; therefore we desire that Mr. Annesley may be acquitted of that Indictment, and permitted to give his Evidence.

The Jury go to find, whether Francis Annesley, Esq. is guilty of the Assault on Hugh Kennedy, Esq. or not; and, without quitting the Box, find him — Not Guilty of the Assault in the Indictment.

Mr. Malone. We are now upon an Indictment of Lord Anglesea and Mr. Jans, for assaulting Mr. Kennedy, and desire Mr. Annesley may be sworn.

I FRANCIS ANNESLEY, Esq.

Mr. Spring. Were you present upon the Curragh on the 16th of September? — Mr. Annesley. I was.

Q. I ask you, was you upon the Course at the Time of the Race?

A. I was.

Q. Was you present when Mr. MacKercher and his Company came up upon the Horse-Course?

A. I never saw one of them before that Day in my Life.

Q. Did you see Mr. Kennedy come up to speak to Lord Anglesea?

A. I don't remember that I ever saw his Face before this Day.

Q. Did you see any body come to ask him about his Behaviour?

A. I did.

Q. Who? — A. Mr. MacKercher.

Q. Do you remember any such Person upon the Course that Day, as Mr. Kennedy?

A. I was told after, that his Name was Kennedy, and I saw some Strokes between him and Lord Anglesea.

Q. Can you say that the Person you saw there was the same with him you now see here?

A. I don't remember his Face at all, but was told it was he.

Q. Can you take upon you to say you saw him that Day?

A. I did not see him that Day that I know of.

Q. What colour'd Cloaths had the Person on you saw engaged with Lord Anglesea?

A. It was Scarlet.

Q. And did not you see his Face?

A. I saw his Face, but I don't know it again.

Q. In what Situation was you when he struck you?

A. I had my Back to him.

Q. How do you know then that he struck you?

A. I apprehend, though my Back was to him, it was he, and upon his striking me, my Lord struck him.

Q. Did you see him strike my Lord? — A. I did.

Q. Which of them gave the first Stroke?

A. The first Stroke that was given was by my Lord to Mr. Kennedy, some Minutes after I had got a Stroke upon my Head.

Q. Were Mr. MacKercher and Mr. Goostry near? — A. They were.

Q. Was Mr. Jans near Mr. Kennedy?

A. I believe Mr. Jans was pretty near, but not within Reach of him.

Q. Did you see Mr. Jans or he give any Stroke to each other?

A. I did not.

Q. Do you think Mr. Jans could have struck him without your seeing him? — A. I don't think he could.

NEILE O'NEILE.

Mr. Morgan. Pray, Sir, do you know the Inn at Newbridge?

O'Neile. I do.

Q. Where was you on the 13th of September, in the Night?

A. In the Afternoon I went there, I was at Lord Besborough's; and Mr. MacKercher, Mr. Kennedy, and Mr. Livingstone, to the best of my Knowledge, sent a Messenger to my House to speak with me.

Court. Who told you they sent to speak to you?

A. My Wife, when I came home.

Q. Did you go to them? — A. I went to Newbridge.

Q. What Day was this? — A. It was the 15th I went to the Races.

Q. You went to them? — A. I did.

D. Name them again.

Vol. IX.

A. Mr. MacKercher, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Livingstone, and Mr. Goostry.

Mr. Morgan. Where did you go to the 15th? — A. To Newbridge.

Q. When you came there, who did you meet, and what passed?

A. On the 15th, the Gentlemen never were upon the Sod before, and they went all together to the Curragh.

Court. Upon the 15th?

A. Whatever Day the Race was, it was that Day, — on Wednesday, — as to the Day, I cannot be positive, I did not observe the Day of the Month. — It was the 14th: There was never a Horse to start but one. They said, they never were upon the Ground but at that Time, and upon going to the Curragh, there was no Diversion, and we came back, and Mr. MacKercher said, he saw Lord Anglesea, See what a Look, says he, he gave at us all that Day; but, says he, I want nothing but to expose him to the Populace, and I'll make it my Business to do it before I go back to Dublin.

Q. Who was the Company? Name them.

A. There was Mr. MacKercher, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Livingstone, and Mr. Goostry present, and I don't know but Mr. Robinson was there.

Q. Can you be positive who was there?

A. I know Mr. MacKercher, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Livingstone, Mr. Goostry, and Mr. Annesley were there.

Mr. Harward. My Lord, I desire the Court may take Notice he swears positively that Mr. Livingstone was one of the Company, and we can prove him to be in England at that Time.

Witness. In England! I can bring People to prove, that saw him in Naas the next Day after the Races.

Mr. Spring. Was you upon the Curragh the 16th? — A. I was.

Q. Was you there when Mr. Kennedy was there?

A. I saw him there.

Q. What Part of the Curragh did you first see him on?

A. I went along with him to the Curragh, for we dined at Newbridge that Day.

Mr. Att. Gen.] If you can prove, Gentlemen, that Mr. Livingstone was not there, what need you ask this Man another Question?

Mr. Malone.] My Lord, we will produce the top Men of the Country to his Character.

Mr. Spring.] Was you by with Mr. Kennedy when he met my Lord Anglesea?

A. I was by with him most Part of the Day.

Q. Then give an Account of what happened when they first met?

A. I cannot tell whether I was present at their first Meeting; but when they met, they never spoke a Word to one another, but at the Time of the Action.

Q. What Action, was there a Quarrel?

A. There was a Quarrel, and Mr. MacKercher was the Beginner of it. So there happened some Words that the Coachman had said to Mr. Annesley; and upon the same, Mr. MacKercher was very angry, and said, that the Thing was intended on purpose.

Court.] To whom?

A. To Mr. Kennedy and the Gentlemen in the Crowd with him; and I was there at the same Time.

Q. What Words were they?

A. The Words Shoe-boy, or some such Thing. — And upon that, he said, He would make Application to my Lord, and if he did not discharge the Servant, he would have Satisfaction for it. Upon which, my Lord happened to be down where there was a Dispute about Sir Edward O'Brien's Mare running on the wrong Side of the Post; and we rode around until they came to the Winning-Post, where my Lord was. Upon which, Mr. MacKercher told him, That his Servant used him ill, and hoped for Satisfaction from him, and that he would turn him off. My Lord said, He would not. And upon that Mr. MacKercher said, He did not use him well, and would have Satisfaction. And he had the Whip up in his Hand in order to strike, and he rode a Stone-horse, and he was vicious, and I don't know whether the Stroke was intended for my Lord or for the Horse.

Mr. Spring.] Did you see Lord Anglesea and Mr. Kennedy together that Day? — A. I saw them close together.

Q. Did any Thing happen between them?

A. I saw them strike one another.

Q. Who? — A. Mr. Annesley and Mr. Kennedy.

Q. Give an Account of that?

A. When Mr. Goostry struck Mr. Francis Annesley, he was for about two Minutes before he found out who it was. Upon which, he asked who it was; and my Lord said, That is the Man, that Goostry, pointing to him. Upon which he went over, and made a Stroke at Mr. Goostry, and there were some Strokes that passed; and upon that, Mr. Kennedy came and made a Stroke at Mr. Francis Annesley, and hit my Lord over the Wig, but whether it hurt him or no I cannot tell, or whether the Stroke was intended for him or not, I cannot tell.

Court.] Did you see the Stroke reach my Lord?

A. I did see it reach him upon the Wig.

Q. Did you see my Lord strike Mr. Kennedy?

A. I did. As soon as he received that Stroke, he up with his Whip and struck him.

Mr. Spring.] Did you see Mr. Jans there? — A. I did.

Q. Where was he at the Time of this Quarrel? — A. He was in a Crowd.

Q. Did you see any Engagement between Mr. Kennedy and Jans?

A. I did.

Q. Who struck first?

A. That I cannot swear to at all, which of them struck first; for the Crowd rushing backward and forward, I could not be distinct.

Q. Was the Blow given by Mr. Kennedy to Lord Anglesea, before Mr. Jans and Kennedy were engaged?

A. It was before I saw them engaged.

Q. Which struck first, Jans or Kennedy?

A. By virtue of my Oath, I cannot tell which; I saw Blood run down Mr. Kennedy, and whether it was he struck Mr. Jans first or no, I cannot tell: for when I saw my Lord receive the Stroke, I turned about my Horse, and did not mind. I was just crossing between him and my Lord, and whether Mr. Kennedy struck at Jans first I cannot tell.

Q. But you said you saw Mr. Kennedy strike Lord Anglesea before you saw Lord Anglesea give a Stroke? — A. I did, Sir.

Q. What happened between Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Jans?

A. I cannot tell.

Court.] Gentlemen concerned for the Crown, will you ask this Man any Questions?

Mr. Harward.] We will not ask him any Question, but beg, for Justice sake, he may not be permitted to get out of the Court, till we proceed to give Evidence against him for Perjury.

Court.] How long have you been acquainted with Mr. Mac Kercher?

O'Neill. I believe since his first coming into the Kingdom.

Q. And with Mr. Kennedy?—A. Yes.

Q. And with Mr. Gosfry?—A. No, not with him.

Q. How came you to go with them to the Curragh?

A. I had an Intimacy with Mr. Annesley, (for he was some time at my Father's House when a Child) on his first coming into the Kingdom, and they sent for me.

Q. On what Business did they send for you?

A. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Q. Who went to the Curragh with you?

A. We went all together to the Races, and we had discourse as we went along.

Mr. Mac Manus.] Who did they then send for you?—A. Several.

Q. Who were they?—A. Their own Servants.

Q. Name the Servants.—A. One Barney Neale, and several of them.

Mr. Digby, Foreman of the Jury.] Did you meet me coming home on the Road that Day?

A. Yes, Sir, I believe I did, I cannot recollect.

Q. Did you say any thing to me?—A. I cannot say I did.

Q. Did not you express Concern to me at the Treatment Mr. Mac Kercher and Mr. Annesley had received?—A. I do not remember that I did.

Q. Did not you express yourself, that you thought they were used very hard?—A. I do not know but I might tell you so.

Mr. Har.] I desire, my Lord, that Mr. Livingstone may be called, to satisfy you he was in England last September.

Court.] You had better stay a little.

[Patrick Cavenagh is called, and goes away again, being to be examined to another Point.]

Mr. Callaghan.] We'll beg Leave to produce Mr. Livingstone, to shew your Lordship where he was in September last.

WILLIAM LIVINGSTONE, Esq.

Mr. Callaghan.] Where was you in September last?

Mr. Livingstone.] In London.

Q. Was you any Part of that Month in Ireland?—A. I was not.

Q. When did you come over to Ireland?

A. It was the Middle of October before I came to this Kingdom.

[Mr. Malone informs the Court, that in October he saw Mr. Livingstone at Parkgate ready to embark for Ireland.]

Cross Examination.

Mr. Spring.] Do you know this Mr. Neile?

Mr. Livingstone.] Yes, Sir.

Q. Did you ever see him in Mr. Mac Kercher's or Mr. Kennedy's Company?—A. I have.

Q. Were they not well acquainted?—A. Yes, I believe they were.

Q. Was he employed by Mr. Mac Kercher or Mr. Kennedy?

A. Sir, when we came first into Ireland about two Years ago, Neile met us uncall'd-for at Kill; he told us a great deal of his Knowledge of Mr. Annesley at Kinna, and the Witnesses that knew his Affairs; and often came about us upon that Errand, till at last he came so often, that he was used with the utmost Disregard; and when we found out his Character, he was never suffered to come about the House at all.

Mr. Digby.] What Character has he? Do you think he is an honest Man?

A. We were Strangers in this Country; he looked like an honest Man to us at first, but upon a better Information we found him quite the Reverse.

Mr. Mac Manus.] My Lord, we desire my Lord Allen may be sworn, to give a Character of this Man.

The Right Honourable Lord Viscount ALLEN.

Mr. Mac Manus.] Pray, my Lord, do you know this Neile O Neile?

Lord Allen. I know him very well, and believe no Man bears a more infamous Character in the County of Kildare.

Q. Does your Lordship think he deserves any Credit?

A. I am confident he does not; he is a very great Villain; I would not credit him, nor believe one Word he says. I know that no Gentleman would admit you into his Company at the Time you were employed by me; and my Uncle and I had often many Words because I employed you, and we found you out to be the greatest Rogue that could be.

Court.] Do you think he is a Man to be credited upon Oath?

A. No, my Lord, he is not.

Mr. Mac Manus.] We beg leave to produce the Minister of the Parish where he lives.

The Rev. Mr. JOHN DAWSON.

Mr. Mac Manus.] Do you know Neile O Neile?

Mr. Dawson. I know him ever since I came into the Parish of Naas.

Q. How long is that, Sir?—A. I have been two Years there.

Q. What Character has he generally bore during that Time?

A. I have always heard he was a Person guilty of as many Frauds as he was capable of committing; I cannot account for his Morals, but he is a Person that was always very litigious.

Q. What is his general Character?

A. Why, I protest, I have known him guilty of Numbers of Lyes and Falshoods, and is a Person, I think, not to be credited.

Q. Do you believe him a Person to be credited upon his Oath?

A. The general Character is, that he is a Person not only litigious, but capable of any Cheat imaginable.

Q. Is he, or is he not to be believed upon his Oath?

A. I should give little Credit to his Oath, because I have heard his Word so often forfeited.

Lord Viscount Allen.] He is the greatest Rogue alive. 'Tis nine Years since he robbed me; I have had Warrants out against him, and could never catch him, but will now send him to Gaol before I leave this Town.

Mr. Malone.] We desire Maurice Keating, Esq. may be called to the Character of O'Neill. [Mr. Keating is called, but does not come into Court.]

Mr. Spring to Mr. Dawson.] Was not this Neile an Agent to Mr. Mac Kercher and Mr. Annesley?

Mr. Dawson. He had the Repute in Naas some time ago of being a strenuous Friend of theirs; but I never saw him about them; I had no Occasion to interfere in their Affairs.

Court.] Gentlemen of the Jury, the Lord Anglesea and Mr. Jans stand indicted for an Assault on Mr. Kennedy. I shall only tell you, Gentlemen, that I find, on the Recollection of the Evidence, it stands fully proved by Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Archbold, that both his Lordship and Mr. Jans, without Provocation, without any Attempt in Mr. Kennedy to strike a Blow, did strike and sorely beat this Gentleman. Thus it stands proved upon their Testimony; and, Gentlemen, the only Evidence offered to take off this Charge was first Mr. Francis Annesley; and I do think you may lay what he says entirely out of the Case; for he tells you he never saw Mr. Kennedy before this Day, and did see Lord Anglesea and a Gentleman in Red engaged that Day on the Curragh; but who that Gentleman was he cannot tell, and knows not whether it was Mr. Kennedy or not, but that he saw several Blows pass between them. And Mr. Annesley with great Candour and Integrity said, that if it was proved that Mr. Kennedy and that Gentleman were the same, he saw him give no Provocation; so that it still remains clear and undoubted upon the Testimony of Mr. Annesley, that my Lord Anglesea and Mr. Jans are both guilty of the Assault upon Mr. Kennedy; for he tells you farther, that the first Stroke that was given between them was by my Lord. Why then the only other Evidence produced was a Person of extremely different Character from Mr. Annesley, one Neile O Neile, a Surgeon from Naas; and what does he say? He tells you that he was at the Inn of Newbridge with those Gentlemen; that he was sent for by them to Naas, and being from home, was told, when he returned, they had sent for him, and that there he went and found Mr. Mac Kercher, Mr. Kennedy, Mr. Gosfry, and twice I am positive, I think three times, swore that he saw Mr. Livingstone there too. That with these Gentlemen he went to the Curragh; that in the Way Mr. Mac Kercher told him, He wanted of all Things in the World to expose the Lord Anglesea to the Populace, and was determined to do it before he returned to Dublin; that for that Purpose he began the Quarrel: but says he did not see Mr. Mac Kercher strike my Lord, nor attempt to strike him: That he was upon a vicious Stone-Horse, and whether he lifted up his Whip to correct his Horse, or for what other Purpose, he cannot tell. He tells you further, that he saw Mr. Kennedy strike my Lord, but knows not whether he intended to strike him or not: and says, he believes the Stroke did not hurt my Lord. That upon this, my Lord struck him; but if you believe him, the first Blow hit upon my Lord. Why then, this Man having sworn that Mr. Livingstone was one of this Company, and it being alledged that he was then in England, Mr. Livingstone was sworn to account whether he was or no. He declares upon his Oath he was not in Ireland at that Time, but in London, and came over to this Kingdom in October; and says, he knew that this Man was acquainted with Mr. Mac Kercher and Mr. Kennedy, and employed by them; but that he met them on the Road uncall'd-for, frequently attended them under Pretence of serving them, until at length he became so troublesome, they were obliged to dismiss him, and forbid him to come near them. Then, in the next place, in order to discredit him further, the Counsel for the Prosecutors called my Lord Allen to give a Character of him; and his Lordship tells you, that he is of a most infamous Character, of such a one, that his Lordship swears positively he is not to be credited on his Oath. The same bad Character is given him by Mr. Dawson, the Minister of the Place where he lives.

You see, Gentlemen, there is nothing in the World offered but the Evidence of this Man to take off the Weight of Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Archbold; and you will consider what Credit he deserves.

The Jury go to find whether Lord Anglesea and Mr. Jans are guilty of the Assault upon Hugh Kennedy, Esq. or not; and find Lord Anglesea - - - Guilty.

Mr. Jans - - - Guilty.

The Indictment for the Assault on DANIEL MAC KERCHER, Esq.

Mr. Malone.] This, in reality, is the main Indictment, upon which all the rest have been grounded. It does not appear by any Evidence, that my Lord Anglesea and Mr. Jans had any hand in assaulting him; and therefore we hope, upon the Rule you have laid down, to be allowed the Benefit of their Testimony. Mr. Mac Kercher himself, in his Evidence upon this Indictment, does not pretend that either Lord Anglesea or Mr. Jans did assault him on the Curragh. If I mistake your Evidence, you'll set me right.

Mr. Mac Kercher.] What do you understand, Sir, by assaulting me?

Mr. Malone.] I mean a Blow.

Mr. Mac Kercher.] I cannot say they gave me any Blow.

Court.] The Account Mr. Mac Kercher gave was, that after a good deal of opprobrious Language, he told my Lord Anglesea, He lied, and dared me for the Soul of him sin-le himself out, and tell him so. That upon those Words Mr. Francis Annesley stepped forward, and struck Mr. Mac Kercher upon the Forehead, which occasioned a Swelling and a Bleeding: and I do not recollect that Mr. Mac Kercher gave any thing in Evidence that my Lord said or did to him more than this.

Mr. Malone.] As there does not appear any Evidence that can affect Lord Anglesea and Mr. Jans on this Indictment, we beg leave to desire your Lordship will give the Jury some Directions concerning them before we proceed further.

Mr. Harward.] I believe there can be very little Doubt, when you consider, but that Mr. Jans is guilty of the Assault upon Mr. Mac Kercher; and I'll tell your Lordship the Reason why I apprehend it so; because there is no Controversy but that this Man, upon the Words which passed between Lord Anglesea and Mr. Mac Kercher, rushed out and said, Sure, my Lord, you would not offer to fight this Fellow, while there are so many here by to fight him for you. What follows upon this? Why then, one of this very Company goes out and strikes him. Pray, my Lord, are not they all guilty of the Trespass committed against him? I do say they are all Principals, and that there is no distinguishing in Law between the Man that struck, and the Man that assisted by Word or Act.

Mr. MacKercher.] I apprehend the Question to be, Whether my Lord Anglesa and Mr. Jans assaulted a particular Person whom they incited others to strike, and whom their Rage and Passion would have inclined them to strike, if they could as forcibly have struck him, as they did other Persons nearer to them of the same Party. In Construction of Law it is an Assault; they both did assault Mr. MacKercher, and that clearly appears from the Evidence.

Court.] The Evidence of Mr. MacKercher was, that upon my Lord's calling him Thief, Scoundrel, and Villain, Mr. MacKercher said, You dared not for your Soul single yourself out, and tell me so. Upon which some that were by said, My Lord, you go fight such a Scoundrel! here are enough to go out with him. What ensued upon this? Why, then Mr. MacKercher tells you, that upon further Words between them, he said, My Lord, you lie; and that immediately upon his saying so, not a Word said by any other Person, Mr. Francis Annesley stepped forward, and struck him a Blow on the Forehead.

Mr. Bagot.] If I apprehend his Testimony aright, Mr. MacKercher said the Words, You lie, were antecedent to the other Words.

Court.] The Jury, I see, have taken very accurate Notes, and they'll take care to do what is right.

(PATRICK CAVENAGH, Dancing-Master.)

Mr. Morgan.] Do you recollect where you were the 16th of September last?—Mr. Cavenagh.] I do.

Q. Where was you?—A. I was at the Curragh at the Time of the Races.

Q. Did you see Lord Anglesa there?—A. I did.

Q. Did you see Mr. Jans there?—A. I did.

Q. Did you see Mr. MacKercher there?—A. I saw him there.

Q. Give an Account to the Court and the Jury, what you recollect to have passed touching Mr. MacKercher's coming up to Lord Anglesa.

A. I heard some little Thing when I was at Kilkullen-Bridge before the Race, of some Design, and it made me a little more particular. My Lord Anglesa was going down to the Winning-Post when the Dispute was about the Running of the Horses, and I parted from him there; and as I was going, I saw these Gentlemen, Mr. Annesley, Mr. MacKercher, Gosfry, and Kennedy, going towards Lord Anglesa. When I saw that, I immediately recollected what I had heard at the Bridge, that there would be a Quarrel; upon which I returned immediately again, and when I came up, I found there was a Crowd about them, and they were engaged in Words: And I just came up at the Time when my Lord Anglesa said, Sir, I would not suffer my Servants to affront any one, let alone a Gentleman. I just came in upon that Answer, and I don't know what passed before at all.

Q. What did Mr. MacKercher reply to that?

A. I could not hear well what he said, for he spoke very low; but Lord Anglesa spoke very loud.

Q. Was Mr. MacKercher near Lord Anglesa?

A. He was close to my Lord, the Horses Heads were just together; and then I heard Mr. MacKercher some little Time after say, My Lord, your Servant has affronted a Gentleman. And my Lord answered, What Gentleman? And Mr. MacKercher assured him again, That he was a Gentleman; but did not tell who he was.

Q. Did not he tell my Lord at all who he was?

A. Mr. MacKercher assured him twice or thrice that he was a Gentleman, and insisted upon my Lord's doing him Justice, without telling him who the Gentleman was, but at last pointed to him; upon which, when Mr. MacKercher insisted on that, and desired him to turn him off, my Lord said, Is it for you? or Words to that Purpose. And Mr. MacKercher still insisted upon it for affronting a Gentleman.

Q. Was Mr. Francis Annesley or Mr. Jans near my Lord at this time?

A. Mr. Annesley was close by my Lord, and so was Mr. Jans; they stood close together, and my Lord a little on one Side speaking to Mr. MacKercher.

Q. What was it my Lord said to Mr. MacKercher?

A. My Lord said, He would not turn him off for him.

Q. What ensued upon that?

A. Mr. MacKercher insisted upon it, and held up the Butt-End of his Whip to my Lord; upon which Mr. Annesley gave him a Blow before he could give my Lord a Blow, if he intended it.

Q. Did he positively turn up the Butt-End of his Whip?

A. He turned up the Butt-End of his Whip, Sir.

Q. How did he hold his Whip when he spoke to my Lord?

A. He had the proper End of it in his Hand first; but upon my Lord's refusing to turn his Coachman off, he turned his Whip, and said, You won't turn him off, my Lord!

Q. What Kind of a Whip was it that Mr. MacKercher had?

A. I cannot be particular.

Q. Was it a long or a short Whip?

A. It was a long Whip; it either had a Lash, or was one of the Whips with a prodigious long End to it.

Mr. Harward.] Was it not a short Jockey-Whip?—A. It was not.

Q. Had it a Lash to it?—A. I don't believe it had a Lash, but he took it about the Middle, or thereabouts, in his Hand.

Q. Did he hold it in a threatening Manner?

A. He did, and said in Anger, You won't turn him off, my Lord!

Mr. Morgan.] Was there, or was there not before that Time in which he turned his Whip, any Stroke given, by virtue of your Oath?

A. There was none given before that Time, by virtue of my Oath.

Q. Did you observe Mr. Jans at that Time?—A. I did.

Q. Did you see him do any Thing?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see him strike Mr. MacKercher, or any body?

A. I did not. He spoke to Mr. MacKercher, and asked him, Dared he ask any one else there, for he was not worth my Lord's while?

Mr. Digby.] I think you said, some Conversation had passed at Kilkullen-Bridge, about a Design to quarrel?

A. I heard there, as I was mounting my Horse, that there would be a Quarrel.

Q. When was it you heard so?

A. It was the Morning, the 16th, before I went to the Curragh.

Q. Who was it told you so?

A. I heard that a Gentleman came from Dublin, and told Mr. Jans there would be a Quarrel, and I think it was he told me; that there would be a great Quarrel at the Curragh that Day.

Q. Who said this?

A. I heard it from Mr. Jans, and, I think, Mr. Tynan. Jans said he was informed by one out of Dublin, that there would be a Quarrel there.

Q. When did Mr. Jans say he was told so by one from Dublin?

A. He said, he heard by one from Dublin that Morning, that there would be a Quarrel.

Mr. Bagot.] You say, that Mr. Jans told you he heard from Dublin there would be a Quarrel; did he hear it from Dublin, or from a Gentleman that came from Dublin?

A. He told me from a Gentleman that came from Dublin.

Q. Do you know the Road from Dublin to Newbridge?

A. Not very well.

Q. Do you know whether Newbridge lies on the Road between Kilkullen and Dublin?

A. I know it does not lie on the Turnpike Road.

Mr. Digby.] Explain yourself, what you mean had passed when Mrs. MacKercher had challenged my Lord.

A. When my Lord refused to give him Satisfaction, he said, He dared not tell him so aside by himself. And my Lord said, He would go with him aside. Upon which Mr. Annesley and Mr. Jans said, He should not.

Q. You said Mr. Jans told you, he was informed of a Quarrel that would happen; I ask you, whether he told you the Gentleman that informed him gave him any Reasons why he apprehended there would be a Quarrel?

A. Mr. Jans told me, he was informed there would be a Quarrel, that a Gentleman from Dublin told him there would be a Quarrel; and told me no more.

(Cross-Examination.)

Mr. Harward takes a Gentleman's Whip in his Hand, and says, A Thong-Whip is where there is a Thong, this is a Fox-Hunter.

Cavenagh.] I understand it to be such a Whip as that; I cannot tell what you call it.

Mr. Harward.] This is a Fox-Hunter. Now, Sir, will you take this Whip, and shew us how Mr. MacKercher exercised his Whip?

A. Sir, this is the Way he had it when I saw him first, [holding the Handle in his Hand] and while I saw him talking with my Lord, he took it up in this Manner [holding the Whip by the Middle].

Q. Tell what People were next to you at that Time.

A. I do not know who was next to me, for I did not know them; I saw Mr. Jans on the other Side, almost opposite to me, and Mr. Francis Annesley, Mr. Kennedy, and Mr. Gosfry, were, I think, together to my left Hand.

Q. Now, I think you said, when Lord Anglesa was challenged, you understood it was a Challenge to fight?—A. I did.

Q. I think you have also said, that Lord Anglesa upon that said, he would go out and fight Mr. MacKercher?

A. He said he would go with him, but I do not think he would have gone.

Q. Are you sure he said he would go out and fight him?

A. I am sure he said so.

Q. What was it my Lord said?

A. Mr. MacKercher asked him the Question twice or thrice; upon which my Lord said, Well, I will. And the others said, He should not.

Q. Did what Mr. MacKercher said appear to be in a challenging Manner?—A. It did.

Q. When Lord Anglesa said he would go out with him, did not you apprehend that he would go and fight with him?

A. How do I know, Sir, whether he would or no?

Q. What did you understand my Lord meant?

A. To me it looked indeed as if they would be engaged.

Q. What did you apprehend my Lord intended to do upon his saying those Words?

A. I did not believe my Lord would go out to fight.

Q. You apprehended Mr. MacKercher meant that my Lord should go to fight?—A. I did.

Q. If so, what Reason could make you not apprehend that my Lord did not mean to fight?

A. No, perhaps not, it might be otherwise; it did not come to that Issue, therefore I cannot judge.

Q. Had my Lord any Arms?

A. He had not.

Q. Are you certain that Mr. MacKercher meant to fight?

A. Indeed I cannot tell. How can I be certain? If you challenge me, how do I know whether you will fight me or no?

Q. What do you believe?

A. I protest I cannot answer whether they would have fought, if my Lord had gone.

Q. Do not you believe, if a Man challenges another to fight, he who gives the Challenge means to fight?—A. I do believe.

Q. Do not you believe the Man that accepts the Challenge does?

A. It is probable he does; but I do not believe my Lord intended to fight.

Q. What Kind of a Whip had Mr. MacKercher in his Hand?

A. It was a long Whip, a hunting Whip.

Q. Was it not a Jockey Whip that Mr. MacKercher had that Day?

A. It appeared to have a Tail twice as long as this almost; (the Witnesses at the same time held out a hunting Whip with a long Lash to it.)

Q. To Mr. MacKercher. Had you ever such a Whip?

A. I might possibly some time or other in my Life have had such a Whip in my Hand, but I never make use of such a Whip; I had a very small Whip, one of the smallest Size, that Day.

DENNIS TYNAN.

Mr. Spring. Do you know Mr. Jans?

Tynan. I do.

Q. Recol-

Q. Recollect what Conversation you had with him at the Time of the Races at the Curragh, the 15th or 16th of September, concerning any Quarrel that you had heard there was likely to be? Had you any Conversation with him?—A. I had.

D. Tell what it was.

A. On Monday before the Races, I cannot tell the Day of the Month now, but I could if I was in Dublin, because I kept a regular Table.

Q. What do you mean by a regular Table?

A. I mean of my Business.

Q. What Business do you follow?—A. That of a Druggist and a Dyer.

D. Well, go on.

A. Mr. Usher of Balscon and Purcell the Butcher, as he told me he was, the Man that kept the young Earl some time, they were in my Shop; I happened to be backwards when they came in, and when I saw them, I came out to know what Business they had, and I first spoke to Purcell, and asked what he wanted. He told me they were come there to wait for the young Earl. I went backwards on that, and came into the Shop again; and in a little while after, Mr. MacKercher came into the Shop, and spoke to my Man over the Counter. I did not hear what he said, and my Man had a Room over the Way, and they went there together and stayed for some Time; and while he was away, says I, Is that the young Earl? No, by G—d, says Purcell, but a cleverer Fellow, a Fellow that would whip the old Earl if he had bold of him. Aye, says Usher, by G—d he would wring his Nose. So Mr. MacKercher came back, took Coach and went off; and they went off after him.

Q. What Day was this?—A. It was Monday.

Q. Tell what you did relate to Mr. Fans.

A. I told him, that my Servant had told me, that Usher had told him, there were ten Men armed and gone to the Curragh.

[Note, Mr. MacKercher and his Company did not set out till Wednesday.]

Court. To Mr. MacKercher. Do you hear what this Man swears; was you ever in his Shop?—A. I do not know that ever I was.

Cross Examination.

Mr. MacManus. Do you know young Mr. Annesley?

A. I believe I should know him.

Q. Was you ever in England, Sir?—A. I was.

Q. Was you ever concerned in the Prosecution of Mr. Annesley at the Old-Bailly?—A. Not upon the Prosecution, upon my Oath.

Q. Was you a Witness there?—A. I will answer you. I was to be a Witness to tell what I knew of one Paul Keating.

Q. Do you know Mr. Giffard?

A. I do. Mr. Fans brought me to him, and desired me to tell Mr. Giffard what I knew of Paul Keating.

[Hereupon this Witness was turned off the Table by the Traversers own Counsel.]

The Jury go to try whether Lord Anglesea and Mr. Fans are guilty of the Assault on Mr. MacKercher or not, and find Lord Anglesea—Guilty.

Mr. Fans—Guilty.

Mr. Spring. My Lord, I do not know whether it will be necessary to trouble your Lordship with any further Evidence; for my Part, I am satisfied to rest upon the Evidence of the Crown, and not trouble your Lordship and the Jury with any thing further upon that Evidence; but my Duty calls upon me to do every thing I can for my Clients, and therefore with respect to Mr. Annesley, I would say a short Thing. The Jury will consider who was the first Aggressor in this Assault, and will find it was Mr. MacKercher. I do insist upon it, in Point of Law, that the lifting up an Hand in the manner Mr. MacKercher did, as appears even from his own Confession, is in point of Law an Assault; it appears, and the Jury cannot forget, that these Gentlemen went into the Field armed and prepared for Battle, that they went to this Horse-Race attended by many Servants, all armed in an unusual Manner, in such an extraordinary Manner, as cannot be justified by Law; because going armed to Places, where all other People generally go unarmed, is in terrorem populi, and not suffered by the Law. Why then Mr. MacKercher and his Company, who, as they pretend, had been insulted by my Lord on the 14th, repair to the same Place again armed in this manner, which plainly shews what their Intent was, and that it was no other but to bring on a Quarrel with my Lord Anglesea. It appears from the Evidence, that upon some Indignity offered by a Coachman to Mr. James Annesley, Mr. MacKercher goes to call Lord Anglesea to an Account, and demand publick Satisfaction, and it appears that he was cautioned not to go for fear of bringing on a Quarrel, and that, notwithstanding, he went and forced through the Crowd to get at my Lord; so that it appears, instead of declining a Combat, as he would willingly make you believe he did, he brought it upon himself, he went to call upon Lord Anglesea for an Offence not done to himself, he calls him out to fight him, and my Lord declines doing so, by telling him, This is no Time nor Place, you see I have no Pistols. Mr. MacKercher answered, Your Servant has affronted a Gentleman, Mr. Annesley, and as it was publick, it is expected that you strip him and turn him off. And so my Lord, to satisfy Mr. MacKercher, must take upon him to drive his own Person home in this Coach. This Treatment of a Nobleman, must call for such a Degree of Resentment, as must of Necessity have ended in a Quarrel; it tends plainly to a Breach of the Peace, and I would know what Right Mr. MacKercher had to resent an Affront done to another, and demand Satisfaction in such a manner, as no Gentleman would have complied with. What Right had he to prescribe the Method of receiving this Satisfaction? That very Circumstance plainly shews he had an Intent to quarrel, and his Manner of demanding Satisfaction, amounts to a Challenge. Why then, if, besides this, your Lordship and the Jury will please to consider, who the Person affronted is, and for whom this publick Satisfaction is demanded, that my Lord Anglesea looked upon him as his Brother's Bastard, by a Kitchen Wench, and knew he was claiming his Estate and Titles; I hope you will think my Lord's Behaviour was no more than could reasonably be expected from him, under such Circumstances. But this is not all, Mr. MacKercher gives my Lord the Lye, desires him to withdraw with him, and in case of his Refusal, threatens him with a lifted-up

Hand. Mr. Cawley positively swears to his lifting his Hand with the Butt-End of his Whip towards my Lord, and threatening him at the same time; and Mr. MacKercher in his Evidence does not deny but he might do it. He says indeed, that he has a different manner of carrying and holding his Hand from other Persons, that it was his Custom in Conversation to raise his Hand; it may be so to his Footman, but to a Peer of the Kingdom, an Earl of Great Britain, that raising of his Hand did not become him, and was in point of Law an Assault: Why then, what is the Consequence? Here is a Gentleman, Mr. Francis Annesley, attending Lord Anglesea: this Gentleman, his Tenant, his Relation and Friend, sees him thus affronted and assaulted, and strikes the Person who threatened to strike him; I do say, that Mr. MacKercher thus assaulting Lord Anglesea, could expect no other Return, than that which Mr. Annesley made him. It was incumbent in some measure on Mr. Francis Annesley, even for the Safety of Lord Anglesea, to do what he did. Was he to wait for this Gentleman drawing out his Pistol? Did it not seem incumbent on him to prevent this? I beg leave to say it was, and that he was justifiable in point of Law, if he had been no Relation or Friend to my Lord, but even a Stranger, and saw him threaten'd in the manner Mr. MacKercher threaten'd him, he ought to prevent the Quarrel likely to ensue between them; and if in so doing, he hurted Mr. MacKercher, he is justified by the Law. It would be taking up too much of your Time to say more; but for my Part, all Circumstances considered, I am only amaz'd, that instead of the slight Injury done those Gentlemen, they were not much worse off.

Court. What you have offered may be considered as a Mitigation of the Offence, but not by the Law as a Justification of it. I already find that the Jury have determined upon that Assault, to be an Assault committed by my Lord Anglesea upon Mr. MacKercher; because had it appeared from Evidence that Mr. MacKercher had assaulted my Lord Anglesea first, the Jury could not possibly have found the Lord Anglesea Guilty. As to Mitigation, that is a Matter proper for the Consideration of the Court when they come to give Judgment for the Offence. But as to the Assault of Mr. Francis Annesley on Mr. MacKercher, it stands proved against him by the Evidence of Mr. MacKercher, Mr. Kennedy, and Mr. Gossey, and in my Apprehension he is guilty of that Assault. Now, as to the fourth Assault, that on Mr. James Annesley, I believe that fourth Indictment may go to the Jury. It appears to me, that the most Part of the Evidence as to that, was principally material for the Consideration of the Court to determine their Discretion, to shew the Nature and general Tendency of this unfortunate Affair. But, I say, that as I recollect it, it does not appear upon the Evidence, that any one Person struck, or attempted to strike Mr. James Annesley; and before any Words were uttered by Lord Anglesea, directing the Pursuit of him, there was an Account brought that he was gone off the Sod, and then those Words were spoke by my Lord, Follow the Son of a Whore, and knock his Brains out. Mr. Annesley gallops away, and falls into a Ditch, and there lay in a very miserable Manner; but how that happened is accounted for, by the Feet of his Horse slipping into the Ditch; it does not appear that it was by a Stroke given by any body; it does not appear that any one Person did attempt to strike him; there was a Gentleman, that one of the Witnesses said, had not he interpos'd, would have struck him; but he is out of the Case, and not to come within your Consideration. If you that are concerned for the Crown have any thing to say, proceed.

Mr. Harward. We are ready to offer what occurs to us upon this Indictment; and, my Lord, I humbly apprehend that this Question is reduced to a very single Point of Law upon the following Facts; that Mr. MacKercher being apprehensive of an Intention in Lord Anglesea and his Company to murder him and all his Friends, desired Mr. Annesley, who was his chief Care, to get away as fast as he could. It is given in Evidence that Mr. Annesley did so, and also that upon my Lord Anglesea's hearing that he had left the Field, that he cried out to the People about him, Pursue him, and tear him Limb from Limb. In consequence whereof, several did pursue, and drove him on full Speed; and Word being brought back to him that he was killed, my Lord approved of it, and said, All well. This being the Fact as nearly as I can recollect it, I apprehend the Law will be clearly determined by your Lordship in our Favour. Lord Anglesea, throughout this Evidence, has appeared to have abused this Gentleman, to have assaulted some of his Friends, for which he and some of his Associates are found guilty; here is an Abuse given to this very Gentleman precedent to every thing that happened; here follows an Assault upon two or three of his Friends, and Advice being brought from the Place where the noble Lord and his Associates were, of his bad Intentions to this young Gentleman, for fear the like Fate should attend him, he is desired by one of them to run away, or he would be murdered. The Minute my Lord hears he has left the Field, he hallooes to all his People after him, to tear him Limb from Limb, and one of the Pursuers attempts to strike him, but was prevented. This is clearly proved by the Evidence offered to your Lordship; and this being so, then the Question is, whether my Lord Anglesea is guilty of an Assault upon this Gentleman, who was thrown into the Ditch by his Horse, as he was turning him about to defend himself against the Pursuers? I submit it to your Lordship, whether you won't take the whole Case, both Words, and Facts, and Circumstances, into your Consideration, and then pronounce what the Law is. Why then it appears, that this Gentleman, upon the Pursuit of him, finding the People come up so close to him, turned his Horse to defend himself; and then it appears that the Horse fell into the Ditch, and upon him, and there he received his Hurt. The Question then is, Whether or no Lord Anglesea is a Principal in this Assault or not? Whether he was not the Cause of the Hurt that Mr. Annesley received by the Fall of the Horse upon him? I believe Nobody will deny, but that the Persons who actually pursued and gave Occasion immediately to this Fall, were guilty of an Assault, and also of the Battery and wounding received by the Fall. There is a Difference in point of Law between an Assault, a Wounding and a Battery; an Assault is in its Nature of the least Degree of these Kind of Offences. If this Gentleman, who was thus pursued, had happened to be drove into the River Liffy and drowned, there I apprehend every Man that pushed him to the Brink of that River was guilty of his Murder. The Law is clear, that in High Treason and Trespas they are Principals, and there can be no Accessories in those which are the highest and lowest Offence; the Persons aiding, inciting, in any kind of Language or Overt-Act, are all Principals; and if I am present, and encourage or desire a Man to break another's Head, and he does it, I am guilty of that Assault. If the Persons then, who have pursued this poor Gentleman, had been guilty of Murder, in case he had been forced into the River and drowned, I would be glad to be informed by the Counsel of the other Side, how it comes about, that the Law should be more tender in determining a Man to be a Principal in Trespass, than it does in Cases of Murder; I presume they must allow the contrary, and that there is more Indulgence shewn in favour of Life. And if the Case I put, would have been Murder in the Pursuers, and also in Lord Anglesea, I think the Consequence must be, that he is to be looked upon as a Principal in the Assault, as all Cases of Murder include a Trespass; also there are many Mitigations in Cases of Killing, not allowed in an Assault: So that I am at a loss to find how it can be imagined that a Man is not guilty of an Assault, when, if the Person he pursued had been driven into the River and drowned, he would have been guilty of Murder. If this be the Case of the Principal, pray consider, whether any Distinction in Law, or in point of Reason, can put Lord Anglesea in a better Condition, with regard to the Offence, than the Persons he prevailed upon to do it. He was the first Person that stirred up these Men to pursue, who were the Occasion of the Fall into the Ditch; he was the principal Agent, who wrought up their Spirits to execute that unlawful Intention which he had against him, and approved of what was done, when he heard Mr. Annesley was dead. I beg leave to say, that every Act they did in pursuance of his Directions, is his Act in point of Law; and the Law does not separate any of them, but makes them all Principals in Trespass. I would suppose, my Lord, that instead of a brutish Mob, I had got a mere Brute, a fierce Dog, and halloo'd him at a Gentleman without Provocation, and this Gentleman had leap'd into a River to escape from the Dog and was drowned; and if it had appeared I had halloo'd this Dog in order to wound, hurt, or frighten him into this Distress, am not I the Cause, and guilty of all the Distress the Dog frightened him into, and guilty of this Murder? And, tho' the Dog did not come so near as to bite him, and that he rather chose to leap into the River and be drown'd, than be mangled by this Dog, I conceive it would be a Case of Murder, and that it would be so. I put another Case: Suppose a Man designedly had scared another Man's Horse with an Intention that he should do some Mischief to the Man that rode him; the Rider is thrown upon this, though the Man never meddles with him, only scares his Horse; if he breaks his Neck in the Fall, is not that Murder? I must humbly insist upon it that it is, because the Law will not permit any one, either by himself, or others by his Procurement, to do any Act, whereby another's Property or his Life may be in danger or destroyed. Why then, I apprehend, that if my Lord Anglesea had ordered the Men to pursue in such a manner, that they had affrighted this Gentleman's Horse, and that he was unruly, and he had broke his Neck, I look upon it that that was a determinate Murder in Lord Anglesea. If in point of Reason, what I have mentioned has not the Weight that I proposed by it, to prove that this was an Assault in consideration of the Law, as much as if my Lord had with his own Hand broke his Head; I will put your Lordship in mind of a determined Case that comes up to the Point in question, and is this: There was a Man confined above Stairs in a Castle; another Man below sends armed Men up in order to murder him; they get into the Door, and run up the Castle Stairs. As he found them coming up, the Man had not resolution to stand; he thought he might have some Prospect of escaping, by leaping down from the Top of the Castle; he leap'd down from the Battlements, and it so happened that he broke his Neck and died: And in that Case I recollect, upon the Determination of the Judges, there was no doubt but that it was clearly Murder in the Man that commanded them, as well as in those, who by their Appearance of Violence, occasioned him to leap down. Here, my Lord, there was no Stroke given, no Man came near him, they had not got up to the Place where he was; however, the Man not being of Resolution strong enough to wait their cutting his Throat, he chose to leap down, and by that lost his Life. Here was no Election left to Mr. Annesley, he was thrown down by his Horse. If a Man lets loose a mad Bull, knowing him to be so, with Intent only to frighten People, it is Murder in him if any body is killed. Now, my Lord, as I have mentioned some Cases, which I conceive would be held to be Murder, if they were to be determined by your Lordship; and, as I have mentioned others upon my Memory, which have been so determined, and that would make this Fact, had this Gentleman died, Murder in Lord Anglesea; I am at a loss in recalling any Distinction taken in our Law-Books, that any Fact, which would be Murder in case the Person died, shall be extenuated, and said not to be an Assault in case he survived it. I know the Law is quite the contrary, and takes large Strides in Matters of Assault to come at Offenders, to protect the publick Peace, when it will not go so far as to take away the Life of a Man upon a capital Prosecution. I shall only trouble you with this further; that there can be no doubt but that Lord Anglesea gave the Directions I have mentioned, desired them to go and tear him in pieces; it is as certain that People did go and pursue; and it is to be left in the Breast of the Jury, whether that Pursuit was in consequence of my Lord's Directions, or not; and whether it is so natural to believe that this Crowd of People, who don't appear to be any way concern'd, or to have any Ill-will towards Mr. Annesley, would have pursued and halloped after him, who was galloping away to save his Life, had it not been in pursuance of my Lord's Commands, who had such Influence on them. This is to be left to the Consideration of the Jury, and I apprehend you will be pleas'd, when all the Words and Circumstances attending this public Affray, is taken into your Consideration, from the Beginning to the End, to direct the Jury to find my Lord guilty of the Assault against Mr. Annesley, as he not only directed it, but approved of it, when done; nor can he complain of it as a Rigour in the Law to charge him with an Assault, where his Directions amounted to a Crime of Murder.

Court.] Gentlemen of the Jury, this Case, upon the Evidence, stands thus: Mr. Annesley is already gone off the Sod by the prudent Advice of Mr. Mac Kercher; he goes away after Mr. Mac Kercher had given him this Advice, and before the Words are uttered by my Lord; which it is insisted upon is a Foundation for the Jury to find the Traversers guilty of the Indictment for assaulting Mr. Annesley. You must observe, Gentlemen, Mr. Annesley is not driven off the Ground; he is prudently gone already: upon which Intelligence, Lord Anglesea does most improperly, and in a manner that the Court will consider when they come to pronounce their Judgment, call aloud and say, Follow him, and knock his Brains out. The material Evidence to what happened to Mr. Annesley, after he was thus gone off the Field, was Mr. Archbold, who was several times ask'd, I ask'd him myself no less than three times, Did any of the People that you saw follow, in pursuance of and under the Influence of that Direction given by my Lord Anglesea, strike him? He did not say they did. And when he was ask'd, if they pursued Mr. Annesley by my Lord's Directions, or for what other Purpose, he could not account for that; he said, some might, and some might not; some might follow him out of Curiosity, and others not, so far as he could judge. There does not appear after this any Blow given; there does not appear any actual Attempt, upon the Evidence, or any actual Blow by any Man to Mr. Annesley in the Ditch. Nothing appears, but that several People, some out of Curiosity, and some with different Intentions, rode after him, who is already gone, and not forced to go. He goes off the Field by Advice from his Friend, he is followed, after he is gone, by these People, he apprehends he is pursued by them with an evil Intent, he turns about to face them and defend himself, and in the Turn his Horse throws him into the Ditch, upon which he lay senseless, and no Person whatever attempts to hurt him: this, I say, is the Evidence; and I can't persuade myself to direct the Jury, that any of the Traversers are guilty of assaulting him.—As to the other Indictment for the Assault on Mr. Mac Kercher, if I err in point of Law, I have the Assistance of a Gentleman, who can and will set me right. Upon the other Indictment, in which Lord Anglesea, Mr. Francis Annesley, and Mr. Jans, stand indicted for assaulting Mr. Mac Kercher, the Jury have already disposed of two of them, my Lord Anglesea and Mr. Jans. As to Mr. Francis Annesley, it stands proved by the Testimony of Mr. Mac Kercher, Mr. Kennedy, and Mr. Goofry, that he did without any legal Provocation strike Mr. Mac Kercher with the Butt-End of his Whip upon his Forehead; upon which Blood came, and there has been no Evidence given to contradict that; so that I do apprehend Mr. Annesley is guilty of assaulting Mr. Mac Kercher.

Mr. Attorney-General.] I concur in Opinion, as to that Point, with Mr. Baron Mounteney; and as to the Indictment for the Assault on Mr. Annesley, I also think the Traversers are not guilty. He gallops off the Field, and is accidentally thrown by his Horse into a Ditch. The Accident happened in the Flight; the Flight was not in consequence of the Words that Lord Anglesea said, but by the Advice of Mr. Mac Kercher; but yet, if in consequence of those Words, supposing the Parties did pursue, and that there was a Fall; yet if it was no more than a Hurt by the Fall, it does not come within the Consideration of the Law to be an Assault.

The Jury go to find whether Mr. Francis Annesley is guilty of an Assault upon Mr. Mac Kercher. Also,

The Jury go to find whether Lord Anglesea, Mr. Francis Annesley, and Mr. Jans, are guilty of the Assault upon James Annesley, Esq. and find

Mr. Francis Annesley guilty of the Assault on Mr. Mac Kercher. And

Lord Anglesea —	} Not guilty {	of the Assault on James Annesley, Esq.
Mr. Francis Annesley —
Mr. Jans —

Clerk of the Crown.] Neile O Neile, call your Security; you must give Bail, or stand committed for a Charge of Perjury.
Neile O Neile giving no Security, was committed.

Saturday, August the 4th.

A Bill of Indictment for Perjury is found by the Grand Jury against Neile O Neile, which is read by the Clerk of the Crown.

Clerk of the Crown.] Do you submit to your Traverse or not?

Neile O Neile.] Traverse.

Clerk of the Crown.] How will you be tried?

Neile O Neile.] I am not ready for my Trial at present, for it is too sudden upon me.

Mr. Attorney-General.] I don't see what Defence the Man can make; but however the Rule of Law must prevail.

Mr. Baron Mounteney comes into Court.

Mr. Mac Manus.] I hope your Lordship will think that there is a Necessity for a speedy Execution of Justice in Crimes of this nature, that a Man so dangerous to the Publick should be removed from the Society of Mankind as speedily as possible. No Man's Life or Property is, or can be safe but upon the due Observation of Oaths; when these are violated, a quick Execution of the Law should follow for the sake of the Publick. I hope therefore we shall be permitted to go to Trial for this Perjury, committed in the Face of the Court; but if you don't try it this Assizes, this Man must go unpunished. My Lord, Captain Livingstone, a material Witness, had the Honour, about two Years ago, to be sent from the Province of South Carolina with a Petition from that Province to his Majesty, and, as he thinks his Solicitations in regard to that Petition are now at an end, he verily believes that he shall be obliged to set out for South Carolina before the next Assizes for this County; so that we cannot promise ourselves to have him here at the next Assizes, and it would be a Hardship to have him bound over to prosecute, when he is obliged to go on his Majesty's Commands. My Lord, this is a recent Case, a wilful Perjury acted openly last Night before your Lordship, which ought to be instantly punished: I humbly therefore hope your Lordship will bring on this Trial at this Time, considering the many and great Inconveniences that must attend the putting it off, that so flagrant a Perjurer may be brought to Justice.

[Mr. Moreton enforces this with the Case of the King against Davis at the Assizes at Maryborough some Years ago, where Davis was convicted, and a Bill of Indictment being sent up, and found against the Witness (a Bogue-maker) for Perjury, the Court would not put it off, but pilloned him that very Day.

Court. I understand this Matter has been ruled already.

Mr. Mac Manus. Here is an Affidavit of Capt. Livingstone's, which we desire may be read.

Court. I do think when a Man is indicted on the last Day of the Assizes, and desires Time, he has a Right to traverse.

Mr. Moreson. I hope the Court will make Nails give good Security.

Court. Indeed he shall.

Court. Mr. Mac Kercher, I desire to be informed whether you design to bring any Action to recover Damages for this Assault?

Mr. Mac Kercher. We do not, my Lord; we prosecute for publick
 Justice, for the Safety of our own and Mr. Annesley's Life.

Court. Mr. Kennedy, do you design to bring any Action to recover Damages for the Assault?

Mr. Kennedy. I do not, my Lord.

Court. My Lord, the Concern I am under is very great to see your Lordship here as an Offender against the Law; and it is extremely more so that it falls to my Lot to punish your Lordship for that Offence. Your Lordship has been found guilty of an Assault, and before I mention the Judgment of the Court, it will be necessary to remind your Lordship of some Circumstances appearing upon the Evidence attending this Fact, which greatly aggravate it. It appears, to the Satisfaction of the Court, that the Persons assaulted by you and Mr. Jans gave no Provocation, had not struck or attempted to strike; and it appears upon the Evidence of one of the Witnesses, that not so much as one Word had passed between your Lordship and them. This Circumstance is a great Aggravation of the Assault.
 My Lord, your Quality likewise greatly aggravates the Offence; you have the Honour to be a Peer of England, as well as of this Kingdom; and that Quality calls upon you to set an Example of Obedience to the King's Laws. The Place where this Accident happened, is another grand Aggravation of the Offence; it was done at a publick Meeting of Gentlemen on the Curragh, in the Presence of great Numbers, to whom such a Behaviour in a Person of your Dignity and Station of Life, must be of a very bad Example; the Prevention of which is the Thing principally required by the Law. A Number of People there, by your Lordship's Exemple might be led to take Part on the one Side or the other, and if they were done so, it is to be feared that there might have been more fatal Consequences. It is with great Concern I mention this, but such was the Evidence, and I cannot doubt but that your Lordship will be thoroughly persuaded, as I am satisfied every body else will, that the Court exercise their Discretion with Tendernefs, when they pronounce the Judgment, that a Fine of Thirty Pounds only is imposed on your Lordship for assaulting

 Mr. Kennedy, and you are fined accordingly in the Sum of Thirty Pounds for that Assault.

Mr. Francis Annesley, you likewise have been found guilty of an Assault on Mr. Mac Kercher; great Part of what I have mentioned to your Lordship will be applicable in your Case; you being a Gentleman of Fortune and Character in your Country, the People expect, and will take Example from you. It appears, upon Evidence, that a Gentleman was assaulted by you, who had not assaulted you; and I must say this in Justice to the Prosecutor, that there was no Reason to strike any body for the Words which were said by the Prosecutor; and though the Words did pass in your Hearing, yet they were but Words; and Words the Law does not consider as a Provocation sufficient for an Assault. Besides, they did not pass till after very opprobrious Language had been given. It also appears, that this Blow given by you, was the first Blow given in that Action, and that Blow occasioned all the rest which were given. That is the aggravating Circumstance, which makes it necessary for the Court to lay a pretty smart Fine upon you; but they are pleased to mitigate the Severity of the Law, and go no farther than to fine you in the Sum of Twenty Pounds.---Mr. Jans stands guilty of assaulting Mr. Kennedy, for which he is fined in the Sum of Ten Pounds.---This Assault of Mr. Mac Kercher, my Lord Anglesea has likewise been found guilty of, and a Fine of Five Marks is laid on him for that Offence.---And on Mr.
 Jans, who is likewise guilty of assaulting the same Gentleman, our Mark.---I think I have disposed of all of them but the first Indictment for the Assault on Mr. Goffry, for which Lord Anglesea is fined Sixpence.

XXVI. The Trial in Ejectment between CAMPBELL CRAIG, Lessee of JAMES ANNESLEY, Esq. and Others, Plaintiff; and the Right Honourable RICHARD EARL of ANGLESEA, Defendant; before the Lord Chief Baron Bowes, the Honourable Mr. Baron Mounteney, and the Honourable Mr. Baron Dawson, Barons of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland: Begun on Friday, November 11, 1743; and continued by several Adjournments to Friday the 25th of the said Month *.

The Court being sat, the Jury were called over, and answered to their Names; of whom the following Twelve were sworn to try the Issue joined between the Parties:

Sir Thomas Taylor, Bart.	Nathaniel Preston, Esq.
R. H. Will. Graham, Esq.	Charles Hamilton, Esq.
Richard Wesley, Esq.	Clotworthy Wade, Esq.
Her. Langford Rowley, Esq.	Thomas Shaw, Esq.
Richard Gergas, Esq.	Gorges Louther, Esq.
John Preston, Esq.	Joseph Ashe, Esq.

Campbell Craig, Lessee of James Annesley, Esq. PLAINTIFF.

The Right Honourable Richard Earl of Anglesea, DEFENDANT.

Michaelmas Term, in the 16th and 17th Years of George II.

In the Exchequer.

County of Meath, } THE Plaintiff declares that James Annesley, Esq. to wit. } on the first Day of May 1742, at Trim, in the County of Meath, demised to the said Campbell
 Craig 30 Messuages, 30 Tofts, 50 Cottages, 2 Mills, 50 Gardens, 800
 Acres of arable Land, 300 Acres of Meadow, 600 Acres of Pasture, 50 Acres of Furze and Heathy Ground, 50 Acres of Moory Land, with the Appurtenances, in Great Stramine otherwise Stameen, Little Stramine otherwise Stameen, Little Donacorney, Shallon, Kilmacree, otherwise Kilparva, Cruffey, Annagor, otherwise Annager, and Little Gaffney, situate, lying, and being in the County of Meath aforesaid: All which said Premises were formerly the Estate of the Right Honourable James Earl of Anglesea, deceased, and lately the Estate of the Right Honourable Arthur Earl of Anglesea, also deceased; so that the said demised Premises, with the Appurtenances, to the said Campbell Craig, his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, from the first Day of May aforesaid, for the Term of Twenty-one Years then next ensuing, fully to be compleated and ended.

The Plaintiff also declares upon two other several Demises made by the said Lessor of the same Premises, that is to say, one by the Name of the Right Honourable James Earl of Anglesea, and the other by the Name of the Right Honourable James Annesley, only Son and Heir of Arthur Earl of Anglesea, deceased; otherwise the Right Honourable James Baron Altham of Altham. By virtue of which said several Demises, the said Cambell Craig, on the second Day of May aforesaid, in the Year of our Lord aforesaid, entered and was thereof possessed, until the aforesaid Richard Earl of Anglesea afterwards, on the 3d Day of May aforesaid, in the Year of our Lord aforesaid, with Force and Arms, and so forth, entered into the said demised Premises with the Appurtenances, and ejected, expelled and removed him the said Craig from his said Farm, (his said Term not being then or since determined) and otherwise did unto him, against the Peace of our Lord the King that now is, and to the Damage of the said Craig
 One Hundred Pounds Sterling.

* This was the longest Trial ever known, lasting 15 Days, and the Jury (most of them) Gentlemen of the greatest Property in Ireland, and almost all Members of Parliament. They were only to try a meer Matter of Fact, whether Lord Altham had a Son?—Therefore this Trial cannot be called a State Trial, or a Trial in a criminal Cause, as it was so long, and contains so much Repetition and Tautology in examining and cross-examining the Witnesses, &c. (and as the Trial at large, is in almost every body's Hands) we shall only give you the Opening of the Evidence on both Sides, and the Depositions of the two most material Witnesses, viz. Mr. Giffard, who was reckoned very principal one for the PLAINTIFF; wherein a Point of Law is determined: 'Whether an Attorney shall be allowed to disclose, and give in Evidence, what his Client told him in secret?' with the Arguments of the Counsel and Judges upon the Question: (perused by themselves) as also the whole Evidence of Mrs. Mary Heath, Lord Altham's Woman, who lived with her from her Ladyship's first going to Ireland until her Death; and was the chief and principal Evidence for the DEFENDANT: which with the summing up of the Evidence, by the Lord Chief Baron Bowes, Baron Mounteney, and Baron Dawson (as corrected and revised by themselves) will shew the Substance of the whole Trial, and sufficient to carry on the Connection to the following Trial of Mrs. Heath for Perjury.—Besides, as great Part of the Evidence will be repeated in her Trial, it would be unnecessary to insert it here.

To this Declaration the Defendant pleaded the general Issue, Not Guilty. Mr. Lill, of Counsel for the Plaintiff, My Lord, we shall call our Evidence, and prove the Plaintiff's Title, and then we hope your Gentlemen will find for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall. I am in this Case of Counsel with the Lessor of the Plaintiff, whose Title stands thus: The Lands in question were the Estate of Arthur, late Lord Altham, of which he died seised, and the Lessor of the Plaintiff is his only Son and Heir. My Lord, if this were a common Case, I should have rested here; but as the Course of Descent has been interrupted on a Supposition that Lord Altham died without Issue; and as this is a Matter of great Expectation, very extraordinary in its Nature and Circumstances, and may be much more so in its Consequences; so it will be incumbent on me particularly to point out to your Lordship, and to the Jury, the Time and Place when and where the Lessor of the Plaintiff was born; for on that important Birth this Cause must depend.

My Lord, in the Year 1706, Arthur late Lord Altham was married to Mary Sheffield, natural Daughter of John Duke of Buckingham. After the Marriage, Lord Altham's Affairs required his Attendance in this Kingdom, and in the Year 1709 he came over; but his Lady remained in England till the Year 1713, when she came into Ireland; and in the Year 1714, Lady Altham resided in the City of Dublin with Lord Altham her Husband, and proved with Child. When she had been some Months advanced in her Pregnancy, and at the latter End of the Year 1714, Lady Altham went to his Lordship's House at Dunmaine, in the County of Wexford, where it was publicly known in the Neighbourhood that Lady Altham was with Child, and the then Dowager Lady Altham (who was married to Mr. Ogle, one of the Commissioners of the Revenue in this Kingdom) made Lady Altham a Present of a very rich Quilt against her Lying-in: And it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that Lady Altham's Pregnancy was so well known in the Country, that Interest was made by several Women to nurse this Child when it should be born; and that great Care was taken in examining the Milk of the several Women who did apply to be Nurses, and that one Joan Landy was approved of to be the Nurse. My Lord, in the Beginning of the Year 1715, Lady Altham fell in Labour, and was delivered of the Lessor of the Plaintiff by Mrs. Shiel, a Midwife of Skill and Reputation, who then lived at Ros, about three Miles from Dunmaine; and it will appear to your Lordship and to the Jury, that Lord Altham expressed great Satisfaction and Joy upon the Birth of this Son; that a Bonfire was made upon this happy Event, and Drink publicly given to the Neighbours and People who came in to testify their Joy upon such an Occasion. It will likewise appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that great Preparations were made for the Christening of this Son, and that about a Month after the Birth, the Lessor of the Plaintiff was christened at the late Lord Altham's House at Dunmaine, in the Parish of Tynterne, by one Mr. Llo d, who was his Lordship's Chaplain, and at that Time Curate of Ros, by the Christian Name of James, after the third Earl of Anglesea, from whom Lord Altham had received great Favours, and the Sponsors on that Occasion were Mr. Colclough, Mr. Cliff, and Mrs. Pigot. I mentioned to your Lordship before, that Joan Landy was appointed the Nurse; her Father's House was about a quarter of a Mile from Dunmaine, where the Child continued for about a Month; and then the Nurse's Father's House being first made fit for the Reception of such a Child, he was carried to that Place with his Nurse: And it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that for the Convenience of Lady Altham, and that she might visit this Child as often as she pleased, a Coach-Road was made from the House of Dunmaine to the Nurse's Father's House. When the Child was about sixteen Months old he was weaned, and brought back to Lord Altham's House at Dunmaine, where one Joan Loffan was appointed his dry Nurse: And it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that while Lord and Lady Altham were united, the greatest Fondness was shewn to this Infant by both. My Lord, in February 1716, there were some very unhappy Differences between the late Lord Altham and his Lady, upon which they, by Agreement, separated; but Lady Altham, as was extremely natural, desired to have the Company of her Child, which Lord Altham, but with great Expressions of Regard and Tenderness for the Child, refused; and it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that Lady Altham left her Son with the utmost Concern and Regret. After this unhappy Separation, Lord Altham forbade Lady Altham's Access to this Child, and directed that she should by no means see him, and that the Child should not be carried to visit her. The Lessor of the Plaintiff, thus deprived of his Mother, continued at Dunmaine in the Care of Servants, till the Year 1718, and in that Year Lord Altham removed his Family to Kenna, in the County of Kildare, where he continued about two Years; and it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that the Lessor of the Plaintiff was educated there with the greatest Affection, and was constantly reputed and deemed to be Lord Altham's Son and Heir. My Lord, in the latter end of the Year 1719, or beginning of the Year 1720, Lord Altham removed to Dublin, and had a House in this Town for some Time, to which the Lessor of the Plaintiff was also brought; and it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that he was then clothed in a very extraordinary Manner, and was treated and esteemed as the Son and Heir of the Lord Altham. My Lord, some Time in the Year 1720, Lord Altham removed to a Place called Carrickduffe, in the County of Carlow; and it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that as the Lessor of the Plaintiff was then of Years capable of Instruction, so Lord Altham provided a Tutor for him in the House; and when afterwards Lord Altham sent the Lessor of the Plaintiff to a publick School at Bundock in the County of Carlow, that he was there attended as the Son of a Nobleman, and treated as such. My Lord, in the Year 1722, (it was a Year extremely fatal to my Client) Lord Altham began a criminal Correspondence with one Miss Gregory, and in the Winter of that Year, Lord Altham settled in Dublin with her, in a House in Cross-Lane; and it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that this Miss Gregory, before she had made her Interest in Lord Altham quite secure, behaved tolerably well to the Lessor of the Plaintiff; and the Lessor of the Plaintiff was brought to the House where Lord Altham resided with her, and was sent to a publick School in this City, and was used with great Care and Tenderness by his Father, and at School was deemed and taken to be the Son of Lord Altham. It will be necessary to mention to your Lordship and the Jury what became of Lady Altham after this Separation. She resided in the Town of Ros for about three Years, and her Affection for the Lessor of the Plaintiff was so strong, that, notwithstanding Lord Altham's Prohibition, she found means privately to see the Child, and always expressed the greatest Regard and Fondness for him, and complained much more severely of being deprived of the Comfort in her Child, than the Loss of her Husband. In the Year 1720, or thereabouts, Lady Altham came to reside in Dublin; but, unhappily for this Lady, she had in her Lying-in contracted Disorders, which at last ended in a Dead Palsy, and not only took from her the Use of her Limbs, but also, in some Measure, deprived her of her Memory and Senses; but notwithstanding, it will appear to your Lordship and to the Jury, that during the Time she continued in this Kingdom, she kept a secret Correspondence with this Family, relative only to this Child. In the Year 1723, Lady Altham was carried from this Kingdom to London in a very languishing Condition, and there, during the Remainder of her Life, lived upon the Bounty of some Persons who had Charity enough to support her. My Lord, from this languishing Condition of Lady Altham, Miss Gregory, who had gained a prodigious Influence over Lord Altham (who will appear to your Lordship to have been a very weak Man); had Hopes from him of every Thing in his Power, expected to be Lady Altham, and had assumed the Title even in the Life-time of Lady Altham; and therefore considered the Lessor of the Plaintiff as the greatest Bar to her Hopes, in case she should have Issue by this Lord, and thereupon grew very harsh and severe to the Lessor of the Plaintiff; she raised Doubts in the Lord Altham, that, though this was the Son of the Lady Altham, it might not be the Son of his Lordship, that so she might take off that paternal Affection from the Lessor of the Plaintiff, which he had always shewn to him before; and, my Lord, she gained such an Influence at last upon this unhappy Lord, that she prevailed on him to remove the Lessor of the Plaintiff out of his House; and in the Year 1724, the Lessor of the Plaintiff was sent by Lord Altham to one Cooper's in Ship-street, in this Town. But the Heart of Lord Altham was not at this Time quite estranged from his Son, for he gave Directions there that the Lessor of the Plaintiff should be taken great Care of, that he should be put to School; and it will appear to your Lordship and to the Jury, that he was put to School at one Dunn's, in Warburgh-street, in this Town, and that Lord Altham came privately sometimes to see him there. My Lord, it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that about this Time the Necessities of the late Lord Altham were so extremely great, that he looked out to raise Money by all Manner of Ways and Means; and Lord Altham being advised, that if the Lessor of the Plaintiff were out of the Way, large Sums might be raised by the Sale of Reversions, in conjunction with the Remainder-man in Tail; and this Scheme being agreeable to the Inclinations of Miss Gregory, who was willing to get rid of the Lessor of the Plaintiff at any rate, it was determined that this great Obstacle to Lord Altham's Desire of raising Money should be removed; and to that End the Lessor of the Plaintiff was sent to the House of one Covenagh, with Directions to be kept quite private, so as it should not be known where he was. What farther was design'd against him I can't say; but it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that though the Lessor of the Plaintiff was at this Time a very young Lad, yet he was a little too sprightly to be confined in that Manner; he found Means to make his Escape from thence, and being denied Admittance into his Father's House, he roved about from Place to Place (as will be more particularly given an Account of to your Lordship and to the Jury, by the Witnesses) for the Space of two Years before the Death of the late Lord Altham, his Father, which happened on the 16th of November, 1727. But during all that Time he was taken Care of by several Persons of extreme good Credit, and considered as the Lord Altham's Son and Heir. Upon the Death of the late Lord Altham, in the Year 1727, the Lessor of the Plaintiff was extremely young; he was by the Mother's Side destitute of all Friends whatsoever in this Kingdom; and the now Defendant, the Earl of Anglesea (I must take the Liberty now of mentioning him), he, my Lord, upon the Death of the Lord Altham, claimed the Title of Lord Altham, as Brother and Heir to the deceased Lord, upon a Supposition that the late Lord died without Issue Male. My Lord, it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that many People who had known the Lessor of the Plaintiff for several Years before his Father's Death, appeared to be greatly surprized that the Defendant assumed the Title of Lord Altham, in regard that they believed the Lessor of the Plaintiff to be the Son and Heir of the Lord Altham; and there were Murmurings among the Servants, and a great many People who were acquainted with the Lessor of the Plaintiff, on that Account. It will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that, in order to remove every Obstacle out of the Way of the Defendant, and to take from the Lessor of the Plaintiff all Possibility of asserting his Right, and claiming the Title, an Attempt was made very early after the Death of the late Lord Altham; an Attempt was made, I say, to kidnap the Lessor of the Plaintiff; and it will appear that the first Attempt was in vain; a second Attempt of this Kind was made, and likewise defeated; but the third Attempt was more successful; and in about four Months after the Death of the late Lord Altham, the Lessor of the Plaintiff was sent into America, and there sold for a common Slave. I, my Lord, have not taken upon me to mention by whom those several Attempts were made, it will much more properly come out of the Mouths of the Witnesses; and when they shall speak it here upon the Table, every body will judge with what View and Design such a wicked Attempt could be made. My Lord, the Lessor of the Plaintiff, while he was in Slavery, suffered many and various Hardships, as every body in those unhappy Circumstances does, and did make an Attempt to regain his Liberty; but being retaken, he suffered according to the Law of that Country, and continued about 13 Years in Slavery: But it will appear to your Lordship, and to the Jury, that even in that miserable Condition, when he had an Opportunity of relating his Misfortunes to any body that had Compassion of them, he did mention the Unhappiness of his Case, and by what Means he was reduced to such Circumstances. It will appear to your Lordship and to the Jury, in what Manner the Plaintiff, was brought by the Care and Bounty of Admiral Vernon, into the Kingdom of Great Britain. There an unhappy Misfortune detained him for some time; he happened by an accidental Shot, to kill a Man near London, for which he was indicted, and stood his Trial: How that Prosecution was carried on, or for what Purpose, I shall not take upon me to say, though it will have its Weight in the Case; but it was necessary to mention this Circumstance, to shew that, when we were at liberty of coming into this Kingdom, and prosecuting our Right, we did it as recently as was in our power. When these Facts are laid before your Lordship and the Jury, we of Counsel for the Lessor of the Plaintiff, do apprehend there is such a Connection in every one of them, that the Force of Truth will prevail, and that your Lordship will direct the Jury to find a Verdict for the Lessor of the Plaintiff.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall. My Lord, Mr. Serjeant Marshall has so fully stated the Case of the Lessor of the Plaintiff, that I have no further Facts to mention, unless the Gentlemen on the other Side should require of us to prove the Title of the late Lord Altham to the Lands in question; if they do, we are ready to enter into it, and to shew that by the Will of James Earl of Anglesea, a Remainder of the Lands in the Declaration was limited to the Lessor of the Plaintiff, after the Death of his Father.

Mr. Lehant, of Counsel for the Defendant. My Lord, I hope they will read the Remainders in the Will of James Earl of Anglesea, and the Codicils; whereby it will appear that the next Remainder of the Lands in question, after Failure of Issue of Arthur late Lord Altham, was limited to Arthur Earl of Anglesea, and not to the present Defendant, who was Brother to the late Lord Altham.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall. We admit that the late Lord Altham was Tenant for Life of the Lands in the County of Meath, and that Arthur late Earl of Anglesea had a Remainder before the present Defendant, and did enjoy it accordingly.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall. My Lord, the Legitimacy of the Lessor of the Plaintiff is the material Point.

Mr. Recorder, for the Defendant. My Lord, the Lessor of the Plaintiff insists that he is the Legitimate Son of the late Lord Altham; if this be proved, there will be no necessity to read the Wills and Codicils: for we admit, that if Arthur Lord Altham left a Son, the present Earl of Anglesea has no right to the Lands in question.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall. My Lord, there is one Point further to be admitted, which is, that the late Lord Altham intermarried in the Year 1706 with Mary Sheffield, Natural Daughter of the Duke of Buckingham (which was admitted). My Lord, we have been so happy as to be able not only to trace the Lessor of the Plaintiff from his Birth, but to shew some preceding Circumstances, rendering it highly probable; with which we shall begin, by laying before your Lordship and the Jury, that immediately after Lady Altham's coming into this Country she proved with Child, that she miscarried at Dunmaine of that Child, that she proved pregnant a second time, and was delivered of the Lessor of the Plaintiff.

Lord Chief Baron Bowes. Gentlemen, From the Evidence as opened, I see this is like to prove a Trial of Length, as well as Expectation; and I think it is to the Honour of your Country, as well as for the Advantage of the Parties concerned, that Men of your Rank and known Probity attend the Trial of this Issue: But I fear it will not be in the power of the Court to take the Evidence with such Exactness as to give you the usual Assistance, by summing of it up at the End of the Trial. I must therefore request you, Gentlemen, to take Notes, as we proceed.

Here follow the Names of the Witnesses produced on the Part of the Plaintiff; those marked thus * were the most material.

(a) As some Points of Law were determined, on Questions asked the Witnesses by the Counsel, we shall insert them by way of Notes.

Alderman Barnes was asked, Whether he heard Lord Altham mention his having a Son?

The Question was objected to by the Counsel for the Defendant, who said, That what Lord Altham told the Witness was not to be given in evidence, but only what came within the Compass of his own Knowledge. But the Court were of Opinion, that any Declaration of my Lord Altham, relative to this Transaction, the Birth of the Lessor of the Plaintiff, was proper Evidence, and ought to be received.

(b) Mr. Pigot was asked, Whether ever he heard from his Mother, that she was Godmother to Mr. Annesley, or no? The Question is objected to, by the Earl of Anglesea's Counsel; That Hearsay was no Evidence, and that he should not be admitted to declare what his Mother told him. And the Court allowed the Objection.

(c) Mr. Thomas Byrne, in his Evidence, saying, Mr. Annesley told him, he would not go to his Father at Inchicore, for Miss Gregory was there, who would never let him alone.

Mr. Attorney-General. My Lord, I desire to have the Sense of the Court upon this Part of the Evidence: The Witness was going to say what the Plaintiff told him: So long as this was for Connection, I made no Objection to it; but he is going by a Side-wind to reflect upon the Credit of a Person, who may be produced in evidence for the Defendant; this makes it material to object to this Part of the Evidence.

Lord Chief Baron. It may be material to know what Reason the Boy gave for refusing to go to my Lord Altham.

Mr. Attorney-General. The Boy's Declaration cannot be Evidence for him.

Lord Chief Baron. I shall confine the Witness to Facts.

These Witnesses swear, That after Lord and Lady Altham came to Ireland, my Lady miscarried, and they saw an Abortion, and afterwards was with Child again; some swear they felt her Belly, and found she was with Child, and that she grew bigger and bigger; and several, that they saw her big with Child.—Dennis Redmond swears, he saw my Lady big bellied; was sent to Ross by Mrs. Heath, for a Midwife, and brought Mrs. Shiel the Midwife; and that my Lady was delivered of a Son, about April 1715; and that Bonfires were made on the Occasion; that the Boy was christened by Mr. Lloyd, my Lord's Chaplain, by the Name of James, and that the Godfathers were Mr. Colclough, Counsellor Cliff, and the Godmother, Mrs. Pigot.—Mary Doyle and Eleanor Murphy swear they were in the Room at the Delivery; several swore, that the Child was put to nurse, first to Joan Landy, and afterwards to Joan Laffan, and that a Coach-way was made to the House of the latter, for my Lord and Lady to go and see their Son.—Others, that my Lord kept it and maintained it as his lawful Child, and owned it as such to several People; put it to School, and maintained it there as his lawful Son; till at last Lord Altham parted from his Wife, and took Miss Gregory into keeping; she hated the Boy, used him ill, and was continually telling Stories of his bad Behaviour to my Lord, and at last prevailed on my Lord to turn him out of doors under pretence of thieving.—That this Boy afterwards wandered about for some time, living some time with one Purcell, and some time with others, till my Lord's Death, in November 1727. Soon after which, he was kidnapp'd and transported abroad, and not heard of for many Years, till at last he was discovered and sent home by Admiral Vernon, to assert his Rights, &c. That in 1742, when Mr. Annesley happened accidentally to kill a Man at Staines in Middlesex, that Lord Anglesea was at a great Expence to prosecute him, &c. But Mr. Giffard's Evidence will best explain the whole Affair.

Tuesday, November 15th.

49. Mr. JOHN GIFFARD.

Q. Do you know the Plaintiff Mr. James Annesley?

Mr. Giffard. Yes, Sir,

Q. Did you know when it was that he arrived in England from the West-Indies?

A. No, Sir.

Q. Do you know of any Prosecution carried on against the Plaintiff by the Defendant for Murder?

[The Question is objected to by the Counsel for the Defendant.]

Mr. Fitz Gibbon, of Counsel for the Plaintiff. My Lord, this Witness is brought to shew that the Lord Anglesea, knowing that the Plaintiff claim'd the Estate of the Family, as Son and Heir to the late Lord Altham, expended vast Sums of Money on a Prosecution, which he set on foot against him for the Murder of an unfortunate Man at Staines, in Middlesex, though the Person killed stood in no Degree of Relation to my Lord Anglesea, that could have engaged him to have taken up this Matter.

It will also appear, that while he laboured to convict the Plaintiff for Murder, he knew the Person, whose Death gave Occasion for the Prosecution, was killed by Accident. And this we apprehend to be a Circumstance proper to be laid before the Jury, to shew that my Lord Anglesea, conscious of the Plaintiff's Title, took these Methods to cut him off.

Mr. Recorder, (Eaton Stannard, Esq;) of Counsel for the Defendant. My Lord, I apprehend that the Evidence now offered is not legal Evidence in this Cause, because it appertains not directly to it; it is a collateral Thing. It was proper to shew the Plaintiff to be the legitimate Son of Lord Altham, and that he was intitled to the Lands ejected; but to produce Evidence of a Trial in England, is very improper; in my Apprehension, this is no Evidence in this Trial of Ejectment. The taking away a Person, and secreting him after the Title accrues to him, is a material Evidence to shew that he could not assert his Right sooner; but how is the Indictment of a Man for this Murder, be it accidental or not, relative to this Cause? For pending the Indictment, it was no Hindrance to him to put in his Claim when he pleased, and to assert his Title.

This Cause was tried in England. Can you have all the Witnesses there brought before you? Could any Person concerned for Lord Anglesea foresee that this Indictment would be introduced? And therefore my Lord Anglesea could not be prepared to have the Witnesses of that Trial here. I say, it is not proper to introduce it, for what Man living could guard against it?

This Evidence is offered, as I apprehend, to raise a Presumption that the Plaintiff is the legitimate Son of the Lord Altham, because the Defendant endeavoured to destroy him; and then the Question will be, Whether such Evidence is proper to be admitted? It would be a Question whether any improper Measure taken to affect the Life of the Plaintiff would be Evidence; but where, from their own opening the Case, it does appear to your Lordship nothing more than a Proceeding according to the regular and open Course of the Law, with humble Submission, that in this Case or any Case whatsoever, is not to be imputed to a Man as a Crime. As they state it, there was a Prosecution for Murder, whereas the killing was accidental, every Homicide in the Indictment is laid Murder; and if there was a Prosecution on this Indictment, is it not a material Circumstance, that this Indictment must have had the Sanction of a Grand Jury? Here has been an Indictment, is all that they have said, and a Prosecution upon that Indictment. I desire your Lordship to consider, whether my Lord Annesley, or any other Person, might not have carried on the Prosecution? Nothing is more frequent, in Murder especially, than that the Prosecution is carried on, not at the Expence of the Crown, though the Prosecution is in the Name of the Crown. Will it not then be a Matter of very great Consequence, to say, that this shall be imputed to a Man as a Crime, and affect him not only as to his Character, but his Fortune? Your Lordship cannot judge now whether or not this Prosecution was what they would make it appear to be, without entering into the Merits of the Cause. How can it appear to your Lordship whether this was a real Murder, or the Person escaped only by a favourable Verdict? And therefore we hope, for the Sake of Evidence, that it may not be made a Precedent in other Cases.

Mr. Serj. Marshall, for the Plaintiff. My Lord, we have endeavoured to lay before the Jury a spiriting away of the now Lessor of the Plaintiff, at a Time when he was extremely young, not capable of asserting his Right, and with a View of putting him out of the Way of ever asserting that Right. We now come to offer Evidence, to shew that the Malice of the Defendant did not rest there; that after he had actually caused him to be transported, the Lessor of the Plaintiff, at his Return, unfortunately killed a Man; what we now propose to lay before your Lordship and the Jury, is the very extraordinary Part that the Earl of Anglesea took in that Trial; a Trial wherein he was not any way concerned. When the Witness shall be permitted to tell you what Expence the Earl was at in this Prosecution, it will strengthen that Evidence, of the Defendant's spiriting away the Lessor of the Plaintiff, and shew the Defendant's continued Design of removing this Gentleman from any Possibility of asserting his Birthright. And therefore we humbly hope your Lordship will permit us to go into this Evidence; and submit it to the Jury, whether there could be any Reason but one for such an uncommon Proceeding.

Mr. Harward, for the Plaintiff. My Lord, I apprehend, that every Matter which in any degree tends to shew whether the Plaintiff was the lawful Son of the late Lord Albani, or no, is proper Evidence to be laid before the Jury. This Evidence now offered, is to shew that the present Lord Anglesea, conscious of the Plaintiff's Legitimacy, undertook the Prosecution to take away his Life, and spent great Sums of Money in it. If it is an Act of the Defendant's, it is proper for the Jury to consider, quo animo he undertook it, whether from a publick Spirit of Justice, or a private View to take away the Life of this Rival to his Estate; for every Act of the Defendant that can give Light to the Jury of the Opinion that my Lord himself had of the Plaintiff's Right, is proper Evidence to be offered to them. We have already laid Evidence before the Jury that we apprehend clearly shews that the Lord Anglesea had, several Years ago, spirited away this Plaintiff, to prevent his asserting his Right to the Estate. This now offered is a further Proof of my Lord Anglesea's Opinion concerning his Right; and to corroborate that Evidence that has been already laid before the Court, we have a Right to produce it, as a further Instance of this Lord's own Opinion, that it was necessary for him to come at his Life at any rate.

The Question is not now, whether the Prosecution was just or not? Whether Mr. Annesley was guilty or not of the Murder charged on him? He has been acquitted. I must beg leave to say, if he had been found guilty, and got a Pardon, and came to seek his Right in this Court, my Lord's carrying on the Prosecution might have been imputed to a Zeal for Justice; but being acquitted, there is Room for the Jury to consider, whether his interfering was not owing to some other Motive, and some other End than that of publick Justice. The single Question is, Whether my Lord Anglesea, being a Stranger to the Deceased, became a voluntary Prosecutor, for the Death of a Man who stood in no Degree of Relation to the Family, from a Principle of Justice, or to gratify some private End of his own? It might have been very proper for Lord Anglesea to have expended such large Sums of Money in prosecution of Justice, had he been any way related to the Deceased; but as he was not, his expending such unusual Sums in a Prosecution no ways relating to him, more than to any other Stranger, argues, that it was to answer his private Ends, by securing his own Title to the Estate, if he could prevail to have the Plaintiff found guilty of Murder. If we were going to charge him with any thing that might involve him in any Sort of Guilt, the Objections might have been proper, but as we are not, they can carry no Weight.

Lord Chief Baron. This Witness was produced to shew that the Prosecution against the Plaintiff, for killing a Man at Staines, was promoted and carried on by the Defendant, and at his Expence; which, as it was an Attempt to take away the Plaintiff's Life, his Counsel have insisted is proper to be laid before the Jury, as further Proof of the present Defendant's Distrust of his own Title, and his Opinion of the now Plaintiff's Right: And this has been offered without any previous Evidence, that the Defendant had been convicted or prosecuted for the malicious Prosecution of the Plaintiff, or that the Court, before whom the Plaintiff was tried for that supposed Murder, had, by any Act of theirs, declared their Opinion that this Prosecution was malicious, as is frequently done by ordering the Prisoner a Copy of his Indictment.

This is a new Attempt, and were it necessary for me now to give my Opinion, I should think it ought not to be admitted.

The Prosecution in itself was not unlawful, on the contrary, it is the Duty of every Man, especially in the Case of Blood, to take care that the Offender be put upon his Trial. And therefore, without entering into the Merits of that Case, the Motives of the Prosecution cannot appear; and those alone can, in my Apprehension, introduce this Evidence as pertinent to the Matter in Issue in this Cause: Who, without going farther, can say, this Prosecution, though lawful, was carried on with an unlawful Intention?

These Reasons weigh with me at present. But as this Trial will last another Day, the Counsel for the Plaintiff may proceed to some other Evidence, and we, if it be insisted on, will give you our Opinions in the Morning.

Mr. Baron Mountney. It will always give me Concern, to find myself under a Necessity of delivering a sudden and immediate Opinion upon any Question, the contrary Sides of which are with equal Zeal contended for, by Gentlemen of such Figure and Character in their Profession as those concerned in the present Cause: that Concern must be extremely increased, whenever I have the Misfortune to differ in Opinion, either from my Lord Chief Baron, or my Brother Dawson, for both of whose Opinions I have the highest Regard; and still infinitely more so in the present Cause; the immense Consequence of which will incline me to hesitate even upon such Points, as I should otherwise be most extremely clear in. I shall therefore very gladly avail myself of that Opportunity, which, as my Lord Chief Baron hath been pleased to mention, the Adjournment of this Cause will afford us, of giving this Matter a farther Consideration.

But my present Opinion is, that the Evidence now offered ought to be admitted; and the Foundation of my Opinion is this: Every Act done by the Defendant, which hath a Tendency to shew a Consciousness in him of Title in the Lessor of the Plaintiff, must, I think, be admitted, beyond all Controversy, to be pertinent and legal Evidence in the present Cause:—I think that the Evidence now offered hath that Tendency, and consequently is proper to be admitted.

This Evidence of the Prosecution, in my Apprehension, stands exactly on the same Footing with the Evidence of the Kid-knapping; (against which not the least Objection was attempted by the Defendant's Counsel) for I can by no means enter into the Distinction of lawful and unlawful Acts; which seems to have so much Weight with my Lord Chief Baron.

That unlawful Act was not therefore, in my Apprehension, to be admitted in Evidence, because unlawful, but, because it had a Tendency to shew such a Consciousness, as I have mentioned, in the Defendant: and if the carrying on the Prosecution (which must be admitted to be a very extraordinary, though lawful, Act of the Defendant) hath the same Tendency, it ought, upon the same Principle, to be admitted.

Many Instances, I believe, might be put of lawful Acts done by one Party, which yet, it could not be controverted, would be legal and material Evidence for the other. One Instance occurs to me at present, which I think cannot bear the least Dispute. Suppose it could be proved, that the Defendant had offered to the Lessor of the Plaintiff a considerable Part of his Estate, or a large Sum of Money, to compromise this very Suit—Will any of his Counsel say, or can any Man living imagine, that this would not be legal Evidence in the present Cause?—And yet, the compromising of a Law-Suit is not only, universally, a lawful, but is, generally speaking, a commendable Act.

Cui bono hath ever been esteemed one of the strongest, and most unanswerable Arguments in all Cases:—And therefore the Fact, which I have mentioned, would be not only legal, but, in my Apprehension, most exceedingly material Evidence to be left to the Jury; who would be the proper Judges quo animo such an Offer was made.

As to the Fact now offered to be proved, it is possible indeed, that the Noble Lord might take up a Prosecution, deserted (so far as appears) by the near Relations of the Deceased (the Persons most likely to have carried it on, if they had thought Mr. Annesley guilty of Murder) merely out of a publick-spirited Regard to Justice;—it is likewise possible, that his Motive for engaging in it might be an interested one—a Consciousness of Right in that Person, and consequently that, unless that Person could be put out of the Way, the Titles and Estates which he was in Possession of would be insecure.

I think the Jury will be the proper Judges upon the whole Evidence in this Case, upon which of these two Motives, it is most probable, the Defendant acted:—and that therefore the Evidence of that Fact ought to be admitted, and left to their Consideration.

This, I say, is clearly my present Opinion: but, as I mentioned before, I shall make use of the Opportunity of considering it further; and, if I find Reason to think that I am at present mistaken, I will mention it To-morrow, and shall be exceedingly glad to change the Opinion which I have now given for a better.

Mr. Baron Dawson. I am very glad that there is no Necessity for our giving our Opinions immediately on this Point, I shall therefore decline giving any positive Opinion, as we have this Night to consider of it. The Prosecution here is agreed to be a lawful Act, and is not immediately relative to the Matter in Issue. The Difficulty with me is, that if this be given in Evidence, a Jury may, from a lawful Act not immediately relative to the Issue, draw an unwarrantable Consequence.

If the Act were unlawful, it would undoubtedly be good Evidence, there could be no other Way of accounting for the Party's subjecting himself to legal Punishment: But where it is not unlawful, it may be dangerous to leave the Intent to the Jury. We will consider of this Matter, and give our Opinions in it To-morrow.

Wednesday, November the 16th.

The Counsel for the Plaintiff proposed to examine Mr. John Giffard to what he had heard the Defendant say concerning the Lessor of the Plaintiff, and his Title; and being called upon to open the Nature of that Evidence;

Mr. Harward, of Counsel for the Plaintiff, spoke as follows: My Lord, the Conversation Mr. Giffard had with Lord Anglesea was to this Purpose, Mr. Giffard is an Attorney of Reputation in England, and as such has been twenty Years or thereabouts employed by this noble Earl in his Business, as he had Occasion for him. When my unfortunate Client was to be tried at the Old Bailey, that was the Time Lord Anglesea had greatest Occasion for this Mr. Giffard; and it will appear to your Lordship that Lord Anglesea disclosed his Intentions to him in this Manner: "I am advised that it is not prudent for me to appear publicly in the Prosecution, but I would give ten thousand Pounds to have him hanged. Mr. Jans my Agent shall always attend you. I am in great Distress; I am worried by my Wife in Ireland; Mr. Charles Annesley is at Law with me for Part of my Estate, and," says he, "if I cannot hang James Annesley, it is better for me to quit this Kingdom and go to France, and let Jemmy have his Right, if he will remit me into France Three thousand Pounds a-Year; I will learn French before I go."

Mr. Daly, of Counsel for the Defendant, objects to Mr. Giffard's being examined, since as an Attorney he was to keep the Secrets of his Client, and ought not to be permitted to disclose them; and cited the Case of Cutts and Pickering, 1. Vent. 197.

Mr. Serj. Marshall, for the Defendant.] But if an Attorney will voluntarily come and disclose any Secret, he ought to be heard.

Mr. Blake, of Counsel for the Defendant.] An Attorney or Solicitor might not, nor is he compellable to disclose the Secrets of his Client; this is a Privilege inherent in the Office of an Attorney or Solicitor: But as this Privilege has its Source in a publick Consideration, I shall, with Submission to better Judgment, insist that this exemptive Privilege is not merely and solely the Privilege of the Solicitor or Attorney, but is, in Law and Reason, the Right and Privilege of the Client. Formerly, Persons involved in Contests and Litigations appeared in Court personally, and pleaded and enforced their several Demands and respective Defences, and beyond all doubt retained some Secrets unrevealed; but when, from an inevitable Variation of Things, an Increase of Trade, and an Exuberance of Opulence, legal Altercations became innumerable, then it became necessary to employ others to represent the Parties engaged; these Persons are denominated Attornies or Solicitors, and they, in the Nature of Things, must unavoidably be trusted with the most retired and secret Thoughts and Actions of their Employers, not only with respect to Suits actually instituted, but also with regard to Suits threatened or intended to be commenced; for a Person menaced, if directed by Prudence, will be conducted by Vigilance and Caution, equally as if attacked; therefore it is absolutely necessary to extend this Privilege to the Client, and not restrict it entirely to the Solicitor, especially as there may be some of that Profession, who cannot be supposed to be actuated by such Principles of Honour and Virtue, as an Office of so great Confidence requires; I mean the Person now produced to be a Witness for the Plaintiff. The Case of Lord Say and Seal, in Macclesfield's Reports, I think, is an Authority in point.

Mr. Recorder, for the Defendant.] My Lord, formerly Persons appeared in Court themselves; but as Business multiplied and became more intricate, and Titles more perplexed, both the Distance of Places, and the Multiplicity of Business, made it absolutely necessary that there should be a Set of People who should stand in the Place of the Suitors, and these Persons are called Attornies. Since this has been thought necessary, all People and all Courts have looked upon that Confidence between the Party and Attorney to be so great, that it would be destructive to all Business, if Attornies were to disclose the Business of their Clients. In many Cases Men hold their Estates without Titles; in others, by such Titles, that if their Deeds could be got out of their Hands, they must lose their Fortunes. When Persons become Purchasers for valuable Considerations, and get a Deed that makes against them, they are not obliged to disclose whether they have that Deed. Now, if an Attorney was to be examined in every Case, what Man would trust an Attorney with the Secret of his Estate, if he should be permitted to offer himself as a Witness? If an Attorney had it in his Option to be examined, there would be an intire Stop to Business; Nobody would trust an Attorney with the State of his Affairs.

The Reason why Attornies are not to be examined to any thing relating to their Clients or their Affairs, is, because they would destroy the Confidence that is necessary to be preserved between them. This Confidence between the Employer and the Person employed, is so sacred a Thing, that if they were at liberty, when the present Cause was over that they were employed in, to give Testimony in favour of any other Person, it would not answer the End for which it was instituted. The End is, that Persons with Safety may substitute others in their room; and therefore if you can't ask me, you can't ask that Man; for every thing said to him, is as if I had said it to myself, and he is not to answer it. Now, the Question will be, for whose Sake it was instituted? Be sure, for the Sake of the Person employing him. Who then has the Option that he should be examined? Why, the Employer; because otherwise it would be in vain to fix a Confidence in Persons, if that Person was at liberty on any Account to shake him off, and say, While I was employed by you, it was not in my Option to disclose it, but now that I am not, I will unravel all. As it was for the Sake of the Employer that Attornies were instituted, they cannot in Civil Suits become Witnesses without the Consent of the Employer; therefore, I submit it, whether the Option is in the Attorney or in the Person who is the Employer; and if in the Employer, as I think it must be both for his Safety and Advantage, the Attorney neither can nor ought to reveal what is intrusted to him. In Pleading, it is, ponit in loco suo Attornatum, the Attorney is as himself. And it is contrary to the Rules of natural Justice and Equity, that any Man should betray himself. I apprehend it is not material whether this be a turpis Causa or not; as this Man was employed by my Lord Anglesea, he can be asked no other Questions than my Lord Anglesea himself.

My Lord, I must submit it, whether an Attorney's Testimony should be received, altho' he offers to give it? And in the next place, I submit it, whether this Kind of Testimony in this criminal Case ought to be received? It would be very little Satisfaction to a Client to be put to apply to the Court for an Attachment against this Person who offers to lay his Evidence before the Jury, if his Testimony could be received. I apprehend that Person is in the Place of the Client, and as he intrusts him with Secrets, he is not to disclose them without his Leave; and if he should disclose them out of Court, an Action of Deceit lies against him. And tho' an Attorney should not insist upon his Privilege, yet it is in the Power of the Employer to insist upon that Privilege, and to say he is the Person intrusted with his Secrets. Now, in this Case it is much stronger, for here it is said, that he is employed by my Lord Anglesea. Now, if that Party can't disclose those Secrets in a civil Case, he ought not, for a stronger Reason, in a criminal Case; because that is subjecting his Client perhaps to a criminal Prosecution.

Mr. Lee, of Counsel for the Defendant.] My Lord, if the Attorney confesses Judgment upon Record, it shall bind the Conusor, though done without Warrant; and the Reason is, that the Attorney appearing for the Party is, since the Statute of Merton, considered as the Party himself. If then the Attorney and Party are considered as one Person, why shall the one be suffered to be examined in this Cause, when the other cannot?

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] I do admit in some Cases the Attorney ought not to be permitted to disclose the Secrets of his Clients; but that must be where the Confidence was necessary and lawful: but here the Trust was unlawful, and the Attorney could not conceal it without Breach of his Oath, as an Attorney, which was to do Right to all Men. This was a criminal Secret, that was not only to affect the Plaintiff's Property and Life, but also to acquire a Title in which the Public were interested; so that it became the Duty of the Attorney to disclose it.

[Mr. JOHN GIFFARD called and sworn]

Q. Are you an Attorney of any, and what Court?

A. I am an Attorney of the Common-Pleas in England, and a Solicitor of the High-Court of Chancery, and sworn and admitted as such by Virtue of the Act of Parliament.

Q. Did you know the Defendant the Earl of Anglesea?—A. Yes.

Q. Was you ever Agent or Solicitor for him in any, and what Cause?

A. In the Year 1722, Lord Anglesea employed me to assist him on a particular Occasion to make his Defence.

Q. Name the Parties.

A. He was prosecuted, the King against him, as Richard Annesley, Esq.

Q. Were you employed in any other Cause?

A. In the Year 1722, the same Year, when an Action was brought against him at the Suit of one George Risden. But from the Year 1722, till he became Earl of Anglesea, I never heard of him. In the Year 1737 I met him in London, and he desired me to solicit an Affair between him and his Countess that lived at Biddisford.

Q. Name the next Cause.

A. Between the Right Honourable Maurice Thompson Lord Haverham, and the Earl of Anglesea.

Q. The next.

A. I was concerned in another, the same Year, and attended it, (it is very well known through the Houses of Lords and Commons in England) in order to throw a Bill out of the House of Commons, for the exemplifying the late Earl of Anglesea's Will.

Q. Go on.

A. I was likewise concerned in a particular Cause, between my Lord Anglesea, in the Year 1741, and one Mrs. Simpson of this Place; and have also sued out several Writs out of the Court of Common-Pleas, at the Suit of my Lord Anglesea, against one Henderson a Quaker.

Q. Go on.

A. I likewise was employed by Lord Anglesea in a Cause, wherein his Lordship was Plaintiff, and one Rachel Cooper was Defendant.

Q. Go on.

A. I issued out Writs against Henderson, at the Suit of one Banks, by Lord Anglesea's Directions.

Q. Go on.

A. I was sent for, and commanded by him to solicit and carry on a Prosecution against the Plaintiff Mr. Annesley.

Q. Have you been retained as Agent or Solicitor for the Earl of Anglesea, in any other Causes within these three Years?

A. I do not know; some frivolous Thing might have slipped my Memory, but I was not concerned in any other Cause, since the Prosecution of Mr. Annesley.

Q. Name the Time when you was retained by the Earl to prosecute that Murder.

A. The second Day of May, 1742.

Q. The Conversation that passed between you and my Lord, to which you are now produced as an Evidence, was it before, or after, that Time?

A. There were several Declarations, some before, and some after. The Conversations were from the 7th of December 1741, to the Time of Mr. Annesley's being discharged at the Old-Bailey.

Q. When was the Bill of Indictment found against Mr. Annesley?

A. The Bill was found in June, and he was admitted to Bail in July Sessions, 1742.

Q. On what Day is the Murder laid in the Indictment?

A. On the first of May, 1742, the 15th Year of the present King.

Q. Was you Agent or Solicitor for Lord Anglesea at the Time that the Conversation passed, before the 2d of May?

A. Not for the Cause of Mr. Annesley.

Q. Were not the other Causes subsisting?

A. The Causes were on Writs which were never executed.

Q. I desire you may answer directly, whether the Conversation before the 2d of May was not on some Affair in which my Lord Anglesea consulted and advised with you as his Agent or Solicitor, designing to employ you in that Affair?

A. No, my Lord, it was not; for I did not expect to be employed by him again, he having employed Mr. George Garden and Mr. Adam Gordon.

D. Name the People.

A. Mr. Garden and Mr. Gordon. They are Attornies, they are Partners, and I received my Instructions, in a great part, from them; my Lord ordered me to take Directions from them, and I have Instructions under Gordon's own Hand-writing.

Q. Had my Lord Anglesea those Conversations with you relative to the Plaintiff, between the 7th of December and the 2d of May, as intending to employ you, or not?

A. I never was employed, nor intended to be employed, in any Suit for or against him, during that Time.

Q. When did you first receive Instructions from Garden and Gordon?

A. In a Week after the first of May.

Q. Had you any Instructions from them, except what were relative to the Prosecution, in relation to the Plaintiff?

A. No; no Instructions but what were relative to the Prosecution.

Q. Did you charge Lord Anglesea with any Term Fees in the Year 1741, relative to particular Suits?

A. I believed I charged 10 s. 4 d. for Lord Haverham's Suit.

Q. In what Term did you charge it?

A. I find that Cause was in the Vacation between Hillary and Easter Term, and was concluded before Easter Term came. It was depending in Hillary Term 1741, and was concluded before the next Term.

Q. Was it depending for any time before Hillary Term?

A. The Beginning of it was the 20th of January, the Essoign before Hillary Term.

Was you concerned for Lord Anglesea from the latter end of November to the beginning of January 1741?

I was concerned in issuing out some Writs.

2. Add do not you think, if any Suit had depended upon them, you would have been concerned? — A. I do not know but I might.

The Witness goes off the Table.

Mr. Primo Serjeant, (Anthony Malone, Esq.) for the Defendant.] An Attorney shall not disclose any thing whatsoever in a collateral Question, that shall affect the Property of the Client.

Mr. Serj. Tisdall, for the Plaintiff.] My Lord, we propose to examine to no Fact which came to his Knowledge as an Attorney, in any Suit in which he was employed for Lord Anglesea: but he declares he never was employed in any Suit relating to the Lessor of the Plaintiff, nor was even intended to be employed in any Suit relating to this Trial. We hope, therefore, we are proper to give in Evidence several Declarations and Conversations Lord Anglesea had with the Witness concerning the Lessor, his Title to this Estate, and the Necessity he apprehended himself under of putting him out of the Way at that Time. We do not propose to examine him as to any Facts relating to the Prosecution of that Suit in which he was then employed; we desire only to examine him as to the Conversations with Lord Anglesea concerning this Cause; and I apprehend we have undoubtedly a Right to examine him as to these Points.

I cannot say, but the Gentlemen on the other Side have good Reason to oppose this Evidence, which, if it appears in the Manner we are instructed it will, must be an Evidence of great Weight. I shall first beg Leave to consider, whether an Attorney may be examined to any Matter which came to his Knowledge as an Attorney. If he is employed as an Attorney in any unlawful or wicked Act, his Duty to the Publick obliges him to disclose it; no private Obligations can dispense with that universal one, which lies on every Member of the Society, to discover every Design which may be formed, contrary to the Laws of the Society, to destroy the publick Welfare. For this Reason I apprehend, that if a Secret, which is contrary to the publick Good, such as a Design to commit Treason, Murder, or Perjury, comes to the Knowledge of an Attorney, even in a Cause wherein he is concerned, the Obligation to the Publick must dispense with the private Obligation to the Client: But in this Case the Witness proposed to be examined was not Attorney to the Defendant in any Case relative to his Testimony. And the Secrecy of the Attorney is necessary to the Client in that Cause only, for the carrying on of which he is under a Necessity to entrust him. For this Reason I agree, that whatever is communicated to him from that Necessity ought not to be disclosed, even in a future Cause, wherein he is not concerned; but as the Client is not obliged to entrust his Attorney with any of his Secrets, but such only as are relative to, or may be useful for carrying on the Cause in which he is employed; if he trusts him with any Matter foreign to that, even during the Time that he is employed, with any Matter which was not necessary, or any way material to the Cause depending, he is not obliged to conceal it.

I beg Leave to say, as there was no Necessity upon the Client to entrust him with it, so mutually there can be no Obligation upon the Attorney to conceal it; for as the only Obligation which lies on the Attorney to Secrecy, arises from the Necessity of Confidence between him and his Employer, from the Necessity the Client must be under to entrust him, it cannot extend to any Case where that Confidence was not necessary, where the Client was not under such a Necessity. If this be admitted, the Matters we propose to examine to are quite foreign to those Suits in which the Witness was employed for the Defendant. My Lord Anglesea was indeed under a Necessity of entrusting him with all the Evidence that he thought necessary for the Prosecution carried on against the Plaintiff in England, and the Attorney is under an Obligation of concealing that Evidence: but was he under a Necessity of telling the Attorney he wanted to put this Man out of the Way, or that he was entitled to his Honours and Estate? This was a Secret he ought in Prudence to have kept within his own Breast, and not to have discovered. This was a Secret not necessary to be communicated, and therefore not to be concealed.

Upon these Principles, therefore, I should submit it to your Lordship, that we must be at Liberty to examine Mr. Giffard as to those Conversations which were no way relative to the Matter in which he was then employed by the Defendant, and which, if true, as they are represented to us, import a Design contrary to all Laws of Nature and Society.

Mr. Walsh, for the Plaintiff.] I do admit that an Attorney shall not be examined to any Fact disclosed to him by his Client as an Attorney, relative to a Cause wherein he was employed; because a Client must of Necessity entrust the Secrets of his Title to his Attorney, to enable him to conduct his Suit; and therefore the Attorney stands in the Place of his Client, who cannot be examined as a Witness against himself. But this Rule can never be extended either to a Case where the Matter was not communicated to him as a Secret, in the Cause wherein he was employed, or before he was employed as Attorney in that Cause; because there the Client was not under any Necessity of disclosing the Fact to him; and if it were otherwise, this Inconvenience must happen, that no Attorney could ever be a Witness against a Person, if he ever happened, upon any Occasion whatsoever, to be his Attorney. The Question then is, Whether the Fact to which we want to examine Mr. Giffard was communicated to him by Lord Anglesea, as his Lordship's Attorney, or not? or whether he was actually employed by him in the Prosecution of Mr. Annesley, at the Time the Discourse we would examine him to happened? It is true, Mr. Giffard had been Attorney to Lord Anglesea in several Suits before this Conversation happened; but he could not be at that Time employed in the Prosecution of Mr. Annesley; because it appears, that this Discourse happened before the Coroner's Inquest sat, or any Prosecution began on that Account; so that I apprehend this Case does not come within the Rule I mentioned, and that Mr. Giffard ought to be examined. But besides, what we would examine him to is, not as to any Secret in the Prosecution itself, but only as to Lord Anglesea's Intention and Design in engaging himself in the Prosecution. But I must mention another Reason, which puts this Matter out of doubt, and that is, that this Prosecution was at the Suit of the Crown; if any Secrets were in that Suit, they were the King's Secrets, the revealing of which could be no Inconvenience to Lord Anglesea, or affect his Property; and therefore, my Lord,

I apprehend, for these Reasons, that Mr. Giffard ought to be examined as to the Point we have opened.

Mr. Harward.] I apprehend, that what is contended for by the Gentlemen on the other Side, is not supported by the Authorities they have relied on; because, in all the Cases quoted by them it does appear, that the Attorney proposed to be examined, was the Attorney or Agent in that very Cause that was then to receive a Determination, and it appears that the Secrets to which he was to be examined, were Secrets that came to his Knowledge from his Client concerning that very Cause. So that the Cases quoted do not maintain the Objection made; for this Witness was never in this Cause employed as Agent, or in any other, in which the Title to the Anglesea Estate was controverted, as it is here; so can't be said to violate any Confidence reposed in him, as to any Secrets concerning the Title to the Estate; for that could not come in question on the Prosecution for Murder, or be in any Sort necessary for the Client to reveal to him to carry on the Prosecution; and therefore not within the Rule laid down, That the Client has a Privilege to hinder his Attorney from disclosing any of the Secrets communicated to him necessary to carry on the Cause he is employed in: And in the Case of Cutts and Pickering in Ventris, it was agreed, that if the Secret came to him from his Client before he was retained, he might be examined; and a Retainer in a capital Prosecution cannot, in the Nature of the Thing, imply any Trust in the Attorney to keep the Secrets of the Title to an Estate, no way to be in question in that Prosecution: And the Case of Lord Say and Seal mentioned, makes rather for us than against us; for there the Attorney employed to suffer a Recovery was examined against his Client as to antedating a Deed to make a Tenant to the Præcipe; for that the Time of executing a Deed could not be called the Secret of his Client; and the Rule laid down on the other Side, in such general Terms as it is urged, instead of promoting public Justice, would subvert it, and screen all Villainies that could be contrived to carry a Cause. I take the Distinction to be, that where an Attorney comes to the Knowledge of a Thing that is malum in se, against the common Rules of Morality and Honesty, though from his Client, and necessary to procure Success in the Cause, yet it is no Breach of Trust in him to disclose it, as it can't be presumed an honest Man would engage in a Trust that by Law prevented him from discharging that moral Duty all are bound to, nor can private Obligation cancel the Justice owing by us to the Publick. But the Trust reposed in this Attorney was, to carry on a Prosecution of Murder. The Matter disclosed by this Lord to him was foreign concerning the Title to an Estate; then, how can the revealing of that be a Breach of Trust, when not within the Trust he was employed in? The Prosecution was properly at the King's Suit, and not at the Lord Anglesea's; this Ejectment was not then even in Contemplation, or could be foreseen that the Title to the Estate would ever come in question; so, what Lord Anglesea declared to him concerning the Title, is no more within the Bounds of the Trust reposed, than if any other Person had declared it to him, for whom he never was employed.

But to go a little farther, suppose I employ an Attorney to recover Blackacre for me, and I bring an Ejectment for it; while he is thus employed, I come and discover to him that I have forged a Deed which relates to Whiteacre in my Possession, and which is the Right of another Man; might not the Attorney hereafter disclose that Forgery, to enable the other to recover Whiteacre from me? For he never was employed or entrusted as an Attorney by me in that Case. So, in the present Case, the Attorney was never employed in any Cause where the Title of the Estate was or could come in question; so not at all within the Reason of that necessary Privilege given by Law to the Client, to hinder his Attorney from disclosing any of the Secrets communicated to him, necessary for, and relative to the carrying on of the Cause he has engaged himself in to prosecute. The Thing therefore that varies this Case from the Rule of Privilege laid down on the other Side is, that this Attorney was never concerned in any Suit of my Lord's relative to the Title of the Estate, and to which we now produce him; and there can be no such Privilege, but where there is such Suit and Retainer for that individual Purpose, and cannot extend to Concealment of Secrets disclosed under the Confidence of ordinary Friendships or Discourses.

And lastly, As it is a Discovery to the Agent to contrive the Death of an innocent Man, that there is no Protection whatsoever can be given to dispense with that moral Engagement he was under to the Discovery of it; if this unfortunate Gentleman had come to the Discovery, that the Lord Anglesea and his Attorney had entered into a Conspiracy to bribe Witnesses, could the Court stand by and say, That this Witness should not be examined? How can he now then, in a Civil Case, wherein he never was concerned, have that Protection? Will any Gentleman deny, that this Attorney could have gone and given in an Examination concerning this Prosecution? He certainly could; for no Man can have a Protection against the King. And if Lord Anglesea was so idle, or if Providence has so ordered it, that he should be so unwary, or so wanton, as to make a Discovery of this, and of the Plaintiff's Title to the Estate, he has no Privilege against the Discovery of it.

Mr. Solicitor General, (Warden Flood, Esq.) for the Defendant.] I humbly hope your Lordship will not admit this Person to be examined in this Cause. If the Question were only to his Credit, surely he can deserve none; for he appears under the Circumstances of a Person who was employed from the Year 1722, by this noble Person as his Attorney; a Man willingly betraying those Secrets, which, in point of Duty and common Honesty, he ought to keep. Besides, the Secrets he pretends to disclose are such as it was not necessary for my Lord to communicate to him, and such as no Man in his Wits could disclose to any Person, under what Obligation soever of Secrecy, without an unavoidable Necessity, which does in no Sort appear to be the Case here; and this makes what he says the less credible, and him the less fit to be believed as to his Competency. The Case of the Lord Say, which has been cited, is a full Authority that the Secrecy indulged to this Sort of People by the Law, is not for their Sakes, but that of their Clients. That it is the Privilege, not of the Attorney, but of the Client; and of consequence cannot be waved without his Consent. 'Tis true, this Privilege will not hold in a criminal Case, but is superseded, when it is incompatible with the Peace and Welfare of the Publick; but ours is a private Case, and falls not within this Rule.

Mr.

Mr. Harward mentions the Case of Staples and Staples, wherein a Settlement that was concealed, but not suppressed, was wanted to be known by Mr. Matthews; when the Lord Chancellor directed it so, that there was a Meeting, by Consent of all Parties, between the Attorneys on both Sides, and a Copy taken and signed.

Mr. Daly, of Counsel for the Defendant, supposes, that if he was concerned for a Man guilty of High-Treason, the Court could not oblige him to disclose the Secrets committed to him by that Man.

Mr. Smith, for the Defendant,] If I rightly apprehend the Nature of Mr. Giffard's Evidence offered by the Gentlemen on the other Side, it relates to two different Kinds of Declarations alledged to have been made to him by my Lord Anglesea in Conversation during two different Periods of Time; first, the Declarations of my Lord concerning the Right of Mr. Annesley, (the Lessor of the Plaintiff) and these are alledged to have been made at several Times in the Year 1741, antecedent to the Prosecution of Mr. Annesley; and in the next Place, my Lord's Declarations that he would give Ten Thousand Pounds to have Mr. Annesley hanged; and these are said to have been made during the Continuance of the Prosecution. We objected to this Evidence, that as Mr. Giffard appeared from what he said on the Table, to have been employed by my Lord as his Attorney, he ought not, by Law, to be permitted to disclose any Thing that was uttered to him by my Lord under the Trust and Confidence reposed in him as an Attorney. There have been two Answers given to this Objection: First, That the not disclosing the Secrets of the Client is a Privilege given by Law to the Attorney, and in his Favour only, and therefore he is at Liberty, if he thinks fit, to waive it. In the next Place, the Gentlemen say, that the Declarations touching Mr. Annesley's Right, were made at a Time when my Lord had no Cause depending, and that whatever is disclosed by the Client to his Attorney, when there is no Cause depending in which the Attorney is employed, is not within the Reason of the general Rule; because in such Case he may be said to be intrusted as a Companion or Acquaintance, but cannot be said to be trusted as an Attorney; and therefore, they say, Mr. Giffard ought to be examined, at least to these Declarations. Before I speak to these Points, I shall beg Leave to observe in general, that Breach of Trust and Confidence is a Thing no ways to be favoured in any Man whatsoever, whether he is or is not an Attorney; for mutual Trust and Confidence is one of the strongest Cements of human Society, and without which it could not subsist; and therefore I apprehend, that the Court will always go as far in every Case, as by Law they can, to prevent a Person from being guilty of so base an Action as Violation of Trust and Confidence, although he should be ever so willing to do it.

As to the first Point, Whether Mr. Giffard ought to be at Liberty to waive his Privilege; I think the Case of my Lord Say and Seal, in the Book called Maclesfield's Cases, fol. 41. mentioned by Mr. Prime Sergeant, seems to be an express Authority that he ought not. In that Case, the Court in giving their Opinion, lay it down as a general Rule, "That an Attorney's Privilege is the Privilege of his Client; and that an Attorney, though he would, yet shall not be allowed to discover the Secrets of his Client." The different Interest which the Attorney and the Client have in this Privilege, shew this Rule to be highly agreeable to Reason. As to the Attorney, this Privilege is an Exemption from the General Rule, which obliges every one to testify his Knowledge in any Affair where he is called upon as a Witness. By this Exemption he is freed from the disagreeable Necessity of revealing what was disclosed to him by his Client under the Seal of Confidence; this is a Privilege which every honest Attorney will set the highest Value upon, and will endeavour to preserve; and whenever any Attorney desires to be discharged from that Exemption, and to be at Liberty to waive his Privilege, he does, in effect, desire to be at Liberty to be guilty of one of the basest of Actions, Breach of Trust and Confidence; which as it is a Thing highly to be discountenanced in any Case, more especially in that of an Attorney; he ought not to be permitted to do it, let him have ever so strong an Inclination to it. As to the Client, the Interest which he has in this Privilege, is very obvious. No Man can conduct any of his Affairs which relate to Matters of Law, without employing and consulting with an Attorney; and if he does not fully and candidly disclose every Thing that is in his Mind, which he apprehends may be in the least relative to the Affair he consults his Attorney upon, it will be impossible for the Attorney properly to serve him: Therefore, to permit an Attorney, whenever he thinks fit, to betray that Confidence which the Client is under such an absolute Necessity of reposing in him, would be of the most dangerous Consequence, not only to the particular Client concerned, but to every other Man who is or may be a Client. The Gentlemen on the other Side have attempted to confine and circumscribe this Privilege, and to make it extend only to Matters disclosed by the Client relative to some Suit, then depending, in which the Attorney is concerned. But I apprehend this would be making the Rule a great deal too narrow; for, if the Principles on which the Rule is founded, are considered, the true Meaning of it must be, that the Attorney shall not be permitted to reveal any thing that his Client discloses to him under a general Confidence as his Attorney; so that it cannot be material whether a Suit was then actually depending or not; but the material Point to be considered is, whether the Client did not consider him as his Attorney, when he so disclosed his Mind to him? In the present Case, that my Lord Anglesea, at the Time these Declarations touching Mr. Annesley's Right are said to have been made, did consider Mr. Giffard as his Attorney, cannot be doubted. Mr. Giffard says, That my Lord, at several Times before, and particularly in the Year 1741, had employed him in several Suits; that he, after those Discourses, employed him again, and in the Month of May 1742 discharged him. So that the general Confidence my Lord reposed in him as his Attorney, must be presumed actually to subsist from the Time he first retained Mr. Giffard, till the Time he discharged him; and whatever my Lord said to him, during that Space of Time, touching his Affairs, was plainly said to him under Confidence as his Attorney; my Lord had employed him as an Attorney before, and plainly intended again to employ him as his Attorney afterwards; and because there was an Interval, during that Space of Time, in which my Lord was at Peace, and happened to have no Suits on his Hands, to say that his Attorney shall therefore be at Liberty to disclose what was in that Interval revealed to him, would be equally deductive of all the ill Consequences that would attend his being permitted to disclose what he was intrusted with relative to a Suit actually depending; the Confidence reposed in the Attorney, is the same in the one Case as in the other, and his Violation of that Confidence equally prejudicial both to the Client and the Publick. It has been objected, That what has been cited out of the Case of Lord Say and Seal, is not the Point adjudged in the Case: But although the Court do there decide the Question before them upon another Point, yet the general Rule which they lay down (as I have mentioned it) stands admitted. The Case of Mr. Matthews, the Attorney, was mentioned on the other Side: If I am rightly informed of that Case, Mr. Matthews had, in the Presence, and at the Desire of his Client, attested and subscribed a Deed as a Witness. The Question asked of him, was touching the Execution of that Deed, and he was ordered to answer it; but that Case is entirely different from the present; whenever a Man attests the Execution of a Deed as a Witness, he does thereby engage to prove the Execution of it, whenever he is judicially called upon so to do; and his Client's desiring him to attest the Deed, is a Consent that the Attorney shall enter into that Engagement; therefore that Case is no way relative to the present Question. This is all I shall trouble the Court with as to the supposed Declarations of my Lord, antecedent to the Prosecution of Mr. Annesley. As to the Declarations supposed to have been made by my Lord during the Prosecution; besides the other Reasons I have before mentioned, as to the Confidence my Lord reposed in him as an Attorney, I have another Objection against the examining Mr. Giffard in this Point. The Gentlemen last Night produced Mr. Giffard, and proposed to examine him, to shew that my Lord Anglesea was concerned in, and assisted to carry on this Prosecution; which Evidence was objected to on our Side, and upon Debate the Court seemed to be of Opinion, that they ought not to be let in to give that Evidence; and I apprehend the Point was this Morning given up by the Gentlemen on the other Side: But the Examination now proposed, is an Attempt to do the same Thing in another Shape; they were not admitted to give Evidence directly that my Lord was concerned in, or carried on the Prosecution; but if they are admitted to prove his Declarations touching his Intention in carrying it on, it is plainly doing the same Thing in other Words, and would be to admit them to do that this Morning which was refused last Night. The Gentlemen have, in proposing their Evidence on this Occasion, used many harsh Expressions concerning the Defendant; but I apprehend they are a little too early; harsh Reflections should not be used until the Facts on which they are founded are proved and given in Evidence; whether that Evidence shall be given or not, is now the Point under the Consideration of the Court; and until that Matter is decided, I make no Doubt but that the Gentlemen of the Jury will not permit the Supposition of Facts to have any Influence upon them, before the Facts themselves shall be proved. Upon the whole, as whatever the Court shall do in this Case will be a Precedent, and, for the Reasons I have mentioned, a Precedent of very great Consequence, in all other Cases between every other Client and his Attorney, I hope the Court will be of Opinion, that Mr. Giffard ought not to be examined to any of the Points proposed.

The Lord Chief Baron. The Objections to Mr. Giffard's being admitted to give the Evidence proposed by the Plaintiff's Counsel, have been argued with great Strength; and undoubtedly the Publick is interested in the Event of this Question, so far as it may affect the necessary Confidence between the Client and his Attorney or Agent, which will make me cautious of fixing Boundaries to that Trust. The proper Way will be to determine this and every like Case upon their own Circumstances. What has been urged to take the present Case out of the general Rule, was, that the Conversation to which they would examine Mr. Giffard, was neither in any Cause wherein he was concerned for the Defendant, or relative to any in which he was consulted, or intended to be employed by the Defendant. If so, the Question will be, Whether an Attorney shall be permitted to disclose the general Conversation he had with his Client, without relation to him as his Attorney? Now, admitting the Policy of the Law in protecting Secrets disclosed by the Client to his Attorney, to be, as has been said, in Favour of the Client, and principally for his Service, and that the Attorney is in loco of the Client, and therefore his Trustee, does it follow from thence, that every Thing said by a Client to his Attorney, falls under the same Reason? I own, I think not; because there is not the same Necessity upon the Client to trust him in one Case as in the other; and of this the Court may judge, from the Particulars of the Conversation. Nor do I see any Impropriety in supposing the same Person to be trusted in one Case as an Attorney or Agent, and in another as a common Acquaintance. In the first Instance, the Court will not permit him, though willing, to discover what came to his Knowledge as an Attorney, because it would be in Breach of that Trust which the Law supposes to be necessary between him and his Employer: But where the Client talks to him at large as a Friend, and not in the Way of his Profession, I think the Court is not under the same Obligations to guard such Secrets, though in the Breast of an Attorney. The Case cited of Cutts and Pickering, 1 Vent. 197. restrains it to what came to his Knowledge as Attorney; and so I think is the Case of Lord Say and Seal; the Evidence to which he was produced being to the defective Execution of a Deed, to make a Tenant to the Præcipe for suffering a Recovery, in which the Witness had been employed as Attorney, which was the Secret of his Client's Cause.

The Lord Chief Baron was going to mention the Case of one Hamilton, where he apprehended the Attorney had been examined in Chancery; but being informed he was not, his Lordship proceeded:

What I found myself upon is, the Nature of the Testimony proposed, which appears to me to have been casual Conversation between the Witness and the Earl of Anglesea, which was not necessary to have been communicated to Giffard by his Lordship. And as to the private Trusts between Man and Man, we cannot interpose. Besides, as this was in Part a wicked Secret, it ought not to have been concealed; though, if earlier disclosed, it might have been more for the Credit of the Witness. I therefore think Mr. Giffard may be examined to the Defendant's Declarations concerning the Plaintiff's Person and Title.

Mr. Baron Montague. The prodigious Consequence of the Cause depending before us, hath, very properly, induced the Gentlemen who are on both Sides, to insist upon, and argue at large, every Point arising in the Cause, which could possibly bear the least Debate.—The Reason hath induced the Court to hear gladly, with the utmost Patience and Attention, every thing which could possibly be offered on either Side; and, I think, nothing hath been omitted, which could have been materially offered upon the present Question.

For my own Part, notwithstanding all the Objections which have been raised against the Evidence now under Consideration by the Defendant's Counsel, I still continue of the same Opinion, which I entertained when the Evidence was first offered and objected to; which is, that the Question now before us will receive a very easy, clear, and short Determination, and that in favour of the Evidence proposed: I the rather say so, because I think, that upon the very Principles laid down, and upon the Authority of the very Cases cited by the Defendant's Counsel, it is a Demonstration clear that the Evidence now offered ought to be admitted.

Mr. Recorder hath very properly mentioned the Foundation upon which it hath been held, and is certainly undoubted Law, that Attornies ought to keep inviolably the Secrets of their Clients, viz. That an Increase of legal Business, and the Inability of Parties to transact that Business themselves, made it necessary for them to employ (and as the Law properly expresses it, ponere in loco suo) other Persons who might transact that Business for them.—That this Necessity introduced with it the Necessity of what the Law hath very justly established, an inviolable Secrecy to be observed by Attornies, in order to render it safe for Clients to communicate to their Attornies all proper Instruction for the carrying on those Causes which they found themselves under a Necessity of intrusting to their Care. And if this original Principle be kept constantly in view, I think it cannot be difficult to determine either the present Question, or any other which may arise upon this Head: for upon this Principle, whatever either is, or by the Party concerned can naturally be supposed, necessary to be communicated to the Attorney, in order to the carrying on any Suit or Prosecution, in which he is retained; That the Attorney shall inviolably keep secret.

On the other hand, whatever is not, nor can possibly by any Man living be supposed to be, necessary for that Purpose, That the Attorney is at liberty, and in many Cases, as particularly, I think, in the present Case, the Attorney ought to disclose.

The Declarations of the Defendant to his Attorney, which are now offered to be proved, I shall not mention at large, but shall only take notice of one, which was, that (speaking of Mr. Annesley, the now Lessor of the Plaintiff) he declared, he did not care if it cost him ten thousand Pounds, if he could get him hanged. Does any Man living, who hears these Words pronounced, hesitate one Moment as to the Meaning and Import of them? They speak too plainly to be misunderstood, or doubted of. For God's sake then let us consider, what will be the Consequence of the Doctrine now laid down, and so earnestly contended for, that such a Declaration made by any Person to his Attorney, ought not by that Attorney to be proved? A Man (without any natural Call to it) promotes a Prosecution against another for a Capital Offence—he is desirous and determined, at all Events, to get him hanged—he retains an Attorney to carry on the Prosecution, and makes such a Declaration to him as I have before mentioned, (the Meaning and Intention of which, if the Attorney hath common Understanding about him, it is impossible he should mistake)—he happens to be too honest a Man to engage in such an Affair—he declines the Prosecution—but he must never discover this Declaration, because he was retained as Attorney. This Prosecutor applies in the same Manner to a second, a third, and so on, who still refuse, but are still to keep this inviolably secret:—at last, he finds an Attorney wicked enough to carry this iniquitous Scheme into Execution—and after all, none of these Persons are to be admitted to prove this, in order either to bring the guilty Party to condign Punishment, or to prevent the evil Consequences of his Crime with regard to civil Property. Is this Law? Is this Reason? I think it is absolutely contrary to both.

As the Principles upon which the Defendant's Counsel have argued, so I think likewise the Cases which they have cited make directly against them, and are express Authorities in favour of the Evidence now offered.—In the Case of Cutts and Pickering, in 1 Vent. the Court were of Opinion, that the Solicitor might be sworn to the Discoveries made to him by his Client before his Retainer.—The Meaning of which I take to be, that such Discovery not being made in consequence of the necessary Confidence between Client and Attorney, was therefore not within the Rule of Secrecy: and if the same Reason will hold in the present, or any other given Case, even after a Retainer, the Objection must equally fail. Now I think the same Reason does hold in the present Case, because the Declaration now offered to be proved does not appear, nor could possibly by the Defendant be supposed, to be a necessary Instruction, or Communication between him and his Attorney, in order to the better carrying on either that Prosecution, or any other legal Business in which he had retained that Attorney.—So that this Declaration, after the Retainer, stands entirely, in my Apprehension, on the same Footing as if it had been made before. For to say that the Confidence between Client and Attorney (to which inviolable Secrecy is to be annexed) is to be taken in the Latitude laid down by the Defendant's Counsel, is, in my Apprehension, to say that which hath no Foundation in Law, nor the least Colour in point of Reason.

The other Case which was cited by the Defendant's Counsel, that of Lord Sey and Seal, is, I think, still infinitely stronger against them; and every Reason which the Court in that Case proceeded upon concludes directly in favour of the Evidence which is the Subject of the present Debate.

In that Case the Court were of Opinion (and I think most rightly), that the Privilege of an Attorney is the Privilege of his Client; (and so I have always understood the Law to be) but, notwithstanding that, the Court admitted the very Attorney, who had been intrusted in suffering the common Recovery, to prove that the Deed to lead the Uses of that very Recovery was antedated. And what were the Reasons upon which the Court proceeded? The first mentioned in the Book is, that "the Time of executing the Deed could not be called the Secret of his Client." Now, I think, in this Case, the Declaration offered to be proved, can still infinitely less be considered as the Secret of the Client. The next Thing mentioned in the Report of that Case now produced, is, that "it was a thing he might come to the Knowledge of without his Client's acquainting him;" and that, I think, will hold equally strong in the present Case. Giffard might have heard from others, that Lord Anglesea had made such a Declaration; or Lord Anglesea might himself equally have made it to Giffard, altho' he had not retained him as an Attorney, it not being, as I have before mentioned, a necessary Instruction, nor what could possibly by the Defendant be thought so, for the better carrying on the Business in which he was retained; and consequently, not proceeding from that Confidence which is necessary between Client and Attorney, and to which, only because, and so far as it is necessary, the Privilege of Secrecy hath been annexed. The last thing mentioned in the Book is that the Fact offered to be proved, "was of that Nature," that an Attorney concerned, or any body else, might inform the Court of it. Now I cannot help thinking from these Words, that one Ingredient in the Determination of the Court, was, that the Proof offered in that Case was the Proof of a criminal Fact: If it were, that Reason will hold infinitely stronger in the present Case. The Declaration now offered to be proved, is of that Nature, and so highly criminal, that, in my Opinion, Mankind is interested in the Discovery; and whoever it was made to, Attorney or not Attorney, lies under an Obligation to Society in general, prior and superior to any Obligation he can lie under to a particular Individual, to make it known.

I speak this without Prejudice: God knows whether such Declarations, as have been mentioned, were, or were not, made by the now Defendant; but, when we are debating the Propriety of the Evidence, we are, during the Debate (and for Argument's sake only) to suppose it true: If they shall afterwards appear in Proof, I think they will be exceedingly material for the Consideration of the Jury; and do therefore most heartily concur in the Opinion given by my Lord Chief Baron, that the Evidence now offered ought to be admitted.

Mr. Baron Dawson.] If there had been no Objection made on the Part of the Defendant that the Attorney had been employed by him, the Plaintiff would have had a Right prima facie for his being admitted a Witness; therefore to deprive the Plaintiff of this Right, it must be shewn, that the Particulars offered here to be given in Evidence came to the Knowledge of Giffard merely as Attorney for the Defendant. Nothing that came properly to the Knowledge of the Attorney in defence of his Client's Cause ought to be revealed. I will suppose an unknowing Man to have twenty Deeds by him, and he delivers them all to his Attorney to see which were relative to the Suit; he looks them over, and finds not half of them to be relative thereto; I apprehend the Attorney is not compellable to disclose the Contents of any one of those Deeds; neither do I think it necessary that there should be a Suit actually depending. If I have an Apprehension that a Man intends a Suit against me, and I employ an Attorney to draw a State of my Case from my Papers, though there is no Cause depending, there I apprehend it would be a Breach of Trust to disclose the Contents of those Papers, and that the Attorney ought not to be admitted to disclose what has been so intrusted to him: And I think the Court must, in this Case, be satisfied, first, that what came to this Man's Knowledge was not necessary to his Client's Affairs; and in the next place, that the Client could not think it necessary. The Cause to be carried on, was a Prosecution for the killing of a Man; what was necessary for the carrying on that Prosecution, I think the Attorney ought not to disclose. I think further, that any thing that the Client thought necessary, ought likewise not to be disclosed. The Motive for carrying on the Prosecution against the Plaintiff is said to be, because he has a Right to the Estate the Defendant was in possession of. Can any Man think that this was necessary to tell the Attorney, or that the Defendant could have thought it so? What was necessary, or what a Man might have thought necessary, ought not to be disclosed. But if the Defendant in this Case, has gone any thing further, he has trusted him, not as an Attorney, but as an Acquaintance. The Attorney is to keep secret what comes to him as an Attorney; but this Conversation I don't think was necessary for carrying on the Cause. I agree therefore with my Lord Chief Baron and my Brother Mounteney, that the Evidence is proper to be given.

I think it proper at this Time to mention, that I have considered the Point of Evidence that was proposed Yesterday, and if it was now to be determined, I should be of Opinion to allow the Evidence; and if the Counsel for the Defendant should so please, they may take a Bill of Exceptions.

— Mr. JOHN GIFFARD sworn.

Q. Do you know the present Earl of Anglesea?

Mr. Giffard. Yes, Sir.

Q. Pray, Sir, do you know the present Plaintiff, Mr. Annesley?

A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Pray had you at any time any Conversation, and when, with the present Lord Anglesea concerning the Plaintiff, or his Title to the Lands in this Ejectment, or any other Lands?

A. It was some time between the 7th of December 1741, and May 1742, my Lord Anglesea had an Appeal from this Kingdom to the House of Lords in England between Charles Annesley, Esq; and him, which Appeal was heard on the 10th of March 1741.

Court. Answer the Question directly.

A. I am only giving you the Reasons of this Discourse.

My Lord Anglesea having that Suit, and a good many others, with my Lord Haversham, Francis Annesley, and Mrs. Simpson, he was very uneasy at it. He said, he would be very glad to send to the present Plaintiff, and if he would give him 2 or 3000l. a Year, he would surrender up to him the Titles of Anglesea and Altham, and the Estate, and go over to France and live there; and then he should be much easier and happier than to be tormented with those People that were suing of him, for that he would rather his Brother's Son should have it than any other Person.

D. Go on.

A. For if Jemmy had the Estate on those Terms, he should live much happier and easier in France than he was here, as he was tormented by Law; for it was his Right, and he'd surrender it to him, (for he did not value the Title) rather than Frank and Charles Annesley, and those that were striving to take it from him should have it; and that he would send for a Gentleman to teach him him the French Tongue, is qualified him to live in that Kingdom; and accordingly he sent for one Mr. Stephen Hayes.

Q. What is he?

A. He was an Officer in the French Service, as Ninety himself and my Lord told me; and my Lord had him in the House a considerable Time, on purpose to converse with him in French.

Q. Did you ever see him there?—A. I did, my Lord, forty Times.

Q. Can you recollect any particular Time when this Conversation happened?—A. I told you, my Lord, it was about March 1741, when he had the Appeal in England.

Q. Was it before or after the Determination of that Appeal?

A. I believe it was both before and after; the Appeal was determined the 10th of March, and he continued in that Resolution till May 1742.

Q. And, pray, what altered his Resolution then?

A. Why, on the first of May Mr. Annesley had shot a Man at Staines; it was on Saturday, as appears by the Indictment and Coroner's Inquest; upon which, the second of May, my Lord sent for me, and ordered me to go to Staines, and to inquire into the Affair, and to collect the Evidence, and carry on the Prosecution, and to follow the Directions of Mr. Gordon and Mr. Gordon, with the Assistance of one Mr. Jans, who was a Surgeon; which I accordingly did. My Lord told me further, that I should follow their Directions, and in some small Time after (perhaps three or four Days) told me, That they had consulted together, and advised him not to be seen to converse with me, for that it was not proper for him to appear in the Prosecution, for fear of its hurting him in the Cause that was coming on between him and the Plaintiff; and, that he did not care if it cost him 10,000*l.* if he could get the Plaintiff hanged; for then he should be easy in his Title and Estate.

Q. After he told you that he did not care if it cost him 10,000*l.* if he could get the Plaintiff hanged, for then he should be easy in his Titles and Estates, who laid out the Money in carrying on this Prosecution of this unfortunate Man?

A. Money came privately from Mr. Jans; my Lord told me, He was determined, as he was advised, not to appear in it himself, but that I should apply, from Time to Time, to Mr. Jans, and Mr. Jans should, from Time to Time, supply me, for that he had ordered him to provide Money; and accordingly I had Money from him.

Q. What was Jans to my Lord Anglesea?

A. His Companion, and Manager, and Agent, and managed every Thing for him.

Cross-Examination.

Q. Repeat again the Time when you first had this Discourse with the Defendant, of his desiring Mr. Annesley to be sent to.

A. Some Time before the 10th of March 1741, we had the first Colloquium; we had the like Discourse, at sundry Times, between the 7th of December 1741, and May 1742.

Q. When was the first Colloquium, as you call it?

A. The first Time was some Time before the 10th of March, 1741.

Q. Where was Mr. Annesley at this Time?

A. I don't know, I never saw him at that Time.

Q. Do you know whether he was in the Kingdom of England or not?

A. I cannot tell. I believe he was.

Q. Do you know for what Purpose it was that my Lord said these Words to you? Was it with an Intent that you should apply to Mr. Annesley?—A. No, I don't believe it was.

Q. Pray now, Sir, do you know of any Steps that were taken in order to this Accommodation that my Lord desired?

A. I don't know of any, Sir.

Q. Pray, Sir, how soon after this 10th of March 1741, was it, that you first saw this Frenchman with my Lord?

A. Near about that Time; I cannot tell exactly. Frenchman he was not, I believe he was an Irish Gentleman, a Tenant's Son of my Lord's.

Q. How soon was it that my Lord said this after the 10th of March?

A. Near about the Time it was.

Q. Had my Lord Mr. Hayes in the House with him?

A. He had him in the House for that Purpose, of learning the French Tongue.

Q. Did you ever hear any Thing of my Lord's applying for an Accommodation?

A. It was very often talked in the House, Sir, that one Mr. Paterfon and one Mr. Mac Kercher should be sent to.

Q. Do you know of any Steps that were taken towards an Accommodation?

A. I know, of myself, of no Steps in order to an Accommodation.

Q. Sir, I see you have refreshed your Memory with Papers and Memorandums as to Periods of Time, are they of your own Hand-writing?

A. They are.

Q. I should be glad to know when it was that you put down those Periods of Time in Writing?

A. Sir, I put down the Days as they came on. I could shew you every Day where I was for seven Years last past.

Q. Were they wrote about the Time the Transactions happened?

A. I always did, since I was a Practitioner of the Law, keep a Day-book of every thing I did; and the first thing I do in a Morning is, to set down the preceding Day's Work.

Q. You say, my Lord used some Words to this Purpose, that he did not care if it cost him 10,000*l.* if he could get the Plaintiff hanged; and you were the Agent, under Garden and Gordon, to carry on that Prosecution?

A. I was.

Q. How came you to be employed?

A. The Reason I was sent for was, that I had been a Coroner myself in the County of Devon for some Years (a Dozen or Fourteen), and was thought a proper Person because of that.

Q. Did you go on with that Prosecution till there was a Verdict?

A. I did, Sir.

Q. Pray now, did you inform yourself of the Nature of that Fact at any Time before the Trial came on?

A. I attended the Coroner's Inquest, Sir, and did inform myself of it. I collected Evidences, and drew the Brief. I have the Brief here.

Q. Did you see, or had you a Copy of, the Examinations upon which the Indictment was found?

A. I was present at the Examination of the Witnesses before the Coroner, and took some Notes of my own at that Time, which I have with me.

Q. How was the Indictment found?

A. The Indictment was upon the Coroner's Inquest.

Q. Were there any Examinations upon which the Bill of Indictment was found?

A. The Coroner only took their Examinations short, as Memorandums. The Bill was found upon the Evidence of the Son of the Defendant and others, vide ante, before the Grand Jury.

Q. Were there, to your Knowledge, any Examinations taken in Writing?

A. I was told that Sir Thomas Reynell took some Examinations in Writing; I applied to him for them, but he refused me; I applied to him a second Time for them, when he told me that he had consulted with Sir John Gifford, and that no Examinations should be shown till they were produced in Court.

Q. Were the same Witnesses that were examined before the Coroner examined in Court upon the Trial?

A. Most of them were, and a great many more.

Q. Were they not all examined?

A. I believe they all were. A Matter of forty People were examined.

Q. Was your Brief framed from the Depositions of those People that were examined before the Coroner?

A. My Brief was framed from the Examinations of Witnesses that I took myself.

Q. Pray now, did the Case appear, for the most part, to be the same upon the Trial, as upon the Examinations before the Coroner?

A. No, Sir, it differed vastly.

Q. What was the finding on the Coroner's Inquest?

A. Wilful Murder.

Q. Recollect some one material Circumstance wherein the Evidence varied?—A. I tell you, Sir,---

Q. Was the Evidence stronger on the Coroner's Inquest than it was in Court on the Trial?

A. Yes, it was stronger against Mr. Annesley, because the main Evidence was taken off upon the Trial, for Reasons---

Q. Had my Lord Anglesea any Hand in taking off the main Evidence?

A. No.

Q. Who then took it off?

A. It was the Prisoner who took it off. His Evidence was rendered invalid; his Evidence was given in Court, but his Evidence was discredited in Court by Reason of his Character; and there was a strong Reason given for it in Court by a Witness.

Q. What was that Witness's Name?—A. It was Paul Keating.

Q. Were there any Persons produced upon that Trial to the Character of Paul Keating?—A. Yes.

Q. Was Paul Keating for or against the Prisoner?

A. He was for the Prisoner.

Q. Who was the main Witness that swore against the Plaintiff on his Trial?—A. It was John Egglestone.

Q. Had you any Conversation with that John Egglestone before the Trial, touching his Evidence?

A. I had. He was brought to me by one Williams, that keeps the White-Horse in Piccadilly, and he varied from his Evidence that he gave before Sir Thomas Reynell.

Q. Was you present when he gave that Evidence?—A. I was not.

Q. How do you know it?

A. It was declared so in Court, and you asked me what passed in Court.

Q. Tell us, whether this Fact, for which Mr. Annesley was prosecuted, was committed by Day or Night?

A. By Day. The Fact was committed at Staines.

Q. What Time of the Day was it?—A. As it appeared upon the Examinations, one or two o'Clock in the Afternoon.

Q. Did it appear to have been done in a publick Place?

A. In a Meadow.

Q. Did it appear on the Trial, that there were any Number of Persons present?

A. There were present, John Egglestone, John Fisher, and one John Bettefworth, and one more, I think.

Q. Were there any other of the Witnesses that appeared on that Prosecution that were discredited on account of their Character, besides Egglestone?

A. There was a Variation in their Testimony, but that they were discredited for their Character, I can't say.

Q. What Time was the Trial?

A. The Trial, I believe, was the 14th of July 1742.

Q. What Time was the Coroner's Inquest held?

A. The 4th of May 1742.

Q. Pray now, when my Lord Anglesea said to you, That he did not care if it cost him 10,000*l.* to get the Plaintiff hanged, did you understand that it was his Resolution to destroy him if he could?—A. I did, Sir.

Q. Did you advise my Lord Anglesea not to carry on that Prosecution?

A. I did not advise him not to carry it on; I did not presume to undertake to advise him.

Q. Did you say any thing in answer to my Lord, and what, when he told you, he did not care if it cost him 10,000*l.* if he could get the Plaintiff hanged?—A. I don't know any particular Answer that I made him.

Q. Did you approve or disapprove of his Expressions and Design together?—A. I can't say that I did either.

Q. Did not you go on as effectually after, with the Prosecution, as you could?—A. I did, to be sure, Sir. Indeed, I advised my Lord Anglesea not to appear upon the Trial.

Q. Since my Lord had told you, that he would agree with the Plaintiff, and go to France, and disappoint Charles Annesley, how came you to tell him, that if he hanged this Pretender, it would frustrate his Design and the Expectations he had?

A. In answer to what you say (that if the Pretender, as you call him, were hanged, there would be a greater Fund left than 2 or 3000*l.* a Year to go abroad with), it certainly would destroy that Project of disappointing Mess. Annesleys; but then it would put a greater Estate in his own Pocket.

Q. Was not the Intention of the Prosecution to disappoint the Annesleys?

A. No, the Intention was to put this Man out of the Way, that he might enjoy the Estate easy and quiet.

Q. When my Lord Anglesea said, that he would not care if it cost him 10,000*l.* so he could get the Plaintiff hanged, did you apprehend from the

Q. that he would be willing to go to that Expence in the Prosecution?
A. I did.
Q. Did you suppose from thence that he would dispose of that 10,000 l. in any Shape to bring about the Death of the Plaintiff?—A. I did.
Q. Did you not apprehend that to be a most wicked Crime?—A. I did.
Q. If so, how could you, who set yourself out as a Man of Business, engage in that Project, without making any Objection to it?
A. I may as well ask you, how you came to be engaged for the Defendant in this Suit.
Q. Was it before, or after, the Coroner's Inquest, that my Lord Anglesea told you, he did not care if it cost him Ten thousand Pounds to get the Plaintiff hang'd?
A. I can't charge my Memory; it was there, or thereabouts.
Q. Look in your Diary, and see.
A. I'll look in my Diary. I cannot exactly tell you, Sir. The Second of May was the Day I was sent for to my Lord, at the White Horse in Piccadilly; and I believe one Thompson Gregory was sent for me, and with a great deal of Joy they said, that Mr. Annesley had killed a Man, and would be hang'd. The 3d of May I went to Colebrooke, within three Miles of Staines. The 4th of May I went to Staines, and the Inquest was held there.
Q. Was it after that 4th of May it was held?
A. I came home the 5th, and I believe it was that Day; for my Lord met me at Hainlow, in his Coach-and-Six to know how Things went on.
Q. Was it at that Meeting he said this to you?—A. I cannot tell. It was within a Day or two, up or down. I did not take particular Notice.
Q. Did you ever enter down in Writing any Conversation between you?
A. I have made Memorandums about my Business, but private Conversation in Company I never entered in Writing.
Q. Was it not upon the Day he sent for you to go down to Staines that he said these Words?
A. I can't say more than I know. I believe it was not. And I believe it was after, or just upon, holding the Coroner's Inquest.
Q. Did not you understand from thence, that he would lay out that Money, in any Shape, to compass the Death of this Man?
A. I cannot tell. But my Lord is very apt to be flashy in his Discourse.
Q. Did not you apprehend it to be a bad Purpose to lay out Money to compass the Death of another Man?
A. I do not know but I did. I do believe it, Sir: But I was not to undertake that bad Purpose. If there was any dirty Work, I was not concerned in it.
Q. If you did believe this, I ask you, how came you to engage in this Prosecution without Objection?—A. I make a Distinction between carrying on a Prosecution, and compassing the Death of a Man.
Q. How came you to make that Distinction?
A. I may as well ask, How the Counsel came to plead the Cause?
Q. Did you ever mention to any of your Counsel, that my Lord made that Declaration?—A. I did not.
A. If you had told any of them that my Lord made that Declaration, would they have appeared for you?
A. I can't tell whether they would or not.
Q. Do you believe any honest Man would?
A. Yes, I believe they would, or else I would not have carried it on, Sir. And I do assure you, it is the only Cause I was concerned in at the Old Bailey in my Life, and shall be the last.
Q. Don't you believe, that my Lord's engaging in that Prosecution was, because the Man set up a Title to his Estate, and not on account of his killing the Man at Staines?
A. I believe it was; and believed it then, and do now.
Q. Do not you believe it was an unlawful Purpose?
A. I cannot help that. I was employed by the Church-warden of Staines to prosecute. I should not have been concerned upon any Account whatsoever, had not I the Sanction of the Coroner's Inquest for Wilful Murder, which I thought a Justification of the Prosecution.
Q. When was it that the Church-warden employed you?
A. The 8th of May, 1742. He wrote a Letter to me, "Pray prosecute James Annesley, &c." Signed Stephen Bolton.
Q. Was not this after my Lord declared he would spend Ten thousand Pounds to get him hang'd?—A. It was.
Q. Sir, I ask you, was there any Money given to any Witness to appear and give Evidence?—A. I don't know of any.
Q. What Sum was given for their Attendance?
A. About Half-a-Crown a Day for their Attendance. If there was any dirty Work, I knew nothing of it.
Q. Are you paid your Bill of Costs?—A. Not all of it.
Q. How much does it come to?
A. The Prosecution cost Eight hundred Pounds: But the Total remaining due to me is Three hundred and Thirty Pounds.
Q. Was there any body present, when you had this Conversation with my Lord?
A. No, I believe not; for we used to converse together alone frequently.
Q. Was Mr. Jans ever present?—A. No, never.
Q. Was Thompson Gregory present when he went and brought you to my Lord?—A. He came with me.
Q. Did he remain in the Room?—A. I believe he did, all that Night.
Q. Was this the 2d of May?—A. Yes.
Q. Had you that Day any Discourse about the Sum of Money that my Lord would spend?—A. No, not that Day.
Q. Was it by your Advice and Directions that that Letter was sent to you by the Church-warden of Staines?
A. No, it was by Garden's and Gordon's Advice.
Q. Was you privy to it?
A. Yes, I was. And this Letter was advised in order that the Defendant might not appear in the Prosecution.
Q. Did not you know this was to give a Colour?—A. I did.
Q. Did you think this was for a good Purpose?
A. Mr. Garden, Gordon, Jans, and Lord Anglesea had a Consultation, and it was thought proper that I should have another Person to my Assistance, because they would not appear, and my Instructions were, to send this Order to the Church-warden and get it signed, that my Lord should not appear in it; and the Reason was, that if my Lord should appear in it, they thought it would be attended with ill Consequences.

Q. Did you know at the time of the Trial that Mr. Annesley intended to sue for the Title and Estate of Lord Anglesea?—A. It was reported he would, that he intended it; and this was in order to prevent it.
Q. Do you know one Mr. Thomas Smith?—A. Yes, Sir.
Q. I desire to know, if Mr. Annesley gets this Suit, whether you will be paid your Bill of Costs?
A. No, Sir, if he gets it, I shall lose every Shilling of it.
Q. Where do you lodge?—A. At one Parsons's in King-Street.
Q. Are you acquainted with Thomas Smith the Cabinet-Maker?
A. I am very well acquainted with him.
Q. Had you any Discourse with him about this Evidence that you have given To-day?—A. I have had some Discourse with him about it.
Q. Did not you tell him that you had been ill used, and that that provoked you to give in this Evidence?
A. No, I never did; for he knew that I had been ill used. I will tell you what I have said to him: That it was a wrong Step in my Lord; for this Bill of Costs of mine would never have come to light, had not I been obliged to sue for my Right. That my Lord filed a Bill in the Exchequer against me in England, to disclose what Business I had done for him, and that I was obliged in my Justification to annex in a Schedule this my Bill of Costs.
Q. Did not you look upon my Lord Anglesea as your real Client in the Prosecution of the Plaintiff?
A. He promised to pay me, but I did not look upon him as my immediate Employer; for my Lord told me he had directed Mr. Jans to employ me.
Q. Did you look upon Mr. Jans at this Time as your Client?
A. I did look upon him as my Client.
Q. Do not you believe that my Lord had these Discourses with you as his Attorney?
A. No, Sir; for I knew I was never to be concerned in the Cause.
Q. In what Light then did you look upon that Discourse?
A. I looked upon it to be a Discourse to me as a Friend.
Q. Was not the Discourse with you on the 4th and 5th of May, as his Attorney or Solicitor?—A. I looked upon him to be my Client.
Q. And therefore did not he look upon you as his Solicitor?
A. I cannot tell what he did.
Q. Did he meet you as his Friend, or Solicitor?
A. Sir, there was another Man with me.
Q. Were not you employed by him to see the Inquest held?
A. I was. I wish you would produce any Person to attempt to prove that I am a dishonest Man.
Q. How long have you been a Practitioner?
A. I have had a great many Clients in the Course of twenty and odd-Years.
Q. Do not you look upon it as a Rule of Prudence and Honour, for Attornies to keep religiously the Secrets of their Clients?
A. I do, indeed.
Q. Do not you think, that if a Solicitor or an Attorney discloses these Secrets, he is a very bad Man?—A. I think he is.
Q. And how came you to disclose this Secret?
A. I would not have disclosed this, if I had not been obliged to do it; and the Reason which obliged me to do it, was, my Lord's filing a Bill in the Exchequer to disclose what Business I had done for him; when I was obliged to answer the Interrogatories I am now asked.
Q. You said my Lord Anglesea was a very flashy Man in his Discourse; did not you say so?—A. Yes.
Q. Is not he a Man subject to Passion and Heat, and hasty and rash in his Expressions?—A. He is.
Q. At the Time that he talked to you about giving up these Things to Jemmy, was not he chagrined, and in a Passion?
A. He was far from being in a Passion, and asked my Opinion whether it was proper for him to do it.
Q. Was not the Reason he gave this, that he did not value his Titles, and should live easier in France?—A. It was.
Q. Was it a conscientious Scruple, or his Desire of Ease?
A. I believe it was both. The Reason of it was, he was extremely angry with the Annesleys, because they pulled away Money too fast from him.
Q. Was not this said out of the Effect of his Chagrin at this Time, or out of Spleen to Charles Annesley?
A. No, I believe he said it for his own Sake, for his own Advantage; for the Cause then coming on with the present Plaintiff, made him desirous to be easy.
Q. Was there any Intercourse or Treaty set on foot between him and Mr. Annesley?—A. I cannot tell: I have answered that already.
Q. At the Time this Discourse happened, about the 10th of March 1741, and several other Times, can you recollect whether any one was present?
A. None at all, Sir; we were constantly alone; but I heard Mr. Jans several times advise him to leave the three Kingdoms.
Q. In your Answer to the Bill in the Exchequer, did you insert that Declaration that my Lord made to you?
A. Sir, I wonder you would ask that Question; it has no relation to the Bill.
Q. Did you ever tell any Person that my Lord made that Declaration?
A. Yes, I have sworn it before in London.
Q. Before whom?—A. Before the Examiner.
Q. Did you mention it at any other time before you were examined?
A. Yes.
Q. To whom?
A. Upon having the Copy of this Bill, the Managers of Mr. Annesley came to me to know if I knew any thing of this Matter.
Q. What Managers?
A. Mr. Kercher, Mr. Paterfon, and two or three more.
Q. Was you served with a Subpœna?—A. I have it here.
Q. Where did you receive it?
A. Here, Sir. They applied to me to go to Ireland, and said I must go; and said, Will you give us the Trouble of sending you a Subpœna? and I told them I would not give them the Trouble.

Q. Did

Q. Did not you say that you would not have given Evidence here, except you had been forced to it?

A. Why, Sir, is not that a Force? If a Man applies to me, and says, he will subpoena me, must not I obey that Subpoena?

Q. Did you ever hear my Lord Anglesea say any Thing about the stealing of a Silver Spoon?

A. I have heard my Lord Anglesea say, that this Pretender, as he called him, was transported for stealing a Silver Spoon.

Q. When did you hear that?

A. At the Time of the first Discourse between us.

Q. Did you ever hear it more than once?

A. Yes, fifty Times, I believe.

Q. Can you recollect any one Time of those fifty Times, and who was present?

A. I cannot recollect; but it was between the 7th of December 1741, and the 14th of July 1742.

Q. Upon your Oath, did you ever, in any Conversation between my Lord Anglesea and you, hear my Lord say, that the Plaintiff was a Bastard?

A. I have. I have heard him say, he was his own Bastard. I have heard him say, that he was his Brother's Bastard. I have heard him say, That he got the Wench with Child, and made her lay it upon his Brother, because he was better able to maintain it than himself.

Q. Did you hear him say that as often as you heard him speak of the Silver Spoon?

A. That is not possible for me to charge my Memory with. I have heard him say both very often. When he said he got him transported, he said he stole the Silver Spoon.

Q. Was any one present when he said this?

A. Yes, I will tell you one, who said he was in the Bed with her along with my Lord, one Rolph.

Q. Was Rolph present?—A. Rolph was present.

Q. At what Place?—A. I believe in my Lord Anglesea's Lodgings.

Q. Where?—A. In London; either there, or at a Tavern.

Q. Who did you hear this from?—A. I heard Rolph say this.

Q. Was Rolph one of the Company at the Tavern?—A. He was.

Q. Did he sit down at Table with you?

A. I believe it was in the Morning, at my Lord's Lodgings in Bury-Street, at the Time of Breakfast, now I recollect me of it.

Q. What was it my Lord said then?

A. What do you say to this, says he? Here is Rolph says, he was in the Bed at the same Time, and knows the Pretender is a Bastard.

Q. Was this when he mentioned the stealing the Silver Spoon?

A. I believe it was at the same Time.

The Evidence closed for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Attorney General, (St. George Caulfield, Esq.) opens the Defendant's Evidence.

May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury,

I am Counsel for the Defendant, the Earl of Anglesea. You have heard a great deal of Evidence carried on for several Days, entirely taken up in the Examination of Witnesses on the Part of the Plaintiff.

It is necessary, before I mention the Nature of our Proofs, to take Notice of the Method observed in producing the Evidence that has been already given, in order to attend the Gentlemen of the other Side in the same Method.

Though they were very sensible, that this Fact, if true, must admit of the clearest Proof in the Affirmative, yet, they were pleased to begin, as I thought, at a considerable Distance from the Point, and took up much Time in examining Witnesses to shew, that it was probable, or at least not improbable, that my Lady Altham might have a Child, and gave Evidence, such as it was, that my Lady Altham had been with Child, and had one or two Miscarriages before the pretended Birth of the Plaintiff.

They afterwards came more directly to the Question, and called Witnesses to prove the actual Birth of the Plaintiff; that it was at Dunmaine, in the County of Wexford, in April or May 1715, (though one of their Witnesses of the best Appearance swore it to be in September 1715, and gave very particular Reasons for it) that there were great Rejoicings, a publick Christening, who the Sponsors were, the nursing, and bringing home again of the Child, when nursed, to the House of Dunmaine, and his Stay there with my Lord his Father, 'till about three Years old; this seems to me a material, and indeed the most material Part of the Case; the Jury will therefore recollect the Inconsistencies and Contradictions of the Witnesses to these Facts, and judge of the Truth and Probability of the Evidence, by comparing the Nature of the Facts testified, with the Witnesses produced to prove them, how likely, how possible, that such Persons as these, and these alone, should be able to prove a Fact of this Nature.

They proceeded afterwards to give an Account of this Child in the several Places where my Lord Altham had resided after his Separation from my Lady; at Kinna, at Carrickduffe, and in Dublin, in the several Places where he lodged there, and I think one of the Witnesses produced, late last Night, gave some Account of him during my Lord's Residence at Inchicore: Whether this Evidence has Substance and Strength in it, or does not rather consist of loose Expressions, and the private Apprehensions of People, who knew but very little of the Family, is a Matter that will be observed upon by those Gentlemen, whose Province it is.

It was judged necessary, in the next Place, to shew, how this unfortunate, unoffending Child came to be forsaken and quite neglected by my Lord his Father; for they were sensible it would be proved, that my Lord considered him only as his Bastard, and even doubted, whether he was justly laid to his Door; you remember what Sort of Witnesses were called to give this Account, and what the Proof was. It is not my Business to make Observations.

I cannot but think the Evidence that ensued was produced, and judged to be necessary, from a Consciousness, that all their former Proofs were in themselves insufficient to establish this Fact; for after positive swearing, and so much of it, what Occasion could there be to enter into Evidence, that at most could induce but a Presumption? But this Evidence was, it seems, withal very proper to captivate, and therefore it was they called Witnesses to prove, that the Defendant, the Earl, did (not in any Hurry, but about three Weeks after his Brother's Death) employ some Bailiffs to seize this Boy, then publick in Town, and at Noon-Day to carry him by Force on Ship-board, in order to be transported, and that my Lord himself assisted in it. But you, Gentlemen, will consider of the whole Proof as to this Transaction, and judge, whether it does not very plainly contradict and refute itself, and shew, that this Person did of himself desire, and in the usual regular Way procure an Opportunity of going abroad, without the least Interposition on the Part of the Earl. They then called a single Witness to shew my Lord was so sensible of the Plaintiff's Right, for this is the Turn they give it, that taking Advantage of a Misfortune that happened to befall him, his killing a Man by mere Accident, the Earl had him indicted and prosecuted for that Fact, in order to have him capitally convicted, and so to put him out of the Way; and to conclude all with a finishing Stroke, this same Witness tells you, that the Earl confessed the Estate, and Honours, and all were the Plaintiff's Right, and that he had a full Purpose to strike up a Bargain with him. If the Earl did at all interpose in this Prosecution, it will be shewn to you in proper Time, that the Inference drawn from such a Piece of Misconduct is by no Means just; and we shall insist, that the Witness being entirely unsupported as to this Fact, had, of his own shewing, too great a Share in the Transaction, to be capable of deserving of Credit, as to this, or any other Matter of Fact.

This then, in a few Words, is the Scope and general Tendency of their Evidence; but how these Circumstances and Facts have been proved, by whom, with what Circumstances of Probability, and how just their Conclusions, are Matters that might well deserve the Consideration of the Jury, though no Evidence was to be offered on our Part, by comparing it with what might be expected, and must have been in their Power, if the Fact really was, as they would now have it thought to be.

We apprehend it will be material to our Defence, before we enter into other Proofs, to state to your Lordship and the Jury the Pedigree of this Family, shortly to open somewhat of the Settlements in the Family, their Prospects and Expectations, as well as the Circumstances of the Fortune in Possession at the Time of this supposed Birth; which will shew that a legitimate Son of my Lord Altham (supposing there was a Desire to conceal it, which is not pretended) must have been a Matter of such Notoriety, as that the Proof of it at this Day could not possibly admit of the least Difficulty.

Arthur, the first Earl of Anglesea, had a considerable Family Estate, and upon the Settlement of the Kingdom at the Time of the Restoration made great Additions to it; his Credit at Court, and the Condition of the Times, gave him, as it did to many others, an Opportunity to do so: this Estate, taken together, does, as I am informed, far exceed any other now in the Kingdom: this Earl, Arthur, had Issue five Sons, James, Altham, afterwards created Lord Altham, Richard, Arthur, and Charles.

On the Marriage of his eldest Son James, with a Lady of the Roland Family, he settled the greatest Part of his Estate in the usual Manner, with Limitations over to his other Sons, and their Issue, successively, in Tail Male, and soon after died.

James, his eldest Son, also died, leaving Issue of this Marriage, three Sons, James, John, and Arthur.

Altham, the second Son of Arthur the first Earl, died without Issue, and his Honour devolved Upon Richard the third Son; and this Richard Lord Altham had Issue, Arthur, late Lord Altham, and Richard, the present Earl of Anglesea.

Arthur, the fourth Son of the first Earl Arthur, died without Issue; and Charles, the fifth Son, died, leaving Issue Mr. Charles Annesley, whom we all know.

My Lord, James, the eldest Son of Earl James, and Grandson to Earl Arthur, being in Possession of the Honours and Estate of the Family, he levied Fines, and suffered Recoveries of a great Part of this Estate, and in the Year 1701 made several Wills and Codicils disposing of it. By the first of these Wills, dated May 14, 1701, after the Limitations to his Brothers, on default of Issue-Male in them, he devised his Estate to his Uncle Richard, Lord Altham, the Defendant's Father, and the Heirs-Male of his Body, and in default of such Issue, to his Uncle Charles Annesley, and the Heirs-Male of his Body. On the 9th of December following, he made another Will, and limited the Estate in the same Manner; after recollecting that his Uncle Richard, Lord Altham, died some little Time before, he apprehended it would be wrong to let his Name stand in his Will, and therefore, in the Will of December, drew a Line across his Name, and instead of Richard, wrote over it Arthur, and then the Limitation stood to Arthur, Lord Altham, and the Heirs-Male of his Body; by which Alteration Richard, the younger Brother, the now Defendant, stood excluded from the Succession. After this he made several Codicils, which I have not read, but by some of them, the Will of the 14th of May is recited and established, by others the altered Will that was in December, but by the last of these Codicils, the Will of May 14, 1701, is, as we apprehend, clearly set up and established. This we shall shew, if not admitted, from the Wills and Codicils that are now on the Table.

Soon after this, Earl James died without Issue-Male; his Brother John also died without Issue-Male, and Arthur the youngest Brother succeeded to the Honours and Estate. From this Confusion in these Wills and Codicils it remained a Matter of great Doubt, if the late Earl Arthur, the late Lord Altham, should both die without Issue-Male, of which there was no Prospect, who should succeed to the Estate, whether the present Earl, under the first Will of May 1701, or Mr. Charles Annesley, under the altered Will in December 1701; but the general Opinion was, and was the Apprehension of the late Earl himself, that the present Earl stood excluded. A Son of the late Lord Altham would have made this Question unnecessary, for clearly he must have succeeded to these great Honours and to this vast Estate. Such a Son, and such a Birth, must therefore be an Event, as of great Consequence, so of great Notoriety; how could it be unknown, or known only to such as you have seen, in a Country so peopled, and, as I may say, in the Midst of their own Estates?

But it will appear further, that the late Lord Altham was possessed himself of an Estate of about 1200 l. a Year; the Town of New Ross, in the Neighbourhood of Dunmaine, was Part of it; this Estate, on the Failure of Issue-Male in him, was to go, not to his Brother the Defendant, but to the late Lord Anglesea. It will appear, that this Estate, of Lord Altham, was entered upon and enjoyed by the late Earl of Anglesea, until his Death.

Is it possible then there could be such a Son of Lord Altham, and the late Earl know nothing of it? Could he be such a Stranger to his own Family? Nay, though a Stranger in other Respects, the Lord Altham and his Family, and his Family-Affairs, made too much Noise in the World to suppose it possible. There is no Pretence, that the late Earl was concerned in any iniquitous Scheme. If he knew of this Child, can it be supposed he would do him such an Injury? In Policy, if from no better Principle, sure he would have more Regard to his own Character.

My Lord, we shall shew it further in Proof, that the late Lord Altham, for particular Reasons, was desirous to have a Son, and would very greatly have found his Account in it, being in Remainder to the Anglesea Estate; as I said, often in Distress for Money, one Method of raising it was by the Sales of Reversions of Parts of this Estate; the Validity of these Sales depended on his surviving the late Earl Arthur. Now upon his advising with Counsel, touching these intended Sales, we shall prove he was advised and informed, that these Sales, as Matters stood, could produce but little Money, because the Title depended on the Contingency of his surviving the Earl, who was judged the better Life of the two, as it really fell out. But if he had a Son, that something worth while might be expected, because then, by levying a Fine, the Estate would have stood assured to the Purchaser so long as there was Issue Male of his Body. This we shall prove by a Gentleman of undoubted Veracity and Reputation.

The Gentlemen on the other Side think, they have great Advantage against us, that the Proof on our Part is in the Negative; the Observation is partly just, that it is much more easy to prove the Affirmative in any Question of Fact; but they might carry it a little further; for as such Proof is more easy, so it ought to be in proportion more clear and satisfactory: But be that as it will, we apprehend this is a Fact of such a Nature as admits of Proof: in the Negative, and that such as may produce a full and clear Conviction; for this Purpose, therefore, we shall now proceed to give an Account of my Lady Altham from the Time of her Arrival in this Kingdom in the Year 1713, by a Person who attended her Ladyship into the Kingdom, continued in her Service as Woman to her all the Time of her being here, I think was never a Week together from her, went back with her again, and continued in the same Service and Attendance, till my Lady's Death. This Witness will prove, that my Lady Altham was never with Child, never had any Miscarriage that she knows of; and that it should be, and she not know of it, is, I think, next to impossible. She will prove my Lady's Expressions of Concern upon this Head, that she had not the good Fortune to bring a Child to this Family: She will prove to you, that my Lady lived some Years after her Lord, had an Account of his Death, of the late Lord Anglesea's going into Possession of her Lord's Estate, and the present Earl's assuming the Title of Altham; that she had at this Time Access to the Duchess of Buckingham, and other Persons of Quality in England, and was in a lonely, disconsolate Way; but as to her ever having had a Son, complaining of any Injury done to this Son, that not one Syllable to this Purpose was heard to proceed from her.

We shall produce also one Thomas Rolph, who was Butler to my Lord, and lived with him at the Time of this pretended Birth; my Lord's Gentleman likewise, and some other Servants of the better Sort, who were in the Family and Service at this Time; and they all agree in this, that my Lady was not with Child; that there was no Miscarriage or Birth that they ever knew or heard of: and this, we apprehend, will be far better Evidence than that of Murphy, Laffan, or Doyle, because these People testify what was properly within their Sphere, and must know, if there was such a Fact.

We shall produce Persons of the best Condition in the Neighbourhood of Dunmaine, between whom and my Lord Altham there passed a constant Intercourse of Visits, and with some of them you will find the Intimacy was very great: They have mentioned Mrs. Lambert as a Person extremely intimate with my Lady; we shall produce her, and her Husband Mr. Aaron Lambert; he had set Dunmaine to my Lord, lived himself at Ros; his Dealing, as well as Neighbourhood and Acquaintance, gave him and his Lady great Opportunities of knowing more of his Family than many others.

We will call Colonel Palliser, and also his Son, who was unfortunately made the Pretence of the Separation, and from him you will have a full Account of that Matter; and he will not only swear it, but shew you that what Laffan has testified is false.

That I may not mention all as to this Point, we shall call, in the last Place, Mrs. Giffard, a Woman of an exemplary good Life and Character; she will not only prove, as others, that there was no Child that she ever heard of; but she will prove further, that there being some Pretender's Men to be tried at the Assizes at Wexford, which were held in the Beginning of April 1715, and this being a Business of some Expectation, my Lord, my Lady, and several others, went to that Assizes; that my Lady was at all publick Places, and was in Court at the Trials of those People: This was so near the Time of the pretended Birth, 'tis plain her being with Child, if fact, must be visible and conspicuous to all the World. This therefore will be proved by Mrs. Giffard, and she will be corroborated herein by many others.

We shall also lay before you the frequent Declarations and Expressions, not only of my Lady, but of my Lord also, upon this Head. They have likewise, on their Part, given some Evidence of this Kind; you will compare together the Witnesses, and what they say: We apprehend there is little Strefs to be laid on this Part of their Proof, testified at this Distance of Time, where the Omission or Addition of a single Word might invert the whole Sense. We think it strange that these Witnesses, if they knew and believed so much, neither said nor did any thing in consequence of it; and we think this Conduct can only be accounted for by their not believing, their not laying any Strefs upon what they had heard; and when we have shewn all this, I can't but think, for my Part, that we might safely rest our Case here.

But we shall go a great deal further, and give an Account of the Plaintiff from the Moment of his Birth. When my Lady returned to Ireland, my Lord was at Dunmaine; he came to Town, they were reconciled, stayed some time, and then they both went to Dunmaine. One Joan Landy was before, and at the Time of my Lady's coming to Dunmaine, Kitchen-maid there; and in a few Months she appeared so big with Child, that it came to my Lady's Knowledge; upon which she was turned off, and went to her Father's, who lived on the Land of Dunmaine, at a very little Distance from the House. As my Lord, as well as others, had, it seems, given Cause, so it was wisely resolved to make him the Father of this Child. We shall shew the Birth, the Christening, and Manner of Keeping this Child till the Separation of my Lady: We shall prove, that, on the Separation, the Child was suffered into the House, and the Schooling of it, while my Lord lived at Dunmaine; that the Pretence that Landy's Child died is false; that there was but this Child; that my Lord regarded it but little; that it was brought after him to Kinnea, Carrickduffe, and Dublin, and as it grew up gained some ground; but still treated, considered, and reputed as a Bastard, and no other. This we shall prove in those several Places, not by loose Expressions, but by those who knew my Lord and Family well: We shall prove to you the Reputation concerning him, when at those poor Schools that have been mentioned: We shall shew the Occasion of my Lord's Neglect of him; that he was untowardly, vicious, and incorrigible; that he rambled down to Ros, my Lord's Estate, where he and his Mother were well known, and was there treated and considered as my Lord's Bastard by Landy;—and shew him after in Dublin, for a great Length of Time, in a poor Condition, yet known and reputed by such as knew any thing at all of him, to be my Lord's Bastard; that he himself pretended no other; and being asked about his Parents, mentioned not only my Lord as his Father, but Landy also as his Mother.

And we shall shew, in the last Place, while he was thus neglected, and in this Distress, that my Lady was in Dublin, knew of his Condition, and that her Dislike of him was such, that she could not endure to hear him named; and from Persons of undoubted Character, and with whom she lodged and dined here, it will appear, that, amidst all her Complaints of Wrongs and Injuries, there never was the least mention of any, with respect to a Son or Child that she ever had. Her Silence upon this Head, at this Time, and under her Circumstances, we apprehend to be great Evidence; but much more so after my Lord's Death, when she saw one assume the Estate, and another the Honours of the Family. My Lord, we apprehend their Evidence, as to the spiriting away, and the Testimony of Mrs. Giffard, when considered, is in Truth already answered; but if thought to be necessary, I doubt not but we shall give you full Satisfaction.

You observe they don't produce Joan Landy, though in the List of their Witnesses, and in their Power: We charge her to be the Mother, they say the Wet-Nurse only; can there be a stronger Inference than that which must of necessity be drawn from the keeping back this Woman?

Gentlemen, I shall trouble you no more, but proceed to prove what I have now stated, and indeed a great deal more which has escaped my Memory; and when this is done, as we rest assured that this Cause will be tried uninfluenced by any Considerations that have not a Tendency to prove the Matter in Issue, and that the Purchasers from, and Creditors of the Family, and those who have a Right to succeed to the Honours and Estate, will receive no Prejudice from Considerations that do not properly relate to the Case, and certainly have no Relation to them; so we do not doubt but you will put an End to this strange Business, by finding according to our Plea, that the Defendant is not guilty of the Trespas and Ejectment in the Declaration mentioned.

(a) Mrs. Catherine Lambert being asked, on her Cross-Examination, if her Husband did not put in an Answer to a Bill filed on her Behalf against Mr. Matthias Reilye, answered, Yes, he did. Then was asked, Is he to be believed on his Oath? The Defendant's Counsel objected, "That the Question is improper, and therefore not to be asked; and that a Woman ought not to give Evidence for or against her Husband, especially where he is interested. Should she answer this Question, it might prejudice her own Cause. The Husband is not to be affected by any Declaration of his Wife, even upon her Oath; and the only Instance where she can be examined against her Husband, is in High Treason."

The Plaintiff's Counsel waved the Question.

(b) On the Cross-Examination of Arthur Herd, the Counsel for the Plaintiff asked the Witness, Whether he did not tell the Company that Lord Altham debauched Miss Gregory? which Question was objected to by the Defendant's Counsel, as it might subject the Witness to an Action, and tend to defame her, who was a Witness for the Defendant in this Cause. And the Court were of Opinion the Witness might refuse to answer the Question; and the Witness refused.

(c) On the Examination of Matthew Derenzay, an Agent for Lord Anglesea, he was asked, Whether, if my Lord Anglesea lost his Estate, he did not apprehend he should lose the Balance of his Account? He answered, I believe, if my Lord Anglesea has it upon Earth, he won't let me lose a Shilling.

The Counsel for the Plaintiff objected to this Witness, That he was consequently interested in the Fate of this Cause, as he might lose his Agency, or Receivership; but the Court were of Opinion, that this did not go to his Competency, but might to his Credit.

These Witnesses prove, that several of them lived in the Neighbourhood of Dunmaine, (where it was said Lady Albham was brought-to-bed of a Son) and visited Lord and Lady Albham frequently; and they never heard Lady Albham had a Son, or ever was with Child, or that they ever saw her with Child. Several Servants of the Family swear, who lived with Lord Albham in the Year 1714 and 1715, that they never heard Lady Albham had a Son, or ever was with Child; or that any Midwife was sent for, or any Christening, or any Bonfires, or any Godfathers or Godmothers; or any Coach-road for Lord and Lady Albham to go and see their Child; and that there could be no Child born without their Knowledge: Others, that Lord Albham had a Bastard by Joan Landy, which he called his Bastard; but they never heard of any Son by his Lady. Others deposed, That Lady Albham went to the Assizes at Wexford, in April, 1715, and staid some Days (which was about the Time it was said she was brought-to-bed of a Son): Others, that Lord Albham would have been glad to have had a legitimate Son, because he could have raised Money on his Estate, and wished for a Son: Others, that Lady Albham lived two Years after my Lord, and never enquired after any Son of her's; and that if there had been any such, he would have been entitled to an Estate of 1200*l.* per Ann. and my Lady might have applied for the Guardianship of him, and had a good Allowance from my Lord Chancellor for the Trust, which she very much wanted, &c. But as the most material Witness for the DEFENDANT was Mrs. Mary Heath (Lady Albham's Woman), we shall give her Evidence at full Length, with the Evidence brought to confront Mrs. Heath; and then close with the Judge's summing up of the whole.

Friday, November 18.

13. Mrs. MARY HEATH.

Sworn to the Voir Dire.

Q. Do you know the Plaintiff, Mr. James Annesley?—Mrs. Heath. No.
Q. Has he any Law-Suit with you?—A. He filed a Bill against me for the Effects of Lady Albham. I had a Subpoena given me in England.
Q. At whose Suit?—A. At Mr. James Annesley's.
Q. Have you any of the Effects of Lady Albham in your Hands?
The Question is objected to by the Defendant's Counsel, who say, that the Administrator will have the Right to recover them, let this Cause go which Way it will; and the Effects are no way relative to the real Estate which is now in Dispute.

The Witness sworn in Chief.

Q. Did you know Arthur late Lord Albham and his Lady?
Mrs. Heath. Yes, very well.
Q. What Time did you first become acquainted with the one or other of them?—A. I have known them a great many Years.
Q. Were you in any Service in that Family?
A. Never till the Time of my coming to Ireland.
Q. When was that?—A. In the Year 1713.
Q. At what Time?
A. In October I came over with my Lady as her Woman.
Q. How long did you live with my Lady after she came over?
A. I lived with her to the Day of her Death.
Q. When was the Day of her Death?
A. I can't justly tell; it was some time in October, 1729.
Q. During that whole Course of Time, was you ever out of her Service?—A. Never out of her Service.
Q. Did you constantly reside with her as her Woman?
A. I was one Week from her in Ireland.
Q. What Time was that?—A. When I come on further, I can tell you.
Q. Do you not remember that you were longer absent from her?
A. Not in Ireland, nor one Day, except she was out a-visiting. I was never from her a Night but that Week.
Q. Do you know a Place called Dunmaine in this Kingdom?
A. Yes, I do.
Q. Do you remember who lived at Dunmaine? Did my Lord and Lady Albham live there?—A. Yes, we went down there.
Q. At what Time, Madam?
A. We got down to Dunmaine the Christmas-Eve after we came over.
Q. How long did my Lord and Lady reside together at Dunmaine?
A. My Lord did come up, but I can't tell justly whether it was in May or June following; but I know he was there in April: He came to Dublin himself, and left my Lady and I at Dunmaine. Upon St. George's Day I know he was at Dunmaine, I am sure of that.
Q. How long in the whole did they live together at Dunmaine?—A. About three Years and two Months, to the best of my Remembrance.
Q. Do you remember in what Month they parted?—A. In February.
Q. In what Year?—A. I call it 1716-17.
Q. Had my Lady a Child at Dunmaine?
A. A Child! never had, nor never was with Child; I never had Reason to think she was with Child all the while I lived with her.
Q. Who dressed and undressed my Lady?
A. I always did, except the Week I was absent; while she was at Dunmaine I always put her to Bed, and attended her at her Rising in the Morning; for she was such a Woman, she would not permit any body else to do it.
Q. Could she then ever be with Child, or have a big Belly, unknown to you?—A. No, never.
Q. Was not you at Dunmaine at the Time of the Separation?
A. Yes, to be sure.
Q. To what Place did she go when they parted?
A. We went to one Capt. Butler's, in Ros.
Q. Did you go with her?—A. Yes, I went with her in a four-wheeled Chaise and a Pair of Horses.
Q. Did you get to Ros the same Day?
A. Yes, at Night, dark Night; for my Lady made it as late as she could; for she had no Mind to be seen coming in.
Q. Can you remember the particular Day this happened?
A. To the best of my Remembrance, it was on the 3d of February; but it was on a Sunday, I am positive.
Q. Did you live any Time there, and how long?
A. We lived about four Years in Ros, to the best of my Remembrance.
Q. Did my Lord and Lady come together again within that Period of Time?—A. No, never. I don't know whether she ever saw him.

Q. Will you recollect yourself, who were the Servants of the House when you came down to Dunmaine?

A. It is very hard for me to do so at this Distance of Time, there were so many. There was Mr. Ralph as the Butler, and there was Mr. Anthony Dyer, my Lord's Gentleman; there was one (I believe Ralph went down with us) Savory, the House-keeper, and there was Michael, but while his Surname was, I can't tell, but he was Cook, and there was Joan Landy that was the Kitchen-maid, big with Child.

Q. At what Time?—A. When we came down, my Lord, a Kind of Scullion under the Cook.

Q. Did you observe her to be with Child?

A. When we went down first, I went up to the Room to my Lady, and soon after I came down to speak to the House-keeper; and I turned about and saw this Woman with Child; What, says I to the House-keeper, you have got a Maid big with Child here! Yes, says she, an Officer was here some time ago, and his Servant got to Bed to her, and got her with Child. This was what I heard that Day; and the next it was buzzed about that it was my Lord that got the Child, and some said my Lord's Brother, and some the Dog-Boy, and several of the Servants had to do with her. This is what they told me, it was the Talk about the Family.

Q. Give an Account what became of this Joan Landy afterwards.

A. She staid two or three Months, till the House-keeper was afraid to keep her any longer, till we were afraid she would cry out; and then she went to her Father's; and I never saw her there; but I know he lived upon the Land.

Q. Did she go of her own Accord, or was she turned out?

A. I can't tell.

Q. Did you know of any Child this Woman was delivered of?

A. I saw the Child.

Q. Give an Account of that.

A. I spoke to the Coachman's Wife to bid her bring it up to the Gate that I might see it; and accordingly she did, and it was in Blanket then.

Q. Who brought the Child?—A. Juggy Landy herself brought it.

Q. About what Age might the Child be at that Time?

A. I can't really tell, whether six Weeks or two Months old when I saw it, I can't tell justly.

Q. Had this Child any tolerable Cloaths on it?

A. The Neckcloth it had on was what I gave it, it was a Cambric one, and a very fine one; I brought it from England among my own Things, and the Child was in a clean Blanket, and I gave her several other Things.

Q. How came it to pass, that you did not rather direct that the Child should be brought to Dunmaine-House, than to that Gate?

A. I would not bring it to the House.

Q. What was your Reason for that?

A. Because I would not have my Lord or Lady know any thing of it.

Q. What was your Reason for seeing the Child?

A. To know who it was like.

Q. How far was that Gate you mentioned from the House?

A. A little Distance.

Q. What was your Reason for seeing it there?

A. I did not care my Lady should know any Thing about it. My Lady would not care the Child should be brought into the House.

Q. Was there ever a Child either christened or living at that House while you were at Dunmaine?—A. No, never.

Q. Did my Lady ever talk to you any Thing of her being with Child, or having had a Child, during that Time?—A. No, never a Word.

Q. Ladies sometimes talk to Women in your Situation; had you any Discourse ever with my Lady about having Children, and what was that Discourse?—A. Yes, Sir, my Lady often wished she had a Child, on Account of a Quarrel she had with Mr. Annesley.

Q. Pray give an Account of that Quarrel.

A. I don't know how the Quarrel began; but she came up one Day after Dinner, and was crying. I asked her, what was the Matter with her Ladyship? She said, That Brute below, meaning the Defendant, had said, he wished she might never have a Child; and my Lady said, she wished she might but have a Child to inherit, and she did not care if she was to die the next Hour.

Q. You said, you had been an entire Week absent from my Lady, and no more; give an Account of that Week's Absence, and the Occasion of it; was it while you lived at Dunmaine?—A. My Lady was in Dublin the Week I was from her; I left my Lady in Dublin, and went to Dunmaine; I was never a Night from her in Dunmaine.

Q. Do you recollect how long that Quarrel was after you went to Dunmaine?—A. Not very long.

Q. Was it before they came to Dublin?

A. Yes, it was; this Quarrel was some little Time after our going down, and Mr. Annesley upon it left the House, and went to Dublin.

Q. Do you remember, during your Service, that ever you were at the Town of Wexford?—A. Yes.

Q. Give an Account at what Time, and on what Occasion you went there.

A. My Lady went there to hear the Trials at the Assizes, and it was about the Pretender's Men, as they were called; and my Lady told me that there was one Walsh tried, and how handsomely he pleaded his own Cause, and the Defence he made; and there was one Mr. Magdalen who was picked up in the Court at that Time, and tried.

Q. Can you recollect yourself the Time of the Year?

A. I know we came to Dublin the May after; and what I remember it for is, that it was King George the First's Birth-day that we were in Dublin in May; and I remember it for this Reason, that there were Fireworks in the Custom-house Yard, and this present Lord Anglesea, that was Mr. Annesley then, had Lodgings just opposite to it, and we went to his Lodgings to see the Fireworks.

Q. Did my Lady go to Mr. Annesley's Lodgings?

A. She did, my Lord, and my Lord and I.

Q. Do you know what Day of that Month was the Birth-day of King George the First?

A. I can't tell whether it is the 28th or 30th; I know there is the Reformation next to it; but I don't know which it is, the Day before or after.

Q. Recollect how long a Time before your going to Dublin was it that you were at Wexford?

A. It

Q. It was not long indeed. I can't recollect: I know we were in Dublin some time before the Birth-day; I don't know, about a Fortnight.

Q. But what time from your Return from Wexford Assizes, did you go to Dublin?

A. I can't tell what time the Assizes were, not I, for I don't remember the Month.

Q. Do you remember the Season of the Year?

A. Yes, I know it was the Spring, and I know it was a little before we came to Dublin that the Assizes were.

Q. Recollect who was the Company that went at that time to Wexford with your Family.

A. Mrs. Giffard went in the Chariot with my Lady, my Lord went on Horseback, and I went on Horseback, and Ralph went on Horseback, and Mrs. Giffard's sister on Horseback, but what her Name was I cannot tell; but what other Servants went I cannot tell; and there were several more which I don't know.

Q. Do you remember any other Servants that went?

A. No, except the Coachman, one Weedon, and the Postillion, one Burke.

Q. You say, you lived at Dunmaine at the time of this unfortunate Separation?—A. I did.

Q. Give an Account of the Occasion of that Separation.

A. On Saturday Night, my Lord said, he would go out somewhere to dine the next Day, but I don't know where, indeed; but my Lady begg'd of him not to go, for she hated he should be out on a Sunday; but he said, he would go; and accordingly on Sunday Morning he did go from the House; and I heard a Noise, and was going down Stairs to see what was the matter, and I met my Lord coming up with his Sword in his Hand, and he said, Heath, I have found Tom Palliser in Bed with my Wife. I said, It was impossible, and that he was set upon by a Sett of Villains; upon that, my Lord said, She should go out of the House; and upon that, he sent for one Mr. Wilman from Rosfs, and he came and advised my Lord, I believe, to turn my Lady out; but she begged, he would let her have one Room in the House, and he needed not come near her, till she wrote to my Lord Duke; but he would not hear her; but he hauled her out of Bed, and I advised her to come out: Upon which we packed up some Things, and went into the four-wheel'd Chaise, and I believe it was duskish when we went out, and it was Night when we got into Rosfs.

Q. Was there any thing happened to you when you went away?

A. Mr. Taylor handed my Lady into the Chaise.

Q. Was there any Child brought to take leave of my Lady?

A. O no! no Child, indeed.

Q. Who was in the Chaise with her?

A. I was, my Lord; she got in first, and I after her directly.

Q. Did you know Jean Laffan?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. During your Residence at Mr. Butler's in Rosfs, was there any Child that my Lady received in that House as her Child?

A. No, no such thing.

Q. How long did you live at Mr. Butler's?

A. We were not long at Captain Butler's.

Q. Was he and his Family at home when you went there?

A. There was Nobody at home but the Servants: Mrs. Butler and Captain Butler were out of Town; there was one Mr. Walsal that was Clerk to the Captain, and he sent a Man and Horse to let Mrs. Butler know that we were there, and she came home the next Day; but Captain Butler did not come home for three or four Days after.

Q. Recollect the several Places in which my Lady lodged at Rosfs.

A. I believe she stayed two Months or more at Captain Butler's, and then we went to one Mr. Wright's, and then we went to one Mr. Croft's, and there we staid till we came to Dublin.

Q. During this time, was there any Child brought to my Lady as her Child?

A. No, never was; she had no Child. I can say no more, if they rack'd me to Death.

Q. Did you know one Jean Laffan?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. What was she?—A. She was what we call House-maid.

Q. Was it her Business to clean the Rooms?

A. Yes, to wash the Rooms, and make the Beds.

Q. What time did she come to live at Dunmaine?

A. Three or four Months before my Lord and Lady parted.

Q. During the time that you lived at Dunmaine, had she any other Employment in the Family?

A. No other, except she went to the Laundry, when the Business was done in the House, and help'd the Laundry-maid to wash.

Q. Who was Laundry-maid at this time?

A. I cannot tell, we had several.

Q. Did she dry-nurse any Child before the Separation?

A. No, we had no Child for her to dry-nurse.

Q. Did you ever see a Child in the Hands or Care of Jean Laffan while she was at Dunmaine House?

A. No, never, for we had no Child.

Q. Did you know one Edward Lutwyche, a Shoe-maker at Rosfs?

A. No, I don't know any thing of him.

Q. Who made your Lady's Shoes at Rosfs?—A. I don't know, indeed.

Q. Do you know of her buying any Shoes whilst she lived there?

A. I don't remember she did.

Q. What sort of Shoes did her Ladyship usually wear?

A. She wore braided Shoes.

Q. Of what Colour?

A. Several Colours, and several Pair of Shoes, I cannot tell what.

Q. Do you remember her ever bespeaking a pair of Shoes for a little Boy?—A. That I'm sure she never did.

Q. Had she a Pair of white Damask Shoes at Rosfs?

A. She never had, while I liv'd with her.

Q. Can you recollect what Persons were present when you saw my Lord come up Stairs with his Sword in his Hand?

A. Indeed, I don't know any.

Q. Where did you remove to from Rosfs?

A. We came to one Mr. Cavenagh's, in a Place called Stable Yard, I think they call it so, in Mary's Lane.

Q. There you came to a Lodging?—A. Yes, and boarded there.

Q. How long did you stay at that House?

A. I really cannot tell; but from thence we went to one Mr. King's.

Q. What was he?—A. An Apothecary in Charles-Street.

Q. Did you lodge and board there?—A. Both.

Q. How long might you stay there?

A. I cannot tell; from thence we went to one Mrs. Mac Mullen's, I don't know what the Street is, I think it is Taft's Square in Mountath-Street, it turns up by Mr. King's, and there we were a little while, two Months or more, before we went over to England.

Q. Can you recollect in what Year you went to England?

A. Yes I can, in the year 1724.

Q. In what Month?—A. I believe about September.

Q. Before Lady Altham went to Mr. King's, the Apothecary, had you, or any other Person, look'd out for other Lodgings?

A. Yes, I went somewhere upon the Quay, but I don't know whose House it was.

Q. Did you see the Owner of that House?—A. Yes, it was a Woman.

Q. Do you recollect her Name?—A. No.

Q. Did you come to any Agreement?

A. Yes, I gave her a Pistole in earnest; but afterwards we did not like the Place, and I went and told her so, that the Doctor did not like my Lady should live upon the Quay, and she gave me the Pistole again.

Q. Did you ever see that Woman afterwards?

A. Never, to my Knowledge.

Q. Did my Lady ever tell you, that she saw that Person?

A. My Lady never did see her in her Life, for my Lady never knew any thing of her, and never did speak to her, to my Knowledge.

Q. During your Lady's Residence either at Cavenagh's, or King's, or Mrs. Mac Mullen's, did any Boy visit or wait upon her, as her Child?

A. No, never, nor they could not.

Q. Did any other Person go with you, when you went to see this Gentlewoman about the Lodgings?

A. One Mr. Mac Mullen went with me.

Q. What was he?—A. He dealt in Linens.

Q. Did any Servant of Lady Altham's go with you?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear or know any thing of this same Boy, that you say was Jean Laffan's Child, from the time you left Dunmaine?

A. No, I never troubled my Head after him.

Q. Did you ever hear that he was in Dublin?

A. I had heard that my Lord had took him; but I know nothing of him.

Q. Do you know whether my Lord Altham was alive when you went to England?—A. I heard he was alive.

Q. Had you any Account afterwards of his Death?

A. I had a Letter from Mrs. Mac Mullen, giving me an Account that he did die.

Q. What was the Purport of that Letter?

A. I have the Letter in my Pocket.

Q. Did you communicate that Account to your Lady?

A. I went directly and shewed her the Letter.

Q. How soon after you received this Letter was it that you gave her the Account?—A. I went directly and shewed the Letter to her.

Q. What happened upon that? Did my Lady make any Reflections upon that Affair?—A. She said nothing at all.

Q. Had your Lady any Fortune come to her upon the Death of her Husband?

A. No, the Estate went to the late Lord Anglesea, she not having a Jointure settled upon her; had she a Child, the Altham Estate would have come to it.

Q. Did my Lady know that this Estate went to the Earl of Anglesea?

A. My Lady told it me, or else I should not have known it; I had all my Knowledge of it from her, otherwise I should not have known it.

Q. When was it, you had that Discourse; before, or after, my Lord's Death?—A. Both before the Account of his Death came, and after.

Q. Did you acquaint my Lady Altham of the Purport of that Letter?

A. I directly went up Stairs, and shew'd her the Letter as soon as I had read it.

Q. When did my Lady Altham die?

A. She dy'd in October, 1729; she has been dead fourteen years last October.

Q. Had my Lady any Account how, and where my Lord was buried, and any Circumstances relating to it?

A. No more than what is in this Letter.

Q. Did she go into Mourning?

A. No, she made no Mourning, she was in Mourning at that time.

Q. What Sort of Mourning?

A. A Norwich Crape that she had had for my Lord Duke, and which she made a Night-gown of when King George the first died.

Q. Were there any further Particulars in the Letter?

A. She told in the Letter, that my Lord died, and was miserably poor.

Q. Did you communicate the whole Contents of that Letter to Lady Altham?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. Had she any Discourse with you, or did she make any Observations touching any Part of the Contents of that Letter?

A. I do not know any thing that she said: she took no Notice of it, but she read the Letter as well as I.

Q. Was there any Conversation between you, about any other Person mentioned in that Letter besides my Lord her Husband?

A. No, she made no Reflection upon it, nor said any thing.

Q. Had my Lady any Maintenance or Allowance from my Lord after their Separation?—A. No, my Lord never sent her a Farthing.

Q. Who supported her then?—A. My Lord Duke.

Q. What Allowance did he give her?

A. There was 1200 l. Remainder of her Fortune in the Duke's Hands, for which he allowed her 80 l. a Year, gave her 20 l. a Year more, and when he died left her 100 l. a Year.

Q. Do you know a Gentleman whose Name is Mac Kercher?

A. He was once with me.

Q. Should you know him now if you should see him? Look about.

A. That is the Gentleman I am sure (pointing to Mr. Mac Kercher); he told me his Name was so.

Q. Had

Q. Had you any Acquaintance with him, and what was the nature of that Acquaintance?

A. He came to my House, I live in St. Andrew's Church, Dublin, and he came there; there is the Directions he gave me to find a Gentleman, and I put the Day of the Month upon it that he was with me. It was the 13th of April 1742. For he said, one of Captain Briscoe's Daughters was in Town, and told me her Name; and he wrote his Name upon it; that I should not forget it.

Q. Are you certain he wrote it?—A. He wrote it, and I saw him write it.

Q. What passed between you at that Visit?

A. When he first came in, he was a Stranger to me, begged my Pardon, and said he came to ask me some Questions about my Lady Altham, whether she had ever a Child? I told him, she never had one while I lived with her, I could take my Oath. Then he told me, how this Mr. Annesley was recommended to him by two Lieutenants, one of their Names was Lieutenant Simpson, but the other I do not know; and then he told me how he came to him, and that he, Mac Kercher, gave him Ten Guineas; and then Mr. Annesley told him he had no Lodging, and did not know where to get one. He said his House was small, but if he would lodge with him he might, and should be welcome, and took him in. He then shewed me a List of the Servants Names, and my Name was crowded in at the Top, and I laughed at it. There were several Names, some that I did know, and others that I did not; there was Martin Nieff, and Charles Magber the Butler after Ralph went away, and there was Juggy Laffan; and with that I said: What can she know of this Affair? Why, says he, Madam, she says that she saw old Parson Lloyd christen it; I suppose you know him, Madam? Aye, says I, I knew him very well, but I cannot think how she can know any thing. Why, says he, she says she came to Dunmaine about a quarter of a Year after my Lord and Lady came from Dublin. So she did, says I, but that was the last Time we came down from Dublin. He then thanked me very kindly, said, He was very well satisfied with what I had told him, that he would go home and wash his Hands of them, and turn them all out of Doors, and would not for a Thousand Pounds that he had not seen me; for, says he, if you were dead, my Lord Anglesea would lose his Estate and Title, as sure as you are alive, there would be such bloody Swearing. Says I, Sir, I am sorry you have been so imposed on, for I assure you my Lady had not a Child. He said, Madam, for what I have been at the Charge of, I do not value. And I told him farther, Do you suppose, Sir, if my Lord and Lady had had a Child born to such an Estate, that they would not have him registered? He said, That they lived in a Country Parish where no Register is kept, and could not have it done. But I told him again, Could he suppose if they had had a Child born Heir to such an Estate, that they would not have had his Birth registered?

Q. Did you acquaint Mr. Mac Kercher at the Time of this Discourse, or offer to shew him this Letter of Mrs. Mac Mullen's?

A. Yes; and he told me, that Juggy Landy did not deny that she had a Child by my Lord, but that it died young.

Q. Did Mr. Mac Kercher make any Application in relation to your giving Evidence?—A. There was not any.

Q. Did he promise you any thing?—A. No, he did not; for he said, he would have nothing further to say to them.

Q. When you returned to Dublin, after the Assizes at Wexford, where did Lady Altham lodge in this Town?—A. At Mrs. Vice's.

Q. Where was that?—A. In Essex-Street.

Q. Did you know one Mr. Maurice Annesley?—A. Yes.

Q. What Family had he?

A. There were three Daughters that used to come to visit my Lady.

Q. Name them.

A. One was named Cherry, one was named Sarah, and the other Dorothy.

Q. Did you hear of Mrs. Cherry's being married to any one since?

A. Yes.

Q. To whom?—A. I did not hear to whom.

A. I do not know; she might lie a-bed a Day or so.

Q. Did you ever tell any body that she miscarried?

A. No, I never did.

Q. Or that she was with Child?—A. No, never.

Q. Had she any particular kind of Shoes or Slippers made when she was there?—A. None particular.

Q. Was there any Woman-Servant in the House of the Name of Mac Cormack?—A. Yes, Mrs. Vice's Maid, one Catherine.

Q. Did you ever tell her that your Lady miscarried?

A. Never; I never had any Conversation with her in my Life.

Q. Did you ever tell her any thing relating to your Lady as a Piece of good News?—A. No, never.

Q. Did you know one Alice Bates, a Servant of Mrs. Briscoe?

A. There was one Ally, that waited on Mrs. Briscoe's Mother, but what her Name was I cannot tell.

Q. Had you any Discourse with her of my Lady's being with Child?

A. No, never, for we were not so long in Briscoe's House.

Q. Had she Access to my Lady Altham, did she use to visit her?

A. Visit my Lady! I never saw her out of Captain Briscoe's House.

Q. Did you never see her put her Hand upon my Lady's Belly?

A. No, I never did.

Q. Do you remember Alice Bates's going at any Time in a Sedan-Chair to see my Lady at Vice's?

A. No, nor I do not know that ever I saw her at Mrs. Vice's.

Q. Did you ever hear my Lord Altham call his Lady by any remarkable, familiar Appellation?

A. He used to call her Molly.

Q. Did he ever use to call her Moll Sheffield, in good Humour?

A. He used to call him say so.

Q. You are positive you never told any Thing to Alice Bates as a Piece of good News?

A. I am positive as to that, I never did.

Q. Do you remember at any Time, during Mrs. Briscoe's and her Daughter's being at Dunmaine, that you called Mrs. Briscoe out of her Bed?—A. No, never.

Q. Do you remember any Fright my Lady received during the Time they were there?—A. No, I never did.

Q. Do you remember any particular China in the House of Dunmaine, or any thing concerning them?

A. I remember, when we came to Dunmaine, that there were some Cups and Sawcers that had very ugly, nasty Figures on them, indecent Figures, and my Lady never cared to have them used; but one Day the House-keeper had got some of the Sawcers to put the Defect on, and there happened some Words at the Table, and my Lord threw them on the Ground, as I was told.

Q. Did that cause any Fright in my Lady?—A. No, none at all.

Q. Did you ever call Mrs. Briscoe and her Daughter out of Bed, and tell them that my Lady was very ill?—A. No, I never did.

Q. Do you remember one Mary Doyle in the Family?

A. No; Betty Doyle, I did.

Q. Was my Lady in any sort out of Order the Night that the Sawcers were broke?—A. No, she was not at all.

Q. Was you in my Lady's Room the next Morning?—A. Yes.

Q. Were there many Servants there?

A. No, not at all; the House-Maid might be there, that used to come and light the Fire.

Q. Was Miss Briscoe in my Lady's Room the next Morning?

A. I cannot tell but she might.

Q. Did you see her there?—A. She might be there, for my Lady always breakfasted in her Chamber, and she breakfasted with her.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Sutton the Surgeon?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember any Quarrel that happened about him?

A. Yes, my Lady never liked him, and he went from the House, and was away some time.

Q. Do you recollect any Occasion of sending for Sutton from Ross to my Lady?—A. I cannot tell whether there was or no.

Q. Do you remember any such Occasion as required a Surgeon?

A. I remember once she had an Inflammation as we thought in her Leg, and I do not know whether my Lord sent for him then; and once her Arm was cut, but Sutton was then in the House.

Q. Could he attend her in any Disorder of any Continuance without your knowing it?—A. No, I think not.

Q. Did he attend her in any Disorder after that Quarrel?

A. I do not remember any thing ailed her after that Quarrel.

Q. Was there any Confinement for about a Fortnight that required the Attendance of a Surgeon?

A. No, not that I know of.

Q. Did Sutton ever refuse to come when sent for?

A. I do not know that ever he refused to come.

Q. Do you remember the Chariot to be sent for him?

A. I do not know; he generally had a Horse.

Q. Did you know Mrs. Shiels, a Midwife?

A. I knew her at Ross.

Q. Did you ever see her at Dunmaine?

A. I never saw Mrs. Shiels at Dunmaine in my Life.

Q. Do you remember the Name of Dennis Redmonds?

A. No, not that I remember.

Q. Did you ever send that Man to Ross for Mrs. Shiels?

A. I never gave any Directions to him or any Servant to fetch Mrs. Shiels to my Lord's House.

Q. Did any thing particular happen after breaking of the Sawcers?

A. No, nothing particular.

Q. Did not you go to Mrs. Briscoe's Room, to tell her my Lady was ill?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you remember the Name of one Thomas Brooks?

A. I do not remember any such Name.

Q. Do you remember whether my Lady was, or was not, let Blood at that Time?—A. I cannot be positive whether ever she was let Blood.

Q. Do you remember any particular Person being sent for that Afternoon that the Sawcers were broke?

A. No, I do not remember that any Person was sent for.

Q. Recollect if you know Dennis Redmonds.

A. I do not remember any such Name.

Q. Was there a Huntsman in my Lord's Family?

A. Not a particular one, there was the Groom and other Servants.

Q. Do you remember any thing particular to be done at the Time of the Separation by any of my Lord's Servants to any Gentleman in the House?

A. They said that they had cut off Mr. Palliser's Ear; but I cannot tell any thing of it, not being present; I was waked with the Noise, and came down Stairs.

Q. Had you ever any Discourse with any to this Purpose, That if my Lady was to be affrighted at this Rate, she would never go on with a Child.

A. No.

Q. Did you ever expostulate with my Lord about giving my Lady ill Usage?—A. No, I never did about any such thing as a Miscarriage.

Q. Can you say that my Lady kept her Bed one Day or more during the Time of Mrs. Briscoe's being at Dunmaine?—A. No, I do not know that ever she kept her Bed a Day, or more, while they were there.

Q. Did you ever call Mrs. Briscoe out of Bed at any Time earlier than usual?—A. No, I did not indeed.

Q. Do you remember, whether my Lady took any Offence at my Lord's breaking the Sawcers?—A. No, I heard no more than what the Servants told me, I was not in the Parlour.

Q. Did you hear her express herself in any Manner concerning it?

A. No, not at all concerning those Sawcers, she never liked them.

Q. Cor-

Q. Consider whether the Night of that Day Mrs. Briscoe was called up by you?—A. No, I never called her up at all. I am sure of it.

Q. Recollect whether Sutton the Surgeon, after he quitted the Family, came and stayed any particular time?

A. Often after he was turned out; he went away because my Lady did not use him as pleased him.

Q. Did he come again and stay any time?

A. Often, may be a Fortnight, sometimes more, and sometimes less.

Q. Was he resident in the House?

A. He was only backwards and forwards.

Q. Recollect yourself, whether Sutton, about the time of the Sawcers being broke, came and lived there any time?

A. I do not remember that.

Q. Did he come and attend my Lady as a Surgeon?

A. Indeed I cannot say he did.

Q. Who was it first told you of that unfortunate Affair of Mr. Palliser's?

A. My Lord Altham himself.

Q. Do you recollect, whether Joan Laffan called you down to rescue Mr. Palliser from being murdered?

A. No, I am sure she did not; because my Lord came up, before I could get down on the Noise, and told me of it.

Q. Had you any Conversation with her that Day concerning that Accident?

A. No, for I was in too great a Fret to talk to her about it.

Q. Can you recollect how soon after my Lady came first to Dunmaine that Sutton quitted the Family?—A. I cannot tell indeed how long.

Q. How long was it after she first came that this Accident of the Sawcers happened?

A. It was whilst Mrs. Briscoe was in the House, and that was not long.

Q. Was you in the Room during any Part of the Dining-time?

A. No, I was not.

Q. Were you ever in the Dining-room during the Stay of Mrs. Briscoe there whilst they were at Dinner?

A. No, I cannot say I was, I had no Business there at Dinner-time, but went in with the Tea-things soon after Dinner.

Q. What was the Age of Miss Briscoe?—A. I cannot tell.

Cross-Examination.

Q. You say, Madam, you came over with Lady Altham, and she lodged at Captain Briscoe's?—A. Yes, we did.

Q. Was not Lord Altham brought to that House, and reconciled?

A. Yes, he was.

Q. Did not they stay some few Days after there?—A. Yes.

Q. Did not they go from thence, after four or five Days Stay, and lodge at Vice's in Essex-street?—A. No, they went directly down to Dunmaine.

Q. How many Days Stay did you make at Captain Briscoe's?

A. My Lord and Lady met the 4th and 5th of December, and we got to Dunmaine on Christmas-Eve.

Q. Did my Lady stay there all the time till she went to Dunmaine?

A. My Lady did not lodge out of Captain Briscoe's House at the first Meeting.

Q. How soon, after the first time that you went to Dunmaine, did my Lady come next to Dublin?

A. I know Mrs. Briscoe and her Daughter were at our House at Dunmaine on St. George's Day; afterwards my Lord came up to Dublin, I do not know in what Month, but she desired my Lord to make use of her House while he stayed in Dublin; for Mrs. Briscoe did not go to Dublin, but to some other Acquaintance. My Lord was at her House for some little time, and after went to Mrs. Vice's; and when we were at Dunmaine, we heard a great many Quarrels that my Lord was in; and my Lady, when she heard of such doings, came up. He sent down a running Footman, who came when all were in bed but me and Mr. Rolph; he knocked at the Door and alarmed us, for we were afraid he was come with some ill News about my Lord. I went down, and asked how my Lord did; he said, Very well; and he brought some Green Tea for my Lady. I carried the Tea to my Lady, the Man was to go to Ross the next day, and so return to Dublin; there was one Captain Nisack and his Lady at our House, and they persuaded my Lady to go up to Dublin.

Q. When was that?

A. In violent hot Weather, whether in July I cannot tell; but it was a little while before the Queen died, for I saw King George proclaimed at the Castle.

Q. Did not you lodge then at Mrs. Vice's in Essex-street?

A. Yes, we did.

Q. Were my Lady Altham and you ever before at Vice's?

A. My Lady Altham was one Day, but not to lodge there; she was there the Day after my Lord and she met, which was on a Saturday; my Lord took her out on a Sunday, and shew'd her where she was to lodge.

Q. Did not you continue in the Lodgings at Mrs. Vice's till the Christmas following?—A. No.

Q. How long then?

A. A little after the News of the Queen's Death my Lady got Mourning, and we stayed three Weeks, or a Month, or five Weeks, I cannot guess the time, after my Lady went into Mourning; and then we returned to Dunmaine.

Q. How long then were you at Dunmaine, after my Lady's Return, and after the Queen's Death, before you came to Town again?

A. Till the May following that was the first Birth-Day of King George Ist; may be a Fortnight or three Weeks, or thereabouts, in May.

Q. You named the Daughters of one Mr. Maurice Annesley?

A. I did.

Q. Now, recollect yourself very well, did they visit Lady Altham when she was at Vice's, in the Month of August, after the Queen's Death, the first time she lodged there?

A. I cannot recollect that, whether they did the first time, or not.

Q. Where did you lodge the second time?

A. At Mrs. Vice's again in May 1715.

Q. Did any, and which, of Mr. Maurice Annesley's Daughters visit Lady Altham at Vice's in May 1715, or at any time after?

A. In May 1715 they all did.

Vol. IX.

Q. Now name them.---A. Cherry, Sarah, and Dolly. I know Cherry was the eldest; but which of the other was elder, I cannot tell.

Q. How long did you stay then in Dublin?

A. We stayed above a Year in Town, from May 1715, and better.

Q. Did my Lord and Lady leave Town during that time?

A. My Lord went down, but my Lady did not.

Q. Did you know Mrs. Charity Annesley?—A. I did very well.

Q. Was my Lady visited by Mrs. Charity Annesley, after she came to Vice's in Essex-street, in May 1715?

A. She was visited by her then, I am sure.

Q. You mention, Madam, that there were Instances of ill Usage from my Lord to my Lady; when he behaved in that manner, I suppose, you did not always escape; had you ever any Quarrel with my Lord at Vice's, or any where else?

A. I cannot say I had at Mrs. Vice's. I know one Night he was making a great Noise with a Chair, and I went to take away the Chair, and he took hold of my Head-clothes.

Q. Which of the times you lodg'd there did this happen?

A. I cannot tell.

Q. Was it in the Year 1714, or 1715?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Did he make a great Noise?

A. Yes, and I went to take the Chair from him, that he might not disturb the Family.

Q. Did my Lady Altham scream out upon that Occasion?

A. No, I do not believe she did; for she would rather have been killed, than any one should have heard it.

Q. Did you know any one that was called Lucas?

A. I had no Knowledge of any such.

Q. Did you ever hear any Person, in that Family of Mrs. Vice's, name the Name of Lucas?—A. I remember some Quarrel there was, that I heard my Lord make use of the Name of Lucas.

Q. My Lord and Lady were both in bed at that time, you say?

A. Whether they were or not, I cannot say.

Q. Did either of them get out of Bed?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Suppose either of them should have opened the Window, and called out of the Window, must not you have heard it?

A. I cannot tell; I remember one Night my Lord was going towards the Windows, and my Lady held him.

Q. Was it that Night that you took the Chair from him?

A. I don't know whether it was; but I believe not. My Lord said, That he would send for one Mrs. Lucas, to see whether my Lady was with Child; for if she was not, he would turn her off, and would not live with her; but he would know whether she was with Child before he turned her away.

Q. Can you be positive, whether, immediately after this, my Lady was confined to her Chamber?

A. I do not remember that she was confined to her Chamber; she was out of order with a Cold or so.

Q. Was there any Discourse the next Morning about a Miscarriage?

A. I am sure there was not; for I am certain there was no Miscarriage, and therefore there could be no Discourse of it.

Q. You are sure you heard the Name of Lucas mentioned?

A. Yes, I did by my Lord.

Q. You mentioned your having gone to take a House upon the Quay?

A. Yes, when we went from Mr. Cavenagh's.

Q. And you gave a Pistole in Earnest?

A. Yes, which the Gentlewoman returned.

Q. You say this Woman never saw your Lady that you know of?

A. No.

Q. Might not she have seen her, without your Knowledge, in the House of Mr. King?—A. No, never that I know of; she might have gone there when I was out of the way.

Q. Was there any Conversation with Lady Altham and you, about the returning of that Pistole?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did she ever tell you that she had seen the Woman?

A. She never did; and I believe if she had, she would have told me of it.

Q. Did you ever tell any body that that Pistole was returned?

A. I spoke of it; I made it no Secret.

Q. Did you ever hear of that Pistole being returned?

A. One MacMullen went and received it, and not I.

Q. And who did MacMullen give it to?

A. He gave it either to me, or my Lady.

Q. Did MacMullen go with you both times to the Lodgings you took on the Quay? Did not you say, you went and told the Woman that the Doctor said the Air of the Quay was not fit for my Lady?

A. Really, I do not know whether I went with MacMullen or no; I do not believe I was with him.

Q. Was it you that made the Excuse to the Woman?

A. Indeed I do not know whether I did or no, I believe it was he that went.

Q. Where did Mr. Annesley, now Lord Anglesea, live in 1715?

A. Opposite the Custom-House I think; it was so that I could see the Fire-works.

Q. How far was that Lodging from Essex-Bridge?

A. Indeed I cannot tell how far.

Q. Do you know whose House it was in?—A. No indeed.

Q. Did you know the House where Sir Alexander Cairnes and Mr. Henry lived?—A. I do not know where any of them lived.

Q. What kind of an Apartment was there for Lord and Lady Altham to be entertained in?—A. There was a Dining-Room and a Bedchamber, the Supper was in the Bedchamber set out.

Q. Did not you go over Essex-Bridge to go to these Lodgings?

A. We did.

Q. Did you turn on the right hand or the left?—A. On my right hand.

Q. How far did you drive on the Quay?—A. I went in a Chair.

Q. How far did you go then?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Was it up one or two Pair of Stairs?—A. One Pair.

Q. Was that Mr. Annesley's Lodging?—A. It was.

Q. Was it a very handsome Apartment?—A. Indeed I cannot tell.

Q. You mentioned in your going to Wexford a Sister of Mrs. Gifford?

A. Yes.

Q. Did she ride behind any body? — A. No, she rode single.
 Q. What was her Name? — A. I cannot tell.
 Q. Was she a Maiden, or a married Woman? — A. I cannot tell.
 A. She was unmarried.
 Q. Was she Part of Lady Altham's Company? — A. I do not know.
 A. She was when she came there.
 Q. Did she lodge with Lady Altham? — A. Yes.
 Q. At whose House did Lady Altham live? — A. At Captain Sweeney's.
 Q. Did my Lady go there to visit Mrs. Sweeney? — A. I cannot tell whether she did or no.
 Q. Was it not to hear the Trial of the Pretender's Men? — A. I cannot tell, for I did not know of any particular Trial.
 Q. Was there any particular Trial expected? — A. My Lord and Lady might know it, but I did not know it.
 Q. What Clothes did my Lady wear at Wexford? — A. Indeed I cannot tell you what Clothes.
 Q. Had not my Lady a Silver Silk? — A. No, not then; she did not wear it at Wexford, because she was in Mourning for the Queen.
 Q. Pray, what Servants attended my Lord at that Time? — A. I cannot tell what Servants, but his own Servant Anthony Dyer was ill.
 Q. But you are sure Ralph went there? — A. Yes.
 Q. What Colour was the Horse he rode? — A. Indeed I cannot tell, nor what coloured Horse I rode myself.
 Q. Did Ralph lodge in the same House with my Lord? — A. No, he did not.
 Q. Did he come to my Lord at Mrs. Sweeney's? — A. I cannot tell, for my Lord was a Justice of Peace, and Ralph had some Informations to deliver.
 Q. Did he attend him as a Servant? — A. I do not know but he might, for my Lord never dressed in my Lady's Room, and I cannot tell who attended him.
 Q. Was it the Day after you came down that you mentioned Juggy Landy's being with Child? — A. The very Night. It was said that Night that it was an Officer's Servant's, and the next Day that it was my Lord's, or his Brother's, or the Dog-Boy's, or some else of the Servants.
 Q. How long did this Woman continue in the House after? — A. I cannot tell.
 Q. And pray, Madam, could your righteous Spirit bear that this Woman should stay so long in the House? — A. Indeed I did not concern myself about her.
 Q. Do you know the Lady Blessington? — A. I do not know Lady Blessington; what Lady Blessington do you mean? There was one Capt. Boyle, I've seen his Lady.
 Q. She is the Lady I mean; did you ever see her visit Lady Altham? — A. I am sure I've never seen her.
 Q. Do you remember one Mrs. Pigot? — A. Yes.
 Q. Did she visit Lady Altham? — A. Yes, she did.
 Q. Was there an Intimacy in the Family? — A. She visited us more in Rosi than at Dunmaine.
 Q. Did she visit my Lady at Dunmaine frequently? — A. She did, but not often.
 Q. Where did you dine the Day of Palliser's Affair? — A. No where.
 Q. Did you get any thing to eat when you came into Rosi? — A. I know we had some Tea there, I cannot tell whether we had any thing else.
 Q. Did you eat nothing else that Day? — A. I cannot tell, for there were none but the Servants there.
 Q. Did not Crowds gather about to see my Lady come into Rosi? — A. There was a Crowd of People, but it was so dark, I could not see who they were.
 Q. Was it dark when you left Dunmaine? — A. It was dusky when we left Dunmaine, but it was dark when we came into Rosi.
 Q. What happened upon the Quarrel between my Lady and Captain Annesley, did he leave the House upon it? — A. Not immediately, but he never came up to dine with my Lady after.
 Q. Did they never come into Company at Dunmaine after? — A. They never did; my Lady sent for him the next Day to come up to Dinner, but he would not; she then sent to know if he would have something sent down, and he would not.
 Q. Did he ever come to Dinner after at Dunmaine? — A. Not up Stairs into the Parlour.
 Q. Did he ever come to Dunmaine after he left it while my Lady was there? — A. He never did.
 Q. When was it they first met after this Quarrel? — A. When we came to Dublin afterwards; when we came, my Lady took a Chair to Mrs. Vice's, and she met Mr. Annesley in Essex-Street: he said, Your Servant, my Lady; your Ladyship is welcome to Town; and after that he came to Mrs. Vice's.
 Q. Do you recollect what Month that was in? — A. It was violent hot Weather, I believe in July, for it could not be a Month before the Queen died.
 Q. Do you know one Mr. Hufsey? — A. I do know him.
 Q. Did you see him at your House in London? — A. I did.
 Q. Did you ever discourse with him relating to this Affair? — A. Yes; and told him several Times that my Lady had not a Child.
 Q. What Mr. Hufsey is this? — A. I know nothing but that he was an Acquaintance of an Acquaintance of mine that brought him to my House.
 Q. Did not you tell Mr. Hufsey that the Plaintiff was greatly wronged, and that you knew more of that Affair than any body? — A. No, by the Virtue of my Oath, I never did.
 Q. Did not you see Mr. Hufsey at your House, when the Report was that this Mr. Annesley was on board the Fleet with Admiral Vernon? — A. Indeed I do not know what Time.

* Before the Evidence of the Defendant was closed, the Counsel for the Defendant offered to give in Evidence the Record of the special Verdict in Ejectment, in the King's Bench, wherein the late Lord Anglesea was Lessor of the Plaintiff, and Graham, who held under Lord Altham's Title, was the Defendant, which special Verdict found that the late Lord Altham died without Issue.
 Court. That Record cannot be Evidence against the Plaintiff, who was not a Party to it; nor could the Admission of either of the Parties in that Cause be Evidence against the now Plaintiff.

Q. Pray recollect your self, I ask you, was not this immediately after that Mr. Annesley was on board Vernon's Fleet? — A. I do not know what Time.
 Q. Was it a Month after you heard the Report? — A. I do not know indeed.
 Q. When was it you first heard that Report? — A. The first Time I heard of it, I believe, will be three Years ago, in January.
 Q. Who first informed you of it? — A. The Duchess of Buckingham sent her Woman for me; I could not think what she could want, and I said nothing to her Woman, but went with her, and when I came, and went up Stairs, and sat down, her Woman was the first that told me of it.
 Q. Was it not immediately after that, that Mr. John Hufsey came to your Lodgings? — A. I cannot tell what Time he came.
 Q. Is it three Years ago since he came to visit you? — A. I believe it is three Years and more; I cannot tell what Time.
 Q. Was it not two Years ago? — A. I have seen him several Times within these two Years; he has had the Discourse about this Plaintiff several Times.
 Q. Was it two Years since you saw him last? — A. Yes, it will be two Years — I cannot recollect.
 Q. Was it before the Duchess of Buckingham sent for you? — A. No, I knew nothing of it till the Duchess sent for me.
 Q. What State of Health was Lady Altham in when she came to Rosi from Rosi? — A. She was lame.
 Q. Was not she troubled with a Dead Palsy? — A. I cannot call it a Dead Palsy.
 Q. Did not that Disorder deprive her of her Limbs? — A. She lost her Limbs by that Disorder, it came by Degrees; but when she came from Rosi, she could go about with holding by the Hand.
 Q. When she went to London, what State was she in? — A. She had lost the Use of her Limbs; she could not stand; when I first went to London, with one Hand I could lead her about the Room, and then with both Hands, and then not at all — I was forced to put her in a Chair and wheel her about.
 Q. How did she come by that Disorder? — A. Indeed I cannot tell.
 Q. Did not that Disorder come on her after there was a Report that she had a Child? — A. A Child! The Disorder began at Rosi.
 Q. Was there any Report, that you know, of my Lady's being with Child? — A. Yes, there was a Report before I lived with her; I heard of such a Thing.
 Q. Was there any such Report after you came to live with her? — A. No, I do not know, Sir, that there was at any Time after I came to live with her.
 Q. Was not she bed-ridden of this Disorder before her Death? — A. No, she never was.
 Q. Was not she impaired in her Senses? — A. No, she never was; she was well in her Chair the Night before her Death, and she took a Fit, and we put her to Bed, and she died the next Night, but till that Time she had her Senses as perfect as any body in the Court, and could manage all her Affairs, for I never kept any Account for her.
 Q. Was not that 100 l. a Year left her by the Duke to cease upon the Death of my Lord Altham? — A. Yes, it was.
 Q. How was she supported then to her Death? — A. Because my Lady Duchess gave her 100 l. a Year, for the Interest of the 1200 l. after the Duke's Death.
 Q. Where have you lived since the Death of Lady Altham? — A. In the House I now live in.
 Q. What Business do you follow? — A. I take in Plain-work, and I have some Money at Interest.
 Q. Are not you a Washer-woman? — A. No, I am not.
 Q. What Time did the Duke of Buckingham die? — A. I do not know, he was dead before my Lady and I went to England, he was dead before we left Rosi.
 Q. What is your present Way of living? — A. I have the Interest of some Money left me, and I take in Plain-work, and Clear-starching; my Daughter and I live together, and we have the Interest of about 700 l. between us, but the greater Part of it is my Daughter's.

Monday, November 21.

Serjeant Marshall.] My Lord, the Gentlemen have by their Defence, made it necessary for us to give some new Evidence. It has been insisted on by them, and they have endeavoured to prove, that Lady Altham was at the Spring Affizes 1715, at Wexford, without any apparent Sign of Pregnancy; that being a new Point, your Lordship will give us Leave to controvert, because the Credit of the Lessor of the Plaintiff's Birth may, in some Measure, depend upon it. They have gone a Step farther, and have attempted to impeach the Credit of Joan Laffan; we apprehend it will be material to defend the Character of that Witness, and to shew that some of the Witnesses produced on their Part, have been prepared for this Trial.

The six Evidences, on the Plaintiff's Reply, were:

1. Caesar Colclough, Esq. who swore, He was at Wexford Affizes, in April 1715; did not see Lady Altham there; and if he had been there, should have known her; believes she was not in Town that Day.
2. John Hufsey, confronted with Mrs. Heath; their Evidence afterwards.
3. Mr. Thomas Higginson, Receiver to Arthur Earl of Anglesea, who swore he was at Dunmaine the Beginning of April 1715; that Lady Altham made him drink a Glass of Wine; he saw she was big with Child; and her Face lank, and he drank to her happy Delivery, and went from thence to Wexford Affizes.
4. William Stephens, to contradict Arthur Herd, who said to him (meaning Mr. Annesley) This is the right Heir, if Right takes place.

William Hughes swore, Hard told him Mrs. Annesley was the true and lawful Son, and Heir to the Estate.

6. John Ryan, brought to contradict Michael Drumm, who declared to him he was to get 200*l.* for swearing that Gentleman away. Drumm denied this, or having any Conversation of that kind, and appealed to Colonel Palliser and Colonel Leftin, &c. for a Character. Colonel Leftin being called, was asked whether Drumm bore a good Character, and to be believed on his Oath, replied, Yes; but being asked whether under that Circumstance he should be believed, answered, I cannot say that.

2. JOHN HUSSEY, confronted with Mrs. Heath.

Q. Do you know Mrs. Heath?—John Hussey. I do, Sir.

Q. Had you any Conversation with her about the Plaintiff being, or not being the Son of Lady Altham?—A. I had.

Q. How long ago is it since you had the Conversation with Mrs. Heath?—A. I think about two Years and a half ago.

Q. Give an Account of what passed between you?

A. About two Years and a half ago, I went with a Gentlewoman to Mrs. Heath's to drink Tea in Holbourn, within thirty or forty Yards of Saint Andrew's Church, and as Mr. Annesley was the common Conversation of the Coffee-houses then, we began to talk about him; I do not know whether she or I introduced the Discourse, but she said, to the best of my Memory, Nobody knows that young Man's Affairs better than I, because I long lived with his Mother, the Lady Altham; and she expressed a great deal of Concern for him, and the Circumstances he was in: she told me withal, That the Dukes of Buckingham sent for her three times, and that she was in private with her. And I have no more to say, my Lord.

Q. Did she tell you the Import of the Conversation between her and the Dukes of Buckingham?

A. I do not remember she did, nor I never asked her.

Q. Did she say concerning whom, or what the Dukes sent for her?

A. To the best of my Remembrance, she did about Mr. Annesley.

Q. I ask you again, and recollect and consider very well before you give an Answer, Are you sure that Mrs. Heath said that Lady Altham was the Mother of this young Man; or was it only this, that I have long lived with Lady Altham?—A. She said, my Lord, that she had lived a long while with his Mother, Lady Altham.

Q. Are you sure she called her his Mother?—A. Yes, I am, my Lord.

Q. Recollect whether you heard Mrs. Heath say any thing concerning any Person's being much wronged or injured.

A. She did say, That the young Gentleman was very much injured, and that Nobody knew better than her, because she had lived long with the Lady Altham his Mother.

Q. Pray, Sir, had this Mrs. Heath any Discourse concerning her coming to Ireland, or that she expected any thing?

A. She said she believed she should come into Ireland, but I do not remember that she said she expected any thing; it would have been very imprudent of her to tell me so, if she did.

Mrs MARY HEATH.

Q. Mrs. Heath, do you know that Gentleman that sits down there?

Mrs. Heath. Yes, I have seen him several times.

Q. Do you remember about two Years ago, that he drank Tea at your House, with one Mrs. Simpson?—A. He has several times.

Q. Did he drink Tea with you after the Account came concerning Mr. Annesley?—A. He has several times.

Q. I ask you then, whether you had ever any Conversation with him in relation to the Plaintiff, and what was it you said?

A. I have several times talked about it, and said, What a vile Thing it was to take away the Earl's Right, and that my Lady never was with Child; and I cannot say no more if you rack me to Death.

Q. How long have you known that Mr. Hussey?

A. Whether three Years or how long I can't say.

Q. Can you say any thing of his Character?

A. I can say no more than that some said he was a Gentleman's Servant, and some said he lived by Gaming.

Q. Do you believe him an honest Man?

A. I can say nothing of him; but if he says that I said my Lady had a Child, I cannot say he is an honest Man.

Q. Did you ever say that Nobody knew that young Man's Affairs better than you?—A. No, my Lord, I never did.

Q. Did you ever give it, in his Presence, as a Reason why you should know the young Man's Affairs, that you had long lived with Lady Altham, his Mother?—A. No, my Lord, I never did; and if I was to be torn to Pieces, I would say no such Thing.

To Mr. HUSSEY.

Q. Repeat the Words you heard her say.

Mr. Hussey. She told me that the Dukes of Buckingham had sent for her herself, and I cannot say who introduced the Conversation first; but Mrs. Heath said, Poor Gentleman, I am sorry for him from my Heart; for no one has Reason to know his Affairs better than I do; for I lived long with Lady Altham his Mother.

Mrs. Heath. By all that is good and great, I never said any such Word; I never thought that you was such a Man; I have heard People say that you were a Gamester, and lived in an odd way, but I could never believe it till now, but I always took your Part, and said you behaved like a Gentleman.

Mr. Hussey. I am a Gentleman, I can bring several People to justify me to be a Gentleman, and a Man of Family; indeed I have heard you say it, and speak it with all the Regret and Concern imaginable.

Q. When John Ryan was cross-examined, the Counsel for the Defendant asked him, Do you follow any Business, or are you of any Profession? The Court said, You need not answer that Question, if you think it will criminate yourself; and he refused answering it.

Q. After the Evidence for the Plaintiff on the Reply was closed,

Mr. Serjeant Marshall, of Counsel for the Plaintiff, stated the Title of Arthur Lord Altham, from the Wills and Codicils of James the first Earl of Anglesea, to shew that Arthur Lord Altham was only Tenant for Life; the Counsel for the Defendant having insisted, that he was Tenant in Tail under the said Wills and Codicils; upon which the Wills and Codicils were in part read.—But the Court were pleased to interpose, and said, That this was a Question of Law that might require great Consideration, and was not necessary to be determined at this time; the only material Point being, what was the Opinion of Lord Altham concerning his Title; that is, at the Time mentioned by Col. Wall, in his Evidence, (which was, that he never heard Lord Altham had a Child by my Lady; for in 1725, Counsel gave an Opinion that he had an Estate Tail, in the Remainder of the Anglesea Estate. Col. Wall told my Lord, that he could sell the Reversion of the Anglesea Estate better if he had a Son; for he could by a Fine bar his Issue; but that he could not bar the Remainder, not being in possession; and that he often heard my Lord wish he had a legitimate Son; and that he had an illegitimate one) therefore whether Arthur Lord Altham considered himself as Tenant in Tail, or only Tenant for Life, of the Anglesea Estate, for, according to his Opinion, concerning his Title in that Estate, it was his Interest to own or disown his having a lawful Son.

Q. Do you remember the Time that Lady Altham went to Wexford Affizes?—Mrs. Heath. Yes.

Q. Was that for the Trial of one Doyle?

A. I do not know any other that was tried, but Mr. Walsh, my Lady came home and told me how handsomely Mr. Walsh pleaded for himself.

Q. Do you remember what Day of the Week it was you went to the Affizes?—A. Indeed, my Lord, I do not.

Q. Did my Lady Altham lodge at Mrs. Vice's more than twice?

A. No more than twice.

Q. Would you be understood then, that the first time was when she came from Dunmaine, after she went down from Mrs. Briscoe's?

A. A little before the Queen died the first time was, and the second a little before King George's Birth-day.

Q. What time of the Year was it after the King's Birth-day that you went into the Country?—A. Some time in the Summer.

Q. Did you ever come up to Town after the Separation?

A. Not till the Time we left Ros.

Q. Was the Affizes begun before you went to Wexford, or did they begin after?—A. I believe they begun after, I don't know.

Q. Do you know one Mr. Higginson, that was Receiver to Arthur Earl of Anglesea?—A. No, I do not.

Tuesday, November 22.

The Court ordered Mrs. Henrietta Cole, and Mrs. Heath, to confront each other.

To Mrs. HEATH.

Q. Mrs. Heath, you said, as well as I remember your Testimony, that Rolph was Butler at Dunmaine?

Mrs. Heath. Yes, when I first went down.

Q. Can you recollect how long he continued there?

A. No, but I remember he went away when we were in Dublin.

Q. When?—A. The last time that we came up.

Q. You mentioned that you saw the Fire-works, the first Birth-day of King George the First, from Captain Annesley's Lodgings?—A. I did.

Q. Had you left Rolph in the Country then, or had you not?

A. I left him in the Country, in the House.

Q. Did you find him in the House when you returned?

A. No, for my Lord hired a Butler in Dublin, one Charles Magher, and sent him down.

Q. Was he sent before my Lady went back?

A. He was sent while we were at Mrs. Vice's, and hired there.

Q. Was there any Account that Rolph had quitted the Family before Magher was hired?

A. I cannot tell; but there was a Quarrel between Rolph and the Gardener, and he was ordered to quit it.

Q. What Time of the Year did you go back with my Lady to Dunmaine?—A. It was above a Year we staid in Town.

Q. Did Magher act as Butler during that Time?—A. He did, my Lord.

Q. You came over with my Lady from England?—A. I did.

Q. You first came to the House of Captain Briscoe?

A. We came there to lodge.

Q. Where did you go immediately after you left Captain Briscoe's?

A. We went down to Dunmaine, and got there on Christmas-Eve.

Q. Did not you go first into other Lodgings?

A. We did not go at all to any House to lodge.

To Mrs. COLE.

Q. Do you remember the Time of Lady Altham's coming to your House, when the Reconciliation happened?—Mrs. Cole. I do.

Q. What became of my Lord and Lady afterwards?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, they did not stay in our House above four or five Days, and they went and took Lodgings at Mrs. Vice's.

To Mrs. HEATH.

Q. Do you know this Gentlewoman?

Mrs. Heath. I do remember her.

To Mrs. COLE.

Q. Did you ever visit, after they had left your House, while they remained in Town?

Mrs. Cole. I cannot tell, but I believe we might.

Q. Recollect yourself and fix, whether you are certain that they went to Vice's, or any other Place from your Father's?

A. Indeed, my Lord, I believe they went to Mrs. Vice's.

Q. Can you be positive that they lodged in any other House in Dublin but your Father's, before they left Dublin?—A. I am positive.

Q. What do you found your Opinion upon?

A. I believe I have seen them in Dublin.

Q. Well, but what Reason have you to think they went to Vice's, before they went to Dunmaine?

A. The Reason I can recollect is, that after my Lord and Lady came together, my Father was still uneasy, though they were come together, till my Lord took her to a Lodging of his own; and he thought if they went to lodge at some other Place, it might have a better Face or Air of a Reconciliation.

Q. Did you understand your Father to mean by that, that it would become more public and notorious to Mankind, that Lord and Lady Altham were really reconciled?

A. Yes, I did understand that to be his Meaning.

Q. How long was Lady Altham at your House, in the whole?

A. A Month or six Weeks before my Lord came and was reconciled, and not above four or five Days after the Reconciliation, at our House.

Q. What Religion he was of? He answered, I am a Roman Catholick. Then they asked him, Do you think it will criminate yourself, if you think it will criminate yourself; and he refused answering it.

Q. After the Evidence for the Plaintiff on the Reply was closed,

Mr. Serjeant Marshall, of Counsel for the Plaintiff, stated the Title of Arthur Lord Altham, from the Wills and Codicils of James the first Earl of Anglesea, to shew that Arthur Lord Altham was only Tenant for Life; the Counsel for the Defendant having insisted, that he was Tenant in Tail under the said Wills and Codicils; upon which the Wills and Codicils were in part read.—But the Court were pleased to interpose, and said, That this was a Question of Law that might require great Consideration, and was not necessary to be determined at this time; the only material Point being, what was the Opinion of Lord Altham concerning his Title; that is, at the Time mentioned by Col. Wall, in his Evidence, (which was, that he never heard Lord Altham had a Child by my Lady; for in 1725, Counsel gave an Opinion that he had an Estate Tail, in the Remainder of the Anglesea Estate. Col. Wall told my Lord, that he could sell the Reversion of the Anglesea Estate better if he had a Son; for he could by a Fine bar his Issue; but that he could not bar the Remainder, not being in possession; and that he often heard my Lord wish he had a legitimate Son; and that he had an illegitimate one) therefore whether Arthur Lord Altham considered himself as Tenant in Tail, or only Tenant for Life, of the Anglesea Estate, for, according to his Opinion, concerning his Title in that Estate, it was his Interest to own or disown his having a lawful Son.

Q. You

Q. You remember the time of your going down to Dunmaine?—A. I do.
 Q. What time was it?—A. It was in the Winter.
 Q. Do you remember any Thing concerning the Lady's being indisposed there?—A. Yes, I do.

Q. Tell that again.
 A. There was an Accident happened, which frightened and fretted my Lady, upon which she became indisposed, and I remember a Servant's being sent up by my Lord to desire my Lady to come to Supper, and my Mother was with her two or three times to call her, and yet she excused herself.

Q. Do you remember any thing that happened upon that?
 A. My Lady miscarried.
 Q. Who gave that Notice first to your Mother?—A. Mrs. Heath.
 Q. At what Time?—A. My Mother was called up in the Night.
 Q. By whom?
 A. By Mrs. Heath, who came to my Mother's Room, and said, For God's Sake, Madam, get up as soon as you can, for my Lady is exceeding ill.

To Mrs. HEATH.

Q. Do you remember that Fact?
 Mrs. Heath. No, my Lord, there was no such thing happened, for my Lady never miscarried.

Q. Do you remember that you called up Mrs. Briscoe in the Night?
 A. No, I never did; I don't know what I should call her for.
 Q. Did you ever tell Mrs. Briscoe that your Lady had miscarried?
 A. No; for if I had, I should have told a false Thing; and I never lay a Night in any House in Dublin but Captain Briscoe's, till we came to Dunmaine.

To Mrs. COLE.

Q. Was you, after that Time, in my Lady's Bed-chamber?

Mrs. Cole. I was.

Q. How soon after?—A. The next Morning.

To Mrs. HEATH.

Q. Was she in my Lady's Bedchamber the next Morning?

Mrs. Heath. I do not know but she might, for my Lady always breakfasted in her Bedchamber.

To Mrs. COLE.

Q. Who was it that shewed to you that, which you took to be the Abortion?

Mrs. Cole. My Mother, my Lord.

Q. Where was Mrs. Heath then?

A. Indeed I cannot tell whether she was there or not.

Q. How old was you when my Lady came into Ireland?

A. I was either thirteen, fourteen, or fifteen, I cannot remember.

Q. How old are you now?

A. I believe I am either forty-five, or forty-six.

Q. How old was you when at Dunmaine?

A. I say, I believe I was either thirteen, fourteen, or fifteen, I cannot recollect.

Q. Do you remember how long my Lord and Lady stayed in Dublin after they left your Father's House, before they went to Dunmaine?

A. Not very long: I cannot exactly tell.

Q. Did you see them in that Time seldom or often?

A. I cannot tell how often.

To Mrs. HEATH.

Q. Did my Lady keep her Bed, or not, the Day after that Accident of the Saucers?

Mrs. Heath. No, my Lord, it never disturbed her, for she was glad they were gone.

Q. Did she keep her Room the next Day?—A. No, my Lord.

To Mrs. COLE.

Q. Did my Lady keep her Room the Day after?

Mrs. Cole. She did, and for some Days after.

Q. Who was Butler when you was there?—A. One Rolph.

Here the Evidence on both Sides closed.

Friday, November 25.

The Court being met according to Adjournment, and the Jury having appeared as usual, the Lord Chief Baron Bowes summed up the Evidence in the following Charge.

Lord Chief Baron's Charge.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

We are now come to the last Period of this very important Trial, and after having attended to a longer Evidence than ever was known upon a Trial at Law, You, Gentlemen, by your Verdict, must determine a Question of as great Consequence both as to Property and Title, as ever came before a Jury.

I did apprehend when this Trial began, that it would run out to a great Length, and therefore apprized you of what I thought must be the Consequence, that the Court would not be able minutely to sum up the Evidence upon this, as upon like Occasions; and therefore recommended it to you to make and enter your own Observations, as the Evidence should be laid before you: But when I consider your exemplary Behaviour during the Course of this long Trial, the Attention you have given, and the Desire you have expressed to do Justice; I think it incumbent upon the Court, as far as they can, to be aiding and assisting to you, in this your Search after Truth. To this end I shall, though very briefly and imperfectly, lay before you what hath occurred to me; which I shall do in this Method. I shall endeavour by way of Narrative, to collect the Facts that have been sworn to on both sides; I shall next mention the Objections, as far as I have taken them, that have been made to the Credit of the respective Witnesses, together with some Observations that may assist you in judging how far those Objections ought to weigh with you. And as it will appear in the Course of this Evidence, that there have been Inconsistencies, and, in the most material Facts, direct Contradictions; I shall therefore take notice of those Circumstances attending this Case which may throw a Probability or Improbability upon the Testimony you have heard.

The Action to be tried is, an Ejectment brought for Lands in the County of Meath; and by the Admission of the Counsel for the Defendant the Plaintiff's Title is brought to a single Question, Whether the Lessor, Mr. James Annesley, be the legitimate Issue of Arthur late Lord

Altham? It is admitted on both Sides, that the Plaintiff and Defendant claim the Lands in question, under the Will of James Earl of Anglesea; and that by such Will, the Limitation to the Heirs Male of the Body of Arthur late Lord Altham, is prior to the Remainder limited to the Defendant; and therefore if the Plaintiff can prove that he is the legitimate Issue of Arthur late Lord Altham, a Verdict must be found for the Plaintiff; but if he fail, then there is an undoubted Title in the Defendant, being the Person next in Remainder under the Will of James Earl of Anglesea; and a Verdict must be found for him.

Gentlemen, The Question being a mere Matter of Fact, the Plaintiff's Counsel have proceeded to lay their Evidence before you in the following Manner: They have given Evidence to induce a Probability, that Mary the Wife of Arthur, late Lord Altham, might have had a Child, and that, by examining Mrs. Dorothy Briscoe, and Mrs. Henrietta Cole, alias Briscoe, to shew that there was a Reconciliation between the Lord and Lady Altham, some time in the Year 1713; that they came together and cohabited at the House of their Father in Bride-Street, from whence they went to one Mrs. Vice's in Essex-Street, and from thence to Dunmaine; and there another Circumstance arises, which is, that Mrs. Cole and her Mother being invited to Dunmaine, went thither, and while they were there, upon an Accident, which has been so often repeated that I shall not go into the Particulars of it, Lady Altham was frightened, and in consequence of that Fright miscarried; and the same Witness, Mrs. Cole, swears that she saw an Abortion. They have also produced Catherine Cormack, to shew a second Miscarriage, in the same Summer with that mentioned by Mrs. Cole; the Circumstances of that likewise have been so often repeated, that I only mention the Fact. Having done this, the Plaintiff proceeded to shew an actual Pregnancy in Mary Lady Altham. The Evidence for this was Alice Bates, the Servant of Mrs. Briscoe, who was admitted to Intimacy with Lady Altham, and to whom it was told by Lord Altham, and acknowledged by Lady Altham; and who further swears the Pregnancy was such that she did observe it, and by laying her Hand upon the Belly of Lady Altham, she took upon her to say that Lady Altham was big with Child. I do not, as I go along, take notice of the Objections to the respective Witnesses, intending to consider them together. In the next place, they have endeavoured to prove Circumstances preparatory to the Delivery of Lady Altham. Dennis Redmond tells you, that he was sent for the Midwife, and Thomas Broots, that he was sent for as a Surgeon to let her blood at the time of her Labour; and Dennis Redmond and Philip Breen both speak to her observing that Lady Altham was pregnant before this time: And, Gentlemen, it did appear that these two were Servants about the House, though in a very low Station; the one, I think, a Helper in the Garden, the other in the Stables.

The next Period is the actual Delivery; and for that, they have produced two positive Witnesses; the one Mary Doyle, a Servant in the Family; the other Eleanor Murphy, who calls herself Chamber-maid; both these swear they were in the Room at the time of the Delivery; and as far as their Testimony shall avail, are positive Witnesses to the Fact. The next, are the Circumstances consequent upon the Delivery, that were Evidences of it. The first is spoke of by Breen and one or two more, and that is, the Rejoicings that were made upon the Birth of this Heir. The next was the Christening, which is sworn to by the two Maids that I mentioned before; who also swear, that Mr. Colclough and Mr. Cliff were Godfathers, Mrs. Pigot Godmother, and that Mr. Lloyd was the Clergyman that officiated in the christening of this Child. The next is Christopher Brown, who was a Servant attending upon one Mr. Anthony Cliff, not the Cliff that was the Godfather, but an invited Guest; and he speaks to the being there at that Time, and attending his Master at the Table, at the Entertainment that was made on the Occasion. John Scott, a Servant, I think, of Mr. Pigot's, he speaks to a subsequent Time after the Delivery, and says, that after his Return with his Master from England, he was sent a dozen Times, as he has sworn, to this House with Messages, and Compliments to the Lady, and to know how the Child did.

Gentlemen, it will be material for you to observe that the Birth to which this Evidence has been applied, has been fixed by the Witnesses, and admitted by the Plaintiff's Counsel, to have happened in the Beginning of Summer, 1715; which the Witnesses have also explained to be about the Month of May. There were two Witnesses more, proper for me to take notice of, but I shall not give you their Evidence by way of Testimony, because they seem to differ from all the rest. The one was that of Charles Mac Carthy, who was brought to prove the Pregnancy of Lady Altham, and something further, but he set out from a Period of Time so different from the other Witnesses, that the Counsel for the Plaintiff did not think proper to proceed in the Examination of him; nor have the Counsel for the Defendant made any use of him. The next I shall lay aside, is Major Fitzgerald, whose Evidence was to the Declaration of Lord Altham, the Day my Lady was in Labour, and the Invitation he had to go and tap the Groaning-drink, and his Excuse for not going, as it was an improper Time; the Invitation he had to go the next Day; that he went, dined there, but did not lie there; that the Child was brought down to him, and that he gave the Nurse half a Guinea; but then he fixes this in Harvest, and therefore no Advantage has been taken of that Examination by the Plaintiff; the Defendant indeed has made use of it, which I shall take notice of in the Objections.

The next Evidence, Gentlemen, has been to shew the Dispositions that were made relating to the Child thus brought into the World; and, indeed, I should have mentioned before, the Evidence of Matthew Furlong, who applied for having his Wife employed as Nurse to that Child; but, Gentlemen, the same Evidence for the Plaintiff that swore to the Christening, the same Evidence that were about the House, and present at the Birth, have gone farther, and told you that one Joan Landy was appointed the Nurse for this Child; and they have all of them given this Account of Joan Landy, that she was a Person unmarried, that was with Child, and supposed to be so by Lord Altham, that was turned away, as some say, upon my Lady's coming down; as others say, before my Lady came into that Country: This Person was chose to be the Nurse. She had a Place of Residence, the Cabin that was built for her Father, a Quarter of a Mile from the House of Dunmaine; which, as the Witnesses for the Plaintiff tell you, was fitted up upon the Occasion of receiving her and this Child. Laffan has told you that a Room was added that the Child was white-washed and beautified, but speak not of the Room; but all agree that this Nurse had the Child there, and that for the Convenience of sitting this Child, a Room for the Coach was made from Dunmain to this Place. They tell you that the Child remained with her, till John Laffan comes into Play as dry Nurse: And John Laffan says, he came into the Family when the Child was three or four Months old, and he has fixed her coming to Harvest after the King came to the Crown; and that it was put into her Care about three Months before the Separation of Lord and Lady Altham, and continued in her Care so long as it continued at Dunmain; and that the Child was carried from her to Kinna in the County of Kildare; and that it was about three or four Years old at the Time it went to Kinna. They have introduced as Evidence the Declarations of Lord and Lady Altham, in respect to Lady Altham's having a Child, and in respect to Lord Altham's acknowledging that Child. The earliest in point of Time is that of Alderman Barnes of Kildare, who says, that it was in the Beginning of the Summer, and by his Account not long after the Birth; he tells you the Occasion of his going to Raf, and that there he met with Lord Altham; that my Lord took him into an upper Room, and disclosed his Mind, by telling him, "Tom, I will tell you good News, I have a Son by Moll Steffeld;" that he went next Day to my Lord's House, but that he did not see the Child, nor did he hear either my Lord or Lady speak of it whilst he was there; but at last did say, that he believed the Child's Health might be drunk at the Table. The next Witness that I shall mention upon this Head, was Edward Lutwidge, and he speaks to the seeing of a Child at Raf, for whom my Lady Altham had bespoke two Pair of Shoes, which he was to make, and when he brought them Home, he inquired for the young Lord, and they told him he was gone back to Dunmain; upon which Lady Altham broke out into this Exclamation, "It had been better for me to have been the Wife of the poorest Tradesman in Raf than my Lord Altham's; for then I could see my Child every Day, but now I can see him but by Stealth." Gentlemen, the Witnesses for the Plaintiff that were in the House, and conversant in the Family, tell you, that my Lord did always acknowledge this Child to be his lawful Son; that this Child was shewn as such to the Persons that came to the House to visit, and some tell you, that they often saw the Child in and about the House.

I mentioned, Gentlemen, the Child's being removed to Kinna, in the County of Kildare, and this was after the Separation of Lady Altham from my Lord. When the Child was brought to Kinna, they have gone on by Evidence, to shew you, that there he was treated as the Son of my Lord by Lady Altham. For this, they have produced Mr. Misset, who tells you, that there was a Child that he took to be about six Years old; that he went to a School in the Neighbourhood, and was considered as the Child of Lord Altham; that it was called the young Lord; that it was sent to School with a Servant, and that he remembers it particularly by an open Lace upon his Hat, which he believes was the first and last that had ever been at that School. Whilst he was at Kinna, as that Witness says, the Child was treated by my Lord as his Son; and Mrs. Annesley, a Relation of the Family, who lives in the Neighbourhood of Kinna, tells you, that her Brother Colonel Goffry Paul, a Gentleman well known to most Persons here, used to visit my Lord, and my Lord to visit him, and that her Brother used at Table to drink the Boy's Health as my Lord's Son; and says, that she was sure, from the Knowledge she had of her Brother, that if he had suspected that he was the illegitimate Son of Lord Altham, he would not have done him the Honour to have drank his Health; and that she never heard he was the illegitimate Son, till of late that he has been called so, on account of this present Dispute.

The next Place the Child was carried to was Carrickduff, in the County of Carlow; and there you have had several Witnesses to prove him the legitimate Son, viz. Two Covenaghs, James Dempsey, and Mr. Charles Byrne; who all swear to this Child's being there acknowledged as my Lord's lawful Son, and that they had no Doubt upon them, at that Period of Time, concerning his being so; and it appears, that Dempsey was taken in to teach the Child, and afterwards kept School where the Child was constantly sent.

From hence, they have carried him to Dublin, to my Lord Altham's House in Cross-lane; and here Catherine O'Neil, who was the Person that brought him, gives you an Account of the Identity of the Person, and likewise of his being acknowledged as the Son of Lord Altham. And Nicholas Duffe, who kept a Publick-House, and was a Chairman in this Town, who was frequently with my Lord (and I think I may, once for all, observe, that this unhappy Nobleman did not distinguish his Company as became one of his Rank and Quality) tells you, that my Lord has mentioned this Boy to him, as one that would one Day be Lord Altham; and another Time, in Discourse, told him, he would be Earl of Anglesea. From Cross-lane (there is something mentioned of Stephen Green, but I could not collect at what Period of Time he was there), the next Place he is removed to with Certainty, is Frappier-Lane; and there he is some time with his Father, is put to School to one Carth, and is known to several People in that Neighbourhood: To this you have the Evidence of the two Byrnes and Matthew Plunket, who swear that he was treated as the Son of Lord Altham, though the Care of him seems to lessen at that Place; for in Cross-Lane you hear of Miss Gregory, and more of her in Frappier-Lane; and to her they have imputed the Neglect shewn to this Son. From hence my Lord moves to Inchicore, about the Month of August 1724, at which Time the Child, then about nine Years of Age, was left by his Father. The Evidence speak of his being sent immediately to the House of one Mrs. Cooper. Here the Evidence begins to be less connected than before; but I shall mention it as given. Michael Waldron and Dunn say, he was put to School to the said Dunn, who also swears to the Person, and that he was put to School by one Covenagh, a Dancing-Master; that he afterwards saw Lord Altham at Covenagh's, and that Lord Altham promised to pay him for his Care of him. It was before this Period of Time, that Byrne junior speaks of his coming to him, and the Care he took of his School-fellow, and the destitute Condition he was then in. After this, the first Account that I think is given of him, is that of Mr. Amys Bushe, who speaks of him as a Boy loitering about the College, who got his Subsistence by running of Errands, by the Name of a Scull; that, moved by his Story, he was taken in by the Humanity of this young Gentleman, and that he had Intentions to do for him, if his Grandfather would have permitted him to keep the Lad. The next Account we have of him is from Purcell; he tells you, that he received him for a little while into his House, and that at the Request of his Father; and gives an Account how he handed him over to Purcell; and Purcell tells you the Care he and his Wife took of him, and that they both considered him as the lawful Son of Lord Altham. The Boy left Purcell's ungratefully, after the Treatment he met with there; and the next News of him was at the House of Mr. Tighe, taken in by his Son; this in Point of Time must have been soon after the Death of Lord Altham, which happened in November 1727; and in the February following, this Boy, about thirteen Years of Age, was missing, without any previous Quarrel, and, as the Witness soon after heard, was sent to the West-Indies.

Gentlemen, the Plaintiff, after this, thought it necessary to give some Evidence, to account how a Child that had been acknowledged by the Father as his lawful Son, came to be treated in this manner; and you will observe, that one of the Witnesses, Plunket, says, that in Frappier-Lane Miss Gregory lived with Lord Altham as a Mistress, that she complained of this Boy, and that he was corrected: Indeed, he does say, that the Boy owned the Fault that he was charged with; and a Witness produced for the Defendant, Arthur Herd, tells you what the Offences were, and the immoderate Correction that was given to this Boy. And other Witnesses have told you, that my Lord, Miss Gregory and the Boy did not agree, and that Lord Altham could have no Peace whilst the Boy was in the House.

Gentlemen, the next Fact that the Counsel for the Plaintiff have thought proper to apply their Evidence to, has been to shew that this Boy, at the Time he was taken from Mr. Tighe's, was sent out of the Kingdom by the Procurement of the now Defendant, and that by Force, about five Months after Lord Altham's Death. He, as has been said, died in November 1727, and the Boy was taken away the February following. And, Gentlemen, as this seems to be a controverted Fact, I shall mention the Evidence particularly. The first Account is that which Purcell gives. That after the Child had the Small-Pox, the present Defendant came to his House, enquiring after this Boy; that he there called him the Son of Lord Altham his Brother; that the Boy cried, and said he was afraid of his Uncle Captain Annesley; and that Captain Annesley told Purcell he would speak to my Lord, and induce him to make him a handsome Consideration for his Care of the Child. Some Time after this, and after my Lord Altham's Death, the Boy came to Purcell, and told him, his Mistress had sent him, for that a Man had come to his House from his Uncle, desiring him to go to the House of one Jones in the Market; and that she desired Mr. Purcell to go along with him: He tells you, that he went thither, and that he met this Captain Annesley there, and the Expressions that were made use of by him in order to take away this Boy; and he tells you that he rescued and carried home the Boy. The next Account that they give you, is by one Marks Byrne, a Constable at that Time, who tells you, that he was applied to by one John Donnelly, who told him that he had a Job, for which he was to have a Guinea, which was to fetch this Boy, and bring him to Lord Altham; that accordingly they carried him to the House of this same Jones; that Lord Altham was there; that he accused him of stealing a Silver Spoon, and ordered them to take away the thieving Son of a Whore; that accordingly they took him away, and in carrying him to George's Quay, as they were directed, that there was a Crowd gathered; that the Boy cried; that they put him in a Hackney-Coach which they met near Effix-Bridge, and carried him to the Place appointed on George's Quay; that my Lord followed on Foot; and there he tells you, that he saw one Reily, a Servant of Lord Altham's, and that my Lord went into the Boat with Reily, the Boy, and Donnelly; that they went off, and that he saw them go to the End of the Wall. The next Person produced was Reily, and he agrees in the material Circumstances, which were, that he saw this Boy on George's Quay, that he went into the Boat with my Lord and the Boy, and that my Lord and the Boy went on Board the Ship; that the Boy was left behind in the Ship, and by the Time the Boat returned it was Night. Gentlemen, there is, to be sure, a Difficulty to reconcile the Testimony of this Reily; but I shall speak to that, when I speak to the Objections made to the Witnesses.

The next Evidence they produced on this Head was, to shew that a Ship called the James of Dublin, Thomas Hendry Master, failed over the Bar of Dublin, the 30th of April 1728; the Ship was entered in the Custom-House Book the 18th, and the Evidence afterwards shew that it failed the 30th. Mr. Babe, the proper Officer, produced the Book, and there this Entry did appear, with this Addition, that the Entry was made by Mr. Stevenson, a Merchant in this Town. The next Step they took was to shew from the Books of Mr. Stevenson, that this Boy did actually sail on board that Ship, and produced Mr. Cromie, at that Time Clerk to Mr. Stevenson, in order to shew you that this Boy did actually sail on board this Ship: He tells you, that this Ship was partly freighted by Mr. Stevenson, that it was bound to Philadelphia, that the principal Part of the Cargo were Men and Maid Servants; he produced Mr. Stevenson's Book of Entries, and this Book being read as Evidence, the Title of it was, An Account of Men and Women Servants on board the Ship James, which went over the Bar of Dublin the 30th of April 1728. Gentlemen, there was a long List of Names, and among the rest was that of James Annesley; and, Gentlemen, this Cromie was cross-examined as to the Manner of putting Servants on board, in order to shew you that it was impossible this James Annesley could have been put on board without his free Consent; for that the Way of Dealing was to have Servants indentured before the Lord Mayor, and the Custom was to have one Part of the Indentures delivered to the Servant, the other to the Master of the Ship, and the Name enrolled in the Tholfel-Books: But it appeared from his Evidence, that the List produced and kept by the Merchant, was not taken from the Indentures, or the Books of the Town Clerk, but that the Method of taking such List was, that the Night before the Ship failed, the Clerk of Mr. Stevenson went on board, and the Master gave him the Names of the Persons on board, and from that List this Entry was made in the Merchant's Books: So that from this Account, it was very possible for Persons to be sent away that had never indentured. In order to shew that this Boy was really indentured, the Counsel for the Defendant produced the original Book kept by the Town-Clerk, in which are entered, by the Town-Clerk, the Names of the Persons who indent for foreign Service, before my Lord Mayor; in which was entered the Name James Annesley, and insisted that it was the same Person, tho' wrong spelt; and that the Plaintiff had indented in the regular Way, and was carried off, not by Force, but according to Law. But, Gentlemen, I must observe to you, that the Manner of Indenting is such, that wherever a Person of tender Years, as this Child was, being about thirteen Years old, was to indent, it is always expected that the Parent, or some body that can answer for that Child, should be there consenting to that Indenture, or that some Account should be given concerning him. I mention this, because no Evidence has been produced by the Defendant, to shew who were present; and you will consider whether it was not in the Power of Lord Anglesea to have produced the Town-Clerk himself who made the Entry, and is now living, and whose Knowledge of the Anglesea Family was such, that upon his Memory he might have given some Light into this Affair, and probably could not have mis-spelt the Name of Annesley, with which he was well acquainted.

But, to put this Fact out of doubt, the Plaintiff produced Shelcrofs Apshe, an Attorney of the Court of Common Pleas, who had been employed by the Defendant the Earl of Anglesea; who tells you, that upon the Defendant's coming to the Title of Lord Altham, by his Brother's Death, the Boy was mentioned to his Lordship by a Gentleman in Apshe's Presence; that his Lordship complained of the Reproaches he underwent on the Boy's Account; and in particular, said that Hawkins, who was King at Arms, had refused to enroll his Title as Lord Altham, upon the Clamour made by this Boy; and thereupon called him Impostor, Vagabond, and he believes, Bastard. That Apshe then told his Lordship, if the Boy were a Vagabond, he might be obliged to indent before my Lord Mayor at the Tholsel, and be transported. And Apshe further says, that some Time after, he was again in Company with the Defendant at a Tavern, with others of the Defendant's Intimates, when my Lord Anglesea, then Lord Altham, told the Witness he was gone, meaning the Boy; which, coupled with the former Evidence, shews, as was insisted, that the Defendant intended to put the Plaintiff out of the Way; and gives Credit to the Witnesses, who for his Lordship executed such Intention, as before related.

The Plaintiff went further, to shew that the Defendant not only occasioned this Person's being taken away, but upon the Plaintiff's Return into England, a Misfortune befalling him, by the accidental killing a Man at Strains; that Opportunity was laid hold of to prosecute him, and under that Colour to take away his Life; for which Purpose one John Giffard has been produced. He appears to have been an Attorney of the Court of Common Pleas in England, and Agent for the Defendant. Some Difficulty was made whether his Evidence should be received; but the Court having admitted him to be examined, with Liberty to disclose what did not come to his Knowledge as Agent for the Defendant; You, Gentlemen, will not consider whether the divulging Conversation be what is called honourable between Man and Man, or whether the ill Treatment this Person received from the Defendant has induced him to appear to give Testimony in this Cause, but whether what he has sworn be true.

This Witness speaks to the Declarations made by my Lord Anglesea, at the Time an Appeal was depending between him and Captain Annesley, before the Lords in England; upon which Occasion, the Defendant said, that it was better for him to throw up his Titles, which he did not value, and to give up them and the Estate, upon Terms, to James Annesley the Plaintiff, whose Right they were; that he would go over to France, and live there, where he should be much easier and happier than he was at that Time. He tells you, that this was repeated more than once; that it was not a sudden Resolution, but the Result of deliberate Consideration, accompanied with another Act, which was that of taking a Person into his House, to teach him the French Tongue, to qualify him to live in that Kingdom. And the Witness tells you farther, that the Reason why this Project was dropt, was the accidental Homicide committed by the Plaintiff; upon which Lord Anglesea changed his Purpose, and resolved to prosecute him; and frequently declared, that he would give 10,000*l.* if he could get him hanged; for then he should be easy in his Titles and Estate; and that this Prosecution cost Lord Anglesea Eight hundred Pounds. As I shall not touch this Part of the Evidence again, I must desire you, Gentlemen, to consider, whether the Words sworn to be spoke by Lord Anglesea, as to giving up his Estate, may not be accounted for as the rash Expressions of a Man distressed in his Circumstances; but, Gentlemen, if you believe the other two Facts, that is, that Lord Altham did spirit away this Youth, and that he did carry on this Prosecution against him, the Question will then be, what Influence they ought to have upon this Cause? And how far they ought to conclude against the Defendant as to the Fact in Question, will deserve your Consideration, that the Plaintiff may not suffer by the illegal Acts of the Defendant, nor the Defendant be injured by your relying too much upon presumptive Evidence. If the Defendant did send away the Plaintiff, that Absence must be imputed to the Defendant. The Suppressor and the Destroyer of Evidence are to be considered in the same Light the Law considers a Spoliator, as having destroyed the proper Evidence; and against him defective Proof, so far as he has occasioned such Defect, shall be received, and every thing presumed to make it effectual. Nay, I think you may by Law go farther, and if the Plaintiff has given probable Evidence of his being the legitimate Son of Lord Altham, the Proof may be turned on the Defendant, and you may expect Satisfaction from him, that Lord Altham his Brother died without Issue; and this on account of that Evidence which the Plaintiff must be supposed to have lost, by the Defendant's having so many Years put it out of the Plaintiff's Power to assert his Right. And you will also consider whether these Acts are not Evidence to satisfy you, that the Defendant, in his own Thoughts and Way of Reasoning, considered the staying of the Boy here, as what might some way prejudice his Title. But whether, as insisted upon by the Plaintiff's Counsel, you ought to take this as an Admission on the Part of the Defendant, that the Plaintiff was the lawful Son of Lord Altham, will deserve further Consideration. Undoubtedly, there is a violent Presumption, because no Man is supposed to be wicked without Design, and the Design in this Act must be some way or other relative to the Title; but whether or no it was the Opinion of the Trouble he might have from this Lad, that induced him to do this Act, or a Consciousness that the Lad was the Son of Lord Altham, must be left to your Determination; keeping in your Mind, that it, though violent, is but a Presumption, and that the Defendant has an undoubted Title; unless it be proved that there be a Son of his elder Brother now living.

Taking the Influence of these wicked Acts with you, I shall now briefly mention the Nature of the Defence; which has been, first of all, by many Witnesses to shew that the Reputation of the Country was against there being such a Child. Col. Leffas, who lived within eight Miles of Dunmain, who was a Person of that Rank and Distinction in the Country as was likely to hear it, says, he never heard of it. Col. Palliser, Mr. and Mrs. Lumbert, Mr. Palliser, Mrs. Giffard, have all gone likewise to the same Point, and say, that they never heard of a Miscarriage. But their not hearing of a Miscarriage, has little Weight, because things of that Nature are conducted with Privacy, and the Report of them seldom reaches far. In the next Place, they have produced the Persons, who, they say, were the Servants of the Family at the Time that this Birth must have been: Mrs. Heath, my Lady's Woman, Rolph the Butler, who was there during that Time, Anthony Dyer, who was a Gentleman to my Lord, Martin Nief and Owen Cavenagh, Servants in the Family. Gentlemen, Mrs. Heath, Rolph and Dyer, are all positive that there was no Child, and that there could be no Child without their Knowledge; and Mrs. Heath goes so far as to say, there never was so much as a Pregnancy. These are positive Evidence, that stand in direct Contradiction to the Plaintiff's Witnesses. They have also produced William Knapper and William Elms to the same Point, both conversant at Dunmain: William Knapper in particular tells you, he was employed by the late Earl of Anglesea to sell the Ross Estate, which came to him upon Lord Altham's Death without Issue, and that though he made a hundred Articles for Leases of the Ross Estate to the Tenants, he never heard one Objection made that there was a Son. They then went into another Piece of Evidence, which, if true, stands in the Place of positive Evidence, because inconsistent with Lady Altham's being delivered of a Child at the Time deposed; and that was, my Lord and Lady Altham's going to Wexford at the Spring Assizes, held the 16th of April, 1715; and returning from thence to Dunmain, and going soon after to Dublin: Mrs. Giffard's Account is this; that there being some Men to be tried as Pretender's Men, the Curiosity of Lady Altham proposed a Journey to Wexford; that she accompanied my Lady in the Chariot; that my Lord, Mrs. Heath and Rolph, rode; she says, when they came to Wexford, they lodged at the House of one Sweeney; that they went into Court and stayed there during the Trial, and that Mr. Cesar Colclough sat by them part of the Time; that they stayed a Week in Wexford, and then went Home; and, as appears by the Examinations of Heath and Rolph, they went to Dublin in a very short Time after, and stayed there all the Summer; Heath swears it positively, and Rolph that they stay'd there till he went away. Now, Gentlemen, if this Fact could be established, it would undoubtedly put an End to the Controversy of this Day; because, if Lady Altham was at the Assizes of Wexford, which appears to be the 16th of April; that she continued there a Week, and went back and stayed but two or three Weeks at Dunmain, and thence went to Dublin, where she lived the Remainder of the Summer; and this being at the Time when she was supposed to have been delivered of the Plaintiff; you will consider if both can be true. But this Fact has been disputed, and in this Manner; first of all, Kir, who was Clerk to my Lord Chief Justice Foster, who went that Circuit, tells you, that he does not remember to have seen any Ladies there; this is not a positive Proof, but is a circumstantial one: The next is Cesar Colclough, who swears that he does not remember to have seen them, and from the Business he was engaged in, the Gentleman on Trial being his Relation, he does not believe he sat by any Woman that Day. There were also two positive Witnesses produced to prove Lady Altham was not there, which were Turner and Higginson. Turner tells you, that he was at the House of Dunmain, when my Lord went to that Assizes; that he saw him get into the Coach, and that he saw my Lady in the House after my Lord was gone. Higginson tells you likewise, that on the Tuesday of this Assizes, he was at Dunmain, and the Occasion that brought him thither (which makes him certain to the Time) was, to desire Lord Altham to send somebody to Lancashire for the 28 Pounds Arrear of Rent, which his Son was to bring them. He tells you, that he saw my Lady, that she was undressed, and that he believes she was with Child, and drank to her safe Delivery. And there is one Circumstance further, which you should take with you, that Mrs. Heath says in her Account, the Sister of Mrs. Giffard went with them; tho' Mrs. Giffard said, No one went with them but the Persons she named, but did not name her Sister.

The Defendant has also, in order to account for what has been said by the Plaintiff's Witnesses, as to the Child taken in by Lord Altham after the Separation, and who was carried by him from Place to Place, and treated as his Son, examined the several Witnesses produced by them, who were acquainted with Lord Altham and his Family, during the Time the Boy was with him, to prove that the Boy kept by Lord Altham was the Son of Joan Landy by Lord Altham, as was supposed; and that he was always considered and treated by that Lord as his Bastard. And thus, Gentlemen, you see how the Witnesses produced in this Cause stand, as to the material Circumstances, in direct Opposition to each other; so that the one or the other must speak false; which of them have done so, God only knows. You, Gentlemen, must, after taking the whole into your Consideration, say which, in your Opinion, deserves Credit. I shall now take notice of the Objections to the Witnesses on each Side.

The Objections that have been made to the Plaintiff's Witnesses, as to their Uncertainty with regard to Time and Place, and other Circumstances to which they were examined, were also made to the Witnesses for the Defendant; and if an Imputation arises from thence, you will consider whether it be not equal on both Sides. In the next Place, an Objection is made to the Condition of the Evidence for the Plaintiff; that they are Servants of the lowest Stations, and meanest Condition. You will consider how far that Objection ought to lessen, much less take away the Credit of their Testimony: Servants about the Family, tho' in the meanest Stations, were likely to know such particular Facts as they have given Evidence of.

But on the other Side, you will consider that the Fact in Question, is a single Fact, which might be put in the Mouth of any body, and which has been affirmed and denied on Oath by the respective Witnesses. You will therefore, I think, find it necessary, with Caution, to attend to the Objections made to the Credit of the several Witnesses that stand in Opposition to each other: For Instance, if the Credit of Mrs. Cole can engage your Belief as to the Circumstance of the Miscarriage, then Mrs. Heath has not sworn true; because she has sworn the contrary, and that to a Fact which must have been observed by her. Again, if Mrs. Cole obtains Credit, Mrs. Heath must be mistaken in another Fact, though not of that Consequence, and that is, the Removal to Dunmaine: Mrs. Cole says, and Mrs. Briscoe too, that my Lord and Lady Altham went to Lodgings in Essex-Street; Mrs. Heath, that they went directly from Capt. Briscoe's to Dunmaine. Now, Gentlemen, as to Mrs. Cole's and Mrs. Briscoe's Testimony, there is no Imputation, other than what arises from their Age, at the Time to which their Testimony relates, when the eldest of them could not be above Thirteen by her own Account, and she speaks to a Fact, which Mr. Prime-Sergeant thinks was not likely to engage the Attention of so young a Person, I mean the Place to which they removed; but you will consider, whether the Removal of my Lord and his Lady from their Family to another Place in Dublin, especially as an Intimacy was kept up between them, be not sufficient to answer that Objection. As to the Circumstance of the Miscarriage, there she is extremely positive, and probably the Curiosity of Girls of her Age, in these Matters, exceeds that of grown Persons. There was an Observation made as to the Word Abortion, but I think there can be no great Weight laid upon that, the Term may have been learnt since. There has been also a Witness produced to discredit Mrs. Heath, as to the very Substance of her Testimony; what he has said must be fresh in your Memory, but you will remember the seeming Art made use of by him, to shew he was compelled to give his Testimony. Besides, his Testimony is not supported by Circumstances, but is another Instance of Oath against Oath.

Gentlemen, The next Witness I shall take Notice of, is Rolph: (I don't speak regularly to them, intending only to take up the most material) He certainly delivered his Testimony in a very clear Manner; he gave an Account of his coming to and living in the Family, and of his Continuance in it, and Manner of leaving it; and there is one Circumstance that gives Credit to Rolph, as he is the only one that can be said to receive Credit from the Witnesses on the other Side. The Plaintiff's Witness, John Sitts, has said, That Rolph was Butler before, and continued after my Lady's Delivery; which agrees with Rolph's Evidence, but varies from all who have spoke to the Birth; who say, that Rolph was gone; that Margher lived there at the Time of Doyle's and Murphy's being there. Dennis Redmond does say, there was such a Servant as Rolph, but that he was gone before the Delivery. But then you will consider what Figure this Rolph made on his Cross-Examination; such an absolute Uncertainty as to every Thing but what he was brought to disclose, and his Readiness to give Evidence on one Side of the Question, necessarily induce Suspicion; and you will consider his Attempt to throw a Reflection on the Plaintiff, as if those concerned for him would have tampered with Rolph: But the Story carries an Improbability in it, that a Man should send Victuals before him, and come and offer to a Stranger what was not in his Power to give, and that in such an open Manner.

[Here Mr. Baron Mounteney spoke to the Lord Chief Baron.]

Gentlemen, My Brother Mounteney mentions one Thing, which I am mistaken in, if he is right; he says, That when Mr. Mac Kercher made the Offer of a Lieutenantcy to Rolph, his own Company were only present; I do apprehend there was not only the Company of Mac Kercher, but the Company that was with Rolph. Gentlemen, if I mistake the Evidence on either Side, impute it to my Memory, for I have no Intention to misrepresent, and should be extremely glad if any Body would set me right: When you come to look upon your Notes, you will see how this Fact stands. But there is one Thing I would observe as to the Testimony of Rolph, and that is, that Mrs. Giffard and he differ: Rolph has said, that the new Road leading from the House of Dunmaine to the Cabin, was made for the Benefit of going to Mrs. Giffard's and Colonel Palliser's, and that Mrs. Giffard always went that Way: Mrs. Giffard says, that she never went that Way, but always by the Bridge. These are slight Circumstances; but however, where Witnesses stand in such direct Opposition to each other, they deserve some Attention.

Anthony Dyer, Gentlemen, is another material Evidence for the Defendant. But you will consider how far his Credit is affected by what I am going to mention. The Witnesses on both Sides have said, that after the Separation of Lord and Lady Altham, the Child, be it legitimate or illegitimate, came into the House of Dunmaine. William Elmes fixes it to three Weeks after, and another to a Month; but this Man says, that he was there at the Separation, and three Quarters of a Year after; and swears, there was no Child in the House during that Time. As to the positive Evidence on the Part of the Plaintiff, Doyle and Murphy, the Observations on them as to their coming into the Service, have been made, and are extremely strong. Murphy did say, that Doyle came there first; she afterwards changed, and said, she came there before Doyle: You will consider also the Manner in which they give their Evidence. And in regard to Mr. Palliser, Mrs. Lambert, and those People that spoke to the Pregnancy on the Part of the Defendant, they have gone so far, that if you believe them, there could not have been a Miscarriage. There is one Thing I forgot to mention, to strengthen the Evidence of Mrs. Cole, and weaken that of Mrs. Heath, which is, that Lambert said, that Sutton the Surgeon was sent for to Ross, and staid at Dunmaine a Fortnight: Now when you come to compare the Times of his being sent for, and the Miscarriage, you will consider, whether it does not tally pretty near with the Time when Mrs. Cole gives an Account of the Miscarriage; and yet Mrs. Heath says, he never did attend my Lady.

There is one general Observation to be made on all the Evidence; and that is, that there is a Forwardness, an Inclination to go on to serve their Party, on both Sides, and that they want that Candidness which gives a Credit to Witnesses; I say not this on either Side, but you will consider whether it is not an Observation that runs thro' the whole. I shall not trouble you with respect to the Surgeon. The Objection to him arises from the Improbability of his own Testimony. As to Christopher Brown, who was one of the Servants attending at Dinner at the Christening, supposing what he says could be credited, you will consider how that Man was mistaken in the Description of the House. And you will permit me to observe, that there is a great Difference between not recollecting Circumstances, and a Witness swearing to those that are false; the not recollecting may consist with Integrity, the swearing to a Falshood never can, nor can you give any Credit to such a Witness; because you cannot say that he is wrong as to this, and right as to that Part of his Evidence. With regard to the several Witnesses who say the Child, from first to last, was not only reputed, but called a Bastard, and Jean Landy's Child, and that the Boy knew it, and sent his Duty to her as his Mother; you will consider how consistent that is with what William Elmes and others have said, who would have it understood that my Lord would not for five hundred Pounds that the Child should know his Mother; and that my Lord ordered them to set the Dogs upon her if she came near the House; and yet those who speak of him at Kinnea and Carrickduff say, that my Lord has often cursed him, for having too much of his Mother's Blood in him. How these different Accounts can be reconciled, you must consider. There is one Witness more on this Head that I must take notice of, and that is Elizabeth MacMullen; and she would have it understood, that out of the Mouth of the Boy himself, at the Funeral of his Father, upon being asked by her, who was his Mother, he said Jean Landy. Gentlemen, you will compare this with the Testimony of Mr. Bushe and Mr. Tighe; the Boy, when he lived with Mr. Bushe, persisted that he was my Lord's own Son, and the same at Mr. Tighe: Now, if the Boy had once received the Notion of his being the lawful Son of Lord Altham, you will observe the Improbability there is of his saying to her, a Stranger, I am the Son of Jean Landy. I will carry this a little farther, and that with regard to the Letter, she says, was wrote by her, giving an Account of Lord Altham's Death; if this Circumstance be false, that Letter must have been fictitious, and of later Date.

I have now mentioned the Evidence on both Sides; and from what I have observed to you, it does appear, that here is such a Clashing of Witnesses, such contrary Evidence, that though some Circumstances might be reconciled, yet others will remain irreconcilable; and therefore I must, and I think, you Gentlemen will be obliged to consider the Circumstances that will throw a Probability or Improbability upon the Testimony you have heard. The strong Circumstances which induce Probability in Favour of the Plaintiff are those I have mentioned, of spiriting him away, and afterwards attempting, by an unjust Prosecution, to take away his Life; to which I have before spoke at large, and need not repeat. On the Part of the Defendant, the Circumstances are of a different Kind; and those are such as relate to this Family, from the Beginning of the Transaction to the End, and arise from the Quality and Circumstances of the Persons; which, as has been urged, must have rendered a Fact of this Kind too notorious ever to have been doubted, especially in this Kingdom: That it must have been known to the Relations of this Family in England, whose Estate and Honours were to be enjoyed by that Son; that my Lord Altham himself ought to have made it publick; and that it was the Interest of Lady Altham, that the Duke of Buckingham, her Father, should know that she was with Child. Again, you will consider the Improbability arising from the Place where he was born; at Dunmaine, in a remote Part of the Country, attended by a Country Midwife and the Surgeon you have seen. Ladies, say they, of her Rank would not submit to it, and are usually placed, on such Occasions, where they can have the best Assistance; and the Consequence of a Child to this Family particularly required it. In the next Place, you will consider, whether there be not a farther Improbability arising from the Nurse; that a poor Body should be employed is no Wonder, but that an infamous poor Body, rendered infamous, as was supposed, by my Lord, and in that very Place, should be taken by my Lady to nurse her legitimate Child, is scarce to be accounted for. There is nothing said to reconcile this, but the Testimony given by Laffan; and she tells you, that this was a Secret not disclosed to my Lady, till after the Separation: Indeed, if you believe this, the Improbability will decrease; but you will find it difficult to suppose my Lady the only Person in the Family to whom this was a Secret. The Place where the Child was nursed has been also urged; but the Difficulty is not that a Nobleman's Child was nursed at a poor Man's House, but whether that House was fit to receive a Child intended to be preserved; and therefore the Probability or Improbability in this Instance, will depend upon the Credit you shall give to the different Accounts of the Cabin where this Nurse lived. It has been further said, that the Sponsors at the Christening of this Child, ought to have been of high Rank, and from among the Relations of this Noble Family. Again, this Child, after the Separation, was removed from Place to Place, and we have not heard that Lady Altham, either by herself or Friends, took any Care or Notice of him, except the single Instance at Ross. Was it not Lady Altham's Interest to have acquainted the Duke of Buckingham that she had a Son by her Lord; that he had sent him away, and put this Child into the Care of his Whore? And was it not probable, if this Notice had been given, that Care would have been taken of this Child by some of the Family? The little Care taken of his Education by my Lord, has also been urged. In Answer to which, you have been reminded of the Character and Circumstances of Lord Altham. Again, my Lord's parting with this Child, or rather exposing him, in the Manner you have heard, cannot, as it is said, be accounted for, supposing him to be the real Son of Lord Altham: But this is also attempted to be answered, by the Influence of Miss Gregory, and her representing him as a Bastard, in respect to my Lord, though born in Wedlock: But, say the Counsel for the Defendant, supposing the Plaintiff to be, what they have endeavoured to prove, a Bastard, the whole may be reconciled. But if the Inhumanity of exposing this Child raises the Objection, you, Gentlemen, will consider, whether a Person capable of treating his own Bastard in that Manner, may not be supposed capable of being worked up, by a bad Woman, to turn his legitimate Child out of Doors. The Inhumanity seems equal in both Cases, as both are entitled to the Care and Protection of the Father. I had almost given the Preference to the natural Child, as the legitimate does not stand in equal Want of it; the Mother, the Family may take care of him; but the other is a Cast-off. But, Gentlemen, though this Objection may be removed, with respect to the Father, it makes the Objection tion very strong when applied to the Mother: The Suffering of the Child in this Manner, were what one would expect should have excited and called for the Mother's peculiar Care: That she was not ignorant of it, you will gather from the Testimony of Gatherine O'Neil; and you will consider the Manner in which the Mother is supposed to treat that Child: "I should be glad to see my Son, but I know it would cost the Barren that brought him his Bread." It must be a weak Affection that could, for that Reason, be prevailed on not to see the Child. This Lady lived two Years after the Death of her Husband, and we do not find any Evidence of her Care for this Son; which has been urged also to shew, that he was not her Son. Again, it was her Interest to take notice of this Child; it has been mentioned, and not denied, that there was an Estate of Twelve Hundred Pounds a-Year that went away on the Death of Lord Altham, and would have gone to this Son, if legitimate. It was insisted upon, that Lady Altham might have applied for the Guardianship of her Son, and have had a good Allowance made by the Lord Chancellor, for the Discharge of that Trust, which she wanted. I must also observe the additional Weight they gave to this Objection, from the Testimony that Wells gave, of her declaring that her Heart would break, were it not that she had a promising young Son, who would be a Support to her in her old Age. Alderman King, at whose House she resided fourteen Months, a Man of Integrity and Truth, whose Credit cannot be controverted, says, he never heard her mention her having a Son, though the Intimacy of dining at one Table for that Time, must probably have afforded frequent Opportunities of doing so. And whether a Woman, under the Affliction of a Separation, and her unhappy Circumstances, could have concealed such a Fact, is worthy your Attention.

There was another Matter urged, as an Improbability, from the Testimony of Colonel Wall. I shall state to you how that Fact stands. Colonel Wall said, he had taken an Opinion for Lord Altham, as to the Power he had over the Anglesea Estate: That, according to that Opinion, Lord Altham was Tenant in Tail, and might have barred his Issue, and by that Means, have had it in his Power to raise more by the Sale of his reversionary Interest, supposing he was only Tenant for Life, expectant on the Death of the then Earl. But the same Witness also said, that he would not, upon the Credit of this Opinion, carry the Title to Market, and that, notwithstanding this Opinion, he was very angry with his Brother, the now Defendant, for refusing to join with him in selling their Reversions. So that Lord Altham's reversionary Interest being certain, and his other depending on an undecided Question in Law; you will consider, whether, upon these Views, he was more likely to have made publick, or concealed his having a Son.

Having now gone through with what I proposed to say upon the Evidence, I shall only in general take notice, that it will be proper for you, Gentlemen, while you are considering this Case, to take with you the Characters of the Persons Actors in it; and thence to judge what was, or was not to be expected from them. Again, if there are, as I suppose there will be, of the Plaintiff's Witnesses to whom you will not give Credit, you will consider, whether the Plaintiff in justice ought to be affected thereby: You will consider him as reduced, by the Defendant, to the Necessity of making use of such Evidence as offered; and in such Case, bad Witnesses may have obtruded themselves, or Art may have been used to put them in his Way; so that unless it appeared that the Plaintiff made use of them, knowing them to be bad, they ought not to be placed to his Account. You will also consider, that though you have only the Defendant before you, yet the Remainder-men, who do not derive under the Defendant, are to be affected by your Verdict, and ought not to be postponed, unless you are satisfied that the Plaintiff is the legitimate Son of Lord Altham: Therefore you must consider, (taking the Proofs, the Probability and the several Things together) whether the Plaintiff be the lawful Son or not? If he be, you must find for the Plaintiff; if not, for the Defendant.

Gentlemen, I forgot to mention the Evidence of my Lord Mount-Alexander, and of Mr. Medlicot, concerning Lord Altham's Declarations, as to his having a Son. Lord Mount-Alexander told you of an Expression of Lord Altham's to one Mr. Crow, an Expression not very easy to be understood: "My Wife has got a Son, which will make that Rake my Brother's Nose swell." Which has been applied to the Son now in question: You will consider, whether it concludes necessarily to that, or whether Lord Altham might not have, in his Imagination, some other Child begot on the Body of my Lady. There was an Intimation of a Son by one Seymour, who might be then living; how far this Rumour was in my Lord's Mind, is hard to say; but if this was not in his Thoughts, the Expression is extraordinary: "My Wife has got a Son." This might be said of such a Son; but you will consider, whether it was a Manner of Expression for a Son of his own, born in his own House. As to Mr. Medlicot, the Words sworn to by him were, that my Lord should say, "I have no Child, nor know not that I ever shall, I do not care if the Devil had the Estate." If my Lord looked upon the Son by his Lady to have been begot by another Man, consider, if the Words import more than this: I have no Son, no Son that I suppose to be my own, I do not care if the Devil had the Estate.

But taking each Sett of Words as contended for by each Side, all that can be said is, that my Lord has at different Times varied his Manner of speaking on this Subject; whether you can find out the Motives inducing him so to do, or can draw any Conclusion therefrom, must be left to your Consideration. I shall think myself happy, if any thing collected by me can assist you in the Discovery of Truth.

Mr. Baron Mounteney.] Gentlemen of the Jury, My Lord Chief Baron hath summed up this Evidence in so full, so judicious, and so masterly a Manner, that it would be a very improper Talk for me to attempt to go again with you over the Evidence at large.

I shall therefore confine myself to some of the more capital Parts of the Case: and (although I am extremely sensible in how inaccurate and disjointed a Manner I shall lay my Thoughts before you, yet) with the Hope of striking out even the smallest Spark of Light, which may help to guide you through this dark Affair, I shall endeavour to recollect a few Remarks on those Parts of the Evidence which strike my Understanding in the most forcible Manner.

And, Gentlemen, I shall take up the Case where the Evidence for the Plaintiff, and the Observations of the Defendant's Counsel, closed; I mean, the Testimony of the Plaintiff, and the Prosecution for Altham against me against him by the Defendant. The latter of these two Facts I shall consider last: It is proved by John Giffard, the Attorney employed to carry it on; and in the Course of his Evidence, Gentlemen, several Things occur, which though not relating to that Prosecution, are yet extremely material for your Consideration.

In the first Place, Gentlemen, he relates to your Conversation between the Defendant and himself in long ago on the Month of March 1741, and the Occasion upon which that Conversation happened. He tells you, that at that Time it was the common Topic of Discourse, that Mr. Annesley was returned from the West-India to assert his Right; and that the Defendant my Lord Anglesea was at that Time embarrassed with a Variety of Law-Suits—that my Lord expressed great Uneasiness upon both Accounts—and thereupon told him, that "he should be very glad to send Mr. Annesley; and if he would allow him 2 or 3000 l. a-Year, he would surrender up to him his Titles and Estates, and go live in France; for he should be much happier than to be so tormented, and had rather his Brother's Son should have it than any body else; for if Jeremy had the Estate, he should live easy in France, for it was his Right, and he would surrender it to him;—that he did not value the Title—he would go live in France; and that he might live the easier there, would send for a French Master to converse with him in that Language."

The Counsel for the Defendant, Gentlemen, with great Art and Ingenuity endeavour to avoid the Force of this Evidence: And in the first Place, they represent this Declaration of my Lord with regard to a Compromise and his going to France, as an hasty, passionate Expression, flowing from his Uneasiness of Mind, on account of the ill Situation of his Affairs, and his Resentment against the Annesleys.

But, Gentlemen, upon Giffard's Evidence, this could not possibly be the Case; for he tells you, it was my Lord's Resolution—that he continued in that Resolution from the Time of the first Conversation, which was before the 10th of March 1741, to May 1742—that in pursuance of that Resolution, he actually did (as he had declared he would) send for a Person, one Stephen Hayes, and had him in the House, to converse with him in French; and that he, the Witness, was present forty Times.

The next Thing, Gentlemen, suggested by the Defendant's Counsel was, that my Lord Anglesea (in his then uneasy Situation, and so angry with the Annesleys as Giffard said he was) might possibly be induced to wish for such an Accommodation as was mentioned with the Lessor of the Plaintiff, not through a Consciousness of his being the legitimate Son of the late Lord Altham, but with a View of gratifying his Resentment by disappointing the Annesleys, and at the same Time of promoting his own Interest by securing to himself a larger Share of the Estate than would otherwise remain to him.

But, Gentlemen, when you consider the following Part of Giffard's Evidence, you will find, that neither can this Interpretation hold: Because, if this had been the Scheme, my Lord must certainly have persevered in it. Whereas, upon the unhappy Accident of Mr. Annesley's killing a Man, this supposed Scheme is abandoned, and another (much more beneficial, as Giffard told you, for the Defendant, and absolutely destructive of the other) is immediately embraced; which was, to carry on a Prosecution against Mr. Annesley for that Fact, and if possible, to get him hanged.

Consider now, Gentlemen, the Evidence concerning that Prosecution, and the Circumstances attending it.

The first of May is the Day on which the Murder is in the Indictment laid to be committed:—On the second, Lord Anglesea retains Giffard to go down to Staines to collect Evidence, and to carry on the Prosecution:—On the fourth, the Coroner's Inquest finds it Wilful Murder:—Before Giffard returns from Staines, my Lord goes down to Hounslow to meet him, in order to learn how Things went on; and declares to him that he did not care if it cost him 10,000 l. if he could get Mr. Annesley hanged.

Two Anims are these Things said and done by the Defendant? Upon what Grounds was it that the noble Lord thus officiously interposed upon this Occasion? that he shewed so much Impatience to learn how Things went on? that he actually expended such large Sums of Money as Giffard expressly tells you he did (I think no less than 800 l.), and declared himself ready to expend much larger, in carrying on this Prosecution?—Was it for the Sake of Justice?—If so, Why all those Precautions, that Contrivance, which you were told of, that my Lord might not appear to be concerned in it?—If not for the Sake of Justice,—then, Gentlemen, you are to consider upon what other Principle and Motives this extraordinary Conduct can be accounted for.—And this will be the less difficult for you to do, when you shall compare these Facts and Circumstances with the Reason given by my Lord for that remarkable Declaration of his as to the 10,000 l. which Giffard swears positively my Lord mentioned to him—viz. He did not care if it cost him 10,000 l. if he could get him hanged; for then he should be easy in his Titles and Estates."

There is another Part of Giffard's Evidence, which, as it strikes me strongly, I shall mention for your Consideration; and that is, that my Lord told him (fifty Times, I think he said, between the 7th of December 1741, and the 14th of July 1742, which was the Day of the Trial) that this Pretender, as he called him, was transported for stealing a Silver Spoon.

You will consider, Gentlemen, what Weight this Circumstance may have when coupled with the Complaints made against him by Miss Gregory of thieving—with what the Witnesses, who prove the several Attempts upon the Boy, and at last the actual Transportation of him, have told you of my Lord's repeatedly calling him a thieving Son of a Whore—and with the particular Charge which one of them swears my Lord made against him of having stolen from him a Silver Spoon.

I have endeavoured to state to you, Gentlemen, the main Substance of Giffard's Evidence: In order to avoid the Force of it, the Counsel for the Defendant have strongly insisted upon two Objections to his Credit.

The first is, that understanding, as he owns he did, that my Lord Anglesea by his Declaration as to the 10,000 l. meant, that he intended to destroy Mr. Annesley if he could, and that he would expend that Sum in Means to have him hang'd, he did not decline being farther engaged, but still continued to carry on the Prosecution.

And indeed, Gentlemen, it does to me carry with it an Imputation upon Giffard, that he did not immediately fling up any Concern in this, or any other Business of my Lord's, and publish this Declaration to all Mankind. But, Gentlemen, you will consider, on the other hand, what Giffard hath said in excuse of himself. He tells you,—"If there was any dirty Work, he had no Hand in it. He distinguisheth between a bad Purpose and the carrying on a legal Prosecution--and he tells you, that the Coroner's Inquest having found the Fact wilful Murder, he thought that a sufficient Foundation for him to proceed."

The other Objection to his Credit is, that being an Attorney retained by Lord Anglesea to carry on this Prosecution (in any Suit between Mr. Anglesey and my Lord, he swears positively he never was, nor ever expected to be retained), he comes here voluntarily to disclose the Secrets of his Client.

Now, Gentlemen, as to the Prosecution, you will observe, that the original Discovery of my Lord's being concerned in it was not voluntarily made by the Witness; for he tells you, that he found himself under the necessity of suing my Lord for a large Sum of Money, which remained due to him upon his Bill of Costs; and that, upon his so doing, my Lord filed a Bill against him in the Court of Exchequer in England, in his Answer and Schedule to which he was obliged to set forth the particular Items of his Bill of Costs--that by this Means (as he supposeth) Mr. MacKercher got knowledge of it, and thereupon applied to him to give his Testimony in this Cause.

As to the Conversation between my Lord and him, I have already declared my Sense so fully, when the Point was debated, whether Evidence of it should be admitted or not, that I shall trouble you with a very few Words only upon it now.

Gentlemen, I can by no means allow it to be any Objection to the Credit of the Witness, that he voluntarily disclosed that which the Court hath unanimously determined he was compellable to disclose. And I must say this farther, that, in my Apprehension, Giffard could not have justified himself, either to God or Man, if he had not disclosed it; especially, as it was a Declaration wantonly made to him, not under the Seal of Friendship, nor of that Confidence which is necessary between Client and Attorney.

Gentlemen, you are the Judges, and you will carefully consider what Degree of Credit to give to this and every other Witness who hath been produced upon this Occasion; and God forbid, that any Part of the Evidence, any Argument, or any Observation, should have more, or less Weight with you than it will bear.

If you believe the Evidence of Giffard, you will then consider, that you have an express Acknowledgment of Right in the Lessor of the Plaintiff from the Mouth of the Defendant;--that, independently of this, you have Declarations and Facts which strongly import a Consciousness of that Right. And lastly, you will consider what Strength this Evidence of Giffard adds (if any Strength is wanting) to the Evidence of the Kid-knapping in 1728.

That Fact, Gentlemen, stands positively and fully proved by a Multitude of Witnesses, neither discredited, nor, as it was promised by the Defendant's Counsel, contradicted. And, indeed, if that Fact was not so clearly proved, the Evidence of Mr. Shelrofs Asbe is, in my Apprehension, sufficient to silence the least Doubt about it.

You will then consider, Gentlemen, if you believe that Evidence, whether there does not from thence arise the most violent Presumption of the Defendant's Knowledge of Title in the Lessor of the Plaintiff.

It is represented to you by the Defence, that it was notorious to every body conversant in that noble Family, that Lady Altham never had a Son in Ireland--that she never miscarried--that she never was with Child. On the other hand, that it was equally notorious, that my Lord had a Son by Joan Landy--and that the Lessor of the Plaintiff was that Son. Now, if this was the Case, for Heaven's sake, Gentlemen, what Apprehensions could the Defendant possibly be under from a Boy, who, if he had set up any Claim to the Title and Estate, must inevitably have been detected as a most notorious Impostor?

But if, on the other hand, this Boy was the legitimate Son of Lord Altham (and whether he was or not, must certainly lie in the Knowledge of the Defendant), then, Gentlemen, you will consider whether this Kid-knapping and this Prosecution will not be easily and naturally accounted for; and whether any other adequate Cause than a Knowledge of his being so, can, with any Degree of Probability, be assigned for this extraordinary, this iniquitous Behaviour of the Defendant.

But, Gentlemen, the Counsel for the Defendant have told you, that the material Fact in this Case is the Birth; and unless that is incontestably proved, that the Plaintiff cannot possibly avail himself of any Presumptions (an ingenious Gentleman chose generally to call them Suspicions) which arise in this Case.

Gentlemen, I differ entirely from them upon that Head. If that, which to be sure is the material Fact, were proved to you incontestably, the Plaintiff would then have no Occasion for Presumptions. Presumptions then only are, or can be, of use, when the Fact in dispute is not, nor can be, proved incontestably.

Gentlemen, as this Assertion hath been so strongly insisted on, and hath had so much Strefs laid upon it, by every one of the learned Counsel, let me detain you a little to make a few Observations upon the Subject of Presumptions.

Presumptions, Gentlemen, have at all Times, and in all Laws which I have ever heard of, particularly in our own, been allowed to have great Weight in doubtful Cases. Some are of so high a Nature, that the Law will not admit of any Proof to the contrary:--and these are called Presumptions Juris & de Jure.--Again, there are Presumptions of Law; as likewise what the Writers upon this Subject call Presumptions of Man (such as are collected occasionally by Man's Understanding from given Facts), which, though they fall short of that Strength and conclusive Force which the others have, are yet to stand in the Place of full Proof till the contrary is proved.

"Violenta Presumptio is many times Plena Probatio," are the express Words of my Lord Coke; and the Case which that great Oracle of the Law puts upon it, is this: "A Man is run through the Body with a Sword, in an House, whereof he instantly died--A Man is seen to come out of that House with a bloody Sword, and no other Man was at that time in the House." Upon these Circumstances, Gentlemen, a violent Presumption arises, and shall stand for full Proof, unless the contrary can be proved; that that Man was the Murderer.

Now, Gentlemen, you will observe, that in the Case put (and many others of a like, or even inferior Kind, may be put, in which great Numbers of the King's Subjects daily suffer capitally), the Jury from Circumstances infer a criminal Fact committed by the Person accused. A fortiori it should seem reasonable, from a criminal Fact proved, to infer the Circumstances and Motives leading to that Fact.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall very properly mentioned to you the Case of the Spoliation of a Deed.

In that Case, Gentlemen, it is an established Maxim, "That all things are to be presumed in Disfavour of the Spoliator." And you will consider, whether a Parity of Reason will not operate strongly in the present Case. Mr. Serjeant's Reasoning on this Head was entirely agreeable to what I remember to have heard laid down by one of the greatest Men who ever sat in a Court of Judicature, viz. That Circumstances were, in many Cases, of greater Force, and more to be depended upon, than the Testimony of living Witnesses.

Witnesses, Gentlemen, may either be mistaken themselves, or wickedly intend to deceive others. God knows, we have seen too much of this in the present Cause on both Sides! But Circumstances, Gentlemen, and Presumptions, naturally, and necessarily, arising out of a given Fact, cannot lie. And, Gentlemen, it must be left to your Consideration, whether in this Case the Presumptions arising from the Kid-knapping, and the Prosecution for Murder, do not speak stronger than a thousand Witnesses.

The next Observation, Gentlemen, which naturally ariseth from the Kid-knapping, is, that the Lessor of the Plaintiff is thereby thrown fifteen Years back in his Evidence. If his Case had come under your Consideration, or that of any other Jury, soon after the Death of the late Lord Altham, it would not have been attended with the Difficulties it now is, but must have received a very easy and clear Determination. Mrs. Shiells, who is sworn to have brought him into the World,--the Clergyman, who is sworn to have christened him--the Persons, who are sworn to have been Sponsors (with many other material Witnesses) were probably all, or most of them then living, and might have borne their Testimony. The Account which you now have of them is, that they are all dead.

In the next place, Gentlemen, you are to consider the Dangers to which this Gentleman lies open in asserting his supposed Right;--on the one hand, from Witnesses officiously obtruding themselves, and on the other, from Witnesses who may have been industriously obtruded upon him. And if you believe that these Difficulties have been occasioned by the wicked Act of the Defendant, you are then to consider whether a much slighter Evidence, than might otherwise have been required, will not satisfy you, in a Case thus circumstanced, of the Truth and Justice of his Claim.

But, Gentlemen, the Counsel for the Defendant farther tell you, "that although you might possibly be induced to think the Defendant capable of committing a wicked Act, yet that ought not to influence your Judgment as to the Determination of his Property."

And, Gentlemen, I must agree that a wicked Act, nay repeated wicked Acts, in general, ought not to influence your Judgment. But if the Defendant hath committed a most wicked Act against the Person, who then asserted himself to be the Son of Lord and Lady Altham, and who is now contesting with him his Title and Estate--if he hath done another very extraordinary, though legal, Act against him,--in a clandestine Manner,--and coupled with a Declaration highly criminal,--This, in my Opinion, may, and ought to have great Weight with you upon this Occasion.

Another Thing, Gentlemen, insisted upon by the Defendant's Counsel was, that if the Case be doubtful, the present Possession ought to turn the Scale in Favour of the Defendant.

Now here I must again differ from the learned Gentlemen. If indeed upon the whole Evidence the Case stands doubtful, they say well: But if upon the direct positive Evidence the Case is balanced, then, Gentlemen, the Kid-knapping and the Prosecution will, in my Apprehension, turn the Scale in favour of the Plaintiff. For a violent Presumption is to stand for Truth 'till the contrary is proved. Now if upon the positive Testimony on both Sides, the Mind remains in Equilibrio--then, Gentlemen, the contrary is not proved, and consequently the Presumption stands.

I cannot help saying, that I think it pretty extraordinary in this Case, that so many Objections should be raised, and so much Strefs laid upon them, against your being influenced in your Judgment by Presumptions--by Suspicions--by Probabilities.

Gentlemen, their whole Defence is built upon Probability and Improbability.

They first tell you, you are to judge not upon Probabilities, but upon positive Proof of the material Facts; and to that positive Proof, when given, they tell you, you ought to give no Credit, for it is improbable.

There was one Objection of this Sort which I forgot to mention, and that was as to the Proof of the Kid-knapping; they told you, Gentlemen, that although the Defendant could be supposed wicked enough to commit such a Fact, yet it was inconceivable that he should be so weak as to do it at Noon-day--that he should carry the Boy through a public Market--nay, by the very Stall of Purcell, who had before protected him--(by the bye, Gentlemen, you will remember that the Boy was charged with Felony, and carried off by known Constables) and the same Objection, I think, was before made to Giffard's Testimony, that it was utterly incredible, that any Man living should be so weak as to put himself into the Power of any other Man, by making such Declarations as Giffard swore my Lord made to him.

I must own, Gentlemen, that this Objection does not to my Understanding carry any great Weight with it.

Wickedness and Weakness generally go hand-in-hand together; and upon the repeated Observation of their doing so, is founded that well known Saying,

"Quos Deus vult perdere prius dementat."

The next Part of the Case which I shall speak to, is the Evidence of Mrs. Heath, as it stands opposed to that of Mrs. Cole; and the Evidence of Rolph, opposed to that of Mrs. Colclough, Turner, and Higginson.

It was my Desire that Mrs. Cole and Mrs. Heath might be confronted, because I did then, and do still think, that this Case may receive great Light, and may be greatly narrowed for your Determination, by a careful Consideration of Cole's Evidence, as it stands in direct Contradiction to the Testimony of Heath, whom I look upon as a capital Witness; and one of the main Pillars of the Defence.

In other Parts of the Case, Gentlemen, you meet with many Variations between the Witnesses, as to Periods of Time, and other minute Circumstances; which will not be of much Consequence in the Cause, or tend to impeach the Credit of those Witnesses on the one Side, or the other:—But when once you come to a Fact in which two positive Witnesses flatly contradict each other—a Fact, the Truth or Falseness of which the Witnesses on each Side must with as much Certainty and Exactness know at the Time she gives her Testimony, as she did at the Time that Fact is said to have happened, let it be ever so long ago—so that one of them is, to Demonstration, perjured; then, Gentlemen, it becomes exceedingly material for you to consider which of two such Witnesses you will give Credit to; and your Determination of that Point may go a great way towards enabling you to form a Judgment upon the whole Case.

The first material Circumstance which occurs to me, in which Cole and Heath differ, is as to the going or not going away of Lord and Lady Altham from Captain Briscoe's (at whose House the Reconciliation was brought about) to my Lord's Lodgings at Vice's, in Essex-street.

Mrs. Heath swears positively, that during their Stay in Dublin, they never lodged one single Night out of the House of Captain Briscoe—Mrs. Cole (supported by her Sister, Mrs. Briscoe—by Alice Bates, a Servant in her Father's Family—and by Catherine Mac Cormick, Vice's Servant) swears as positively, that after staying four or five Days at her Father's, they went to Lodgings in Essex-street (as to the Person's House she is not positive, but she takes it to be Vice's), and there continued a considerable Time, I think about two Months, before they left Dublin, and went to Dunmaine. And, Gentlemen, you will remember that Mrs. Cole, when she was a second time produced, gave you a particular Reason why she could be so positive as to that Fact, which was, “that, notwithstanding the Reconciliation between my Lord and Lady, her Father still continued uneasy about the Matter; and was very desirous and pressing, that they would leave his House, and go to other Lodgings, because he thought it would have a better Air of their being well together;” which she explained afterwards, by saying, that it would become more publick and notorious to Mankind; that my Lord and Lady were in fact reconciled.

This Circumstance, as soon as it was mentioned, I thought, struck some Light into this Affair—it did to me explain clearly two other odd Circumstances, which I shall mention to you presently.

The next Fact, concerning which Mrs. Cole and Mrs. Heath stand in direct opposition, is, the supposed Miscarriage at Dunmaine. Mrs. Cole swears positively, that about the Middle of the Night, after the Accident of Lord Altham's breaking the Saucers, Mrs. Heath came into the Bed-chamber of her Mother, Mrs. Briscoe, with whom she lay, alarmed her with Account of my Lady's being extremely ill, and begged that she would immediately rise and go to her, which her Mother accordingly did; that the next Morning she (the Witness) was in my Lady's Bed-chamber, where were present her Mother, Mrs. Heath, and several of the Servants—that her Mother there told her, that my Lady had miscarried, and shewed her the Abortion in the Basin.

Mrs. Heath, on the contrary, swears as positively, that she did not, either upon that or any other Night, call up Mrs. Briscoe—that she does not remember, that Mrs. Briscoe, or her Daughter, was in my Lady's Room the next Morning—and she swears positively that my Lady did not then miscarry, nay, that she was not, either then, or at any other Time, with Child.

It was insisted on strongly by the Defendant's Counsel, that this Evidence of Cole was attended with great Improbability—that it was incredibly strange, that a Mother should shew an Abortion to her Female Child of such tender Years. And, indeed, Gentlemen, I think that Fact does, prima Facie, appear to be extremely odd, and to carry with it a strong Air of Improbability.

There was another Fact, proved in the very Outset of the Cause, which (though it had not the same Remark made upon it by the Counsel) struck me in a very odd Light; and that was, that upon the Reconciliation of Lord and Lady Altham, at Captain Briscoe's, Mrs. Dorothy Briscoe, then not above Ten, and her Sister, Mrs. Cole, not then above twelve Years of Age, were, with the rest of the Family, called into the Room, to see my Lord and Lady in Bed together.

But Gentlemen, you will consider, whether the Reason which Mrs. Cole tells you her Father had for pressing Lord and Lady Altham to leave his House, and lodge elsewhere in Dublin, viz. that their Reconciliation might become more notorious to Mankind, does not fully explain, and strongly corroborate the Proof of, those two odd, and otherwise unaccountable Facts.

Gentlemen, you will consider further, whether from these three Circumstances connected and compared together, there does not arise a strong Probability, that Captain Briscoe (who I think appears to have been the Person employed by the Duke of Backingham to bring about the Reconciliation) had some Apprehensions, that although the Reconciliation was effected, and although, in consequence of it, Lady Altham should have Issue by my Lord—yet, that in some future Time, and for some Reasons or other, Lord Altham (whose Character and Conduct appear pretty extraordinary upon the Evidence in this Cause) might be induced to bastardize that Issue.

And, Gentlemen, you will consider further, whether such an Apprehension in Briscoe, as I have supposed, would have been unnatural or ill founded, when you have compared these Circumstances (which, as I have mentioned, seem to render it probable, that he had such an Apprehension) with the Evidence of Palliser the younger. He relates to you a very extraordinary Conversation which passed between my Lord and him, about five Days before the Separation, as they were returning from Bourkestown to Dunmaine. He tells you, that my Lord called to him in a familiar Manner, and said, “Tom, I will tell you a Secret, as I have no Son by my Wife, nor ever expect to have any, and as my Lord Anglesea is very angry with me for keeping this Woman—I am determined to put her away, not to disoblige my Lord Anglesea.” The same Witness had before sworn positively that he never had—that he never attempted to have—that he believes in his Conscience, that my Lord did not suspect he had committed any Crime with Lady Altham; and that my Lord only made use of him as a Colour and Pretence for putting away his Lady.

Now, Gentlemen, you will observe, that upon this Testimony even of the Defendant's Witness (who, indeed, is a very material Witness for the Defendant in some other Parts of his Evidence, if you give credit to him), Lord Altham was a Man capable of putting away his lawful Wife, to whom he had lately been reconciled—upon a mere Pretence—and for no other Cause than that he might not disoblige Lord Anglesea—If he were so, will then consider, whether it be at all an unnatural and strained Supposition, that he was capable of abandoning, and bastardizing his lawful Son in order to oblige some other Person or Persons.

This Supposition, Gentlemen, will, I think, appear still less unnatural, when you recollect how Miss Gregory's Behaviour to the Boy stands upon the Testimony of another Witness for the Defendant: I mean Hard (who, in his Account of the Boy's Treatment by my Lord before they came to Dublin, differs totally, as my Lord Chief Baron hath already observed from all the Gentlemen of that Part of the Country who have been produced before you).

Hard tells you, that when my Lord lived in Frappin's Lane, great Complaints were made to my Lord against the Child, by Miss Gregory, of his Thieving—that he cannot tell whether the Boy was really guilty or not, but that he confessed himself so—and that upon this my Lord (whom the Witness had never once seen strike the Child upon any Occasion in the Country) corrected him more severely than ever he had seen any Child corrected in his Life.

When the Witness was asked by my Lord Chief Baron, what those Things were, with the Thieving of which this Boy (who is admitted on all hands to be the Son of my Lord, though his Legitimacy is disputed) was charged by this Lady, and for which he was so cruelly corrected by his Father, he tells you they were “a Jockey Belt and a Pair of Pigeons.”

These are Circumstances which, I must own, strike my Understanding strongly: You, Gentlemen, are the Judges, and you will well consider, what Weight they carry, when connected with the rest of the Evidence, and what Light may be collected from them to guide your Judgments on this Occasion.

I forgot to mention to you one thing, which I think is very remarkable, upon Heath's Evidence; and that is, that she accompanies some of the Plaintiff's Witnesses in all the preparatory Steps, and separates from them only, when they come to the critical and material Facts themselves.

She recollects distinctly with Mac Cormick, Vice's Servant, “That my Lord came home late one Night disordered with Liquor—that he made a great Noise with the Chair—that he quarrelled with her—that he jumped out of Bed from my Lady, and ran towards the Window—that he called for Mrs. Lucas the Midwife—swore he would send for her to see if my Lady was with Child, and with another Oath declared, that if she was not with Child, he would turn her away.” All these Circumstances she recollects minutely, and exactly agrees in them with the other Witnesses—but as to my Lady's screaming upon this Occasion—there she separates.—She says, my Lady would have died first. As to her miscarrying, or to any Discourse in the Family the next Day that she had miscarried—this she positively denies.

With regard to the Miscarriage at Dunmaine—she agrees with Cole in the Fact of my Lord breaking the Saucers, that those Saucers had ugly or indecent Figures on them, and that my Lord had forbid their being brought to Table.—But that my Lady was the least disordered upon this Occasion, she denies—that she called up Mrs. Briscoe—that my Lady miscarried—that she kept her Chamber for several Days, or even one Day after—all this she positively denies, in direct Contradiction to what has been sworn by Cole. And here, Gentlemen, it will be extremely material for you to recollect that, pretty exactly to the Time at which Cole swears this Miscarriage happened, and my Lady kept her Chamber at least five Days, it appears from the Evidence of the Defendant's Witnesses (Mr. Aaron Lambert) that Sutton the Surgeon, whom my Lord brought over with him from England, but had turned out of his House, on account of some Misbehaviour which he had been guilty of in the Family, was sent for to Dunmaine; that he twice refused to go, being picqued at his having been turned out of the Family—that being sent for a third Time, and my Lord's Chariot coming for him, he went, and continued attending my Lady at Dunmaine, to the best of the Witness's Remembrance, for a Fortnight. This Evidence was produced in order to discredit Brooks, the Piece of a Surgeon (as he called himself), produced on the Part of the Plaintiff, who in my Opinion sufficiently discredited himself. You will consider, Gentlemen, whether it does not go strongly in support of the Testimony of Mrs. Cole, in contradiction and discredit of Heath; with regard to whom, an Observation was made by the Defendant's Counsel which I was exceedingly surprized to hear from that Side of the Table. They took notice of the peculiar Excellency of our Law, especially with regard to Trials by Jury, on which Occasions the Witnesses are examined vide voce; that from confronting Witnesses who contradict each other, and carefully observing their Appearance, and the manner in which they give their Testimony, some Light is to be collected; and the Court and Jury may in some measure be enabled to form a Judgment upon a doubtful Case.

The Observation, Gentlemen, is undoubtedly just, but what I little expected to have heard from that Quarter.—For, Gentlemen, when you recollect and compare together the outrageous Behaviour and voliferous Assertions of Heath, with the calm, sedate, and modest Demeanour of Cole—You will consider whether all the Weight which can be laid upon an Observation of that Sort does not lie entirely on the other Side.

Another Point which hath been strongly, and indeed very properly insisted upon by the Defendant's Counsel, is this:—They say it is extremely improbable, if this Person were really the Son of Lady Altham, that my Lady, who is proved to have lived two Years after the Death of her Lord, should make no Enquiry about him.

But, Gentlemen, if you will compare the Time of Lord Altham's Death with the Time of Kid-napping the Boy, you will find, I think, that there is very little, if any, Weight in this Observation.

Lord Altham died in November, 1727—the Letter which Mac Mullen swears she sent to Mrs. Heath, notifying my Lord's Death, (and which Heath swears

the 18th of that Month
the Letter must be some Days at least going to England.—On the 6th of the March following, the Boy appears from the Thames Book to be intended to Thomas Henry by the Name of James Henry, and on the 6th of April, the next Month, it appears from Stevenson's Book, that he passed over the Bar of Dublin—So that taking that to be Truth, which, I think, is liable to strong Objections of Improbability, that Mac Mullen sent that Letter) there will be very little more than five Months between Lord Altham's Death, and the Transportation of the Boy.

When Alice Bates appears, and gives you an Account of her joking with Lady Altham about her being with Child, you are told by the Defendant's Counsel, that this is highly improbable.—That Lady Altham was a very haughty Woman.—That it is incredible she should condescend to such Familiarity with a Person so much her Inferior.

Will it not appear to you equally improbable at least, that this haughty
Lady should condescend to receive Visits once a Week, as Mac Mullen tells you she did, from her—the Daughter of an Ale-house Keeper?

It must be allowed that my Lady's living with Alderman King for thirteen or fourteen Months, conversing with him about her Family Affairs, and yet never mentioning to him her Son, does prima facie carry with it a great Improbability of her having at that time a lawful Son.

But considering that my Lord had put her away upon a Suspicion (either real or pretended) of her Virtue, and had aspersed her Character, it might not be so prudent, nor perhaps so probable, that she should discourse with him, or any other Person, upon the subject of Child-bearing.

However, allowing this to be improbable—will it not be equally improbable, that the Care of communicating so material Intelligence as the Death of Lord Altham, should be intrusted, not to this Alderman King, or any other Person of some tolerable Figure in this Town, but to such a Woman as Mac Mullen?

These, Gentlemen, are Circumstances which in my Apprehension weigh strongly against the Credit of Mac Mullen's Evidence. But taking that Evidence to be true, you will consider, whether the small Distance of Time between Lord Altham's Death and the Transportation, does not greatly lessen the Force of this Argument, which has been so strongly insisted upon by the Defendant's Counsel,—especially if you add to it, the Circumstances both of Health and Fortune, in which Lady Altham appears to have been at this time.

And here, Gentlemen, will come in very materially for your Consideration the Evidence of Mrs. Deborah Annesley, a near Relation of this noble Family.

She who had before told you that her Brother frequently visited my Lord at Kinnea—that whenever he returned from thence, and whenever my Lord visited at their House, it was their common Practice to drink the Health of my Lord's Son—that they all considered that Boy as my Lord's lawful Son, and the future Earl of Anglesea (so that it is not Fact, as you have been told, that none of the Relations of the Family ever heard of Lady Altham's having a Son); this Lady, I say, tells you, that upon the Death of Lord Altham she and her Sister made frequent Enquiries after this Boy: That for some time they could learn no Account of him, and at last they concluded that he was dead. Now if it became a general Reputation that he was so, then, Gentlemen, tho' Lady Altham likewise might have made frequent Enquiries after this Boy (non constat upon the Evidence whether she did or not, and she might have made feveral, not at this Day capable of Proof), and might receive an Account, and give credit to it, that he was dead; and this might put a Stop to any Further Enquiry, consistently with Lady Altham's Knowledge of this Boy's being her legitimate Son.

These Parts of the Case, independant of the other, which have all been fully laid before you by my Lord Chief Baron, seem to me to have great Weight in them.

You, Gentlemen, will consider what Strefs you will lay upon the Observations I have thrown out to you, and what Light may be collected from them.

There were several other things, Gentlemen, which I designed to have mentioned to you; but the Fatigue which we have all undergone hath been so very great, and the Time I have had for Recollection so very short; that my Thoughts are too much dissipated to proceed, and indeed
I have already trespassed too much upon your Patience; considering the great Attention which you have all along given, and the careful Notes you have taken of the Evidence; I shall therefore now conclude with that which I at first set out with, the Kidnapping and the Prosecution.
If the Case be doubtful, upon the other Parts of the Evidence (whether it be or not you are the proper Judges), I must then leave it to your Consideration, whether the Evidence of those two extraordinary Facts may not be sufficient to determine you what Verdict to give upon this Occasion.

Mr. Baron Dawson.] Gentlemen of the Jury, my Lord Chief Baron and my Brother Mountney have summed up the Evidence, and observed upon it in so judicious and clear a manner, as makes any further Observations from me unnecessary; I shall therefore only require your Patience for a few Minutes, to shew you how I would consider this Case if I was upon the Jury, and my Reasons for so doing. There are such Contradictions on both Sides of the Question, that it would not be hard to shew, that several Witnesses on each Side are not entirely to be credited. Several of the Witnesses on each Side, not only contradict the Witnesses on the other Side, but also, in some Instances, themselves, and therefore, independent of other Things proper to be consider'd, one could not tell where to settle. If I was upon the Jury, and to determine this Question, I should lay before me and consider the Story as told on each Side; I should consider how far the Story on one hand, independent of the Witnesses, exceeded the other in point of Probability: if on either hand the Story told appeared extremely improbable, I should then require from that Side, the strongest Proof imaginable; and that because Probability ought to weigh, except it be contradicted by Testimony not to be doubted of; and therefore, if on either Side, the Story should be extremely improbable, and probable on the other Side, I should give my Opinion on the Side of Probability. How far any thing of this kind appears in this Case, will come under your Consideration.

This is the longest Trial ever known at the Bar, this is the 15th Day since the Trial began. Trials at Bar are usually determined in one Day, and the Policy of the Law hath taken care that no Person should speak to the Jury after any Evidence given in Court; there is no Occasion, I am persuaded, Gentlemen, to remind you that any thing heard out of Court is not to govern you, you are to be governed by nothing but the Evidence laid before you.

In the first place, the first Stage is the Time of the Birth. You will take into your Consideration the Number of Witnesses and their Stations that swear to that Birth, and also the Number and Station of the Witnesses that swear in direct Contradiction to them; if you cannot determine that Question by comparing them together, you will then have recourse to the other Part of the Testimony, which is, the Reputation of the Country, and the Persons that visited constantly at that House; you will consider the Probability or Improbability that a Fact of this kind could have happened, and the People visiting not know of it. This could hardly be in a Family of less Consequence than my Lord Altham's, but when you consider this Family and the Estate that was to fall to it, you will consider if there could be a Birth, and Persons visiting the Family not knowing of it. There have been Proofs on the one hand, laid before you of my Lady's being with Child, and on the other hand of her not being with Child; either of these Parties may swear false; but then you must take into your Consideration, if they that swear she had a Child swear
Truth, whether it could be possible that that could be kept a Secret.
There was not any Interest or Reason that it should be kept a Secret. If it was not industriously kept secret, how comes it that all those Persons that visited there should never have heard of a Child?

To go to positive Testimony, Laffan swears positively the Child was presented to several Gentlemen and Ladies; and often to Mrs. Lambert.
Mrs. Lambert swears positively the Child never was shewn to her. Which is to be credited? There are several Circumstances you will take into your Consideration, concerning the Probability or Improbability of the Birth of this Child, whether the Preparations for my Lady's Living-in were suitable to her Rank? Whether Dunmaine, a small Village, distant from any Assistance necessary on such an Occasion, was a proper Place?
Whether my Lady Altham would be easily brought to lye-in in the Country, especially of her first Child? These are Considerations worthy your Attention. There have been many Gentlemen who gave Evidence to there not having been a Child; they swear not only that they never saw, but that they never heard of a Child. I won't enter critically into every particular Period of Time sworn to by them; but if in three Years those Persons were three or four times a-piece at Dunmaine, and they swear Truth, it will be of Weight in the Question whether there was a Child or not. For admitting Colonel Palliser and the other Witnesses to be there four times a-Year, you are the Judges whether it is probable that there was a Child there, and unknown to them. The Separation is agreed on all hands to have been in the Year 1716, and some little time after that, the Child was brought home to my Lord Altham's House.
Dyer swears the Child was not brought to Dunmaine in his Time; but the Witnesses for the Plaintiff say, either from the Separation, or soon after; and that the Child continued in the House with Lord Altham till about the Year 1724. You are to observe, that my Lord left Dunmaine about Summer 1717; the Separation was in February 1716-17, and Lord Altham came up to Parliament, and after that went to Kinnea; the Parliament sat down the 27th of August 1717; then you will consider what has been sworn to of my Lord's Behaviour to this Child all that Time.
During this Period of Time at Kinnea, Carrickduffe, Cross-Lane and Frappier-Lane, there are many Witnesses on both Sides that give a most contrary Testimony to one another; there are Witnesses on both Sides that I cannot say how to disbelieve, there are many of them that I cannot disbelieve, who swear to his being treated as a legitimate Son; there are many of them whom I also cannot disbelieve, who give a contrary Testimony, and say that he was treated as an illegitimate Son; and Colonel Harman, Doctor Medlicott and Colonel Wall give an Account of my Lord's manner of calling him his Bastard Son. And in my Apprehension, if the Witnesses deserve Credit, my Lord Altham did during that Time treat him to some Persons as his lawful Son, and to others, as his illegitimate Son. You will consider the Temper and Disposition of Lord Altham, and the Circumstances he was in; he was a Man not of Prudence, either as to the Management of his Fortune or Family;
you will please to consider in what manner to account for this Behaviour of his; whether there may, or may not be any Reason for treating an illegitimate Son in some Companies as a legitimate Son, and whether there may be, at any time, any Reason for treating a legitimate as an illegitimate one. A Man comes into the Country where he was not known before, and has a Child that he had not by his Wife; perhaps he may have Reason for treating him as a legitimate Son. A Man may carry an illegitimate Child abroad, and visit with him in the Neighbourhood, and pass him for his legitimate Child; for perhaps he might be glad that that Person whom he visited, should not know him to be a Bastard; but a Man can have no Reason, in my Apprehension, for treating a lawful Son as an unlawful one. Then you will consider the several Schools the Child was put to by Lord Altham; you will consider whether these Schools were fit Schools for my Lord, even in indigent Circumstances, to put his lawful Son to. You will consider, the Consequence of my Lord's being under the Influence of Miss Gregory; the Consequence was, that this unhappy Child was thrown abandoned to the World at not ten Years old: here you will consider whether a Treatment of that kind bespeaks him to be his legitimate or illegitimate Son: Had he been a legitimate Son, surely my Lord Altham must have had Reflection enough to have considered what a dishonourable Action he was doing publicly. On the other hand, you will consider that the Influence of Miss Gregory might well be carried to make him doubt whether this Child was his or not, if the Child was by an improper Woman. In the next place, you will consider the Situation and Behaviour of the Mother, that is the tender Sex, and their Tenderness to their Children is hardly to be got the better of at any rate. Lady Altham was three Years in Ros, and there is but one Testimony of her seeing him then, and that is the Man that swears he made him Shoes. From this she comes to Dublin, and lives near my Lord at the time this Child is with him; it seems a little odd that she made no Attempt to have this Child brought to her but

but by Catharine O'Neil; and I submit it to you, how far what she says can have Weight; for she says, that my Lady declared she would be glad to see the Child, but she was afraid the Servant that brought him would lose his Bread. Can such a thing as that be put in competition with the Tenderness of a Mother for a Child? That, Gentlemen, is for your Consideration. Why then, Gentlemen, my Lady comes to the House of Alderman King, and he tells you, that for thirteen or fourteen Months she frequently spoke to him of her Family Affairs, yet never mentions she had a Child. It seems very strange; a Woman, where she fancies herself injured, is mighty apt to tell the Injuries done her to every body, and to aggravate her Distress by saying she was deprived of the Comfort of seeing her Child. This was not to be entrusted to Alderman King, but communicated to Mrs. Hodgers, whom she had never seen but once; you will consider this, Gentlemen. In the Year 1727 my Lord died, and there can be no Doubt but my Lady knew it; there is not any Proof of her having made any Enquiry after the Child: It is true; my Lady might have made the Enquiry after the Child, and it might have proved ineffectual, because of his being transported so soon after; but of this there is no Evidence; but how comes it she did not make the Enquiry, especially where her own Interest was to guide her in that Case? And yet here is the Force of the Mother and Interest joined together, and they work nothing on my Lady Altham. You will consider that the Estate of this Family, on Failure of Issue, being to go to Arthur, late Lord Anglesea, it was the Interest of the Mother to have made a strict Enquiry after him; and yet there is a Witness for the Defendant, William Napper, who tells you, that he had a Letter of Attorney from Lord Anglesea, to take Possession of the Ross Estate; and by virtue thereof made Numbers of Minutes to several Tenants, and no Objection he ever heard made, that Lord Altham ever had a Son. That, Gentlemen, seems a little extraordinary.

The next Thing that offers, and the Strength of the Case for the Plaintiff is, the Transportation of him, and the Directions the Defendant gave to Mr. Gifford for the Prosecution of him after his return into England. You will consider, as to the Transportation, whether the Defendant was the Occasion of it, or not? If you should be of Opinion he was, you will consider how far that will have an Effect upon you. He claimed to be the lawful Son of Lord Altham; you will consider whether that might have been an Inducement. If you should be of opinion that the Story on each hand carries an equal Degree of Probability; this of the Transportation should, in my Apprehension, add great Weight to the Case of the Plaintiff: If, on the other hand, you should not think them equally probable, you will consider how far the Transportation will make you give Credit to a Fact you should otherwise think improbable. The same may be said in respect of the Attempt in England, in relation to the Prosecution of him there. I have mentioned before, that several of the Witnesses on both Sides cannot be very well depended upon; and therefore I think the Probability or Improbability of the Thing may be of great Weight in determining the present Question.

Then the Jury withdrew, and in about Half-an-hour brought in their Verdict for the PLAINTIFF.

This James Annesley, Esq. died January 3, 1760. He was twice married; first, to a Daughter of Mr. Chester, at Staines-Bridge in Middlesex; by whom he had one Son and two Daughters. The Son, James Annesley, Esq. died November 1763, S. P. and the eldest Daughter is married to Charles Wheeler, Esq. Son of the late Captain Wheeler in the Guinea Trade: Secondly, to a Daughter of Sir Thomas P. Anson of Bourdi near Tunbridge in Kent, Gentleman-Porter of the Tower, by whom he had a Daughter and a Son, who are both dead; the Son, aged about seven Years, died about the Beginning of 1764; and the Daughter, aged about Twelve, died in May 1765.

XXVII. The Trial of Mrs. MARY HEATH, (a Witness examined on the Trial in Ejectment in the Court of Exchequer in Michaelmas Term, 1743, in the Cause wherein CAMPBELL CRAIG, Lessee of JAMES ANNESLEY, Esq. was Plaintiff, against the Right Honourable RICHARD EARL of ANGLESEA, Defendant) for Perjury, at the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench in Ireland, on Friday the 8th Day of February, 1744.

Published by Permission of the Right Honourable the Lord Chief-Justice Marlay, Mr. Justice Ward, and Mr. Justice Blennerhasset.

[The several Proceedings had upon the Indictment against Mary Heath, for Perjury, previous to her Trial.]

The Bill was found by the Grand-Jury of the County of Dublin, at a Session of the Commission of Oyer and Terminer, on the 24th Day of October 1744; and there she traversed the Indictment, and removed the Record by Certiorari into the Court of King's-Bench, returnable the first Day of last Michaelmas Term.

On the sixth Day of November 1744, the Traverser appeared in the Court of King's-Bench, and the Court appointed the Trial to be at the Bar of the Court on the Fourteenth Day of November, with Liberty for either Party to apply in the mean time to put off the Trial, for reasonable Cause, to be made appear by Affidavit.

The Traverser did apply to put off the Trial on the following Affidavit, sworn the 10th of November 1744.

The King against } THE Traverser, Mary Heath, came this Day
Mary Heath. } before me and made Oath, That James Annesley having, as Deponent heard and believes, brought an Ejectment in the Exchequer for Recovery of the Possession of Part of the Estate whereof Arthur late Earl of Anglesea died seized in this Kingdom; and the Right Honourable Richard Earl of Anglesea having taken Defence to said Ejectment, the same came to be tried at the Bar of said Court in last Michaelmas Term; which Trial continued and was adjourned from Day to Day for upwards of ten Days, on which Trial Deponent was produced and examined as a Witness on Behalf of said Earl. That Deponent is well informed and verily believes, that on said Trial the only Point tried was, whether said James Annesley was the Son of Arthur late Lord Altham by his Wife Mary Lady Altham; that she is well assured and believes, that Examinations were laid before the Grand-Jury at last Commission of Oyer and Terminer for the County of Dublin for Perjury, alledged to be committed by Deponent on said Trial; and that a Bill of Indictment was found on said Examinations against Deponent the 24th Day of October last, and not before, as she is informed and verily believes. Saith, She is informed and believes, the Points in said Indictment, and on which Deponent is indicted, are relative to said Lady Altham's having a Child by said Lord Altham, and in some measure the same as that tried in the Exchequer as aforesaid. Saith, she is informed and believes, that a Suit was instituted in the Chancery of England by said James Annesley for Recovery of the English Estate, whereof said Arthur Earl of Anglesea died seized, or Part thereof; and has been informed and believes, said James has also filed a Bill in the Chancery of Ireland for Recovery of the said Irish Estate, whereof the said Arthur died seized, or Part thereof; and saith, That a Commission is now speeding at Wexford in said English Cause, and that the same was opened before said Indictment was found; and Deponent was examined on behalf of the said Earl upon said Commission, and the Examination of said Commission is still going on, as Deponent believes. Saith, she is informed and verily believes, that the Title of the several Estates is the same, and that the Point to be determined as to said Estates between said James Annesley and said Earl of Anglesea, and the other Parties interested is, whether said James is the Son of said late Lord Altham by his said Lady. Saith, she is advised and believes, the same Evidence in a great Measure, will be necessary for Deponent's Defence on the Trial of said Indictment, and in the Defence of said Suits, and therefore Deponent believes (being so advised) that preparing for Deponent's Defence on said Indictment, will take a considerable Time, there being many Witnesses necessary for Deponent's Defence, living in different Parts of this Kingdom as well as in England. Saith, there are several Persons, whose Place of Residence is in London and other Places in England, and who are now there, as she verily believes, who are material Witnesses for Deponent's Defence on said Indictment, and without whom Testimony Deponent cannot with Safety stand her Trial; and whom Deponent could not possibly get from England since said Bill of Indictment was found; and in particular, Mrs. Mary Judd of the County of Essex, and Mrs. Sarah Bonner of London, Mrs. Sarah Heath of London, and Thomas Rolph of Maryland in England, and several other Persons who reside in England, are very material Witnesses for Deponent upon her said Trial, and whom Deponent could not possibly get over to attend this Term, and whom Deponent believes and doubts not but she can get to attend the next Term. That there are several Persons in the Counties of Cork, Wexford, and Galway, who are very material Witnesses for Deponent; several of whom are wrote to, but they cannot, as Deponent is informed and believes, attend this present Term. Saith, that Sarah Weedon, Widow of John Weedon, who was Coachman to Lord Altham (at the Time when the said James Annesley alleges he was born), and lived at that Time near Dunmain-house (where said James Annesley alleges he was born), and was frequently at Dunmain-house, now lives at Colonel John Blakeney's at Abbott in the County of Galway, which, as Deponent is informed and believes, is seventy Miles from Dublin, and is a most material Witness for Deponent; and Deponent having caused Application to be made to the said Sarah, is informed and believes, she is so infirm, that she cannot travel without a Carriage, and therefore is not come up to Dublin; tho' Deponent has good Reason to believe, and doubts not but she will be able to get her to attend the next Term. Saith, she is credibly informed and verily believes, that James Annesley and those concerned for him (who Deponent believes are the Persons that carry on the Prosecution against Deponent), are so sensible that the said Sarah is a material Witness for Deponent, that they, or some of them, have lately, by Bribes and otherwise, attempted to seduce and carry off the said Sarah from said Colonel Blakeney's, and had a Horse and Pillion for that Purpose at Abbott, but were discovered, and prevented by said Colonel Blakeney's Means. That Anthony Dyer, now of Cork, was Gentleman to the said Lord Altham when he dwelt at Dunmaine afore said, and is a very material Witness for Deponent upon said Trial, who Deponent cannot get to attend this Term, but believes he will be able to get him to attend next Term. Saith, that from the Number of Witnesses, material for her to produce on said Trial, and the different Parts of this Kingdom and Great-Britain, where they reside, it will not be possible for Deponent to get them to attend this Term, nor can Deponent be in any sort prepared to defend herself in a proper Manner, unless reasonable Time be given her; and is satisfied in her Conscience, it is not, nor was it in her Power, or in the Power of any other Person, to get the several Witnesses, material for her Defence, to attend this Term; but believes and doubts not but she will be able to get them to attend the next Term.

In order to oppose this Motion, the following Affidavit was sworn the 13th of November, 1744.

The King } DANIEL MAC KERCHER, Esq. came this Day before me and made Oath, that the Traverser, Mary Mary Heath. } Heath, was, as he believes, apprehended in August last upon a Warrant, granted against her for wilful and corrupt Perjury; and saith, That in expectation of said Heath's Trial coming on at the last Sitting of the Court of Oyer and Terminer held for the County of Dublin, on the 24th of October last, Deponent sent to England and to several Counties of this Kingdom for several Witnesses, to be produced and examined against said Heath; and saith, a great many of said Witnesses came to Dublin from England and several remote Counties of Ireland, to be examined on Behalf of his Majesty on said Trial; but the Indictment being removed by Writ of Certiorari to the Court of King's Bench, Deponent sent many of said Witnesses, who live in this Kingdom, out of Town; and such other of said Witnesses as are old and infirm, and live in remote Parts, and also the Witnesses, who came from England, Deponent hath kept in Dublin at considerable Expences. Saith, he was at very considerable Expences in bringing said Witnesses to Dublin, in Expectation that said Heath's Trial would have come on at said Sitting of the said Commission. Saith, that the Trial of said Heath being appointed to come on, on Wednesday the 14th of November Instant, Deponent hath, since the said Day for Trial was appointed, sent to several Counties of this Kingdom for several of said Witnesses that were before in Dublin, to give Evidence on behalf of his Majesty against said Heath upon said Trial; and saith, some of said Witnesses, who are material to be examined on said Trial against her, have a Call to England upon Business of great Importance; and others, who are very material Evidences against her, are very old and infirm; so that Deponent saith, if the Trial of said Heath should be put off from this Term to next, it will put the Prosecutors to very considerable Expences and Hardships; and not only so, but it will be highly inconvenient to, and almost impossible for several other Witnesses (who are obliged as soon as they can to go for England) to attend in this Kingdom next Hillary Term, without neglecting Affairs of the greatest Consequence; and several other very material Witnesses, who are old and infirm, may die, or become so weak and infirm as not to be able to attend next Term. Saith, that the Application on Behalf of said Heath to put off her Trial to next Term is intended, as Deponent verily believes, not only to put the Prosecutors to great Expence, but also for other Ends and Purposes, and to avoid or postpone, as much as she can, her being tried. Says, if said Heath's Trial should be put off to the next Term, she will not, nor can she be so effectually prosecuted as she would now be, in regard that several material Witnesses against her will be under a Necessity of being next Term in England, and said Heath may, for want of the Evidence of such Witnesses, be acquitted. Whereas, if such Witnesses could and did attend to give Evidence against her, she would be found guilty of Perjury, as Deponent verily believes. And believes said Heath had Time sufficient to prepare for and have any Witnesses material for her. Saith, he is credibly informed and believes, said Heath, or any one for her, did not, since she was apprehended for said Perjury, issue any Summons or Subpoenas for any Witnesses to come to attend and give Evidence on her Trial; nor has she, or any other Person on her Behalf, as Deponent believes, since she was taken for said Perjury, used any Means to have any Witnesses ready to appear for her, in expectation and upon an Assurance given her, as Deponent is informed and believes, by some of her Managers, that said Trial would be put off. Doth not know or believe, that Mary Judd, Sarah Bonner, and Sarah Heath, mentioned in the Affidavit of said Mary Heath, or any of them, were examined on the Trial in Execution, had in the Exchequer last Michaelmas Term between the Lessee of James Annesley and the Earl of Anglesea. Saith, he doth not know or believe that Sarah Weedon, mentioned in said Heath's Affidavit, is a material Witness for her; but, on the contrary, is informed, said Sarah is a material Witness against her. Saith, Deponent being informed said Sarah Weedon was a material Witness against said Mary; he, for that Reason, and for no other Ends, sent Edward Weedon, Son of said Sarah, to the County of Galway, to Colonel John Blakeney's, where Deponent was informed said Sarah was, in order to bring her to Dublin, to give Evidence against said Mary; and said Edward, on his Return, informed Deponent, she was by Force detained in the House of the said Blakeney, and that (tho' she declared her Willingness to give her Testimony) said Blakeney would not permit her to go, but forcibly kept her in his House, notwithstanding her Endeavours to come away. Whereupon, Deponent caused a Subpoena to issue, requiring said Sarah to attend to give Evidence on the Trial of said Mary, which Deponent sent to be served on said Sarah, to oblige her to attend, pursuant to such Subpoena. Saith, Deponent intended, before he sent said Subpoena to be served on said Sarah, to apply to this Court for a Writ of Habeas Corpus for her, she being confined and detained by Force in the House of said Blakeney, as Deponent was informed; and accordingly, said Edward and John Weedon, another Son of said Sarah's, made severally an Affidavit, as Deponent believes, on the eighth of November Instant, in order to ground a Motion thereon for a Writ of Habeas Corpus for said Sarah; which Motion Deponent would have made, but Deponent afterwards thought it more proper to try whether by Service of a Subpoena, said Sarah would be permitted to come to Dublin, to give Evidence on the Trial, Deponent believing, said Blakeney would not oppose an Obedience to said Subpoena. Saith, the Person sent by Deponent to serve said Subpoena is not yet returned, that Deponent knows or believes. Denies, he, or said James Annesley, or any other concerned for him, or who carry on the Prosecution against said Mary Heath, to Deponent's Knowledge or Belief, have lately, or at any Time, by Bribes, or otherwise, attempted to seduce or carry off said Sarah from said Blakeney's, to prevent her from being examined on the Trial of said Mary, as is untruly insinuated by the Affidavit of said Heath; nor doth Deponent know or believe, nor does said James Annesley, or any other Person concerned for him, as Deponent believes, know or believe, said Sarah is a material Witness for said Heath upon her Trial. Verily believes, said Sarah is detained in the House of said Blakeney, merely because she is a material Witness against said Mary, and to prevent her from being produced as a Witness; and Deponent is convinced, said Mary could, if she pleased, have had said Sarah Weedon to attend on the fourteenth Instant upon her Trial. Saith, Deponent's Intention to send for and bring said Sarah to Dublin, was to give Evidence against said Mary, and not to prevent her giving Evidence, as is falsely insinuated by said Mary's Affidavit; and denies he, by himself, or any other, attempted to bribe said Sarah; nor did Deponent, since he embarked in the Affairs of the said James, attempt to bribe, or by any unfair or unlawful Means, to seduce or prevail upon any Person to give Evidence in Behalf of said James; nor doth Deponent know or believe, that any Attempts of Bribery or other unlawful or unfair Means were made use of (by said James Annesley or any Person concerned for him) to give Evidence for him in the Suit between him and said Earl of Anglesea, or to stifle or prevent the Evidence of any Person who could give Evidence for said Earl or for said Heath; but, on the contrary, Deponent hath all along, since he engaged in the Affairs of said James Annesley, carried on the same with all legal and fair Ways and Methods, and Deponent is determined so to do in the Conduct of said James's Affairs. Believes, and is convinced by very sufficient Proofs, that Deponent has had of the same, that many unfair and illegal Endeavours and Attempts have been made use of by Persons concerned for said Earl and said Mary Heath, not only to bribe and corrupt Witnesses, but also, by very unfair and illegal Means, to intimidate and seduce several Persons from giving Testimony on Behalf of said James, and to have said Mary acquitted of the Perjury of which she is indicted.

VOL. IX.

On the thirteenth of November the Matter was debated by Counsel, and the Court were of Opinion the Trial ought to be put off. And afterwards, by Consent of all Parties, the Day of Trial was appointed to be Monday the fourth Day of February 1744.

On the twentieth of November 1744, the Counsel for the Prosecutors moved the Court for an Attachment against Colonel John Blakeney, for his Contempt of the Court, in not permitting Sarah Weedon to attend the Court on the fourteenth Day of November, in obedience to a Subpoena, with which she was served; and grounded this Motion on the following Affidavits.

Thomas Carter, Esq. } JAMES MAGRATH, of the City of Dublin, Attorney and Coroner } came this Day before me and made Oath, of the Lord the King } That on the thirteenth Day of this Instant November, this Deponent accompanied Andrew Ross, of Marystown in the County of Roscommon, Gentleman, to Abbott in the County of Galway, where John Blakeney, Esq. lives, the said Andrew Ross being employed to serve Sarah Weedon with a Subpoena, commanding her to attend in his Majesty's Court of King's Bench on the fourteenth Day of this Instant November, to give Evidence in this Cause. And this Deponent saith, That the said Andrew Ross did, as this Deponent believes, on the thirteenth Day of November serve the said Sarah Weedon with the said Subpoena; and this Deponent having stood at a little Distance from the said John Blakeney's House, to wait for the said Andrew Ross, the said Andrew Ross, in some short Time after he went into the said House, returned to Deponent, and desired this Deponent to get off as fast as he could; and that when the said Andrew Ross turned the Corner of the Avenue he would change Horses with Deponent. That Deponent thereupon believing the said John Blakeney intended to have this Deponent very ill treated for coming with the said Andrew Ross to have the said Sarah Weedon served with the said Subpoena, this Deponent therefore rode off, and at some Distance from the said House exchanged Horses with the said Andrew

Andrew Rofs, and, in some time, Deponent looking behind, perceived several Persons on Horseback pursuing, as this Deponent apprehended, the said Andrew Rofs and this Deponent; and therefore this Deponent rode forward as fast as his Horse could carry him, and by that means Deponent escaped any Insult or Danger intended him; and this Deponent verily believes the said Persons were sent in Pursuit of this Deponent and the said Andrew Rofs by the said John Blakeney, with Intent to treat them very ill, and to prevent their carrying the said Sarah Weedon to Dublin, to give Evidence against the said Mary Heath, as this Deponent verily believes.

Thomas Carter, Esq. Attorney and Coroner of the Lord the King, against Mary Heath. WHEREAS there issued forth of his Majesty's Court of King's-Bench in Ireland, and under the Seal thereof, his Majesty's Writ of Subpoena in this Cause, bearing Date the eighth Day of November Instant, directed to Sarah Weedon, commanding her to be in the said Court of King's-Bench on Wednesday the 14th Day of November Instant, to testify the Truth concerning a certain Trial between Thomas Carter, Esq. Attorney and Coroner of the Lord the King, and Mary Heath: Now, Andrew Rofs, of Mary's-Town, in the County of Roscommon, Gentleman, came this Day before me and made Oath, that on the thirteenth Day of this Instant November, in the Forenoon of said Day, this Deponent personally served the said Sarah Weedon with the said Subpoena, by delivering unto her, at the House of John Blakeney, Esq. at Abbott, in the County of Galway, a true Copy of the said Subpoena, and at the same Time gave the said Sarah Weedon a British Shilling in Silver, and shewed her the said original Subpoena under Seal as aforesaid; and this Deponent saith, That before this Deponent served the said Sarah Weedon as aforesaid, this Deponent, as he was going towards the House of the said John Blakeney, met the said John Blakeney, with a Gun in his Hand, coming towards Deponent; and Deponent told the said John Blakeney, that Deponent had a Message to deliver, which Deponent said he did not think proper to deliver until Deponent had acquainted the said John Blakeney therewith; and upon the said John Blakeney's asking what it was, Deponent told him, that Deponent had a Subpoena to serve upon Sarah Weedon; and Deponent having shewn and produced to the said John Blakeney a Copy of the said Subpoena, the said John Blakeney having taken and read it, said, the said Sarah Weedon could not be there (meaning, as Deponent believes, in the said Court of King's-Bench) in that Time; upon which Deponent said, he had so provided for her, that Deponent would engage she should be there the next Day in Time: Whereupon, the said Blakeney swearing, said, he would take care the said Sarah Weedon should not be there the next Day. That Deponent thereupon begged he might see the said Sarah Weedon; to which the said John Blakeney in answer, said, with an Oath, that Deponent might see her, but that he, this Deponent, should not take her away; but this Deponent saith, That he, this Deponent, went into the said John Blakeney's House, and there served the said Sarah Weedon with the said Subpoena, as aforesaid. And upon this Deponent's serving the said Sarah Weedon, as aforesaid, she said she thought she was to have been sent for a Thursday; upon which, Deponent said, she, the said Sarah Weedon, might then come, for it would be Time enough, and that Deponent would take her very safe to Dublin. That thereupon, the said John Blakeney, who was present at the said Service and Discourse between the said Sarah Weedon and Deponent, said, That she the said Sarah Weedon should go, and that he would take care to send her in a proper Time. And this Deponent saith, That the said John Blakeney having behaved and expressed himself in a very angry Manner, and being greatly displeased, as this Deponent understood by him, and as this Deponent verily believes, that Deponent had come on the aforesaid Errand to serve the said Subpoena; and the said John Blakeney having declared, with Protestations and Oaths, that he would send James Magrath to Galway Goal, and that he would let the said Magrath know, that there were Courts in the Country as well as in Dublin; the said John Blakeney having seen the said James Magrath with Deponent, when Deponent first met the said John Blakeney, as aforesaid; this Deponent was greatly affrighted; and finding it to no Purpose to expect to bring the said Sarah Weedon to Dublin, to give Evidence in pursuance of the said Subpoena, by Means of the Obstruction and Opposition of the said John Blakeney, though this Deponent verily believes, were it not for such Opposition of the said John Blakeney, that the said Sarah Weedon would readily have come with this Deponent in Obedience to the said Subpoena; this Deponent therefore went away. And when Deponent came up to the said James Magrath, who waited for Deponent at a little Distance from the said John Blakeney's House, this Deponent apprehending from the Declarations and Threats of the said John Blakeney towards the said James Magrath, that it would be most prudent and safe for the said James Magrath to get off as fast as he could, this Deponent therefore desired the said James Magrath to make the best of his Way; and that when Deponent turned the Corner of the Avenue, Deponent would change Horses with the said James Magrath, Deponent believing the Horse that Deponent rode to be better than that rode by the said Magrath; and accordingly the said John Magrath and Deponent rode off, and Deponent changed Horses with the said Magrath when they got some Distance from the said John Blakeney's House. And Deponent saith, That when the said Magrath and Deponent had gone forward for some Time, this Deponent, looking behind him, perceived several Persons on Horseback pursuing, as this Deponent apprehended, the said James Magrath and this Deponent, which gave this Deponent the greater Reason to fear some Danger, and thereupon Deponent pushed forward as fast as his Horse could carry him, and by that Means escaped any Danger or Insult that might be intended by the said Persons, who, Deponent verily believes, were sent in Pursuit of this Deponent, or of the said James Magrath, by the said John Blakeney. And this Deponent saith, That by the aforesaid Means of said John Blakeney, this Deponent could not carry the said Sarah Weedon to Dublin, to give Evidence in pursuance of the said Subpoena; and this Deponent verily believes, the aforesaid Opposition and Behaviour of the said John Blakeney was merely to prevent the said Sarah Weedon's coming to Dublin to give Evidence against the said Mary Heath.

But the Court made no Rule.

On the twenty-first Day of November 1744, the Counsel for the Prosecutors moved the Court for a Writ of Habeas Corpus to be directed to Colonel John Blakeney, requiring him to have the Body of Sarah Weedon before the Court; and grounded this Motion on the following Affidavits: Sworn the 8th of November.

The King against JOHN WEEDON, of the City of Dublin, came John Blakeney, Esq. This Day before me and made Oath, That Sarah Weedon, this Deponent's Mother, is now detained against her Will, and without any legal Process at Law or Warrant against her, at the House of John Blakeney, Esq. at Abbott, in the County of Galway. And this Deponent saith, That on Tuesday the Thirtieth Day of October last, this Deponent was at the said House of the said John Blakeney, with Deponent's said Mother, in order to carry her away from the said John Blakeney, but this Deponent could not. And this Deponent further deposes, That in the Evening of the said Thirtieth Day of October, this Deponent went with his Brother, Edward Weedon, to the said House of the said John Blakeney, in order, if they possibly could, to carry their said Mother away; but the Gates of the said John Blakeney's Yard, and the Doors of his House having been shut and locked, this Deponent and his said Brother knocked at the Gate, and the said Sarah Weedon looking out of a Window up one Pair of Stairs in the said House, desired this Deponent and his said Brother to go off as fast as they could, for that the Doors were locked upon her, and she could not get out; and that if this Deponent and his said Brother did not immediately go away, they would be knocked on the Head. Whereupon this Deponent and his said Brother went away, being afraid of Danger if they staid any longer; and this Deponent verily believes, the said John Blakeney will, for some unlawful Ends and Purposes, continue to detain the said Sarah Weedon against her Will, and by Force and Durels, and without any Authority for so doing.

The King against EDWARD WEEDON, of the Gravelly-Hill, in the County of Carlow, came this Day before me and made Oath, That Sarah Weedon, this Deponent's Mother, is now detained against her Will, and without any legal Process at Law or Warrant against her, at the House of John Blakeney, Esq. at Abbott, near Castle-Blakeney, in the County of Galway. And this Deponent further deposes, That in the Evening of the Thirtieth Day of October last, this Deponent went with his Brother, John Weedon, to the House of the said John Blakeney, in order, if they possibly could, to carry their said Mother away; but the Gates of the said John Blakeney's Yard, and the Doors of his House having been shut and locked, this Deponent and his said Brother knocked at the Gate; and the said Sarah Weedon looking out of the Window up one Pair of Stairs in the said House, desired this Deponent and his said Brother to go off as fast as they could, for that the Doors were locked upon her, and she could not get out; and that if this Deponent and his said Brother did not immediately go away, they would be knocked on the Head. Whereupon, this Deponent and his said Brother went away, being afraid of Danger if they staid any longer. And this Deponent verily believes, the said John Blakeney will, for some unlawful Ends and Purposes, continue to detain the said Sarah Weedon against her Will, and by Force and Durels, and without any Authority for so doing.

Mr. Thomas Blakeney, Attorney, informed the Court, That to his Knowledge the material Facts mentioned in the foregoing Affidavits were false; and offered that Colonel Blakeney should answer those Affidavits, if those concerned for the Prosecutors would agree he should do so at Peril of Costs, and would undertake to pay the Costs. This Offer Mr. Mac Kercher, then present in Court, declined. Mr. Blakeney then desired, that Edward and John Weedon, who made the Affidavits, should be ordered to attend, and undertook to falsify their Affidavits, by Affidavits. And accordingly, the Court put off the Motion till next Day, and ordered the said Edward and John Weedon to attend then, and Mr. Blakeney to make Affidavit in the mean time.

On the twenty-second Day of November 1744, the above Affidavits of John and Edward Weedon were read; and the following Affidavits of Mr. Thomas Blakeney and Edward Kilkelly were produced and read.

The King against THOMAS BLAKENEY, Gent. maketh Oath, John Blakeney, Esq. That he very well knows John Blakeney of Abbott, in the County of Galway, Esq. that he is this Deponent's near Relation, and lives within two Miles of this Deponent's Place of Residence in said County, and that he, his Family, and this Deponent's Wife and Family frequently visit each other. Deposeth, That on the Day but one after a Verdict was given in the Court of Exchequer on a Trial, which was had between the Lessee of James Annesley, Esq. and the Earl of Anglesea, this Deponent received a Letter from this Deponent's Wife, wherein the mentioned that old Mrs. Weedon, who then lived at Abbott, said, That she lived for many Years with Lord and Lady Altham, and that said Lady never had a Child while in Ireland; but that one Juggy Landy had a Child called James Annesley, and that Lord Altham was supposed or deemed to be his Father, or to that Purpose; which Letter Deponent shewed to several Gentlemen, and was the first Account Deponent ever had of said Mrs. Weedon's knowing any thing of that Matter, or of her living in said Lord Altham's Family. Deposeth, that some time about last Christmas Holidays this Deponent was at Abbott aforesaid, and there saw the said Mrs. Weedon, and asked her, whether she lived with Lord and Lady Altham, and if said Lady ever had a Son? And Mrs. Weedon declared that said Lady never had any Child whatsoever since her coming into Ireland, to the Time that she and Lord Altham had separated. That Deponent asked said Mrs. Weedon if she knew Jemmy Annesley, or whose Son he was; that said Mrs. Weedon said she did know Jemmy Annesley, and that he was the Son of Juggy Landy, and not of Lady Altham; wherefore Deponent always did and does believe, that said Mrs. Weedon is a material Evidence for the Earl of Anglesea, and not for the said James Annesley. Deponent further deposes, That the said Mrs. Weedon has been for several Years past Servant to the said John Blakeney, and lived with him at Abbott aforesaid; and deposes, That on Saturday the third Day of November Instant, this Deponent called upon the said John Blakeney at Abbott, in this Deponent's way to Dublin, and there saw the said Mrs.

Mrs. Weeden, and depose, That she was so far from being confined, or under any Manner of Restraint, that she was at full Liberty; that the Doors of the House were open, and that she might have gone in or out, or to any Place she thought proper. And depose, That Deponent was at the same Time informed by the said John Blakeney and his Lady, which he believes to be true, that at 12 o'Clock at Night the Tuesday before, some People came about his House, and that they had taken or stolen away his Servant John Weeden, and that he also believed, they also intended to take away the said Mrs. Weeden; for that he was informed they had a Horse with a Pillion, and that said John Weeden rode or travelled on the said Pillion. Depose, That this Deponent met said Mrs. Weeden in the common Hall of said House at Abbott on the Saturday aforesaid; and that she begged of this Deponent to enquire for her Son John, as she called him, as soon as Deponent should arrive in Dublin, and to send him Home, for that she was very sure he would return to his Service, if he got but once sober, but that she very much feared they would keep him always drunk; and seemed greatly troubled at his being taken away. That Deponent promised to enquire for him, the said John, and to tell him what she desired. Depose, That on Thursday, the eighth Day of November instant, the said John Weeden, together with Deponent's Servant, called upon this Deponent at a House, where Deponent was at Dinner in Dublin; that Deponent told said John Weeden, he was sorry he had quitted his Service without his Master's Leave, and also told him what his Mother said to this Deponent as aforesaid, and that she expected he would go back. Whereupon the said John said, he never would, for that he was to be much better provided for. And Deponent having asked him by whom? he, the said Weeden, said, it was by the young Earl of Anglesea. Whereupon Deponent smiled and said, he was not Earl as yet. That said John thereupon said, that whether he was to be Earl, or not, he would provide for him, and, at the same Time, wished that his Mother would come up, for that, if she did, she would be much happier, and have much easier Bread than she had where she lived. Depose, That he very well knows that the said John Weeden has been for several Years past Servant to the said John Blakeney, and lived with him in his House at Abbott aforesaid, until he quitted him in the Night of the thirtieth of October last; and Deponent verily believes, the said Mrs. Weeden never was, nor is she now, as this Deponent verily believes, under any Manner of Restraint, or in any Sort confined by the said John Blakeney, or any other Person; but verily believes, she is at full Liberty to go where she thinks proper. And saith, he knows that the said Mrs. Weeden has been applied to, on Behalf of the Earl of Anglesea, to attend at Wexford, there to be examined as a Witness on his Lordship's Behalf, on a Commission, which Deponent believes, is, and has been speeding there for some Time, in a Cause depending in the High Court of Chancery in England, wherein the said James Annesley is Plaintiff, and the said Earl of Anglesea is Defendant.

The King against } EDWARD KILKELLY, of Liff, in the County of Galway, Cooper, came this Day before me and made Oath, That on Friday sevennight this Deponent was at the Defendant's House at Abbott, in the County of Galway. And this Deponent saith, That as he was going to the said House he saw Mrs. Sarah Weeden, who is, and for a considerable Time hath been, Servant to the Defendant, and whom Deponent knows very well, without the Gates of the said Defendant's Yard, as if she was returning from the Place where the Cows were milking, and had, as Deponent apprehended and believed, some Milk in her Hands carrying into the House. And this Deponent saith, she the said Sarah Weeden was alone, and not in any Sort of Restraint or Confinement; and Deponent afterwards, on the same Day, saw the said Sarah Weeden going about her Business in the said House, and in no Restraint or Confinement; and Deponent conversed with the said Sarah at that Time about several Matters, and she did not mention any Sort of Restraint or Confinement, but told Deponent her Son John Weeden was gone away, and seemed much concerned at it. And this Deponent is very sure the said Sarah is not, nor was not at any Time put into any Sort of Restraint or Durels by the Defendant.

Court.] Call John Weeden.

JOHN WEEDON.

Mr. Harward offers to speak.

Court.] We have nothing to do with the Birth of James Annesley; here is Affidavit against Affidavit, we must hear which of these Affidavits is true. We are imposed on by one Affidavit or other; the Honour of the Court is concerned, and therefore, before we do any Thing, we will hear what John Weeden has to say.

Mr. Har.] With humble Submission, I conceive the hearing of us after this Person is examined is not a proper Time; this is now my Time to offer what I have to say; I shall have no Occasion to speak after the Examination is ended, and therefore beg leave to say a few Words now, which are, that if this Person is to be examined, I do apprehend it must be on the Foot of some supposed Transgression that he hath committed.

Court.] No, Sir, it is to discover the Truth. We will have no concealing of the Truth in this Court. Swear him.

Mr. Har.] I do not oppose your Lordship's Right to examine this Witness; but—

Court.] Read the Affidavit to him.

JOHN WEEDON is sworn.

Court.] You are now to declare the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, and you are now likewise to declare the whole Truth. You are not obliged to say any Thing to criminate yourself.

Court.] Does he write his Name?
Clerk.] No.
Court.] Did your Mother ever tell you that she would come away?
A. She did not.
Q. Why did you ask her to come away in the Night?
A. Because my Brother came for her.
Q. Did she ever tell you and your Brother that she was compelled to stay where she was?
A. She did not tell us that she was compelled to stay.
Q. Do you understand your Affidavit? How came you to swear in your Affidavit that she was detained against her Will; and now you say she was not? What Religion are you of?—A. A Protestant.
Q. How came you to swear that positive Affidavit? Did any body read it to you?—A. Yes, an Attorney, Robert Reynell.
Q. Who is Robert Reynell?
Mr. Nelson.] He is my Clerk, my Lord, he read it to him.
Q. Did your Mother tell you she was a Prisoner?
A. No; but she told me, she was afraid of her Life.
Q. Are you sure of that?—A. I am, my Lord.
Q. Of whom was she afraid?
A. She was afraid of my Lord Anglesea, that she would be murdered by him.
Q. Was my Lord Anglesea ever in that Country?—A. He never was.
Q. Why should she run from her Master's House without Wages or Discharge, because she was afraid of Lord Anglesea? Is he a Person of such Authority and Power over Colonel Blakeney's Servants, as to terrify them from their Master's Service?
A. I cannot tell that, my Lord.
Q. Was she discharged at that Time?—A. She was not.
Q. Was she paid her Wages?—A. No.
Q. Did she demand her Wages, to come away?—A. She did.
Q. How do you know that, was you by?
A. I was not, but she told me she could not get her Wages.
Q. Was she afraid of Colonel Blakeney's doing her any Harm?
A. She was not, my Lord.
Q. Why did she apprehend any Harm from my Lord Anglesea, did he send for her?
A. There was last Spring a Man and a Chair came to bring her to Wexford, from my Lord, but she was an old Woman, and would not go.
Q. Was she summoned, or did he send for her of himself?
A. He served her with a Bit of Paper.

Q. Did

Q. Did he offer to force her to go?—A. He did not.
Q. Did you ever hear that Colonel Blakeney, or any Body in the House forced her to stay?—A. I never did.

More of the Affidavit is read.

A. From my Brother.

Q. Where did your Brother get him?—A. He brought him with him.

Q. From whence?—A. From Dublin.

EDWARD WEEDON.

Court.] Are you the Son of Sarah Weedon, that lives with Mr. Blakeney? Edward Weedon.] Yes.

Q. What time in October last did you go there?—A. The thirtieth.

Q. What time of the Day?—A. In the Evening.

Q. What time?—A. About seven or eight o'Clock.

Q. Were the Gates shut?—A. They were.

Q. Was it dark?—A. It was dark, my Lord.

Q. Did you see or speak to her that Night?—A. I did not.

Q. Did any body else?—A. My Brother did.

Q. What did she say?

A. She desired him to go off about his Business, and bring me with him, or else I'd be knocked on the Head, my Lord.

Q. Did she say she could not go?—A. She did, my Lord.

Q. For what Reason?—A. Because the Doors were locked.

Q. Did she say she had a mind to go with you?

A. No, she said no more.

Q. Did you or your Brother ask her whether she would go, and what did she say?

A. She said no more than desired him to go off, and bring me with him, for if we stayed there, I would be knocked on the Head.

Q. Was she kept as a Prisoner?—A. As far as I understand, she was.

Q. How come you to understand so?—A. Because the Gates were shut.

Q. What Time was this?—A. About seven or eight o'Clock.

Q. Were the Gates open when you came there first?

A. No, they were not. My Brother went up first to bring her out, and he told her that I was there, come from her; and she was coming out, and he came first, and he thought she was following him.

Q. How do you know this?—A. My Brother told me this.

Q. Is it usual for Gentlemen to shut their Gates at Night in the Country?

A. It is in the Country; my Mother said she was shut up.

Q. Did she say that she was shut up, or only that the Gates were shut?

A. She said as this, She should not come out, and desired my Brother to go off and take me along with him, for I'd be knocked on the Head.

Q. Did you hear her speak?—A. I heard her speak.

Q. What did you hear her say?

A. I heard her bid my Brother go off and bring me with him, for I should be knocked on the Head.

Q. Did she say nothing more?

A. She said no more, but shut the Window.

Court.] Read the first Part of his Affidavit.

Clerk of the Crown reads it.

Court.] How did your Mother know you were there?

A. My Brother knocked at the Gate.

Q. Did any Body come to the Gate?

A. Nobody; but my Mother opened the Window.

Q. Was she a Servant at that time?—A. She was.

Q. When did you see her before that time?

A. I went to her before that by myself, about a Month or five Weeks before, and she asked me if I heard anything concerning Mr. Annesley and my Lord Anglesea; I told her I did; and she said, For your Life, do not speak a Word, for you are in the midst of your Enemies here.

Q. Did you carry a Horse with you the 30th of October?

A. I did, my Lord.

Q. Did your Mother say any thing to you more, the time that you was with her before?

A. She said, I would be very desirous of seeing Mr. Annesley, if I was in Dublin.

Q. Whose Horse and Pillion was it that you were furnished with?

A. I hired them by the way.

Q. Who sent you to hire them?

A. I hired them by Mr. Annesley's Orders.

Q. Who gave those Orders to you?—A. Mr. Annesley himself.

Q. Your Mother said no more the time you went by yourself, but that you were among your Enemies there?—A. No more, my Lord.

Q. Was she a Servant in the House?

A. She was a Servant-Maid in the House, and, as far as I understand, she was forced.

Q. Who told you she was forced?—A. The Doors were all locked.

Q. Were they locked when your Brother went there?

A. They were open when my Brother came, my Brother went in.

Q. Where did you meet your Brother that Evening?

A. At a Place called Glentane.

Q. How long did your Brother stay before he came to you again?

A. He came out to me again in about three Quarters of an Hour.

Q. How soon after that did you return?

A. He told me that his Master followed him out with a Whip for to kill him.

Q. Did he tell you so?—A. He told me so.

Q. Did he venture to go back afterwards?

A. When he went back the Gates were shut, and he went round to the Backside of the House, where there was a Door, and knocked at it; my Mother looked out of the Window, and said she could not go: And says she, go your way and bring your Brother with you, for he will be knocked on the Head.

Q. Did she tell you that she was confined or imprisoned?—A. She did not.

Q. Are you or your Brother in any body's Service?

A. We are in Nobody's Service.

Court.] Read the Affidavit.

Clerk of the Crown reads it.

Court.] How long is it since you lived at Gravelly-Hill?

A. I left it about two Months ago.

Q. Were you a House-keeper there?

A. I lived there with a Friend of mine.

Q. Can you write?—A. No, my Lord.

Q. Nor read?—A. No.

Q. How came you to make this Affidavit?

A. Them that examined me, drew it.

Q. Who were they?—A. Mr. Geoffrey.

Q. Is he here?—A. No.

Q. Did you tell him that your Mother was detained?

A. I told him as thus, that the Doors were locked, and she said she could not come.

Q. Did you tell him these Words that are in your Affidavit?

A. I told him no more or less than what I have given on my Oath here.

TO JOHN WEEDON.

Q. Did your Mother tell you that she was confined?

A. She did not tell me that she was confined.

Q. Nor you do not know it?—A. No, my Lord.

TO EDWARD WEEDON.

Q. Did your Mother tell you she was confined?

A. She did not tell me she was confined.

The Matter was then debated by Counsel, after which the Court delivered their Opinion, as follows.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE MARLAY.

WE are of Opinion, in the first place, That no Habeas Corpus can be granted in this Case. A Habeas Corpus for the Liberty of the Subject is a Writ of Right, and may be applied for without an Affidavit of the Party, and was done in the Cases of my Lord Leigh, Sir Robert Viner, and Sir Robert Howard. In the Case of Sir Robert Viner, an Habeas Corpus was sued for, to obtain the Liberty of a Woman confined in his House; the Woman said she was not confined by him, but chose to stay with him. But this does not appear to us at all to be the Case here, that there is the least Restraint upon Sarah Weedon; but, on the contrary, that she is at her full Liberty; for notwithstanding these Affidavits of these Men, it does appear so. Edward Weedon of the Gravelly-Hill in the County of Carlow maketh Oath, that Sarah Weedon is now detained (sworn the 8th of November) by Colonel John Blakeney at Abbott, near Castle-Blakeney, in the County of Galway. John Weedon of the City of Dublin maketh Oath, that Sarah Weedon is now detained at the House of John Blakeney, Esq. at Abbott, in the County of Galway; in Terminis terminantibus the same; both illiterate Persons, and yet both make these positive Affidavits of her being under Restraint, when it appears she was at her full Liberty, not only before, but after these Affidavits were made. These Affidavits were made by Marksmen, and therefore the Court sent for the Person that drew the Affidavits, to know why he drew them in the Manner they appear to us; for, upon the Table, these Men have declared that they do not know, nay, they cannot say they believe, that she is restrained of her Liberty. Can we then, when they have declared that their Affidavits are not true, grant the Habeas Corpus? By no means. Consider the Consequence of these things: By taking a Horse in a Replevin, a Man may be guilty of Felony, if a Person has a mind to knock down every body that stands in his way, and procures others to impose upon the Court by Affidavits in order to prevent all Opposition; in that Case the Court will exert their Authority, and punish the Persons that imposed upon them. We are of Opinion, there is not the least Colour of granting the Habeas Corpus; for, to whom must it be directed but to Mr. Blakeney? If Mr. Blakeney does not obey the Habeas Corpus, he must be attached: If he does, he must come to Dublin; and the Prosecutor has declined to pay the Expence of all this.

The next Point to be considered is, whether these Men could be attached for falsifying their Affidavits? I am amazed to hear it said, there are no Precedents of Persons being attached for Prevarication and imposing on the Court: May be not in this Case, but in most great Causes, that have been long depending, such things have happened. Suppose a Man in an Affidavit to put off a Trial, should swear, that such a Bond was perfected, and he explains himself, when he comes to be examined, that he heard such a one say so; is not he guilty in Conscience of Perjury, and ought he not to be punished for Prevarication and for the Imposition? I can give Instances, where Persons have endeavoured by artful Affidavits to extort exorbitant Bail, for which they have been committed by the Court.

Now as to these two Persons, they have sworn in the most express Terms in their Affidavits, every thing which is necessary to induce the Court to grant an Habeas Corpus. I must own, if there was an Inducement to do this from filial Piety, I should be very tender how I committed them; but it is plain they are not induced by that Motive; what they did, they did it, that they might be employed, as well as others, by Mr. Annesley, not out of filial Piety to free their Mother, whom they knew to be at Liberty, nor is there the least Appearance that they had such a Motive. Therefore, as they have endeavoured to impose upon the Court, and injure an innocent Person, Mr. Blakeney, I think they ought to be committed.

Mr. Justice WARD.

THE only thing to excuse them is their Ignorance. But as the Matter now stands, it is plain that the Person who drew the Affidavits, knew they were false, knew that these Men swore to a Fact they did not know to be true. Really, a Man of Business must know the Practice in drawing Affidavits, and what kind of Affidavits will serve the End proposed by them; but these Men swear further, and say, that they told him the same Story they did now: If that be true, he drew these Affidavits fully, he led them into Perjury, and is as guilty as they are, and should as certainly be punished, if we had him; but I find on Inquiry, he is not here; therefore, as we have Nobody else to punish, we must punish these Men, who have thus perjurated and imposed upon the Court.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

It is a most wicked, profligate Thing in an Agent, to make an illiterate Man swear an Affidavit he knows to be false: Whether that be Goofrey's Case or no I will not say, because he is not here to clear himself, but it looks very like it.

Monday, the 4th of February.

Motions in Behalf of the Crown for putting off the Trial till next Term *.

[Mr. Solicitor General, for the Crown.

MY Lord, the High Sheriff has been applied to several Times to give a Copy of the Pannel, according to Custom, to the Agent for the Prosecutors; but he has not hitherto been able to procure one, though the other Party has."

"Lord Chief Justice.] The Sheriff could not give it without Leave of the Court."

"Mr. Solicitor General.] The Court is seldom or never applied to on that Account, the Sheriff usually gives Copies of the Pannel to the Parties, without any Application to the Court, two or three Days before the Trial; but supposing an Application to the Court necessary, why should he give it to one Party, and refuse it to the other?"

"Mr. Spring, for the Traverser.] The Gentlemen concerned for the Prosecution have served us with Notice of a Motion to put off the Trial, and therefore we hope they will make their Motion."

And desired the Notice might be read.

Clerk of the Crown reads the Notice, as follows, viz.

Counsel in Behalf of his Majesty will move the Court on Monday Morning next, to put off the Defendant's Trial till Friday next; which Motion will be grounded upon Affidavits this Day filed in the proper Office, and upon the Affidavits of Mary Heath and of Daniel Mac Kercher, Esq. made in this Cause in the last Michaelmas Term, and the Nature of the Case and Reasons to be offered.

Dated this second of February, 1744.

"Mr. Solicitor General. We desire first to see if there be a Jury; we have a Right also to know if the Jury have been rightly summoned."

"The Bailiffs being called to prove the summoning the Gentlemen mentioned in the Pannel, they appeared, were sworn, and the Pannel was called over."

"Mr. Solicitor General.] I observe, my Lord, that several of the Gentlemen mentioned in this Pannel are out of the Kingdom, and well known by all of us to be out of the Kingdom; several others live in distant Counties, out of the County of Dublin; some are old and infirm, and incapable of serving on Juries for several Years past; others have been dead several Years; and some are Six-clerks in Chancery, and Officers in the Custom-house, who neither can or are obliged to attend."

"Lord Chief Justice.] All Persons summoned ought to appear, and then shew Cause why they should be exempted from serving."

"The Jury being called over twice, eight of their Number only appeared."

"Mr. Solicitor General.] My Lord, I see only eight Gentlemen of the Jury attend, and if eight more of these in the Pannel had been in the Kingdom they would not have attended. Members of Parliament are exempted, and so are Officers in the Court of Chancery, and Custom-house. Others are disabled from attending by Absence, the Infirmities of old Age, and Death; so that if both Sides were prepared, as there is no Jury, there can be no Trial this Day; for Talesmen are not admitted on Trials of this Kind: Therefore we are under no Necessity of making our Motion for putting it off to Friday next."

"Court.] We had some Thoughts of bringing on the Trial next Wednesday, but there is a Sitting of Nisi prius that Day, and other Suitors are not to be injured. Let the Trial therefore be put off till Thursday, if it should be put off longer there would not be Time for Judgment that Term; but the Attornies should consent. Mrs. Heath, do you consent it should be put off?"

"Mary Heath.] Yes, my Lord."

"The Agent for the Prosecutors was asked whether he would consent to bring it on a Thursday; but he said he would not come into any such Consent, nor had he any Authority so to do."

The Counsel for the Traverser informed the Court, that their Witnesses were in Town at great Expence, and hoped the Counsel for the Prosecutor would agree to prosecute at the Day prefixed, and not then move to put it off longer.

"Lord Chief Justice. The Reasons given To-day for putting off the Trial, I can tell you, will not be sufficient next Thursday for putting it off any further; if the great Expences attending the Trial are to be saved, the sooner the Trial comes on the better."

"Mr. Solicitor General.] We intended to have tried this Question To-day; but Mr. Mac Kercher, who conducts this Affair, and is the only Person that thoroughly knows the Evidence proper to be produced to prove the Indictment, is on the other Side of the Water, detained by contrary Winds; and so likewise are some of our most material Witnesses, who are daily expected: There are seven Packets due. If Mr. Mac Kercher and our Witnesses come, we will immediately go to Trial; if not, we cannot."

"Mr. Bradstreet, for the Traverser.] I hope, my Lord, that both Parties shall be confined to particular Hours to examine their Witnesses in; for if the Prosecutors, who examine first, should take up a long Time, the Traverser might be thereby stinted in Time for the Examination of her Witnesses: I humbly conceive both Parties should examine an equal Number of Hours in Turn."

"Mr. Harward.] Such a Rule was never made, my Lord, I am pretty certain, on Trials of this Kind."

"Mr. Justice Ward.] I have had the Honour of being a considerable Time on the Bench; I cannot now pretend to bear Fatigue as well as formerly; but I hope I shall take care that the Jurors, or myself, shall not be in Danger of being destroyed."

* In the Motions for putting off the Trial, what is printed in Crotchets [], and marked with ("), are not in the Trial printed by Permission of the Judges, but taken from two other Copies of the Trial printed at that Time (one in Folio and the other in Octavo), in order to render it more complete.

"Lord Chief Justice.] Examining by Hours is not so unprecedented. It was the old Custom among the Romans, to examine by the Hour-glass. Gentlemen, I think proper to mention to you, That no Witness shall be examined, unless his Evidence be previously opened to the Court, and that one Counsel of a Side only is to examine."

Thursday Morning, February 7th.

[The Court being sat,

"MR. Solicitor General, for the Crown.] My Lord, I mentioned to your Lordship last Monday, that Mr. Mac Kercher and several of our most material Witnesses were on the other Side of the Water waiting for a Passage; if they had arrived, we should willingly have tried this Traverser To-day; but it has so happened contrary to our Expectation that they are not yet arrived, and therefore as we are not yet furnished with our material Evidences, or with any Person acquainted with the Evidence proper to be applied to prove the Facts in the Indictment, we cannot with Safety go to Trial. Colonel Weldon, my Lord, who is known to be a Gentleman of great Worth and Reputation, has been served with a Subpœna, but is extremely ill of the Gout in his Bed, and though a very material Witness and willing to give his Evidence, he is not able to travel to Town without endangering his Life, and the Prosecutors, without the Benefit of his Testimony, cannot properly proceed to Trial. I therefore only move your Lordship that this Trial may be put off till the first Day of next Easter Term."

"Mr. Serjeant Marshall, for the Crown.] The Traverser, my Lord, removed this Indictment in October last by Certiorari from the Commission of Oyer and Terminer into this Court on the very Day it was to have been tried, after she had put the Gentlemen for the Prosecution to all the Expence of a Trial, for Want of giving them previous Notice of her Intentions to put it off. And on the 7th of November when she appeared on her Traverser in this Court, on her bare Allegation that she was not prepared to take her Trial, she was farther indulged, and had till the 14th given her, to prepare herself for it, though the Gentlemen were then also ready for Trial."

"On the 13th, the Day immediately preceding this last Day appointed by the Court for her Trial, the Counsel for the Traverser again moved to put off her Trial on her single Affidavit, that she had some material Witnesses in England, and in remote Places of this Kingdom, and upon that Foundation alone her Trial was put off till this Term. We, my Lord, have given regular and timely Notice to the Agent for the Traverser, that we would apply to your Lordship to put off the Trial: Affidavits we have to shew that we are not prepared to come to Trial, and therefore we hope we shall have the like Indulgence with the Traverser to put it off till next Term, especially as this is the first Application of that Kind we have made, and as we have formerly been put to so great Inconveniences and Charges by the Traverser's affected Delays."

"If your Lordship pleases that Mr. Mac Kercher's Affidavit sworn the 13th of November last, which was read upon the Traverser's Motion to put off her Trial last Term, may be now read."

"Court. Let Mr. Mac Kercher's Affidavit be read."

Mary Heath.

Mr. Marshall.] I pray, my Lord, that Mr. Nelson's Affidavit may be read.

Court.] Read his Affidavit.

The King against } RICHARD NELSON, of the City of Dublin,
Mary Heath. } Gent. maketh Oath, That he, this Deponent, being employed as Agent on Behalf of the Prosecutors, he prepared Briefs for Counsel, and sent several Subpœnas for Witnesses to several Parts of this Kingdom, to give Evidence on Behalf of his Majesty against the Traverser on her Trial, which was, as Deponent believes, appointed to be had on the 4th Day of February Instant. Saith, That by a Letter, which this Deponent lately received by Post from Mr. Mac Kercher, dated London, the 10th of January last, this Deponent verily believes said Mr. Mac Kercher did on or about the 17th Day of January last leave London, in order to come to this Kingdom, to carry on the Prosecution against the Traverser, the said Mac Kercher being one of the principal Persons concerned in carrying on said Prosecution; and verily believes, the said Mac Kercher is, and has been, at Park-gate or Holyhead for some Days past, and would have been here before this Time, if the Wind had served for a Passage; and this Deponent expects him in this Kingdom as soon as the Wind becomes fair for a Passage from Holyhead or Park-gate. Says, He believes that William Goofrey is a material Witness to be produced against Defendant, and believes said Goofrey and others, who are Witnesses, as Deponent believes, to be produced against the Traverser, are waiting with said Mac Kercher at Park-gate or Holyhead for a Passage, and believes, that an effectual Prosecution cannot be carried on against said Heath until said Mac Kercher comes to this Kingdom.

Sworn the 2d of February, 1744.

Mr. Marshall.] I pray, my Lord, that the Affidavit of Robert Kennedy may be likewise read, which will inform your Lordship of Colonel Weldon's State of Health.

Court.] Read his Affidavit.

The King against } ROBERT KENNEDY, of the City of Dublin,
Mary Heath. } maketh Oath, That on the 27th Day of January last he, this Deponent, served Arthur Weldon, Esq. with a Subpœna, issued out of and under the Seal of this Court, dated the 28th Day of November last, by delivering unto the said Arthur Weldon, at his House in Raben, in the Queen's County, a Copy of said Subpœna, and at same Time shewed him the Original, and offered him a British Shilling in Silver, which he refused to take. By which Subpœna, said Weldon, and others therein named, were required to be in this Court on Monday, the 4th Day of February then next, between the Hours of seven and eight of the Clock in the Forenoon, to testify on Behalf of his Majesty concerning a certain Perjury, whereof Mary Heath stands indicted. And saith, That at the Time this Deponent served said Weldon, he told Deponent he would most willingly attend in pursuance of said Subpœna, but that he was so ill of the Gout, that he could not stand, or scarce stir, and that he would not venture his Life; and that the Week before he had the Gout in his Stomach. And saith, said Weldon then appeared to this Deponent to be very weak and ill, and was not, as Deponent believes, able to walk one Step, nor was he, as he believes, able to travel in a Coach or Carriage from his House to Dublin without great Danger and Hazard of his Life; and verily believes, said Weldon is not, nor has since been able, without the greatest Danger to his Life, to travel in a Carriage or otherwise to Dublin; and verily believes, said Weldon is a material Witness to be produced on behalf of his Majesty against the Traverser, on the Indictment for Perjury against her; and verily believes the said Mary Heath cannot be effectually prosecuted upon said Indictment without the Testimony of said Weldon; and believes said Weldon would readily attend to give Evidence on the Trial of said Mary Heath, if he could do it without endangering his Life; and verily believes, and doubts not but said Weldon will attend to give Evidence on behalf of his Majesty on the Trial of said Heath, in case the Trial be put off to next Term, and that said Weldon will be then able to travel with Safety to his Life.

["Mr. Tisdal. My Lord, it is the Interest of Society to bring Offenders to Justice: The Gentlemen who conduct this Prosecution were fully prepared for a Trial before this Affair was removed by Certiorari, and since it was removed into this Court there was a Day appointed for Trial last Term; the Witnesses came to Town from several Parts, at great Expences, and in regard the Traverser was not then ready, the Trial was put off, which put the Prosecutors to great Hardships in preparing at different times for the expected Trial. The Affidavits which have been read have mentioned that some of our Witnesses are at the other Side of the Water, and that Col. Weldon has been served with a Subpœna, and would attend if possible. And for these Reasons we hope your Lordships will put off the Trial 'till next Term.

"Court.] Was Mr. Weldon bound over?

"Mr. Nelson.] No.

"Mr. Daly, for the Traverser.] I would humbly inform your Lordships, that when the Prosecutors applied to push on this Trial last Term, there was no Pretence then offered, that Col. Weldon was a material Witness for them. I pray that Mary Heath's Affidavit may be read."

Which was accordingly read, as likewise the others to oppose the said Motion.

The Traverser Mary Heath, as Page 432.

The King } THE Traverser, Mary Heath, maketh Oath, That her against } Place of Abode is in London, in the Kingdom of Mary Heath. } Great Britain, and Deponent having lived for several Years with Mary Lady Altham, wife of Arthur late Lord Altham, was prevailed upon to come to this Kingdom in the Month of October 1743, in order to be examined as a Witness upon a Trial, that was had at the Bar of the Exchequer in this Kingdom in Michaelmas Term 1743, between Campbell Craig, Lessee of James Annesley, and the Right Honourable Richard Earl of Anglesea; and Deponent was examined on said Trial on behalf of said Earl. And saith, That after said Trial was over, Deponent was prevailed upon to continue in this Kingdom, in order to be examined as a Witness on behalf of said Earl in a Cause depending in the Chancery in England between said James Annesley and said Earl of Anglesea; and Deponent was examined as a Witness in said Cause in or about October last, by virtue of a Commission from England, which was then speeding at Wexford; but some time before Deponent was so examined, she was arrested upon a Warrant for Perjury, alledged to be committed by her in her Evidence on said Trial; and the Doors of the House, in which Deponent lodged in Latten's-Court, Dublin, or Liberties thereof, were broke open when Deponent was so arrested by a Parcel of Bailiffs or Setters, some of whom declared they had waited for an Opportunity to find Deponent alone. And when Deponent was so arrested, she was brought from her said Lodgings to Henry-Street, and from thence towards said James Annesley's House or Lodgings in College-Green; and in the Road, some of the Persons that arrested Deponent, or attended them, directed that Deponent should be brought to Castle-Street; and Deponent was accordingly brought to a Tavern in Castle-Street, and from thence to a Publick House, as Deponent believes it to be, in Christ-Church-Yard; where the Person, before whom Deponent was brought, declared, he believed it was not aailable Offence; and several Persons that appeared as Agents for said James Annesley, seemed to doubt whether Bail could be taken for Deponent; but at length said Person bound Deponent in Recognizance of one Thousand Pounds, and each of the Securities in five Hundred Pounds, to the best of Deponent's Remembrance, and bound Deponent to appear at the Sessions of Kilmainham, and refused to bind Deponent to appear at any other Place. And Deponent is informed and believes, that there were not any Examinations returned to Kilmainham against Deponent, but Deponent was bound over to appear at the Commission of Oyer and Terminer held in or about October last, and was obliged to give Security for Deponent's Appearance there. And deposeeth, That Deponent's Business and Affairs require her Attendance in London, and her being obliged to stay longer in this Kingdom will be very inconvenient and prejudicial to her; and saith, that the Attempt to put off Deponent's Trial is made, as she verily believes, with Intent to harrahs and distress Deponent, and the said Earl of Anglesea and Charles Annesley. And Deponent is informed, and verily believes, there are at this time in this City at least fourscore Persons that have been Subpœna'd and brought hither from different Parts of this Kingdom at great Costs and Expences to attend and be examined as Witnesses on behalf of Deponent upon her Trial. Saith, That several of said Witnesses are old and infirm, and believes in her Conscience, that if her Trial should be put off to another Term, several of her most material Witnesses may die; and verily believes it will not be possible at a future time to get her said Witnesses together, if they are once dispersed, or go to their respective Places of Abode. And saith, there are two Persons lately dead, that were very material Witnesses for Deponent.

And saith, he hath made the exactest Computation he possibly could of the Expences of bringing said Witnesses and keeping them in this City, and the necessary Expence that must attend their being sent to their respective Places of Abode; and saith, the same, upon the most moderate Computation, will amount at least to seven hundred Pounds.

And saith, he verily believes, and is satisfied in his Conscience, that Two Hundred Guineas will not defray the Expences of the Witnesses so in Town, their Lodgings, Servants, Horses and other Attendants for the Space of four Days. And saith, he attended the Execution of the Commission for the Examination of Witnesses at Wexford, in the Months of September and October last past, between the Earl of Anglesea and James Annesley, and was himself examined as a Witness on that Commission, relative to the Parentage and Birth of said James Annesley, and the Issue or supposed Issue of Arthur late Lord Altham by his Lady; and saith, he was credibly informed and believes, that Dean Hughes, late of Eniscorthy, Gent. and Henry Giffard, late of Ros, Gent. and the Reverend William Hervey, of Bargybridge, Clerk, were examined on said Commission, on behalf of said Earl, and believes said Dean Hughes, and Henry Giffard are since dead, and that the said Mr. Hervey was about Michaelmas last taken ill and his Life despaired of; and saith, that several of said Witnesses now in Dublin attending said Trial, are antient and infirm Persons, and live dispersed in several Parts of this Kingdom.

Sworn the 2d of February 1744.

["Mr. Recorder, for the Traverser.] The Bill was found in October by the Commission of Oyer and Terminer; and the Reason of moving the Indictment by Certiorari was, that it was impossible for the Traverser, in so short a Warning, to prepare for her Trial; and it so happening, that Michaelmas Term was so close on the Heels of finding the Indictment, she could not, notwithstanding all her Efforts, collect all her Witnesses from the remote Parts of this Kingdom, and from England, to prepare for this Trial. And therefore could it be imagined that it was to delay Justice, when the Traverser was only endeavouring to have an Opportunity of Defence? The Prosecutors then said they were ready; and pray why not the same Reason now of being prepared? they put themselves to unnecessary Expences last Term in preparing for Trial, the Fault of that is to be imputed to themselves; they had notice given them that Application would be made to postpone the Trial."

"Counsel for the Crown.] It clearly appeared to the Court last Term, that the Traverser had not made the least Effort, or taken one Step to prepare for her Trial; and that we had very short Notice of her "Intentions,

"Intendings; and that only after they knew all our Witnesses were sent for and come to Town."

"Mr. Recorder, for the Traverser. The Traverser is at great Expence, her Witnesses being now in Dublin; and the Reason that was offered last Term for putting off the Trial, cannot subsist now, because both Parties have had sufficient Time to make the necessary Preparations for Trial. Pray, my Lord, what Foundation have they now to put off this Trial?"

"As to Mr. MacKercher's Affidavit, wherein he says, that Mrs. Weldon is a material Witness for the Prosecutor; he never saw her, yet he ventures to say this; she is here to be examined, and will clear up that Matter, and obviate the Objection."

"Counsel for the Crown. Mr. MacKercher was informed of it by her Sons, and by many others to whom she had declared herself on that head."

"Mr. Recorder. The next thing to be considered, my Lord, is the Affidavit of Robert Kennedy, who swears, That Mr. Weldon is a material Witness, without giving any Account that he knows him to be so; this Person, who is only a Server of Subpoenas, ventures, from his own Knowledge, to know what is or what is not material. If the Agent in the Cause would swear it, there might be some Reliance on it. If this Trial is put off, my Lord, another Witness may be found next Term, which might be thought as equally material; so that this Gentlewoman, before she can have an Opportunity of justifying herself, may die in the mean time, under the Imputation of the Indictment."

"If they had produced the Affidavit of any Physician who attended Mr. Weldon, to certify his Illness and his Inability to come to Town, it would be more proper than the Assertion of the Server of Subpoenas: Besides, my Lord, a Man in the Gout, though he cannot walk, might be able to travel. But how a Person who is neither Attorney or Agent in the Cause, and who is not to be presumed to be in the Secrets of the Prosecutor, can swear Mr. Weldon a material Witness, is somewhat very extraordinary; besides, my Lord, since the Time of Service of the Subpoenas, which was the 27th of January, he may have recovered as to be able to come to Town, though indisposed then. But why was not this Gentleman thought of last Term, when the Prosecutors said they were ready? Therefore, considering the Circumstances of this Case, I hope your Lordships will not put off the Trial."

"Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, it appears that the Bill of Indictment was found against this Woman the 24th of October, yet Application was made on the 13th of November last to put off her Trial; she had that Interval of three Weeks time to prepare; but because she swore she had some material Witnesses who were wanting on her Trial, it was put off. I hope, my Lord, the Reasons which we offer will have the same Weight, till we can be properly prepared. Mr. MacKercher, who is one of the principal Managers of this Prosecution, and without whose Presence it cannot be carried on effectually, is detained on the other Side of the Water by contrary Winds, and if this Cause should be put off till the next Term, he may and probably will be here then; so that I hope we shall have the same Indulgence that the Traverser had, and that this Trial may be put off till the next Term."

"L. C. J. In the Affidavit of Robert Kennedy, there is no Addition to his Name, which is not very common in Affidavits."

"Mr. Sol. Gen. The identical Person is in Court, to be produced if required."

Robert Kennedy was called and sworn.

Mr. Daly. Do you know Colonel Arthur Weldon?

Robert Kennedy. Yes, I do, Sir.

Q. How do you know that he is a material Witness in this Cause? Who told you so?—A. I saw him sworn to what he could say.

Q. Where?—A. Before a Master in Chancery.

Q. Have you any other Reason?—A. I have not.

Court. Did you read his Affidavit?—A. I read his Affidavit, my Lord.

Mr. Daly. What Affidavit did you read?—A. An Affidavit sworn before a Master in Chancery at Maryborough Assizes.

Q. Was you present?—A. I was.

Court. In what Cause was it?

A. In the Cause of Richard Earl of Anglesea and James Annesley, Esq.

Mr. Daly. Was there any Cause depending at Maryborough?

A. No, I went there, and met him there and the Master in Chancery; Mr. Morton was present, and his Testimony was wrote; he swore to it, and I witnessed it.

Court. In what Cause?

A. They say, it was to be laid before the Attorney General of England.

Q. Are you used to Business?—A. I am not bred to the Law Business.

Q. Do you understand what is material in a Prosecution for Perjury, and what not?

A. I think, what appeared in that Testimony was very material.

Q. Did you shew that Affidavit to any of the Agents of Mr. Annesley?

A. Mr. Morton read it.

Q. Did you shew it to any Agent of Mr. Annesley?

A. I brought it to Dublin, and gave it to Mr. MacKercher.

Q. Do you know what is material Evidence in a Trial for Perjury, and what is in another Cause?

A. As far as my Reason directs me, I do.

Q. What Employment do you follow?—A. I keep a Beer-house and Shop, my Lord. I do import a great deal of Beer, my Lord.

Mr. Daly. I am sorry for it. Are not you a Peruke-maker by Trade?

A. No, I am not.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Weldon before that Day you saw him at Maryborough?—A. I did.

Q. Where?—A. In Dublin, often.

"Lord Chief Justice. He is not a proper Person to distinguish material Evidence, and I observe that no Affidavit was made till Yesterday, that Mr. Weldon was a material Witness."

"Mr. Tisdall. The Public is concerned in this Prosecution; Trials are put off frequently in behalf of the Crown, on Affidavits of Witnesses not being able to attend: We hope the Crown and the Publick are at least intitled to the same Indulgence as was given last Term to the Traverser on her Application to the Court; why should she, my Lord,

"who by affected Delays put off her Trial so often before, be suffered to take advantage of our Weakness at present?"

"Mr. Daly. I would observe to your Lordships, that Mr. Levingstone, on the 11th of November last, swore an Affidavit before a Master in Chancery, in the Suit of Mr. Annesley against Lord Anglesea, that Colonel Weldon was in so bad a State of Health, that it was feared the Plaintiff would lose the Benefit of his Testimony; unless he was examined de bene esse; yet on the 13th, two Days after this Affidavit, Mr. MacKercher pushed to have the Trial brought on; so that it is plain they then thought they might proceed without Mr. Weldon's Evidence. My Lord, we have the Copy of Mr. Levingstone's Affidavit, which we beg leave may be read."

"Mr. Harward objects to the reading of Mr. Levingstone's Affidavit, which was made in the Court of Chancery, and says it is not an Affidavit in the Cause of his Majesty against Mary Heath; therefore he hopes it won't be admitted to be read. Besides, this is only a Copy of an Affidavit."

"Court. You do not object then to the reading the Affidavit, but a Copy of the Affidavit. Pray is not the Affidavit of Record, and ought not the Copy of a Record to be admitted to be read? Pray in the Exchequer Chamber would not the Copy of a Record be admitted to be read?"

"Mr. Daly. Suppose an Affidavit charging Perjury was made in the Court of Chancery, could it not be laid before the Grand-Jury?"

"Court. Gentlemen for the Prosecutor, shew us some Precedents why a Copy of Mr. Levingstone's Affidavit should not be read."

"Mr. Harward mentioned the Case of Edworth against Edworth against reading the Affidavit: And moreover, my Lord, tho' Col. Weldon was in such a State of Health, as made it prudent to examine him to preserve his Testimony; yet he might have been well enough to attend the Trial last Term."

"Lord Chief Justice. Are not Affidavits in the Spiritual Court read here on Prohibitions? There are no Precedents shewn why the Copy of Mr. Levingstone's Affidavit should not be read."

"Arthur MacGuire sworn to prove he compared the Copy which he had in his Hand with Mr. Levingstone's Affidavit on Record, and that it was a true Copy thereof, which was read."

The King } ARTHUR MAGWIRE, of the City of Dublin, against } Gent. came this Day before me and made Oath, That

"Mr. Walsh, for the Crown. My Lord, if there was no other Foundation to put off this Trial but the Affidavit that has been made of Mr. Weldon's being a material Witness, I humbly apprehend, it would be a sufficient Reason. The Person who made the Affidavit was examined before your Lordships. He has mentioned why he was a material Witness; and though he is not a Person of great Distinction, as Mr. Recorder would have him, he is a very creditable, honest Man, and has a Right to be believed on his Oath, as well as any other Man."

"My Lord, there are several other Witnesses who are very material to attend on this Trial, who cannot possibly attend if it comes on now, and not proper to disclose who they are, or whether they are or are not material, it is sufficient that they are sworn to be material. We were ready to come to Trial last Term, and tho' we should not then have had the Attendance of Mr. Weldon there, we might have had other Witnesses to prove the Point for which we now want his Evidence. Those Witnesses we have not at present, therefore considering the Disabilities we are under at this Time, we hope we shall be indulged for once, as well as the Traverser has been before."

"Lord Chief Justice. Gentlemen, did you ever know of a Trial under these Circumstances to be put off without paying Cost?"

"Counsel for the Prosecutors. There was the same and stronger Reason last Term for the Traverser's paying Cost, and yet it was denied us."

"Mr. Harward. My Lord, this Bill of Indictment comes here as well supported as any Indictment that was ever brought into this Court. I say it is supported by a Verdict found by twelve Gentlemen of as great Repute and Character as ever were upon any Jury, who had it for fifteen Days under their Consideration. There is no Imputation, my Lord, of its being an idle or wanton Prosecution. This Indictment was removed by Certiorari. It is no Writ of Right that the Subject has, but in reality it is an Indulgence to the Subject. The repeated

"Indulgence

"Indulgence given to the Traverser in not bringing on her Trial last Term, has been mentioned already, and as this Prosecution is in behalf of the Crown, we hope an equal Hand will be carried between his Majesty and the Subject. Mr. Mac Kercher has sworn in his Affidavit, that some material Witnesses to be examined in this Cause had necessary Calls to England; and that if the Traverser's Trial should be put off to this Term, that it would be almost impossible for them to attend, nay it was plainly told the Court they could not attend: We find he is not here, and other material Witnesses are at the other Side of the Water waiting for Wind; which I say adds more Credit to Mr. Mac Kercher's former Affidavit, for it is fallen out as he said, that if the Trial was postponed, it was next to an Impossibility that they could attend.

"Mr. Nelson has mentioned a Letter he received from Mr. Mac Kercher, that he expected him with the first fair Wind. Kennedy has mentioned in his Affidavit the ill State of Health of Colonel Weldon, and that he was a material Witness.

"As to the Objections that Kennedy was not Agent, and therefore cannot know whether he was a material Evidence, I humbly rely on it, my Lord, that it can have no manner of Weight; for Kennedy has told your Lordships, that he was present when Mr. Weldon swore his Affidavit, and had the Custody of it, and therefore must know the Purport thereof, and how far his Testimony might be relative to this Trial. I beg leave to say, that the single Testimony of Mr. Weldon, as he is a Gentleman of an unexceptionable Character, might be put in the Scale against many Witnesses, not so well established in point of Reputation; and the Want of his Evidence is a sufficient Motive to postpone the Trial.

"I must further observe to your Lordships, that last Monday there appeared in the Box only eight of the Jury mentioned in the Pannel; so that if both Parties were prepared, the Trial could not have come on that Day; and as this Day's Application is the first and only one on our Part for putting off the Trial till next Term, I hope your Lordships will indulge us in it."

"Mr. Robbins mentioned, that the same Cause of putting off the Trial last Monday still subsists, and urged very strongly some of the Reasons offered by the other Counsel for putting off the Trial."

"Mr. Mac Manus.] My Lord, it fully appears from the several Proceedings, the affected Delays given by the Traverser to postpone her Trial to this Term.

"The Bill of Indictment (as has been already observed) was found in October last; and the Traverser, to postpone her being tried at the then Commission of Oyer and Terminer, brought a Certiorari; so that I beseech your Lordships to consider, that the Indictment comes into this Court at the Prayer of the Traverser. The Court were bound of right to avoid it at the Instance of the King; because every Indictment being at the Suit of the Crown, he has a Prerogative of suing in what Court he pleases; but at the Request of the Defendant a Certiorari is seldom grantable for the Removal of an Indictment before the Justices of Goal Delivery, and very rarely if ever for removing an Indictment for Perjury, Forgery, and other heinous Misdemeanours, where the Publick is so nearly interested, in regard such Crimes deserve all possible Discountenance; and the Certiorari might delay, if not wholly discountenance the Prosecution, and so delivered in 1st Syder. 54.

"It is likewise delivered there as Law, if a Cause be moved out of an inferior Court, it ought to be tried the same Term that it is removed, that the Party may not be delay'd by Certiorari. My Lord, after it was removed, and the Traverser appeared on her Traverse in this Honourable Court, the 7th of November, she had Time given her 'till the 14th; when the 14th came, she again moved to put it further off 'till this Term.

"The Prosecutors very justly opposed the Motion last Term, of delaying this Trial any further, 'till this Term, in regard they were at great Expences, and had several times prepared for it; yet on the Affidavit of Mrs. Heath, that she had not some of her material Witnesses ready, it was postponed: so that I say, my Lord, this Trial was put off, at her Instance, at a Time when by Law she should and ought to have been tried, and those Gentlemen had a Right to demand a Trial.

"There have been Affidavits read to your Lordships how material Mr. Weldon's Evidence is, and that he cannot now attend, but that the next Term it is hoped he will be able to give his Attendance, which is a strong Motive to put off this Trial in behalf of the Crown. I beg leave, my Lord, to say, that the Case of an Indictment is not like that of an Information. The Promoters of an Information may be guilty of a Default, but no Laches or Default can be imputed to the Crown, at whose Instance all Indictments are supposed to be.

"My Lord, it is equally odious to punish the Innocent as to let the Guilty go free: your Lordship put off the Trial last Term, lest the Innocent should be punished, upon a Presumption of Innocence till the contrary appeared; and I am sure, my Lord, you will be equally careful this Day not to let the Guilty go free, which may be the Case if the Prosecution be now hurry'd on, in the Absence of several material Witnesses, who by Sickness and other Accidents are now prevented attending at this Trial, and in the Absence of the Person who conducts it. From these Circumstances I hope your Lordship will put this Trial off 'till next Term."

"Mr. Callaghan.] In all Cases, my Lord, where any Indulgence is to be shewn, it is granted to the Crown; yet I do not say but publick Justice should be properly and equally administered: The Accusation founded on this Indictment carries a great Degree of Presumption, tho' not Conviction; the Objection of Kennedy's not knowing whether Mr. Weldon is a material Witness or not, with great Submission, can have no Force; other Persons may sometimes know who are material Witnesses as well as Men of Business. If a Person stands unimpeached in his Character, there can be no Objection to his Testimony. It is every Day's Experience to put off Trials, if it appears that a material Witness is visited with a Disorder, and can't attend; in the present Case it appears several are absent.

"As to what is offered on the other Side, that this may be a Foundation for finding out other material Witnesses that cannot be present next Term; That, my Lord, will have no great Weight, for by the same Reason no Trial could ever be put off for want of material Evidence.

"Moreover, my Lord, if the Trial be put off 'till next Term, and the Traverser should then happen to be acquitted, it will be so much the more to her Honour; but if she escapes for want of due, proper, or effectual Prosecution, she will not stand as unimpeached from publick Censure as otherwise she would.

"It has been already mentioned what Expences we have been put to last Term, which might have been saved if we had known in time that her Trial was to be delayed; but Care was taken that it should not be known, 'till the Prosecutors had been put to as great Charges as if the Trial had come on: And as great Mischiefs must arise if this Trial should not be postponed, I hope, my Lord, it will not be brought on 'till next Term."

"Mr. Harding.] All Questions are to be determined by the Importance of Evidence: I say, my Lord, in a Case of this kind, that on the Weight of material Evidence all Questions must ultimately depend. If it appears that we have material Witnesses, who cannot attend at present, and if it so happen that we must lose the Benefit of their Testimony if this Trial comes on, this Matter must still remain in the dark; and if the Traverser should be acquitted for want of such important Evidence, she will in that respect stand under an Imputation. And I must beg leave to say, that I admire why Gentlemen from such Circumstances should be fond of trying this Traverse now, since the Prosecutors are not prepared; and that Mrs. Heath's pressing on the Trial this Day, when she knows the Prosecutor is not ready, is an Argument that she knows herself guilty. My Lord, the Gentlemen of the other Side have laid great Strefs upon the Objection that Robert Kennedy could not know that Colonel Weldon was a material Witness. The Charge in the Indictment is, that Lady Albam was not with Child, nor never had a Child at Dunmain. Surely, my Lord, he may know how far this Charge may be collected from the Affidavit of Mr. Weldon, which he had seen, and had in his Custody, and which must be relative to this Matter. Besides, my Lord, from the Conversation that Kennedy had with Mr. Weldon, that he would willingly attend, but that he was so ill that he could not then venture his Life to travel; I say, with humble Submission, from this very Declaration he might know he was a material Witness. Pray, my Lord, if Mr. Weldon was not a material Evidence, would not he have told Kennedy at that time that there was no occasion for his Testimony?

"This is a Matter of very great Consequence; and if the Prosecution cannot be effectually carried on, the Traverser must be acquitted. The Publick have a Right to a fair, impartial Enquiry into this Affair; and as it can be of no Inconvenience to Mrs. Heath that this Trial should be postponed, but will be of the greatest Service to her if she be acquitted with Honour on an effectual Enquiry, but not so much to her Honour if she be now acquitted; therefore we hope her Trial will be postponed 'till next Term."

"It was further observed by the Counsel for the Prosecution, that the Traverser had put her Trial off three several Times; that these affected Delays on her Part, were by so much the greater Hardship on the Gentlemen who carry on the Prosecution in behalf of the Crown, as they had not only postponed Business of the highest Consequence to them in England, in order to attend it; but as the Traverser's Intention of moving for Delay has always been industriously concealed from them until the very Day that her Trial should have taken place, or the Day immediately preceding it; by which means they were each of these three Times put to the same Trouble and Expence as if they had actually tried her with Effect. This Proceeding, my Lord, to all disinterested Persons, must appear not only vexatious, but calculated to promote the oppressive System of this unfortunate Gentleman Mr. Annesly's too powerful Enemies, of worrying him and his Friends out by unnecessary Expence and Delay. This Woman must have known her own Intention of putting off her Trial to this Term, early enough to have given Notice of it to those Gentlemen, so as to have prevented the great Expence of Money and Time, and the great Trouble that they and their Witnesses have been at in preparing so often for her Trial; while she remained in a supine Security of having her Trial delayed, and relied on the Indulgence of this Court, without taking one Step to prepare for it. We therefore hope, my Lord, that for these and many other Reasons already mentioned, we shall this Day, for once, meet with the same Indulgence of putting off this Trial till next Term, especially as this is the first Application of that kind we have made, and as we have so good a Right to expect it."

After which the Court delivered their Opinion as follows.

Mr. Justice BLENNERHASSET.

The Prosecutor has moved on two Affidavits to put off this Trial till next Term.

On Monday last he moved to postpone the Trial till Friday, which Motion was granted.

The Affidavits now moved on are, one of Kennedy, an Ale-seller and a Server of Procces.

And the Affidavit of Mr. Nelson, who is the Agent and Attorney for the Prosecutor.

The Strength of Kennedy's Affidavit consists in this, that one Mr. Weldon is a material Evidence.

I must observe, that upon the Motion to postpone the Trial 'till Friday only, there was no Affidavit made concerning Mr. Weldon; for Kennedy's Affidavit, in which only Mr. Weldon's Name is mentioned, appears to have been sworn Yesterday.

There was an Affidavit of Mr. Mac Kercher's, which he made the last Term, in opposition to the Motion to put off the Trial then made by the Traverser.

This Affidavit has been this Day read.

There Mr. Mac Kercher swears, that he had a great number of Witnesses attending, and that he was ready to prosecute.

At this time Mr. Weldon was not thought of; he has been summoned since, but to this Hour he is not bound over to prosecute.

Nor was he examined on the Trial in the Court of Exchequer.

Now, as to the Affidavit of Kennedy, though it has all the Parts which generally make up Affidavits to put off Trials; for he swears to the same motion

Vol.

of Mr. Weldon, and to his being a material Witness, and that he was not well when he was summoned; yet he goes, in my Opinion, so far, that he cannot well receive Credit.

For he takes upon him to swear also, that the Traverser cannot be convicted without his Testimony.

So that Mr. Weldon is the only Person who can give Evidence to convict this Woman, if we believe Kennedy.

But if we believe Mr. MacKercher, he swears he had a Number of Witnesses ready to prosecute the Traverser to Conviction, the Term before Mr. Weldon was thought of.

As to Mr. Nelson's Affidavit, it relates to Mr. Gosfrey only, that he has given Examinations in this Cause, and that he is in England; and to Mr. MacKercher.

I need not remark on this Affidavit, it is made by a Man of Credit in his Profession, and I believe it to be true.

But the Force of this Affidavit is taken away by an Offer made by the Traverser, who says, she will consent to have Gosfrey's Examinations read in Evidence against her upon the Trial, and that she will waive any Benefit which she might have by a Cross-Examination.

As to that Part of Mr. Nelson's Affidavit which is relative to Mr. MacKercher, it has no Weight with me; he says Mr. MacKercher is absent, and is a Manager in this Cause; he does not say he is a Witness, so that there is no Pretence to put off the Trial on that Account.

But the Counsel for the Prosecutor object that there is no Equality kept, if this Trial be not put off; say they,

The Traverser put it off last Term, and we should have the same Indulgence now.

The Case on the Traverser's Motion widely differs from the Case made by the Prosecutor on this Motion.

The Bill of Indictment was not found 'till the twenty-fourth Day of October, at the Commission of Oyer and Terminer.

The Traverser afterwards obtained a Certiorari to remove it to the King's Bench, which was not returnable 'till the first Day of Term. She then appeared, and immediately informed the Prosecutor, that she could not be ready for her Trial; she afterwards moved on Affidavits to put it off, and suggested that a Number of Witnesses were in England, and many dispersed in remote Parts of this Kingdom; she named many of them by Name; she swore they were material, and that it was not possible to have them that Term, but that she hoped to have them by this.

Upon these Affidavits the Trial was put off, and a Day of Trial appointed for this Term.

The Prosecutors opposed this warmly, made Affidavits that they were ready to prosecute, that their Witnesses were all in Town at great Expence to them, and they do not say now, by any thing they have sworn, but that they have every Witness now which they then had, except Gosfrey.

This was sufficient Notice to them to be prepared; they were not hurried as the Traverser must have been, if her Trial had been brought on before she could, from the Circumstances of her Case, have been prepared.

The Court, in my Opinion, should consider the prodigious Expence the Party is put to; I think it is sworn, that no less than fourscore Witnesses are now attending to give their Evidence in behalf of the Traverser, and that the preparing for this Trial has cost her already above seven hundred Pounds.

I consider also the heavy Imputation which lies on her Character, which she ought to have an Opportunity of clearing up, if she can.

And for these Reasons think she ought to have her Trial; but I submit to the Opinion of the Lord Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Ward.

Mr. Justice WARD.

The Progress of this Cause is easily recollected. The Bill of Indictment was found the twenty-fourth of October, at the Commission of Oyer and Terminer for the County of Dublin, against the Traverser for wilful and corrupt Perjury; notwithstanding which, and although the Verdict in the Exchequer was contrary to her Evidence, I shall suspend my Opinion until the present Jury have found her guilty, or acquitted her. Justice and the publick Good require, that Witnesses upon their Oaths should always speak Truth; yet I am apt to believe, were not private Persons affected in the Event of this Prosecution, every Circumstance, whether material or not, would not be so strenuously contended for.

Many Reasons made it improper to try this Indictment at the Commission; therefore my Lord Chief Justice granted a Certiorari to remove it into this Court; it is owing to that I see many Gentlemen upon this Jury, who could not have been so there, being Judges; it was fit the best Gentlemen for Fortune and Character in the County should be had to try a Cause of this Consequence; it was incumbent on the Sheriff to return such, and I believe he hath done his Duty.

The seventh of November the Traverser, called upon her Recognisance, appeared, and the Court appointed the fourteenth for her Trial; but on the tenth she moved the Court to put it off to this Term, on her Affidavit of several material Witnesses, naming them, being in several Parts of England; and remote Parts in Ireland, whom she could not possibly have in Time to make her Defence. This Motion was strongly opposed; but her Affidavit was so full, that it could not be refused her; and I must say, that in a common Case it would have required no longer Time than to read the Affidavit; and the Court appointed the fourth of February for the Trial. On this Motion Mr. MacKercher made an Affidavit, which now is become necessary to be considered; he swears that he is embarked in this Cause, and, as I understand him, an Agent; that he was then ready to prosecute and go on with the Trial of the Traverser. As it was obvious to object, if he was then ready, why should he not be so this Term? to answer which he goes on and swears, that several Persons interested, and Witnesses, were going to England, whom he apprehended he could not have next Term, and could not bring on the Trial without them. This looks like giving Notice he could not be ready this Term, and I confess if he, or the visible Agent on this Side the Water, had applied the Beginning of Term, and made the Necessity of their Witnesses going to England appear, and that they were not returned, and if the Traverser had been at no Expence, I should have gone as far as the Practice of the Court would allow to delay the Trial. But instead of this, Mr. MacKercher, in his Affidavit, did not mention the Name of any one of his

VOL. IX.

Witnesses that were going to England, which renders it impossible to examine whether they did or did not go there, or were since returned, or ever would; besides, they seemed to acquiesce, and continued silent until the second of February, when Notice was given, the Prosecutors would move on the fourth to put off the Trial to Friday following. No other Notice hath been since given; nor did the Prosecutors move to put off the Trial on Monday, until the Jury was called; and only eight appearing, it must go off on Course to the next Day, on which they only pressed that it should be put off to Friday, without assigning any Reason from Mr. Weldon's Disability to attend, or indeed any Reason at all that I know of. However, through much Importunity, the Counsel on both Sides agreed to put it off to this Day, when a full Jury appearing, they now move on new Affidavits to put it off to next Term, and assign for Reasons the Absence of Mr. MacKercher the Agent, and also of Mr. Gosfrey and Colonel Weldon, two Witnesses. As to Mr. MacKercher, he was here last Term, and might have been here now; for though Mr. Nelson swears he acquainted him by Letter that he would be here, yet Campbell swears he came last Week from Parkgate and Holyhead, and heard nothing of Mr. MacKercher at those Places; besides, Mr. Nelson has always appeared to us as the known Agent, and is of known Abilities and Sufficiency to conduct any Cause. As to Mr. Gosfrey, the Counsel for the Prosecutors say he was here last Term about the End of it, when Edward Weedon and his Brother, being examined in Court, charged him on Oath with drawing Affidavits for them, being illiterate, to swear to their Mother Sarah Weedon's Imprisonment by Colonel Blakeney, when they only told him, as they, with great Simplicity, swore in Court, that Mr. Blakeney's Gates were locked at the usual Hour of the Night, and they never looked on their Mother as a Prisoner there; and when the Court required Mr. Gosfrey's Attendance, they were told he was then in England; he is bound over to prosecute, and ought to have attended; However, the Traverser hath absolutely removed this Objection, by consenting his Examinations should be read against her. But the main Objection rests upon Colonel Weldon's Absence, who, as Kennedy swears, was served with a Subpoena the twenty-seventh of January, and was then so ill of the Gout, that he could not attend, and that the Traverser cannot be convicted without him. Kennedy appearing in Court, acknowledged himself to be a Beer-Seller, and, by his Appearance, he is a Man of low Station and little Knowledge. I think him very sufficient to swear to what he sees and hears; but I must say I do not think his Judgment or Belief any way sufficient to ground mine on. An Attorney or Agent is the proper Person to swear a Witness to be a material one to convict the Traverser, but the Agent and Attorney, who certainly must be informed of the Witnesses for their Clients, have declined this. Kennedy, indeed, told us on the Table, he read an Affidavit of Colonel Weldon's at Maryborough, and thought it material; but to obviate this, the Traverser's Counsel have consented this Affidavit be read in Evidence against her, so that if it be material, it will have its Weight. In the next Place, how comes Colonel Weldon to be now so material a Witness, when last Term Mr. MacKercher pressed to go on to Trial without him? and I presume he knew what he could say, the Affidavit he made being, I think, at the Summer Assizes preceding.

Besides, though Colonel Weldon was subpoena'd the twenty-seventh of January, and Kennedy made an Affidavit the second of February, in that he is silent as to Mr. Weldon's Illness, nor was it mentioned by the Counsel on Monday; but when nothing else would do, on the sixth of February he swears to his Illness, and something like his being a material Witness; this I have considered already: But I must observe, what has misled the Counsel, that though Colonel Weldon should be ill of the Gout on the twenty-seventh of January, it no ways appears but he may be now on the seventh of February well recovered, or at least able to travel; 'tis admitted he lives but one Day's Journey from Dublin, why then was not a Messenger sent down to bring us an Account in what State of Health he was a Day or two past? Since they have neglected this, I shall not look upon him as a necessary Witness. The Counsel for the Prosecutors alledge they have above sixty Witnesses, and the Traverser's eighty in Town; I think it is full Time to go on with the Trial, and I see no Reason for putting it off. I should not have been so tedious, but for the great Earnestness with which the Counsel have pressed this Motion.

I am of their Opinion, that we must not put off this Trial. I will mention the several Steps taken in this Proceeding. It appears here by Affidavit, That on the tenth of August Mrs. Heath was arrested on a Warrant, grounded upon Examinations of Perjury committed by her in her Evidence on the Trial in the Court of Exchequer; fifteen Witnesses are first bound over to prosecute at the Sessions of Kilmainham, and afterwards at the Commission of Oyer and Terminer. The Commission sat on the 23d of October, and a Bill of Indictment was found against her the next Day, which she traversed, and the Traverser moved for a Certiorari to take her Trial in the King's Bench, upon Affidavits so full, that it was not to be refused without the greatest Injustice; there being an Estate depending of six thousand Pounds a Year, and that there were Examinations carrying on in the Chancery here, and in England. I do believe that neither Side can shew, where the Testimony of Witnesses has been anticipated by an Indictment of Perjury, but something like that Step was taken in this Cause. The Certiorari was granted by the Court upon an Affidavit of the Traverser, and the Trial put off upon her Affidavit of the tenth of November. The Affidavit of Mr. MacKercher is sworn afterwards on the 13th of November, shewing Cause for bringing on the Trial the next Day, but no Court could possibly bring on the Trial when that Affidavit was offered. The Traverser swore that several Witnesses, whom she named, were in England; and that Mrs. Weedon in particular, was a material Witness, and lived in a remote Part of this Kingdom. Mr. MacKercher swears, that Mrs. Weedon was a material Evidence for the Prosecutor, that she was detained by Force, and moved for an Habeas Corpus to bring her hither. That Motion was brought on, and Examinations were taken after the Day appointed for the Trial, and a Motion made to attach Mr. Blakeney for detaining this Mrs. Weedon. It appears, that she was summoned to attend here on Behalf of the Prosecutor on the 14th of November, just the Day before; and that the Place she then lived at is above 70 Miles from Dublin. There came two Witnesses upon the Table, who had sworn Affidavits, in order to found an Habeas Corpus and an Attachment against Mr. Blake, and they having sworn false, they were both committed. Both those illiterate Witnesses swore her, in their Affidavits, to be under a Restraint, when it appeared she was at Liberty. This they confessed, and also, that those Affidavits were prepared by Goofrey, the Person now said to be in England. This is a very extraordinary Proceeding, and a Sort of Indictment not usually brought into this Court. The first Trial was put off, on the Affidavit of the Traverser, that she was not prepared for her Defence: The Question now is, whether the Reasons offered for putting off this Trial to Easter Term be of equal Force. It appeared then by the Affidavit of Mrs. Heath, that several Witnesses, necessary for her Defence, could not possibly attend at the Day prefixed for Trial; the Bill of Indictment was found the twenty-fourth of October; the Trial was to be on the fourteenth of November; how could Witnesses in England be brought by that Time to appear here? But Mr. Mac Kercher swears that Mrs. Weldon was a material Evidence for the Prosecutor, and not for the Traverser, as she insinuated. She is now here, you have no want of her, if she be that material Witness; and then the Question is, whether the Affidavits made now can put off this Trial. The Affidavit of Mr. Nelson is general, and only says, that he had a Letter from Mr. Mac Kercher, dated the tenth of January, acquainting him that he would leave London on the seventeenth of that Month. There are several Affidavits made on the Side of the Traverser, and one in particular, that there was no such Person upon the Road from London to this Place; but however, as he is no Evidence in the Cause, there can be no Colour for his Absence to put off the Trial. Then the whole Matter is reduced to the Affidavit of Kennedy. He swears those three Things that are material to put off a Trial; but I must observe that this Affidavit is in fact contradicted by the Affidavit of Mr. Mac Kercher, who swears on the thirteenth of November, he was ready to bring on the Trial the next Day, and yet Mr. Weldon is not one of the Witnesses for that Trial, and he is not bound over to prosecute; Mr. Mac Kercher knew his Evidence, for he had then his Affidavit in Chancery; therefore that Part which is necessary to put off the Trial, that a material Witness to be produced cannot attend, is wanting in Kennedy's Affidavit, for it appears that it is not well grounded by Mac Kercher's Affidavit. There's another Objection against Kennedy's Affidavit: He swears, he does believe Mr. Weldon is to be had the next Term, and that he believes he is a material Witness. Consider, that though this be proper if it comes from the Agent, yet it is not proper, when an Ale-seller makes this Affidavit, and a Man that confesses he was never bred to Business. You know, that if a Person be accused for a violent Assault, in case there be no Danger of Death, there is Bail taken; but if instead of sending for a Surgeon, the Person who applies for Bail sends for a Cobler, and the Cobler swears he had searched the Wound and found it not dangerous, Nobody can say, but the Court would refuse Bail upon the Affidavit of this Cobler. Therefore Kennedy's Affidavit is of no Consequence. As to Goofrey, his Examinations are here, the Counsel for the Traverser desire they may be read against her. But I must tell you, that his Examinations are no more, than that Mrs. Heath did say such and such Words on the Trial in the Exchequer. I have the Trial here, and Mr. Goofrey can prove no more than what all present at that Trial can prove; and therefore, Gentlemen, upon account of Mr. Goofrey, I think not proper to put off the Trial. But what makes me think it improper to put it off is, the great Expence on the Side of the Traverser: It appears by the Affidavits on account of the Traverser, that they have been at a vast Expence; one Person swears to 700*l.* another swears to 300*l.* besides a 50*l.* Bill. Now, if you can delay Trials, and put Traversers to this Expence, you will soon have what you desire in carrying on this Cause, for Nobody will dare to appear as a Witness, when they know it is so dangerous and expensive. But it has been urged by Mr. Harward, that she should have a full and fair Trial; and let me tell you, it is as much for the Credit of the Prosecutors that there should be a full and fair Prosecution, and that where Witnesses bound over may be had to appear, and do not, it creates a Suspicion of the Justice of the Prosecution; People will be apt to say, that Jugglers cannot play so well the same Trick twice. There is no doubt but a Verdict was found for the Prosecutor by a Jury of undoubted Credit; but it does not follow that the Traverser is guilty, and the best and the wisest Jury may be deceived. This Matter can be delayed no longer, because by this Delay there can never be any Time fixed for a Trial; but as this Motion has taken up a great deal of Time, so it would be impossible to go through it this Day, therefore we will defer it till To-morrow Morning.

3 M

The Jury prefixed over to Friday the eighth of February at eight o'Clock.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall.] I beg leave to observe, that the Examination of Mr. Goofrey does not go to all Parts of this Indictment.

Court.] To every one of them.—You do in effect confess her innocent, if you do not prosecute her.

Counsel for the Traverser.] We consent Mr. Goofrey's Examination may be read in Evidence, and waive our Right of cross-examining.

The Indictment on which this Trial was had is as follows, viz.

The King against Mary Heath, } THE Jurors for our Lord the King upon their Oaths say and present, That in a certain Bill of County of Dublin, a Plea of Trespas and Ejectment of a Farm depending as of the Term of the Holy Trinity, in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Years of the Reign of our said Lord, the now King George the Second, of Great-Britain, and so forth, and in the Year of our Lord, one thousand seven hundred and forty-three, in our said Lord the King's Court of Exchequer in Ireland, then being at the King's Courts in the said County of Dublin, before the Barons of our said Lord the King, of the said Court, and brought into the said Court, and prosecuted by Campbell Craig, Gent. Debtor of the said Lord the King, Plaintiff, against the Right Honourable Richard Earl of Anglesea, Defendant; who was present then in the said Court, by his Attorney, Thomas Burroughs, for thirty Messuages, thirty Tofts, fifty Cottages, two Mills, fifty Gardens, eight hundred Acres of Arable Land, three hundred Acres of Meadow, six hundred Acres of Pasture, fifty Acres of Furze and heathy Ground, fifty Acres of moory Ground, with the Appurtenances, in Great Stramine, otherwise Stameen, Little Stramine, otherwise Stameen, Little Donacarne, Shallon, Killcarvan, otherwise Killbarrow, Cruffey, Annagor, otherwise Annager, and Little Gaffney, situate, lying and being in the County of Meath; all which said Premises were formerly the Estate of the Right Honourable James Earl of Anglesea, deceased; and lately the Estate of the Right Honourable Arthur Earl of Anglesea, also deceased; and which had been demised to him, the said Campbell Craig, by James Annesley, Esq. and had been also demised to him the said Campbell Craig, by the Right Honourable James Earl of Anglesea, and had been also demised to him, the said Campbell Craig, by the Honourable James Annesley, only Son and Heir of Arthur late Baron Altham of Altham, deceased, otherwise the Right Honourable James Baron Altham of Altham, on the first Day of May, one thousand seven hundred and forty-two, at Trim in the County of Meath aforesaid, for the several Terms of twenty-one Years, to commence from thence in Manner and Form as in and by the Declaration of the said Campbell Craig, in the said Bill of the said Plea of Trespas and Ejectment of a Farm, is mentioned and set forth; in and to which said Bill of a Plea of Trespas and Ejectment of a Farm, he the said Richard Earl of Anglesea, by his said Attorney, took Defence in due Form of Law, and for Plea thereto, said that he was not guilty of the Trespas and Ejectment aforesaid, in Manner and Form as the said Campbell Craig complained; and of that he put himself on the Country, and the said Campbell Craig likewise; and Issue being so joined in said Plea of Trespas and Ejectment, in due Form of Law, by and between the said Parties, it was afterwards so proceeded upon thereon that the said Issue afterwards, to-wit, on the Second Friday after the Morrow of All Souls, in the Term of St. Michael the Arch-angel then next, that is to say, on the 11th Day of November, in the seventeenth Year of the Reign of our said Lord, the now King, in the Court of Exchequer aforesaid, before the said Barons of the said Court, at the King's Court aforesaid, in the County of Dublin aforesaid, was tried by a certain Jury of the Country, for that Purpose, in due Form of Law, then and there elected, tried and sworn in said Court, to try the said Issue; and on the said Trial, it was then and there admitted, as well by, for and on behalf of the said Campbell Craig, as by, for and on behalf of the said Richard Earl of Anglesea, that the said Lands and Premises, mentioned in the said Plea of Trespass and Ejectment and Declaration of the said Campbell Craig, were the Estate of Inheritance of Arthur Lord Baron Altham of Altham, late deceased, and that he died seized of the said Lands and Premises; and the said Campbell Craig, then and there, upon said Trial, produced Witnesses on his Part, who being then and there duly sworn on God's Holy Evangelists, by the said Barons of the said Court of Exchequer, to testify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, in the said Plea of Trespass and Ejectment so depending, the said Barons having sufficient Power and Authority to administer the said Oath to them on that behalf, gave in Evidence, and then and there swore, and deposed upon their Oaths aforesaid, to the Jurors of the Jury aforesaid, before the Barons aforesaid, that James Annesley aforesaid, the Lessor of the said Plaintiff, Campbell Craig, was the only Son and Heir of the said Arthur late Lord Baron Altham of Altham, by his Wife, Mary the late Lady Altham; and that the said James Annesley was born and christened at Dunmaine, in the County of Wexford, in the Kingdom of Ireland. And the said now Jurors so sworn for our said Lord the King, upon their Oaths, further say and present, that Mary Heath, of the City of Dublin, in the County of the said City, Widow, upon the Trial aforesaid, in the Court of Exchequer aforesaid, before the Barons aforesaid, at the King's Court aforesaid, in the County of Dublin aforesaid, being then and there produced as a Witness, by and on behalf of the said Richard Earl of Anglesea, on the said Trial of the said Issue, she the said Mary Heath was then and there sworn, upon God's Holy Evangelists, in due Form of Law, by the said Barons of the said Court of Exchequer, to testify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, in the said Plea of Trespass and Ejectment, the said Barons of the said Court of Exchequer having sufficient Power and Authority to administer the said Oath to the said Mary Heath in that behalf; and the said Mary Heath being then and there so sworn, then and there falsely, voluntarily, knowingly, wilfully, maliciously, corruptly and illicitly swore and deposed upon her Oath aforesaid, to the said Barons and to the Jurors of the said Jury, who then and there were in due Form of Law elected, tried, and sworn as aforesaid, to try the said Issue as aforesaid, that Lady Altham, that is to say, the aforesaid Mary Lady Altham, who was Wife of the said Arthur late Lord Baron Altham of Altham, never was with Child, while she the said Mary Heath lived with the said Mary Lady Altham. And,

Further, the said Mary Heath then and there, before the said Barons of the said Court, gave in Evidence and swore upon her Oath aforesaid, to the said Barons and to the Jurors of the said Jury, that the said Mary Lady Altham never had a Child at Dunmaine, that is to say, Dunmaine aforesaid, in the said County of Wexford, in the Kingdom of Ireland. And,

Further, the said Mary Heath then and there, before the said Barons of the said Court, gave in Evidence and swore upon her Oath aforesaid, to the said Barons and to the Jurors of the said Jury, that there never was a Child, as the Child of that Family, that is to say, of the said Arthur late Lord Baron Altham of Altham, and the said Mary Lady Altham his Wife, either christened or living at Dunmaine House, that is to say, the aforesaid Dunmaine House, in the said County of Wexford, while she, that is to say, the said Mary Heath, was at Dunmaine aforesaid. And,

Further, the said Mary Heath then and there, before the said Barons of the said Court, gave in Evidence and swore upon her Oath aforesaid, to the said Barons and to the said Jurors of the said Jury, that she, that is to say, the said Mary Heath, never saw a Child in the Hands or Care of Joan Laffan, while she, that is to say, the said Joan Laffan, was at Dunmaine House aforesaid. And,

Further, the said Mary Heath then and there, before the said Barons of the said Court, gave in Evidence and swore upon her Oath aforesaid, to the said Barons and to the Jurors of said Jury, that the said Mary Lady Altham did not miscarry of a Child at Dunmaine aforesaid. Whereas really and in fact, the said Mary late Lady Altham, who was Wife of the said Arthur late Lord Baron Altham of Altham, was with Child while she the said Mary Heath lived with the said Mary Lady Altham. And whereas also really and in fact, the said Mary Lady Altham had a Child at Dunmaine, that is to say, Dunmaine aforesaid, in the said County of Wexford in the Kingdom of Ireland. And whereas really and in fact, there was a Child, as the Child of that Family, that is to say, of the said Arthur late Lord Baron Altham of Altham, and the said Mary Lady Altham his Wife, christened and living at Dunmaine House aforesaid, in the said County of Wexford, while she the said Mary Heath was at Dunmaine House aforesaid. And whereas also really and in fact, the said Mary Heath did see a Child in the Hands and Care of Joan Laffan, while she, that is to say, the said Joan Laffan, was at Dunmaine House aforesaid. And whereas also really and in fact, the said Mary Lady Altham miscarried of a Child at Dunmaine aforesaid. And so the now Jurors sworn for our Lord the King as aforesaid, upon their said Oaths say and present, that the said Mary Heath on the said Trial of the Issue aforesaid, upon her Oath aforesaid, before the Barons aforesaid and Jurors of the said Jury, elected, tried and sworn to try the said Issue between the Parties aforesaid, in the said Court of Exchequer at the King's Courts aforesaid, in the County of Dublin aforesaid, in Manner and Form aforesaid, did falsely, voluntarily, knowingly, wilfully, maliciously, corruptly and illicitly, commit wilful, voluntary, malicious and corrupt Perjury, in great Contempt of the said now King and of his Laws, and contrary to his Majesty's Crown and Dignity.

Court.] You, Gentlemen of Counsel for the Traverser, offered Yesterday that Mr. Geoffrey's Examination should be read in Evidence against the Traverser, and that you would waive her Right to cross-examine him; you must admit it now.

Mr. Daly.] Admitted.

Court.] (On Motion for separating the Witnesses.) The Witnesses were ordered to be separated, and not to come into Court till they are sent for; Nobody is to be admitted to them, but each to have a Guard on the other's Witnesses.

Court.] Gentlemen, for the Ease of the Jury, and Necessity of finishing the Trial, I must tell you, that we will not, on either Side, have a Multiplicity of Witnesses; the Meaning of the Law is, that the Trial should be had in one Day, and we won't sit here to hear any Evidence that is immaterial. Whoever protracts a Trial, is by the Law supposed to dare not to stand it.

Mr. Recorder.] My Lord, we shall endeavour to make the Trial as short as we can, but there are many Cases that depend upon Circumstances, which must be made appear, and wherever your Lordships find that it is a necessary Defence, you cannot think it is too long.

Mr. Justice Ward.] It is in the Power of the Gentlemen of the Bar to shorten this Trial, and I hope you will observe the Rule laid down Yesterday, for one Gentleman to confine himself to each Witness.

L. C. J.] I make no doubt of laying that down as a Rule.

Mr. Sol. Gen.] Our Resolution is to observe it; and we will shorten the Trial, in all respects, as much as we can.

The Lists of the Witnesses are given in to the Court, that they may be separated, and the Clerk of the Crown numbering them, there were 80 on the Side of the Traverser, and 86 on the Side of the Prosecutor.

Court.] Do you imagine, that the Law supposed that any body should produce fourscore Witnesses? Two Witnesses are enough to prove any Fact, if it be a good one, for by the Mouth of two Witnesses shall a thing be established; and 200 will not prove any Fact, if it be a bad one.

The Officer of the Court charged the Jury with the Indictment in the usual Form, and was directed by the Court to take out the five Points or Assignments of Perjury, and give them to the Jury; which was done.

1. That Mary, Wife of the late Lord Altham, never had a Child, while the Traverser lived with the Lady Altham.
2. That Lady Altham never had a Child at Dunmaine.
3. That there never was a Child christened, or living at Dunmaine, as the Child of Lord and Lady Altham, while the Traverser was at Dunmaine.
4. That the Traverser never saw a Child in the Hands or Care of Joan Laffan, while the said Laffan was at Dunmaine.
5. That Lady Altham did not miscarry of a Child at Dunmaine.

[" Mr. Sol. Gen. (Counsel for the Crown.) May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the Crown, against the Traverser Mary Heath, who stands indicted for wilful and corrupt Perjury, a Crime of the deepest Dye, on the Discountenance and due Punishment whereof the Lives, Liberties and Properties of all Men, nay the very Being of Society depend; for no Man's Life, Liberty, or Property can ever be safe, if such are either countenanced, or escape for want of due Prosecution. And before I proceed to state the Case, I must beg leave, my Lord, first to mention, that by hurrying on this Trial so prematurely, in the Absence of our principal Witnesses, in the Absence of the Gentlemen who carry on the Prosecution, particularly of Mr. Mac Kercher, who has the conducting of it, who alone is acquainted with the Nature and Strength of the Evidence, and the due Application thereof, and is now detained on the other Side of the Water by contrary Winds, we proceed to it under manifold and great Disadvantages: Yet under these Circumstances, I make little doubt but we shall be able to convict the Traverser, to the Satisfaction of all unprejudiced Persons, if the Witnesses to be produced are able to prove the Matters contained in my Instructions. I shall therefore proceed to state the Case as briefly as I can.

" Arthur Annesley, first Earl of Anglesea, (so created by King Charles the Second, with a Limitation to the Heirs Male of his Body) had Issue five Sons, James his eldest, Altham his second, Richard his third, Arthur his fourth, and Charles his fifth Son.

" The first Earl having made very large Acquisitions, sufficient to support two distinct Families, procured the Baronage of Altham for his second Son Altham, and his Issue Male, with a Remainder over to his third Son Richard.

" As to the Altham Title, Altham, the first Lord Altham, died without Issue Male, whereupon that Dignity became vested in his Brother Richard, who had Issue Arthur, afterwards Lord Altham, and Richard now in Possession of the Anglesea Titles and Estates.

" With regard to the eldest Branch, James, eldest Son of the first Earl, was, in his Father's Lifetime, married to a Daughter of the Earl of Rutland, on which Marriage, a Settlement was made in common Form, and the Estates limited to Lord James for Life, Remainder to his first and other Sons in Tail Male, Remainder to the other Sons of the said first Earl in Tail Male, Remainder to his right Heirs.

" The said first Earl was accordingly succeeded, both in the Title and Estate, by his said eldest Son James, who afterwards also died, and left Issue three Sons, James, John and Arthur.

" James, the eldest of these, and third Earl of Anglesea, levied Fines and suffered common Recoveries of his Estates, and thereby docked the Entail created by his Father's Marriage-settlement, and made himself absolute Tenant in Fee-simple; afterwards he made several Wills and Codicils, and having no Issue Male of his own, he thereby limited his Estates, upon the Failure of Issue Male of his Brother Arthur, to go to the Altham Branch.

" Accordingly it happened that the said Arthur, who was afterwards Earl of Anglesea, died in 1737, without Issue; so that if Arthur Lord Altham had been then living, he would undoubtedly have succeeded to the Anglesea Honours and Estates: But as he happened to die in November 1727, it is indisputable, that if he had left a Son, such Son would have been entitled to those Honours and Estates.

" The principal Question therefore at the late Trial at Bar, and the single Question now is, Whether the said Lord Altham left a Son or not?

"not? We that are concerned for the Crown, did then maintain the Affirmative, and this we shall now endeavour to prove, though a Fact already established by the solemn Verdict given at that Trial, by twelve Gentlemen of the greatest Characters for Integrity, Capacity and Fortunes in this Kingdom. A Verdict not precipitately given, but after fourteen Days Attention and Deliberation, and which therefore ought to carry the greatest Weight.

"Had the Person, who claims to be the Son of Arthur Lord Altham, been in the Kingdom, when Arthur Earl of Anglesea died, he might have asserted his Right, while many of his Witnesses were living, and the Facts recent. But he had the Misfortune, Gentlemen, not only to be out of the Kingdom, but out of Europe.

"But as we are not at Liberty to lay that Fact before you, I shall not presume to observe upon it any further."

"Lord Chief-Justice.] No such Evidence ought to be opened here.— Prove that the Lord Altham had a Son."

"Mr. Daly.] The Evidence offered by Mr. Solicitor is quite illegal, and I will shew it to be so."

"Mr. Recorder.] I have a great Regard for whatever Mr. Solicitor General says, but no Fact should be opened to the Jury, but what properly relates to the Matter of the Indictment."

"Court.] The Matter of Perjury contained in the Indictment, is the single Question before us; what Mr. Solicitor mentions might be proper to be shewn in the Court of Exchequer, in an Action for the Recovery of the Estate. But we are not now to try the Right to an Estate, but a single Fact: If Lady Altham had a Child, Mary Heath is perjured, and this the Jury are to try."

"Mr. Archdale.] (one of the Jury) I apprehend the Question before us is, whether Mary Heath is perjured or not?"

"Court.] Yes, that is the Point, Gentlemen."

"Mr. Solicitor General.] Mr. Annesley brought an Ejectment in the Court of Exchequer, in order to try his Title to an Estate in the County of Midd, which Action was accordingly tried in Michaelmas Term, 1742. The sole Question on that Trial was, by the Admission of all Parties, Whether Mr. James Annesley was the lawful Son of Arthur Lord Altham? and the Jury, who were Gentlemen of undoubted Credit and Fortune, after fifteen Days Trial and Deliberation, found upon their Oaths, that Mr. Annesley was the legitimate Son of Arthur Lord Altham. Upon this Trial, Gentlemen, Mrs. Heath, the Traverser, was examined, as a principal Witness, on the Part of the Defendant the Earl of Anglesea, and it is for the Evidence she then gave, that she now stands indicted for Perjury, in the five following Particulars:

"First, That she swore, that Mary Lady Altham, who was Wife of Arthur late Lord Altham, never was with Child, while she Mary Heath lived with the said Mary Lady Altham.

"Secondly, That she swore, that the said Lady Altham never had a Child at Dunmaine in the County of Wexford.

"Thirdly, That she swore, that there never was a Child, as the Child of the Family of Lord and Lady Altham, either christened or living at Dunmaine House in the said County of Wexford, while she Heath was at Dunmaine.

"Fourthly, That she swore, she never saw a Child in the Hands or Care of Joan Laffan, while the said Joan Laffan was at Dunmaine House.

"Fifthly, That she swore, that the said Lady Altham never miscarried of a Child at Dunmaine aforesaid.

"And although it will be enough for us to prove Mrs. Heath guilty of Perjury, in any one of the said Points, yet notwithstanding the great and many Advantages gained against us by our being surprised, and hurried on to Trial at this Juncture, I doubt not of our being able to convict her of the whole. We shall begin, by proving, that Mrs. Heath, at the Trial at Bar, swore the several Particulars mentioned in the Indictment, and then shall proceed to shew, that those Particulars are false."

"Court.] The first Assignment of Perjury is, that Lady Altham never was with Child while the Traverser lived with her.

"Mr. Serjeant Marshall.] My Lord, we shall first produce the Record. Upon the Trial in the Court of Exchequer the single Point was, Whether the Lessor of the Plaintiff was the Son of Lady Altham, Wife of Arthur late Lord Altham? and there was a Verdict found for him.

"Mr. Daly.] We admit the Record, and we admit Mary Heath was produced as a Witness upon that Trial, and that she swore that Lady Altham had not a Child, whilst she the Traverser lived with her.

"Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Do you admit the several Assignments of Perjury?"

"Mr. Daly.] We do.

"Mr. Serj. Marshall.] My Lord, the next Thing that we shall lay before your Lordship is a Person [Mrs. Cole] to prove, that after Lady Altham's Arrival in this Kingdom, in the Year 1713, she came to the House of Mr. Briscoe, in Bride-street, in this City; that after staying there some short Time, she removed to the House of one Mrs. Vice, in Essex-street; that from thence she went to the late Lord Altham's House at Dunmaine, in the County of Wexford; and it will appear to your Lordship and to the Gentlemen of the Jury, that at the late Lord Altham's House at Dunmaine she was with Child, and did miscarry of a Child.

"Mr. Daly.] We admit, if you please, that Mrs. Heath came over with my Lady Altham in October 1713, and lived with her to her Death in the Year 1729.

"Court.] Gentlemen, call your Witnesses.

I. Mrs. HENRIETTA COLE.

"Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Mrs. Cole, did you know Arthur late Lord Altham?"

"Mrs. Cole.] Yes, Sir.

"Q. Did you know Mary Lady Altham, his Lady.---A. Yes.

"Q. At what Time did you first become acquainted with her?"

"A. In the Year 1713.

"Q. Do you know any Place in the County of Wexford, where they lived?---A. Yes, at Dunmaine.

"Q. Were you at any Time at that House, and when?---A. I was, Sir.

"Q. Can you recollect about what Time, Madam?"

"A. I believe it might be about February that my Mother and I went there.

"Q. In what Year?---A. In the Year 1713.

"Q. Do you know of any remarkable Accident that happened while your Mother and you were there?---A. Yes, I do.

"Q. Give an Account to the Court and the Jury, what that Accident was.

"A. My Lord was in a very great Passion one Day, at some Sawcers being brought to the Table; his Passion was very great, and he had ordered them never to come upon the Table on any Score, for they were not fit for modest People to see; and all on a sudden he threw them between my Lady and me, and put my Lady into a violent Fright."

"Court.] What were they?---A. China Sawcers, my Lord.

"Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Pray, Madam, what happened upon that Occasion?"

"A. My Lady fell a-trembling; into a violent Fit of Trembling and Tears."

"Q. Was there any, and what Consequence from this Accident?"

"A. My Lady was exceedingly ill in the Night."

"Mr. Edm. Malone.] My Lord, before she goes on any further, I hope she will say what she knows of her own Knowledge, and nothing more."

"Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Whatever may be an Inducement to the material Point is necessary for her to say."

"Court.] Go on.

"Mrs. Cole.] I say it from Mrs. Heath the Person coming to my Mother, and I in Bed with my Mother."

"Court.] Then you heard Mrs. Heath tell your Mother my Lady was very ill?---A. I heard her, my Lord."

"Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Did any and what Consequence happen from that Illness?---A. My Mother told me in the Morning—

"Court.] Stop you there: You must only tell what you know yourself did happen."

"Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Well, tell what did happen of your own Knowledge."

"A. My Lady miscarried, as I understand."

"Q. From whom were you informed that my Lady was so sick?"

"A. From Mrs. Heath.

"Q. Where was you at that Time that you was informed of it?"

"A. In Bed with my Mother."

"Q. What did she say to your Mother then?"

"A. She came to the Door, and said, For God's Sake, Madam, get up, my Lady is exceedingly ill, make haste and get up.

"Q. Pray, Madam, do you know what was the Consequence of that Illness?---A. My Lady miscarried, as I take it."

"Q. Why do you apprehend that she miscarried?"

"A. I saw an Abortion in the Basin the next Day."

"Q. Where did you see it, Madam?---A. In my Lady's Closet."

"Q. Who shewed it to you?"

"A. I believe, my Mother; as to that Particular I cannot be positive."

"Q. Where was Mrs. Heath at that Time?"

"A. Indeed, I cannot be positive as to that; but she was ever at my Lady's Elbow whenever she was ill."

"Q. How was she in that Family, a Servant or Relation?"

"A. She was a Servant, I think; I cannot tell whether she was a Relation or not."

"Q. Was she my Lady's Woman?---A. She was deemed as such."

"Q. Had you any and what Discourse with the Traverser concerning my Lady's Sickness at that Time?"

"A. Indeed, I cannot charge my Memory with having any; we might have had Discourse about it, but I cannot charge my Memory."

"Q. How long was Lady Altham confined afterwards to her Chamber?"

"A. That is a Question I cannot exactly tell you."

"Q. Was she confined to her Chamber after that Accident of the Sawcers?"

"A. She was confined to her Chamber; my Lord wanted her down to Supper that Night, and sent for her several Times; and my Mother went up for her, and she was too ill to come down."

"Mr. Recorder.] What Night?"

"A. The Night of the Day that the Sawcers were thrown."

"Mr. Serj. Marshall.] You say, Madam, that my Lady was confined, pray how long was she confined?"

"A. Whether it might be a Fortnight or Three Weeks, I cannot positively say, but she was confined to her Chamber."

"Q. In what Manner was she confined, in Bed, or up, or how?"

"A. She kept her Bed for some Time, and sat up in her Chamber at other Times."

"Q. Did you give an Account of this Affair to any Body whatsoever since the Time this Accident happened?"

"A. I have spoke of it frequently, and my Mother has spoke of it."

"Q. To whom, Madam, can you recollect?"

"A. Indeed, I believe there is Mr. Monk's Family, that I believe may remember it perfectly well; there is in Gorey several that may remember it from my speaking of it before ever this Affair happened."

"Q. Where was Mrs. Heath during the Time that Lady Altham was confined in her Chamber?"

"Mr. Recorder.] Oh! she said already, that she was about her."

"Q. Pray, Madam, did Mrs. Heath know any Thing of that Matter, or not?"

"A. She was in the House, she was immediately at her Elbow, she was the Person that came to my Mother."

"Court.] Did you go into my Lady's Room when she called your Mother?"

"A. I did not, my Lord, I lay in my Bed."

"Mr. Serj. Marshall.] But she desired your Mother to make haste, for that my Lady was exceedingly ill?---A. She did, Sir."

"Jury.] What Time of the Night was it that Mary Heath came to your Apartment?---A. I really cannot recollect."

"Q. When was it that you went into the Closet, and saw this Abortion you mention?"

"A. The next Morning about 9 or 10 o'Clock, I believe; to be certain I cannot."

"Q. Do you take upon you to say, that at the Time when your Mother shewed you the Abortion, that the Traverser was in the Closet?"

"A. I cannot say, she might or might not."

"Q. Did Mrs. Heath constantly attend Lady Altham?"

"A. She did constantly."

"Q. Did you ever see her attend her?"

"A. I have seen her, and was often sent to call her."

"Mr. Serj. Marshall.] When she called your Mother up, did she express any and what Apprehension concerning my Lady's Illness?"

"A. I cannot say that she expressed any at all, only that she said, For God's Sake, Madam, get up, my Lady is exceedingly ill.

Q. D

Q. Do you know how it was understood in that Family, what the Occasion of that Sickness was?—Court. Supposition or Hearsay is nothing.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, Madam, do you remember the Time that my Lady Altham came to Ireland, the Month I mean?—Mrs. Cole. About October.

Q. Where did she lodge when she came to Dublin? Did not she come to your Father's House?—A. She came to my Father's House.

Q. How long did she continue in your Father's House before Lord Altham came?—A. Whether a Month or six Weeks in Town, before he came to Town, I cannot tell.

Q. Pray, Madam, where was it that my Lord and she first met?

A. At my Father's House.

Q. Can you recollect the Month that was in?

A. I cannot be very certain; but I think that it must have been in November, the latter-end of November, or in the Beginning of December, which I cannot tell.

Q. Do you fix it in November?

A. I cannot fix it more than what I say.

Q. I ask you now, Madam, did my Lord and Lady Altham lodge at your House till they went to Dunmaine?—A. I do not believe they did.

Q. I ask you, upon your Oath, did they lodge in your Father's House till they left Town?—A. I think they did not.

Q. It is a material Question, and you must answer it; I ask you, did they or did they not? for you that remember things so well, must know whether they did or no. Did not they lie there the Night they were reconciled?—A. They did, and some Nights after.

Q. Did not they till they left Town?

A. No, Sir, I do not believe they did.

Q. Cannot you say whether they did or not?—A. I cannot say positively.

Q. Can you say they did not lodge there while they staid in Town? You that know they were reconciled by your Father's Means, cannot you recollect whether they left your Father's House before they left Town?

A. I do not think that they staid there while they lived in Town.

Q. You do not think; but can you say whether they did or not?

A. I tell you, Sir, my Father was uneasy at their being in his House; my Lord was a Man that had a great many Freaks, and my Father prevailed on him to take Lodgings.

Q. And did he take Lodgings?

A. I think I may say it, I am not certain; but I think I may be positive that they did not lodge at my Father's House till they went to the Country.

Q. Well, then, Madam, do you recollect their going away from Town? Did the Coach come to your Father's House to carry them away?

A. I do not remember.

Q. Were they at your Father's House when they went away?

A. I do not believe they were.

Q. Did the Coach come for them?—A. I remember no Coach coming for them. Indeed I do not remember any Equipage.

Q. Now, Madam, you say that your Mother and you went to Dunmaine; what Time was it that Lord and Lady Altham left this City?

A. I cannot ascertain the Time of their going.

Q. You did not go with them?—A. I did not.

Q. I think you said your Mother and you went to Dunmaine in February?—A. I believe it was.

Q. Pray, Madam, when my Lady was at your House, did she hire any Servants to go down with her?—A. I do not remember one.

Q. Do not you remember that she hired one Mrs. Setwright?

A. I remember Mrs. Setwright at Dunmaine, but do not remember my Lady's hiring a Servant in the House.

Q. Were you a Gossip to Mrs. Setwright at Dunmaine?

A. I know she was brought to Bed.

Q. Did you stand to the Child?—A. Indeed I do not remember I did; if I did, it is more than I know, or can remember.

Q. Was your Mother sick while you were at Dunmaine?

A. Not to my Knowledge.

Q. You do not remember that neither?—A. Indeed I do not.

Q. Was she so ill as to take Vomits there?

A. I do not remember any Vomit she took, nor do I remember her to have taken two Vomits in all her Life.

Q. Did not you lie with your Mother at Dunmaine?

A. Part of the Time I was Bed-fellow to Mrs. Heath, and part to my Mother; for my Father was there for a while, and as soon as he went, I lay with my Mother.

Q. Pray, Madam, did your Father go with you there?

A. No, he did not.

Q. Was your Father in the House when these Sawcers were thrown down?

A. He was not.

Q. Did that happen before or after he was there?

A. It was after he was there.

Q. How long was you there before your Father came?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. How long, a Fortnight?

A. I believe we might; more or less I cannot tell.

Q. Was it the Beginning of February, or the latter-end, that you went down?—A. I believe towards the Beginning; I cannot tell.

Q. I see you can tell nothing but one Point. Was it the Beginning, the Middle, or the latter-end of February that you went there?

A. I cannot say; but I believe it was in February.

Q. Well, but I ask you now, what Time was it that this Accident of the Sawcers happened?—A. I cannot tell whether in March or April.

Q. Which Month was it?—A. If I could remember the Day, the Hour, or the Minute, I would tell you.

Q. How long was it before your Father came?—A. I think it was after.

Q. How long did he stay there?—A. He stayed but a very short Time.

Q. Can you say how long he stayed?

A. Whether a Week or ten Days I cannot say.

Q. How long after he went away did it happen?

A. I cannot tell how long.

Q. Were not you examined in this Cause once before; can you recollect what Time you fixed then for your going to Dunmaine?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Did not you say it was in March or April?

A. I do not know whether I did or not.

VOL. IX.

Court. Did you say in February or March then, or when?

A. I cannot tell, my Lord, whether I did or not.

Mr. Recorder. When you were examined on the Trial in the Exchequer, did you say, you went in February, March or April?

A. I said that my Lady miscarried in March or April.

Q. Did not you swear that it was in March or April that you went down?

A. Not to my Knowledge.

Q. Why, had not you as good a Knowledge then as now?

A. I might; if I said it I mistook.

Q. Pray, Madam, I'd ask you another Question; you say, you mistook if you said so; upon your Oath, how long after you went down was it that this Accident happened?

A. It was some Time after; it either was in March or April, but I believe rather it was in April.

Court. You do remember you were examined in the Court of Exchequer; by Virtue of your Oath, did you swear then, it was in the Beginning of Spring that you went to Dunmaine?

A. I do say, that I believe I said that it was the Spring.

Q. Do you call the Month of February Spring?

A. I might mistake in that.

Mr. Mac Manus. My Lord, I apprehend it is an improper Question to ask a Woman now, what she said another Day; to examine her at this Time to what she swore then.

Court. I ask your Pardon, Mr. Mac Manus, it is very proper.

Mr. Recorder. Recollect the Time; how soon after you got down did this Accident happen, for it is a most remarkable one, in a Fortnight, or three Weeks, or a Month, or how long?

A. It was more than a Fortnight, three Weeks, or a Month; as I take it, it was about two Months after we got down.

Q. Can you recollect the Month?

A. It might be something more than two Months, I cannot be positive.

Q. And might not it be something less?

A. No, I do not think it was.

Q. Can you recollect the Company there at the Time of this Accident?

A. I have endeavoured my Recollection as much as I could. There were four Gentlemen at the Table besides my Lord, my Lady, my Mother and I; but to tell one of their Names I cannot, and whether dead or alive, I do not know.

Court. Was your Father there?—A. No, he was not at the Table.

Mr. Recorder. Was there any Quarrel between my Lord and my Lady at this Time?—A. There was none that I know of, for it was the Sawcers that occasioned the Quarrel.

Q. How were the Company placed at the Table; I suppose my Lord sat at the lower End of the Table?

A. My Lady sat at the upper End, my Mother sat by her, and I on the other Side, and I do believe, as well as my Recollection can serve, I believe my Lord sat the very next Person to me; I am not positive, but I think he did.

Q. Were these four Gentlemen that were at Dinner, People of any Fashion?—A. I suppose some were, and some were not.

Q. Can you be positive whether my Lord sat next you?

A. Upon Recollection, I think he did sit next me.

Court. Where did my Lady sit?

A. At the upper End of the Table, and the Chimney was behind me.

Mr. Recorder. Did you sit the next to her?

A. I sat the very next to her.

Q. On which Hand?—A. The Right Hand.

Q. Was your Mother there?—A. My Mother was there.

Q. And did you sit on the Right Hand of my Lady?

A. I can give you a very good Reason for it.

Q. Tell it.—A. It is, that my Mother had got some Cold, and her Eyes were weak, and she did not care to face the Light.

Q. What Room was it you dined in? Describe Dunmaine.

A. I have not been at Dunmaine lately; but however, the Room, as you come in at the Street-door, was on the Right Hand; there was a Bed in the other Room opposite to it.

Q. What was the Use of those Sawcers?

A. There was something upon every one of them.

Q. How were they brought to the Table?—A. They were brought in on a Dish, a Desert, and those Sawcers were intermixed with other Things.

Q. What had they upon them?

A. I believe there were Sweet-meats upon them.

Q. Were you daubed with them when my Lord threw them by you?

A. He took them in this Manner, and emptied them all; and as he emptied them he threw them between my Lady and me, he would empty a Sawcer and throw it, and so one after another till he had thrown them all.

Q. Where did he empty them into?

A. In the Dish that they were standing on.

Q. Did he know that my Lady was with Child?

A. I believe he did; and I am pretty sure he did.

Q. And yet he threw those Sawcers directly between you?

A. Sir, my Lord was unaccountable in his Temper.

Court. Do you say that my Lord knew my Lady was with Child?

A. I do believe he did know it.

Q. What is your Reason for that Belief?

A. I have no Reason, only because of the Abortion.

Q. But had you any Reason to believe he knew it before that Time?

A. I do say thus far, that the very first Words that Mrs. Heath said to my Mother—

Court. You are only to say what you know yourself.

Mrs. Cole. I heard my Lord say that my Lady was with Child before the Accident.

Mr. Recorder. Did you hear him say so?—A. I did hear him say so.

Q. And yet he threw the Sawcers in this Manner; how did he throw them?—A. My Lady put her Head one Way, and I put my Head the other, as they were throwing.

Q. Now, Madam, you say you went into the Closet the next Morning, your Mother carried you there?—A. No, she did not.

Q. Who carried you there?—A. I went of myself.

Q. Was your Mother there?—A. She was in the Closet.

3 N

Q. And

Q. And your Mother shewed you this Abortion?—A. She did.
 Q. Now, how old were you at that Time?
 A. I believe this will shew (holding a Bit of Paper in her Hand); when I was here before I was quite uncertain as to my Age.
 Q. You then said you were twelve or thirteen?
 A. There is a Fault in that Trial, for I was ask'd my Age, and I could not be certain; I was asked why I could not, and I said I could not, because there was always—
 Q. What did you say your Age was then? Did you say how old you was?
 A. Forty-five or thereabouts.
 Q. Did not you say you were then twelve years old?
 A. I was led into it; I said I was, and could not tell how much more; I was asked how old then was I, ten, twelve, fourteen, or sixteen; and said I might be ten, twelve, fourteen, or sixteen, which I cannot determine.
 Q. How old was you at the Time of the Trial; did you not say forty-five or thereabouts?
 A. Here is my Age (shewing the Paper); I have now got it, and it is vastly more.
 Q. When was you born?
 A. I was born in the year 1691, but then I did not know.
 Court.] What is your Reason for saying you were born in the year 1691?
 A. I got my Age out of the Registry.
 Q. What Registry?
 A. Of St. Nicholas.
 Q. What Parish of St. Nicholas?
 A. St. Nicholas, Dublin.
 Q. Which, there are two Parishes called St. Nicholas?
 A. This St. Nicholas next us here.
 Q. Whereabouts is the Church, in what Street?
 A. St. Nicholas hereabouts, I do not remember the Street.
 Court.] That is St. Nicholas Within.
 Mr. Recorder.] Why then you were twenty-two at that Time?
 Court.] There is ten Years difference, and that is a great while to be mistaken in.
 Mrs. Cole.] I tell you, that here was the Thing just as I was asked; when they asked me my Age, I said I cannot tell, take so many out of so many, and then you will know; there was some of the Lawyers immediately talking, she's perjured, and that struck me to the Heart, that I did not know what I said.
 Court.] Were you asked that Question but once on the Trial, or twice, or thrice?
 A. I know I was asked it once, and when I was on the Table the last Time, that was the second Time, I had then recollected myself.
 Mr. Recorder.] Was not you asked how it came that your Mother shewed you the Abortion when so very young?
 A. I do not know indeed.
 Q. Do you remember when you came to the Age of one-and-twenty? Did you never reckon your Years?
 A. I did not, and there was a constant Dispute and Debate what Year I was born.
 Q. Were you of Age when you went to Dunmaine?
 A. To be sure I find by this Registry I was.
 Q. That is no Evidence; were you one-and-twenty when you went to Dunmaine?
 A. I was to be sure.
 Q. You say it positive?
 A. I do say it positive.
 Q. How came you to mistake so prodigiously?
 A. I do believe every one of you may remember that I said, take so many out of so many, and then you may know.
 Q. Well, Madam, when your Mother shewed you this in the Bafon, had it any Figure or Shape?
 A. It seemed to me to have it.
 Q. What Figure had it?
 A. It had Head and Limbs, Sir.
 Q. Could you distinguish them plainly?
 A. It was but very little.
 Q. Did you take and examine it?
 A. I do believe my Mother shewed me the Limbs, I did not take it to examine it; I looked at it as it lay there.
 Q. Did your Mother do any more than shew it to you as it lay?
 A. I do not know but she might, to shew the Limbs.
 Q. Did she take it in her Hand?
 A. I do not remember that she did.
 Q. Did she stir it in the Bafon?
 A. She might stir it with a Feather.
 Q. Did she, or did she not?
 A. I cannot say.
 Q. Had she a Feather in her Hand?
 A. I cannot say that she had.
 Q. Had it all its Limbs?
 A. I might see the Limbs and the large Eyes.
 Q. What did you take it to be when you saw it first?
 A. My Mother told me it was an Abortion.
 Q. That was in the Clofet?
 A. In the Clofet.
 Q. Is there a Window in the Clofet?
 A. There are three Windows.
 Q. Did your Mother speak to you about it before you went into the Clofet?
 A. Before I went into my Lady's Room my Mother told me she had miscarried.
 Q. Was that all she told you?
 A. That is all, Sir.
 Q. Did your Mother or you go into the Clofet first?
 A. When I went into the Clofet my Mother was there; we went into the Room together, and I believe my Mother went into the Clofet before I did.
 Q. Did your Mother speak before she went into the Clofet about the Abortion?
 A. I don't recollect; my Mother told me my Lady had miscarried.
 Q. But did she tell you of the Abortion before she went in; did she say that there was one in the Clofet?
 A. No, she did not.
 Q. You are sure it was not before she went in?
 A. Indeed I really do not know, Sir, she told me there was one, but whether before or after I cannot be positive.
 Q. Did you, when you were formerly examined, say it was before or after, or that you could not tell?
 A. My Confusion was so great, I did not know what I said.
 Q. Did she, or did she not tell you before she went into the Clofet?
 A. She told me my Lady had miscarried before I went in, and when I went in I saw the Abortion.
 Q. What carried you into the Clofet if you did not know it was there?
 A. My Mother and I went in; my Mother was there, and I might go to her; when she had made her Compliments to my Lady, she went in, and I followed her.

 Q. When you were asked before how you came to go into the Clofet, did you not answer this, That your Mother told you the Abortion was there, before you went in?
 A. I believe I did say it, I might mistake in the Term.
 Q. Did you, or did you not say so?
 A. I believe I did say it. I know my Mother told me my Lady had miscarried.
 Q. Pray, Madam, when did you leave Dunmaine?
 A. We left it, I believe, the latter-end of May, or Beginning of June, which I cannot tell, and went to Burton-Hall.
 Q. Did not you swear upon the former Trial, that my Lord sat at the lower End of the Table, opposite to my Lady, for now you place him next yourself?
 A. I believe I did say it. But I say that I was in that Confusion when I was here before, that I might; I might mistake in that, for not a Mortal had spokato me what I was to be examined about; but when I came on the Table, I was in the greatest Confusion that any body could possibly be. If I did say it, it was owing to downright Confusion.
 Court.] What time did you leave Dunmaine?
 A. We left it the latter-end of May, or Beginning of June, I cannot be positive which.
 Q. That was in the Year 1714?
 A. In 1714, my Lord.
 Mr. Recorder.] When did you come to Town?
 A. We did not come till the latter-end of July, for we stayed at Burton-Hall.
 Q. How long did you stay there?
 A. I cannot tell whether Six Weeks, or how long.
 Q. Recollect as near as you can.
 A. I believe till quite the latter-end of July.
 Q. And you came to Town when?
 A. The latter-end of July, as near as I can recollect it.
 Q. When did my Lady come to Town? Was she in Town when you came?
 A. I do not know whether she was or not.
 Q. Did not my Lady and you visit after?
 A. When I came to Town a Sister of mine was in the Small-pox, I never had it, and my Mother sent me out of the House directly, which makes me as to any thing after that quite uncertain; and I was not at home after in my Father's House till the Year 1718, but with one Relation or other.
 Q. Pray, Madam, when you came to Town, was not the first News you had of the Death of the Queen?
 A. I know I was not at my Father's House at the Death of the Queen.
 Q. Where was you then?
 A. At Mr. Monck's in Dawson-Street.
 Q. Was not it soon after you came to Town that you heard of the Queen's Death?
 A. It was soon after; I believe it was.
 Q. How soon after was it that you heard that News?
 A. Indeed I will not be certain, nor cannot.
 Q. Was not it the first Publick News you heard?
 A. It might.
 Q. Do you believe it was?
 A. I do believe it was.
 Q. Did not you ascertain your time of coming to Town by that?
 A. I believe I did; I do not know whether I did or not, but I know by my Sister's being in the Small-pox.
 Q. Was Lady Altham in Town then?
 A. Indeed I cannot say whether she was or no, for I tell you I left the House; my Lady might be in Town and I not know it, for I left the House on my Sister's being ill.
 Q. Can you say whether she was in Town when you heard of the Queen's Death?
 A. I cannot tell; but I believe she was not in Town.
 Q. Pray, Madam, when my Lady came to Town, where did she lodge the second time? Did she come soon after you?
 A. I saw her in Town to be sure, but what time of the Year I cannot be certain; but I think it was at Mrs. Vice's.
 Q. Did not you swear upon the last Trial that you were positive that my Lady went to Vice's after the Reconciliation?
 A. I do not know whether it is positive or not, or whether I swore it positive or not.
 Q. Did not you swear it, that they went to Vice's before they went to Dunmaine?
 A. I believe I did.
 Q. Can you now be positive?
 A. I can so far, that they stayed but a few Days at our House, and did not go from our House to Dunmaine.
 Q. How many Days did they stay in your House; was it three, or ten, or how many?
 A. I believe about four or five Days after the Reconciliation, indeed I cannot tell.
 Q. But you are sure my Lady went to Mrs. Vice's?
 A. She went to my Lord's Lodgings, wherever that was.
 Q. Did you visit there before she went out of Town?
 A. I did see my Lady once.
 Q. Was it before or after Christmas that they went to the Country?
 A. I believe it was before; I cannot tell.
 Court.] Did you ever see my Lord and Lady at my Lord's Lodgings?
 A. I did, my Lord.
 Q. Did you go there?
 A. I went.
 Q. Where was it they lodged?
 A. It was a House, as near as I can remember, next to the Slip, at Temple-Bar.
 Q. When was it that you saw them there?
 A. It was after the Reconciliation, before they went to the Country.
 Q. Did you visit them a second time?
 A. I did.
 Q. Was it at the same House?
 A. To the best of my Knowledge it was.
 Q. Whole House was that?
 A. They call it Vice's House, to the best of my Knowledge.
 Mr. Recorder.] Now, Madam, what time of the Year was it you saw them the second time at Vice's, in what Month? Pray recollect, for it is very material.
 A. Indeed I cannot tell.
 Q. You came to Town you say in July, and the first News you heard was the Death of the Queen; was it before or after that you saw her there?
 A. It was after that I saw her.

Q. How long after?—A. I cannot say.
 Q. Was it that Year?
 A. I believe it was that Year, but I cannot ascertain the Month.
 Q. Are you sure it was that Year? See and recollect the Month; if you can.—A. It was that Year, but I cannot ascertain what Month.
 Q. Was Mrs. Sitwright at Dunmaine when you were there?
 A. She was.
 Q. What was she there?—A. She was House-keeper.
 Q. Did you know Sarah Weedon there?
 A. I knew nothing of Sarah Weedon at all.
 Q. Did not you know John Weedon the Coachman's Wife?—A. I never knew that John Weedon the Coachman was married till of late.
 Q. Was John Weedon the Coachman there at that time?
 A. He was there.
 Q. Who was House-maid there then?—A. I do not know.
 Q. Do not you remember Nelly Thomas?—A. No, I do not.
 Q. Do you know Bourk the Postillion?—A. I do not know him.
 Q. Did not you go abroad and stay a Fortnight at Mr. Boyde's House, and Bourk carry you?
 A. I went abroad, but how long I stayed I cannot tell.
 Q. Where did you go?—A. To Mr. Boyde's.
 Q. And did not Bourk carry you there?
 A. I do not know who carried me there.
 Q. Was not it one of my Lord's Servants?
 A. It was, but which I cannot tell.
 Q. How soon after your being at Dunmaine was it, that you went to Mr. Boyde's House?
 A. I cannot tell; but it was while I was at Dunmaine.
 Q. How long did you stay at Mr. Boyde's?
 A. I cannot tell that neither; but I believe a very short Time.
 Q. What Boyde was it?—A. Boyde of Roslar.
 Q. Pray, Madam, who was Butler at Dunmaine when you were there?
 A. Ralph.
 Q. Did you know Anthony Dyer?—A. No, I did not.
 Q. Who was my Lord's Gentleman?—A. Indeed I cannot tell.
 Q. Had my Lady a Page?—A. Indeed I do not know that I ever saw any thing in the Equipage that was a Page.
 Q. Had my Lady a Page or not?
 A. She might have a Page for aught I know, but I do not remember.
 Q. Was this Visit to Boyde's before or after you saw the Abortion?
 A. Indeed, I cannot tell.
 Q. Were you at Dunmaine in the Month of April?—A. I was there.
 Q. On St. George's Day?—A. I cannot tell.
 Q. Were there any Races while you were there?
 A. There might be, but I cannot tell.
 Q. Was you at any Races with Lady Altham?
 A. Indeed I do not remember.
 Q. Did any Girls run for a Smock there? Was there a Smock-Race?
 A. To my Knowledge, I never saw any such thing in the Country.
 Q. Do you know Mr. Mark Whyte?—A. Yes, I have seen him.
 Q. Had you any Discourse with him at any time?—A. Yes, he was at Gorey, and we had some Discourse, I cannot particularly tell what.
 Q. Cannot you remember what you said to him?
 A. I told him some Servants Names that were at Dunmaine; and he asked me if I remembered my Lady to be ever with Child; I told him I did, and that she miscarried; and his Answer was, as to her Miscarriage we do not go upon that, for we do not suppose my Lady a barren Woman.
 Q. Was that all that passed between you?
 A. Mr. Mark Whyte asked me, if I remembered any of the Servants of the Family; I told him I did, and named all I knew.
 Q. Did not you tell him that you'd swear for my Lord Anglesea if he would renew your Husband's Lease?—A. Indeed I deny it absolutely.
 Q. Did you ask the Renewal of the Lease?
 A. Yes; I'll tell you how it was asked. Mr. Cole had been employed for Captain Annesley for a long time, and had a Promise for a Lease from him long before that; and when Mr. Whyte was spoke to upon this former Promise of this Lease, I desired the Captain would make good his Promise.
 Q. Do you know Mr. Frank Annesley of Ballyfax?
 A. I have very little Acquaintance with him.
 Q. Did not you tell Mr. Whyte that you could be a very material Witness for my Lord, but that you would not tell him what you could say till your Lease was renewed?
 A. I did not, unless in this Manner; if the proving a Miscarriage can prove of any Service to my Lord, I can prove the Miscarriage.
 Q. And did you say no more?
 A. No indeed, I cannot say that I did.
 Q. Mr. Recorder.] Had you any Discourse with Mr. Frank Annesley?
 A. He came one Day to Sister Briscoe's House, and wanted to speak to her, and she was not ready for going down, and desired that I would; and I went down Stairs to him, and a little while after she came down, and I shewed him the Subpœna that I was served with.
 Q. Madam, do you recollect the Night that Mrs. Heath awakened your Mother in order to see my Lady?—A. I do not, Sir.
 Q. Do you remember that she came to awaken her?
 A. I do remember that she came.
 Q. Was there a Light in the Room?—A. There was not.
 Q. Had Mrs. Heath a Light with her?
 A. She might have a Candle in her Hand.
 Q. Was there Light or not?
 A. There was not, I believe there might be a Fire.
 Q. Had she a Candle in her Hand?
 A. Indeed I cannot tell, I had been asleep and she awakened me, and I cannot tell.

Q. Was there Light of any Kind in the Room?

A. There might be a Candle, and there might not.

The Reason of the Question is this; look at that Woman.

The Witness looks at Mrs. Heath.

Q. Will you swear positively, that that is the Woman that came in to the Room to call your Mother?

A. Mrs. Heath was the Person, and I believe that is the same.

Q. How can you tell it was her, when there was no Light?

A. I knew her Voice.

Mr. Recorder.] Did you see Lady Altham in Dublin in the Year 1715?

A. I don't think I did; I do not know that I did at all; if she was in Town I saw her; but I cannot tell whether she was or not.

Court.] Did your Mother shew you the Abortion?

A. I went into the Closet and saw it.

Q. Did your Mother call you to see it?

A. I do not know that she did.

Q. Did she desire you to look at the Abortion?

A. I do not know that she did.

Q. When was you married?—A. I was married in the Year ——— I shall be next March 14 Years married.

Q. Can you recollect your Age when you were married?

A. Indeed I cannot, except I count.

Court.] I only ask, because young Women generally keep Account of their Age.

Mrs. Cole. Well, I never did, and I tell you the Reason, there was a constant Debate about my Age, the Leaf was torn out of the Bible.

Q. Did you ever see an Abortion before that time?

A. No, nor for some time after.

Mr. Recorder.] Did any body attend my Lady on this Miscarriage?

A. I cannot remember one.

Mr. Solicitor.] My Lord, I only beg Leave to make one Observation on the Examination of this Witness; it seemed to be apprehended by the Court, that we concerned for the Crown had a mind to lengthen out this Trial unnecessarily; you will please to recollect what little time we took in the original Examination, and how much the Recorder has spent in cross-examining her, and I beg leave to say, that he did not ask one improper Question.

Court.] Since you acknowledge he did not ask one improper Question, you cannot think the time has been taken up unnecessarily.

Mr. Solicitor.] I only mention this, to shew how necessary it is for us to take up as much time in our Examinations, if we find it material.

Court.] You shall have all the time you can desire, to examine any Witnesses that are material.

N. B. The Examination of Mrs. Cole held from 6 Minutes before Nine, to 20 Minutes after Eleven.

Court.] Call your next Witness.

Crier.] Doctor Jemmat.

Mr. Spring. My Lord, I desire, before Doctor Jemmat comes upon the Table, what he is to be examined to may be opened.

Mr. Serj. Tisdal.] My Lord, the next Witness we shall produce is Doctor Jemmat, a Doctor of Physic, who attended Lady Altham in the Year 1714, at Mrs. Vice's, at the time she was with Child.

Doctor SAMUEL JEMMAT.*

Mr. Daly.] I desire to ask a previous Question, which is this; Did not you make an Affidavit of the Testimony you could give in this Cause?

Dr. Samuel Jemmat.] Do you mean in this Court, or any other?

Court.] Before any Person?

A. Before a Master in Chancery I gave in an Examination.

Mr. Daly.] Upon what Occasion, Doctor?

A. They asked me what I had to say in this Affair, and I told them.

Q. Who asked you?—A. One Mr. Cooper, a Master in Chancery.

Court.] What Cooper do you mean, Doctor Cooper?

A. He was a Stranger to me.

Q. Where was it that you were examined?

A. It was in the Queen's County, my Lord.

Q. What time was this?

A. I cannot tell whether in August, or September, or July the last Year.

Mr. Serj. Tisdal.] Did you know the late Lord and Lady Altham?

A. I did.

Q. Was you employed in that Family in any Capacity, and what?

A. I was employed by Arthur Lord Altham, as his Physician for some Years.

Q. Pray, Sir, did you ever attend Lady Altham as a Physician?

A. I did attend her Ladyship.

Court.] Do you remember when she came from England into this Kingdom?

A. I did not know when she came first, but I think about the latter End of November 1714, Lord Altham came to my House in Anglesea Street in a Chariot, and desired I would go with him to see my Lady, for he was afraid she had a Fever.

Q. And did you go?

A. I went in the Chariot with Arthur Lord Altham, to one Mrs. Vice's in Essex Street, where they then lodged.

Mr. Serj. Tisdal.] And did you visit my Lady then?

A. I did, and found her very hot and feverish, and I asked how long she had been so; and my Lord told me, (for only he, and she and I were in the Room) he told me that they had been out late at Night, whether at a Ball, or Play, or Music-meeting I do not remember, and he was apprehensive my Lady had got cold that way; but I forget whether he said it was at a Play, or Concert of Music, or any other Diversion.

Q. Pray, Sir, did you prescribe for her?

A. I did; I told her, I thought a little Blood taken away would be proper, and a gentle Puke necessary; but her Ladyship calling for a Basin,

* This Doctor Jemmat was a Gentleman of a Suffex Family, and in his younger Years, practised as a Physician in England; but some private Affairs calling him over to Ireland, he met with such Encouragement, as induced him to continue there, and was long settled at Dublin, where he was chosen an Honorary Fellow and President of the College of Physicians, and attended Lady Altham in the Winter 1714, when her Ladyship was supposed to be with Child, and prescribed for her; and would have been a material Witness for Mr. Annesley, in the remarkable Trial 1743, had he been known to him, or Mr. MacKercher, who, in some measure, conducted the Cause; but they not knowing of him at that time, were deprived of his Testimony; but the Doctor being afterwards found out, came over in 1752, with several others to England, to be examined in relation to the Anglesea Title and Estate. He for many years had a Complication of Diseases, and was troubled so violently with the Gravel, that he rarely quitted his Bed, or could be moved without exquisite Torture; nevertheless, when he was acquainted with the Consequence his Testimony would be of, he determined, though at that Season of the Year, and so late in Life, to undertake the Journey. But he died at Bristol the second Night after his Landing, in the 78th year of his Age, November 1752, and retained his Senses to the last. [In a Letter from Bristol, dated 21 November 1752, printed in the public Papers at that time.]

I thought she had an Inclination to vomit; but instead of that, she made what the understanding Women call, Long Spits, as if she was with Child. I asked her Ladyship then if she was with Child; she told me she had all the Reason in the World to believe that she was so: I then asked how long, and she said three Months. I asked her Ladyship upon that, if she had been regular; she told me that she had as any Woman living, till about three Months before that Time my Lord came for me. Upon which, I altered the Prescription I had before given; and ordered such mild Medicines, to mitigate the Fever, as might not endanger her Ladyship, or the Infant within her.

Q. Do you remember whether Mrs. Heath lived there with my Lady?

A. My Lords and Gentlemen, whenever I was sent for to any Noble Family, or Gentleman's House, my Business was to attend what I was sent for about, and I never took Notice of any Servant.

Q. Do you know whether Lady Altham was with Child then; or not; have you any other Reasons?

A. Upon her telling me this and examining of her, I had Reason to believe she was; I had breakfasted with them before, but I found her Countenance change, and she had yellow Spots and livid Spots came out upon her; and I felt her Breasts, and found they began to grow turgid; upon which, I found that she was with Child, and that made me alter the Prescriptions, that they might not hurt the one or the other.

Q. Do you know whether she went on in her Pregnancy?

A. I gave her Directions how to manage herself; but her Disorder being what we call a Febris Ephemera, which lasted but three Days, my Wife and I dined with them at a third Place, and after Dinner, my Wife, who saw her Condition, went out with her, and returned again in a few Minutes; and my Lady told my Wife—

Court.] You are not to say what my Lady told your Wife, but only what you know yourself of her being with Child.

Doctor Femmat.] But I say, I gave her Directions how to manage herself, and my Lord told me—

Court.] You are not to say what Lord or Lady or any Body told you. Do you believe her to have been then with Child?—A. I do.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] My Lord, I must insist that we have by Law a Right to ask that Question; in the very Chapter of Perjury in Hawkins you will see it laid down as a Rule, that Hearsay-evidence, that serves to illustrate what is the proper Evidence to be given before the Court, shall be admitted.

Court.] Hearsay-evidence may be made use of to introduce material Evidence, but when a Witness has said all that is material, we shall not admit that.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Spring.] As well as I recollect, you said, Sir, that Lord Altham carried you to see his Lady?

A. He called upon me, and I went into the Chariot with him; he did not carry me in, I assure you.

Q. Well, Sir, if he did not carry you, you went with him?—A. I did.

Q. You said, I think, that you made an Affidavit before Mr. Cooper, to what Purpose did you make that Affidavit?

A. I had given in an Examination; I do not know to what Purpose.

Q. Do you recollect what you have said there with respect to the Manner and Time of attending my Lady Altham?—A. I believe I might.

Q. Did not you say there that it was in November?—A. I say so now.

Q. Did not you say that the Chariot was sent for you?

A. I believe not; if the Master in Chancery put it down that I was sent for he mistook me, for I remember that my Lord came for me himself; and I will tell you why I remember it. I was then in Mourning for Queen Anne, and I had only one Weeper on when he came; and he came into the Parlour and sat by the Fire till the other was put on.

Q. Would you have this understood, that if it was mentioned in the Affidavit that the Chariot was sent for you, it was a Mistake?

Court.] He says the Master was mistaken.

Mr. Spring.] Did not you read it before you swore it?

A. I believe I might.

Mr. Walsh.] Pray, Sir, how long have you been a Physician?

A. I took my Degree of Doctor of Physic in the Year 1711, and I think that is about 33 Years; I have been 27 Years a Fellow of the College of Physicians, and an Honorary Fellow above four Years.

Mr. Spring.] Upon your Oath, Sir, are there any Rules in your Profession, by which a Pregnancy can be discerned from a Tympany, or any the like Disorder?

A. By Virtue of my Oath, that Question would puzzle not only the Colleges of Physicians of England and Ireland, but the Royal Society too.

Jury.] Is there such a Thing as a false Conception?

A. Very often, a Mola there is.

Q. There is such a Thing?—A. No Doubt of it.

Q. Are the Symptoms the same? Have Women grown big with a false Conception?—A. They have done it.

Mr. Walsh.] The next Witness that we shall produce to your Lordship is one Hellena Moncrieffe. We produce this Witness, to shew that in the Year 1714, she was recommended by Sir Chamberlaine Walker, a famous Man-Midwife of this City, to my Lady Altham, whilst she lodged at Mrs. Vice's, for a Nurse; that she was hired and agreed with her Ladyship; had been several Times with her on that Occasion; and will give your Lordship an Account that my Lady was then with Child, and the Reasons of her Knowledge.

3. HELLENA MONCRIEFFE.

Mr. Walsh.] Pray, what Business do you follow?

Hel. Moncrieffe.] My Business is to attend Ladies that lye-in.

Q. How long have you followed that Business?

A. Twenty-seven Years next March.

Q. Tell what Ladies you have attended that Way.

A. The Honourable Mrs. Mary Moore; Mrs. Ludlow, Counsellor Ludlow's Lady, of eight Children; Lady Mountjoy; Lady Antrim; Lord Bessborough's Family entirely.

Q. Well, did you know Sir Chamberlaine Walker?—A. Very well.

Q. What Profession did he follow?—A. Midwifery.

Q. Do you remember to have met him in the Year 1714 any where?

A. I did, Sir.

Q. Where?—A. In Stafford-street.

Q. When did you meet him there?

Q. To the best of my Knowledge, in and about November, or Beginning of December, 1714.

Q. Where did you meet him?

A. In Stafford-street, at a Jew's House, one Solomon.

Q. Had you any Discourse with him there?

Mr. Malone.] My Lord, I object to that as an illegal Question. Mr. Walsh.] I insist upon it to be a legal Question according to the Evidence opened, that she was recommended to my Lady by him; is not it proper to ask what Discourse he had with her on that Occasion?

Mr. Malone.] It is proper to examine her to that Fact, but they have opened it a great deal further.

Mr. Walsh.] Did you see Lady Altham?

A. I had the Honour of seeing Lady Altham.

Q. Where did you see her?

A. I saw her first at Doctor Walker's at that Time, he was Doctor Walker then, and was after knighted in the Duke of Grafton's Time, and he spoke to me, and recommended me to her Ladyship; and said if I had a Mind to nurse, he would recommend me to a very good one. I made very little of it then; I was giving Suck in January to a Child of six Months old.

Q. Did you go to my Lady Altham?

A. I was three different Times with her; the last Time she talked to me a good deal about her being with Child; and what Time she reckoned. Says she, I am at a Loss, as I have had some Illness, how to reckon; and then she lifted up her Night-gown, it was of Sattin, with Green Flowers in it, and shewed me her Belly: Your Ladyship, says I, seems to be as big as any Woman gone seven Months.

Q. And did she say she was?—A. She said, she believed not.

Jury.] What Time was this?—A. In January 1714-15.

Court.] How many Times were you with my Lady?

A. Three different Times I was with her.

Q. Did she lift up only her Night-gown, or all her Cloaths?

A. Only her Night-gown.

Q. What was it you said to her then?

A. I told her that I thought she was as big with Child as any Lady that was six or seven Months gone; and she said herself that she was not so long with Child as seven Months.

Q. What were you recommended for to her?—A. A Nurse.

Q. By whom?—A. By Doctor Walker.

Q. A wet Nurse or dry Nurse?—A. A wet Nurse, Sir.

Q. How came you not to accept of that Nursing?

A. As I went there the last Time I met two or three Friends, and they asked me where I was going; I told them where; says one, Moncrieffe, take my Advice, Lord Altham is a bad Man, you have no Necessity, and do not engage; and for that Reason I went unto her no more, but heard she went out of Town.

Q. What Reason had you to believe she was with Child?

A. By her Appearance and Conversation, and the laying my Hand upon her Belly, I had Reason to believe she was with Child.

Q. From these Circumstances, as you are now a Woman of Skill, can you positively say she was with Child?

A. Upon my Word, I do not know either of the Gentlemen, it was Mr. Arthur Hill brought me into this by telling it by Accident above two Years ago; but upon the Word of a Christian, both by the Judgment that I have had since and before, my Lady Altham was as much with Child as ever I was, and I have had one-and-twenty Children.

Mr. Walsh.] Do you know Mrs. Heath?

A. So far I have recollected, that the last Time I breakfasted with my Lady, there came in a Gentlewoman they called my Lady's Woman, she looked opposite to me, and she was a thin-faced black Woman at that Time; and there came Mrs. Tilby, a Mantua-maker, an eminent Mantua-maker at that Time, and brought a Gown with her, but whether my Lady's or no I cannot tell; but she staid at the Dining-room Door, and asked me what I was doing there.

Q. Tell the Discourse you had with Mrs. Heath.—A. I had none at all.

Q. Did you see her there?

A. I saw her come to tell the Mantua-maker was come to her Ladyship.

Q. Do you remember what Lady Altham called her?

A. I do not remember upon my Word, I know she was a thin black Woman, very swarthy, and had black Hair.

Mr. Daly.] We admit that Mrs. Heath was my Lady's Woman.

Mr. Walsh.] Do you remember on what Occasion Mrs. Tilby came?

A. To alter a Suit of black Silk.

Q. To let them out, or take them in?

A. I cannot tell that; it was the Queen's Mourning.

Q. How do you know it was Mourning for the Queen?

A. The Child I was giving suck to was born the 20th of July, I have it in my Bible, and the Queen died in August following.

Q. How many Times did you go to visit my Lady?

A. Three different Times in Essex-street; the first Time she was indisposed.

Q. Every Time that you came there did you see this Lady?

A. Never to my Knowledge but once; I had no Reason to retain it.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Daly.] You waited of Lady Altham, had you ever seen her before that Time?

A. I had, as I had been Woman to Lady Louth, they were intimate, and I had seen her.

Q. Where did you wait on her first?

A. First I waited on her in Dr. Walker's House, in Capel-street.

Q. Where did you wait on her at the Time you conversed with her and handled her Belly?

A. At Mrs. Vice's, in Essex-street.

Q. What Year was that in?

A. In the Year 1714.

Q. What Time?

A. Between

A. Between the Beginning and 23d of January, because I put out my own Child to Nurse the 22d, and it was my second Child.

Q. Who shewed you into my Lady's Room the first Time?

A. To the best of my Knowledge a Man Servant.

Q. Name him.

A. Indeed I cannot. I go very often to Ladies now, and do not know their Servants.

Q. What Sort of Man was he?

A. He was an elderly Man, I have seen him afterwards.

Q. What Time was it that Lady Altham and Lady Louth were intimate, and you saw her there?

A. It was when they were in Dublin.

Q. Where did Lady Louth lodge?

A. She lodged at one Farrel's upon the Quay.

Q. Did you see Lady Altham there?—A. I did.

Q. At what Time?—A. I cannot recollect my Lady's Visitors.

Q. What Year was it?—A. To the best of my Knowledge, it was 1713.

Q. Pray, how often did you see her there?

A. I believe three or four or five Times, I know they were very intimate.

Q. Was there any Servant of my Lady's present, when you were in the Room and handled her Belly?

A. I cannot tell; there was no Servant, it is not common now, and let alone at that Time: Yes, there was a Woman that went with me, and she was by.

Q. Was she present?—A. She was.

Q. Had she any Trade or Calling?

A. She was a creditable Man's Wife.

Q. Did she understand Midwifery?—A. She did not.

Q. And though it is not common for a Servant to see her Lady's Belly handled, yet a Lady that went with you was present, you say?

A. Yes, she was.

Q. Can you recollect what Time of the Year 1713 it was you saw my Lady Altham at Lady Louth's?—A. I cannot indeed.

Q. Was it in Summer?

A. I believe it might be in Summer; I am not positive as to that.

Q. What was the Woman's Name that was present with you when you handled my Lady's Belly?—A. Her Name was Claffon.

Q. But you do not know the Servant that shewed you up Stairs?

A. Indeed I do not.

Q. And none were present?—A. None that I saw.

Q. Do you know any Person in the House that has seen you there?

A. Mrs. Vice's Servant saw me there.

Q. What was her Name?—A. Her Name was Peggy.

Q. Did Mrs. Vice see you there?

A. She did; I sat half an Hour in her Room.

Q. Had she any Children?—A. I think a Girl or two.

Q. You saw her Daughter?

A. I believe so; they were little, and her Children.

Q. Upon your Oath, did you see Lady Altham before Michaelmas 1713?

A. I cannot tell, because it was no way material to me to recollect that.

Q. When did you leave Lady Louth?—A. In the Year 1713.

Q. About what Time?

A. I believe it might be February, for I lay-in of my first Child in February.

Q. Did you make any Affidavit concerning this Affair?—A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Before whom?

A. I was brought by a Gentleman to Essex-Street to a Commission, I think it was, for I know nothing about it: I think about two Years last Summer Mr. Arthur Hill began a Discourse about this Mr. Annesley. He asked me if ever I saw my Lady Altham; I told him I did, and saw her with Child, and he told it to somebody that sent for me.

Q. What Age were you in 1713?

A. I was born the 12th of March 1688.

Q. Was not it in Summer before that that you left my Lady Louth?

A. No, Sir, it was in February.

Q. Did not you say it was in Summer?

A. I say, that it was in Summer that my Lady Altham visited Lady Louth.

Court.] You have attended a great many Women, pray, can you tell the Difference between a false Conception and a real one?

A. Yes, Sir, by the Conversation of the Woman.

Q. But can you any otherwise?

A. No, really, but by Discourse.

Q. Did you feel the Child stir?

A. No, really, my Lord, I did not; but I remember my Lady, when I said, she seemed to be seven Months with Child, said, No, she was not.

Q. What Child was you nursing at that Time?

A. My second Child I nursed then.

Jury.] You say, Madam, that when you waited upon Lady Altham, she told you she was gone about seven Months?—A. I told her so.

Q. How came you to tell her so?

A. Because she asked me the Question; she told me she had some Illness, and could not tell how to reckon, but said she found herself very big and uneasy; I said she seemed about six or seven Months gone with Child.

Q. But why should she ask you, if she could not tell herself?

A. There are a great many Questions asked by Ladies, when they are with Child.

Q. You were unexperienced then. Was your Hand upon her naked Belly?—A. No, above her under-Petticoat.

Q. I think you said you felt nothing stir?—A. I never said I did.

Q. What was the Occasion of putting your Hand upon her Cloaths?

A. To judge by her Bulk; it is a mighty common Thing.

Q. You were at Mrs. Vice's?—A. I was.

Q. You say you sat there above an Hour?—A. I said half an Hour.

Q. Did you see any of her Children?—A. I think I saw Children.

Q. What were they?—A. It was a Girl.

Q. How old might it be?

A. Why indeed very little, about five or six Years old; I do not know whether they were hers or the Neighbours Children, but they came into her Room.

Mr. Daly.] How long have you been a Nurse?

VOL. IX.

A. Seven-and-twenty Years very near, not all out till March next.

Court.] Do you know whether you would know my Lady's Woman now? Witness looks at Mrs. Heath, and says, I cannot say that I have any Knowledge of the Gentlewoman's Face at all; the Woman then was a thin, swarthy Woman with black Hair.

4. Mrs. MARGARET BUSHE.

Mr. Harward.] We call this Witness, my Lord, to the same Purpose; she was an intimate Acquaintance of my Lady Altham, and will prove that she was with Child, and afterwards was delivered of a Child.

Q. Pray, Madam, did you know my Lady Altham?

Mrs. Margaret Bushe.] I did; I was acquainted with her.

Q. Pray, Madam, did you ever see her at New-Ross?—A. I did.

Q. When you saw her at New-Ross, in what Condition was she?

A. She seemed to be with Child, pretty big.

Q. Was this, Madam, at New-Ross?—A. At New-Ross.

Q. Pray, Madam, did you see her but once there, or more frequently?

A. I saw Lady Altham three Times at New-Ross, to the best of my Memory.

Q. Pray, Madam, in what Year, or about what Time was it that you saw her there?

A. To the best of my Recollection and Memory, it was February, in the Year 1714-15.

Q. Have you any particular Reasons that induce you to recollect that it was about that Time?

A. Yes; I was at that Side of the Country 'till a little before Christmas that Year. It was about half a Year after the Death of Queen Anne, they were all in Mourning when I visited her, except one or two that went out, and I do not know whether they were in Mourning or no; and I do believe it was for Queen Anne.

Q. Pray, Madam, did this Lady stay for any Time at Ross, or go any where else?

A. The Day I visited her I saw her twice then, first at Captain Butler's; there Mrs. Butler introduced me to Lady Altham.

Q. Where did Captain Butler live?—A. He lived in Ross.

Q. Where did you see my Lady next?

A. A Day or two after I visited my Lady at her own Lodgings in Ross.

Q. Pray, Madam, did she continue for any Time there, or did she leave it soon after?

A. The Day I visited her, she talked of going out of Town next Morning.

Court.] Did she go?

A. I do not know, I left the Town in a few Days myself, and did not see her in Ross after.

Mr. Harward.] How soon did you return to New-Ross?

A. I was frequently there to and fro, for I lived at my Father's within three Miles of it, and I cannot tell how soon; but I am sure towards the latter end of the Month of April, and to the best of my Memory, either the Saturday in Easter Week, or early the next Week it was, that I went there.

Q. Pray, Madam, recollect whether this Lady was a Lady far gone with Child, or was early in her Pregnancy.

A. She looked big, and that is all the Memory I know of it, and I asked her no Questions.

Q. Did not you inquire about her being with Child?

A. Several Gentlemen were by, and I did not think it proper.

Q. Do you know of her being delivered of that big Belly?

A. I was at my Father's, and some of his Servants went to Town—

Court.] You must only speak from your own Knowledge, Madam, not what you heard from any body.

Mrs. Bushe.] I wished my Lord Joy of that Child on the Quay of Ross.

Mr. Recorder.] That is nothing.

Mrs. Bushe.] I know nothing more of myself, but they both told me so.

Court.] Madam, you come here to declare the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth; and if you swear to what you heard from other People, you may swear false, for they might deceive you.

Mrs. Bushe.] I may be deceived, but I will swear the Truth, and nothing but what I know.

Mr. Harward.] I shall put to her a legal Question. Pray, Madam, you say you saw her big-bellied, did you ever see her afterwards when she wanted that big Belly?—A. I did.

Court.] How soon after?

A. To the best of my Recollection, I will not be positive, I saw her here in Dublin towards the latter end of the Month of June that Year.

Q. What Year?—A. In June 1715.

Q. In June 1715?

A. To the best of my Recollection, about the latter end of June, in the Year 1715.

Mr. Harward.] How did she appear then, was she with Child or not?

A. She was very slender, and looked pale when I saw her.

Q. Give an Account of what happened when you saw her in Dublin?

A. I went to visit her; I was just upon leaving Town, and thought proper to visit her before I went; I found her undressed, and she told me she had been busy packing up into the Country, and was going to Dunmaine. It is to no Purpose, I find, to tell you what she told me.

Mr. Harward.] The Nature of all Evidence must be to discover the Truth, and there is no Way of coming at the Truth but by the essential and circumstantial Parts of every Fact; she now says she visited my Lady Altham in Dublin.

Court.] That is material.

Mr. Harward.] I ask her then, my Lord, whether Lady Altham gave any Account of what became of that big Belly of her's? I have a Right, I think, to know that; or otherwise our Ears are to be shut against the Truth.

Court.] If you were upon a Trial of who was Heir to the Estate, your Question would be proper; but in a Case of Perjury, your Question is not proper, for what Lady Altham says is no Evidence for or against the Traverser.

Mr. Harward.] I would always be in your Lordship's Judgment about the Legality of any Question, but I beg Leave to mention what I understand I have a Right to insist on; I humbly apprehend I have a Right to introduce the material Part of Evidence by every Thing that precedes it and is relative to it.

Court.] You have the material Part of your Evidence already; the Witness says she saw Lady Altham big-bellied at Ros, and soon after in Dublin without a big Belly; that is all she knows, or has to say that is material; if Lady Altham told a thousand People she had a Child, that's no Evidence against Mrs. Heath.

Mr. Harward.] What do you apprehend became of that big Belly?

Mr. Daly.] My Lord, I must insist upon it, that the Witness's Apprehensions are no Evidence.

Mr. Howard.] I am pretty confident I cannot be mistaken in this Point, I have a Right to have the Apprehensions of every body, on Oath.

Court.] I beg your Pardon, Mr. Harward, shew your Authority.

Mr. Harward.] I will, my Lord: I beg leave to lay it down as an established Rule, since I am called upon, and I hope they will indulge me to give Account of myself. My Lord, I lay down this as a Rule of Evidence, that in all Crimes whatever, the Apprehensions of a Witness are admitted as Evidence; suppose if a Man was indicted for Murder, and a Witness against him gave account of Facts that he had seen concerning that Murder, it is every Day's Experience to ask that Witness what he apprehended upon those Facts. This is the Law, and I must humbly submit it to be so, that when a Witness gives account of particular Facts, he is asked what he apprehended upon those Facts; but he cannot tell what he apprehended, unless he lays Facts before you, which are the Ground of that Apprehension.

Mr. Recorder.] It is the first time that ever I heard that a Man is said in a Court of Law to be examined to his Apprehension of Facts by the Prosecutors of a criminal Cause; the Plaintiff can never ask Belief or Apprehension; I may, but you cannot.

Court.] I see the Doctrine, and whither it tends; I tell you how I apprehend the Law to be, and to be very clear in the Point. The Apprehension of a Witness is asked, where no other Evidence can be had in capital Cases; as where a Witness is produced to prove a Wound given, he is asked whether he apprehends that Wound was the Cause of Death. That must be asked, for he cannot tell otherwise. It is the best Evidence that can be had in that Case. But as to a Fact, if you make the Apprehension of a Witness necessary, it takes away all Proof of Fact.

Mr. Harward.] Then I understand I am not to ask her any thing concerning this big Belly.

Court.] Yes, if she knows any thing of it, you may ask her.

Mr. Harward.] Aye, but not from Lady Altham.

Court.] No, not as to that.

Mr. Harward.] Since I am debarred of asking that Question, I hope I shall have better Luck in the next.

Q. Pray, Madam, what was the common Reputation of the Country concerning Lady Altham's being brought-to-bed?

Mr. Smith.] I object to that Question, my Lord.

Court.] You have much more Reason to object to that, after what I have just now said.

Mr. Harward.] I acquiesce also in that, because that will settle what hereafter will be a very great Debate, when these Gentlemen come to produce their Witnesses.

Court.] The Reputation of the Country is not Evidence here. You lay down your Rules too large, Mr. Harward.

Court.] Pray, Madam, where in Dublin did you visit Lady Altham?

A. At whose House I do not know, for I never was there but once; the Chairmen knew where she lodged, and carried me there; and I did not know the Name of the People where they lodged; it was in Essex-Street I know, a little beyond the Post-Office; between that and Fleet-Street, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Harward.] Do you know, Madam, whether there were any Preparations made for her Lying-in?

A. I know, when I was in Ros, the Midwife that was said to lay Lady Altham, came to the House where she lodged, and sent out some Wines to my Lady.

Court.] Do you know that these Wines went out to Lady Altham?

A. Indeed I did not send out the Wines myself.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Spring.] Pray, Madam, you said you saw my Lady Altham at Ros?

A. I did, Sir.

Q. I think you say it was in the Year 1714 or 1715?

A. In 1714-15, in February I first saw her.

Q. Where did she lodge then?—At Mr. Samuel Stephens's.

Q. How long did she remain in that Town during that Time?

A. I cannot tell, for I do not know whether she or I went away first.

Q. Do you know one Mrs. Butler, that lives on the Quay in this Town?

A. I do.

Q. Had you any Conversation with her?

Mr. Serjeant Marshall.] My Lord, I must object to that Question.

Court.] What the Witness has said to any body is Evidence against her on Cross-examination; but not what others have told her.

Mrs. Bushe.] There was some Conversation.

Q. What did you tell this Mrs. Butler in relation to Lady Altham's having or not having a Child?

A. I tell you what I said on that Head. I told her that upon Inquiry after this Child, some Years after my Lord and Lady parted. I was told it was dead, and never hearing any thing to the contrary that could convince me, I always thought he was dead.

Q. Did you never tell her, upon your Oath, that Lady Altham had had no Child?

A. I never did; but I told her that I was a good while before I could think, after Mr. Annesley's coming over, that he was my Lady Altham's Child.

Court.] Gentlemen, call your next Witness.

Mr. Robins.] My Lord, the next Witness we produce is Alice Betts, to prove Lady Altham was with Child, and the Traverser's whole Account to her of her being with Child.

5. ALICE BETTS.

Court.] Was you examined on the former Trial?

Alice Betts.] Yes, I was.

Mr. Robins.] Did you know Arthur Lord Altham?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. And Lady Altham his Wife?—A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Do you know any thing of my Lady's being with Child?

A. Yes, Sir, I did.

Q. Tell what you know of your own Knowledge.

A. Why, I went to see my Lady at Mrs. Vice's in Essex-Street, and my Lord met me and clapp'd me on my Back, and said, By G—d, Alley, Mail is with Child.

Q. What do you know of your own Knowledge concerning her being with Child?

A. I know, by seeing of her with Child, and that is all I can tell, by seeing of her big, and joked with her, and wished her much Joy, and she did not deny it.

Q. Do you know Mrs. Heath?

A. I knew Mrs. Heath that waited on my Lady, but I cannot tell at this Distance whether it be her; I am near-sighted. [The Witness goes nearer to her, and says] I think it is her, to the best of my Knowledge.

Q. Had you any Discourse with her about my Lady? Tell when and where.

A. I used to joke with her about my Lady's being with Child at Mrs. Vice's.

Q. When?—A. In November, and after.

Q. In what Year?—A. In the Year 1714.

Q. Was it before or after Queen Anne died?—A. After the Queen died.

Q. What did she say?

A. We used to be talking and joking that Way, we were glad my Lady was with Child; but I never used to ask Mrs. Heath seriously about it. It is no more than Jest.

Q. Do you know any thing more of this Matter?

A. My Lady came one Day to our House.

Q. Whose House was that?—A. Captain Briscoe's.

Q. Was you Servant there?

A. I waited on Mrs. Briscoe. And my Lord and Lady had a little Falling-out, and she came in a little Pet to our House, and went into Mrs. Briscoe's Room and cried; she cried most terribly; and a little after Mrs. Heath came in with a blue Box in her Hand with my Lady's Head-cloaths, for my Lady came undressed in a long scarlet Cloak; and I helped Mrs. Heath to dress and undress her, and she had a long Silk Coat upon her.

Q. What were the Words Mrs. Heath said about my Lady's being with Child?

A. I cannot remember the particular Words, any more than that we were jesting in a little way.

Q. How?

A. Why, we were pleased to see that my Lady was with Child; Mrs. Heath knows it herself; Mrs. Heath knew me mighty well, we were intimately acquainted, and always in my Lady's Room together, dressing and undressing her together, and I attended my Lady with her very often.

Q. Did Mrs. Heath ever tell you that my Lady was not with Child?

A. No, she did not, for I never asked her such a Question.

Q. What did she, from her Discourse to you, appear to think of my Lady?

The Question objected to.

Court.] Had you any other Discourse with her, about my Lady's being with Child?

A. No, indeed.

Mr. Robins.] Can you remember the Words Mrs. Heath spoke to you?

A. I cannot remember the Words; but we used to joke with my Lady; little common way of talking that way with my Lady; and Mrs. Heath and I went once to the Change to buy Muslin together, and there we were talking of my Lady; and Mrs. Heath knows very well of an Affair that happened to her and me there.

Q. What do you know of Mrs. Heath's Knowledge about my Lady's being with Child?

A. I have no more to say than that.

Q. What is that?

A. That she did know that my Lady was with Child.

Q. How do you know she knew it?

A. Because we joked about it, and we were praising my Lady, as it is the way of Waiting-maids to please their Ladies oftentimes: indeed it is.

Court.] My Lady, you say, was in Bride-street, at Mr. Briscoe's, when you dressed her?

A. It was there my Lady was dressed.

Q. You say that she was dressed there; did she lodge there then?

A. No, at Mrs. Vice's, she came there in a Pet, because she had a Falling-out with my Lord; she called Mr. Briscoe Father, and came to him with all her Grievances.

Q. How did she come there?

A. In a long Velvet Hood and scarlet Cloak, Mrs. Heath came with the Box, a little blue Band-box.

Q. And was it there that this Jestling with her was?

A. There and at Mrs. Vice's too.

Mr. Robins.] Did you make any Observations about my Lady's Size?

A. She was a middling Woman, full-breasted here, and swarthy.

Q. How did her Belly appear?

A. As a Woman with Child, and it was very easily seen.

Q. That was in November you saw her?

A. It was, when my Lord told me she was with Child; I saw it then, and I saw her all the time she was in Dublin.

Court.] Was she a broad Woman?

A. She was a full-made Woman, very full-breasted and high-hipp'd.

Mr. Robins.] Did her Belly alter?

A. I never observed any way, but that she was growing big.

Court.] How soon did you see her again after she went from Dublin?

A. Never again.

Q. How long did she stay in Town from the first time you saw her?

A. I believe just before Christmas, or after, she went out of Town.

Q. Can you tell how long after you first saw her, it was that she staid in Town?—A. I cannot indeed.

Q. Can you name the particular Times you saw her?—A. I cannot.

Mr. Robins.] Did you ever see my Lady undress'd?

A. Twenty times, dressed and undressed.

Q. Who used to dress and undress her?

A. Mrs. Heath, and I with her, when she lodged at Captain Briscoe's first.

Q. How did my Lady's Belly increase?

A. That is a thing impossible for me to tell.

Q. Did

Q. Did you observe a Difference?

A. Yes, I did, that she rather grew bigger than otherwise.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Recorder.] When did my Lady come to Captain Briscoe's first?

A. In the Year 1713, I believe in October.

Q. When did she go away from Briscoe's?

A. I think she went to the Country with my Lord just before or just after Christmas, I cannot tell exactly, in the Year 1713.

Q. Now I ask you, did she go from Briscoe's to the Country?

A. No, she did not; they went from Captain Briscoe's to Mrs. Vice's, for our House was too little, and my Lord had a vast Number of People after him.

Q. How long did they stay at Captain Briscoe's after their Reconciliation?

A. I do not know whether they staid four or five Days, I cannot tell that itself.

Q. Did they stay two or three Days?—A. Two or three to be sure they did.

Q. And they went from your House to Vice's?

A. They went to Mrs. Vice's.

Q. When did my Lady return again to Dublin?

A. She came up the latter end of the Summer.

Q. What do you call the latter end of the Summer?

A. My Lady was in Dublin at August 1714, when the Queen died.

Q. Did you ever dress my Lady but at Captain Briscoe's?

A. I never did at Mrs. Vice's.

Q. But at Briscoe's you did?

A. I dressed her after she left Captain Briscoe's.

Q. When?—A. That Day that she came to our House that my Lord and she had a Pique.

Q. Never but that time?—A. That was the time.

Q. And you did not undress her at Vice's?

A. I was then but a Stranger; when I went to Mrs. Vice's it was only to visit her.

Q. Did you ever dress or undress her at Mrs. Vice's?—A. I never did.

Court.] I thought you said you dressed her twenty times at Captain Briscoe's?—A. Yes, and so I did.

Q. When was that?—A. That was some time before Christmas, in short dirty Days; for before we had done Dinner it would be Night.

Mr. Recorder.] So that the time you dressed and undressed her was about Christmas?—A. I cannot justly tell the Month; it was in the short dirty Days.

Q. But was it in December?

A. I cannot tell the Month. Is not it a long time to remember 30 Years?

Q. Was it after the Quarrel that my Lady came to Mr. Briscoe's House?

A. It was.

Q. When did that happen?

A. Before or after Christmas, I cannot tell the time.

Q. Do you know the Reason of that Quarrel?

A. My Lord gave her a Slap on the Face; Mrs. Heath knows.

Q. Was you by?—A. No; but my Lady said so.

Q. How long then did my Lady stay in Town?

A. She went out of Town in the Year 1713, before Christmas.

Q. When did she leave Town the second time?

A. Either just before or after Christmas she went from Mrs. Vice's to Dunmaine, and I never heard of her since till now lately.

Q. Did you ever speak to Mrs. Heath about this big Belly?

A. Nothing but what I told you, I never asked her seriously.

Q. Did you ever put the Question to her, whether my Lady was with Child or not?—A. No, I did not ask her seriously about it.

Q. Had you no other Discourse about it?

A. We had none but what I told you, and that was joking; telling and pleasing my Lady that she was with Child; and Mrs. Heath and I laughing, and pleased it was so.

Court.] Did you ever see my Lady after she went into the Country the second time?—A. Never after; and that was the Year 1714.

Mr. Recorder.] You say my Lady came to Town in August?

A. She was in Town in August.

Q. Did you see her in August?—A. I cannot be positive to the Month.

Q. When you saw her in November was her Belly big?—A. Not very big.

Court.] Had you had a Child at that time?

A. No, but I was with Child, for I was married the 24th of August, and quicken'd at that very time, and that makes me remember November.

Mr. Recorder.] Was my Lady's being with Child so visible in November, that any body might know she was with Child?

A. Indeed I believe so; I saw it, I know.

Q. Did Miss Henrietta Briscoe visit my Lady at this time, in November?

A. I believe so, I know she came home before then, and the Small-pox was at our House, and she left the House.

Q. What sort of Girl was Mrs. Cole then?

A. A pretty young Lady of a good Size.

Q. What Size?—A. Not so big or tall as she is now.

Q. Did she grow much afterwards?—A. To be sure she did.

Q. I ask you again, did not she grow much after?—A. She did.

Court.] Was you a Servant in the same House with her?—A. I was.

Mr. Recorder.] What Age might she be then?

A. I cannot justly tell you, she was not at her full Growth.

Q. About what Age do you think she was?

A. I cannot tell. How can I tell?

Q. Was she thirteen, or fourteen, or twenty?

A. Twenty! no, she was not twenty.

Q. Was she fourteen?—A. Yes, to be sure she was.

Q. Did Mrs. Cole visit my Lady at that time?

A. They all visited her, and my Lady came constantly to our House; but she was at her Aunt Monck's at the Green, because of the Small-pox.

Q. Did she stay there all the time my Lady was in Town?

A. She used to come now and then.

Q. Was my Lord Altham in Town in August 1714?

A. Yes, he was along with my Lady.

Q. And was he here in November?

A. Yes, he was in November; it was in November I saw him.

Q. Was it in November he told you that my Lady was with Child?

A. It was in November, after the Queen's Death, that he told me my Lady was with Child.

Q. I ask you, upon your Oath again, was my Lord in Town in August?

A. Yes, he was. He was in Town all the while that my Lady was in Town.

Court.] They came to Town together?

A. Yes, they did, as well as I can remember.

Q. Now, you say my Lord came to Town in August; did not you swear upon the former Trial, that my Lord never was in Town from the time he went into the Country after the Reconciliation, 'till November 1714?

A. I assure you the Trial is not right, it is wrongly, falsely printed.

Jury.] Did you ever find the Lady out of Order, as Women commonly are, when they are with Child, when you were dressing and undressing her at Captain Briscoe's?—A. I never did.

Q. You say you thought she was with Child?—A. I did.

Q. Did you see her out of Order?—A. Yes, Sir, I saw her big Belly.

Q. Did you put on her Shift?

A. I helped to put it on, and her Stays too.

Court.] Call your next Witness.

6. MARY SUTTON.

Mr. Mac Manus.] The next Witness produced to your Lordship, is to the same Point, to prove my Lady Altham's being with Child.

Mr. Mac Manus.] Did you know the late Lord Altham?

Mary Sutton.] I did indeed.

Q. And the Lady Altham?—A. I did, upon my Word.

Q. Where do you live now?—A. In the County of Kilkenny.

Q. Where there?—A. In a Place called the R. wree.

Q. Pray, Madam, were you ever at Dunmaine?—A. I was indeed once.

Q. Where did you live then?—A. In a Place called ———

Q. When did you first know Lady Altham?

A. I knew her when first she came to Dunmaine.

Q. What Year was that in?—A. I cannot exactly tell the Year, but I knew her with Child, and saw her with Child.

Q. What were you at that time?

A. I was a Farmer's Wife, living in the Neighbourhood.

Q. How came you to go to Dunmaine?

A. My Lord frequented my House, and often invited me there.

Q. How far distant was your House from Dunmaine?

A. About two Miles.

Q. Did you ever dine there?—A. I dined there that Day.

Q. What Day?—A. That one Day that I visited my Lady.

Q. Did any thing particular happen that Day?

A. When I went in first, there was none but my Lord and Lady in the Room; I was glad of it, as I was but a Farmer's Wife, that there was no more Company; and after Dinner the Glasses were laid round, and a Bottle of Wine brought upon the Table. They called for my Lady's Toast first; and she toasted Church and King. They then called for mine, and I toasted the Boy in the Basket, meaning my Lady Altham's being with Child.

Q. Pray, can you recollect what Year this was in?

A. I cannot well tell, but as well as I can remember, it was after the Queen died, for I was in Mourning for the Queen.

Q. Do you know of any Inquiry made by my Lady about hiring a Nurse?

A. After Dinner, as we were drinking the Wine, I sat by my Lady; and she said, Mrs. Sutton, as you are acquainted with the Country, can you recommend me to a good Nurse. I told her——

Mr. Daly.] What she told my Lady Altham is no Evidence.

Mr. Mac Manus.] My Lord, this is very full Evidence; she is telling of a Conversation that passed between my Lady and herself concerning my Lady's being with Child, and her Inquiry after a Nurse.

Court.] Did you see Lady Altham at that time?—A. I did.

Q. What did you observe about her?

A. I observed her to be big with Child.

Q. When was this?—A. It was the Monday or Tuesday before Shrovetide.

Q. In what Year?—A. I cannot exactly tell the Year, but it was one of them two Days.

Mr. Mac Manus.] My Lord, I apprehend this Question to be a proper and material one.

Court.] The Question is, whether I will examine the Witness to what my Lady said, whether she was with Child or not?

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] My Lord, any Circumstance of my Lady's making Baby-cloaths, or Inquiry about a Nurse, is Evidence to prove that she was with Child.

Court.] Not at all, in this Case.

Mr. Mac Manus.] I apprehend that presumptive and circumstantial Evidence is the strongest Evidence that can be given in this Case.

Court.] You say that you have positive Witnesses to this Point; if you have, we shall readily hear them. Have you any other that are positive Testimony to Lady Altham's having a Child, or that she miscarried? The first Assignment of Perjury is, whether Lady Altham ever was with Child while the Traverser lived with her? The Question then is, whether my Lady's saying she was with Child is Evidence upon that Point? If you will argue the Question, I will hear you.

Court.] Might not the Woman appear to you to be with Child, and might not be so?—A. To all Appearance she appeared to me to be so.

Q. And might not she be not with Child?

A. I cannot tell, Sir, she appeared to me to be big with Child.

Q. Was it certain that she was?

A. There was so much Certainty of it, if one can believe their Eyes.

Q. Do you know that she hired a Nurse?

A. Indeed I do not know it; I cannot say that.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] My Lord, we apprehend we have a Right to have this Question answered. The Question proposed is, Whether she knows any Inquiry to be made by Lady Altham to hire a Nurse?

Mr. Daly.] Indeed if you had asked whether Mrs. Heath made such an Inquiry, there would be something legal in it, but Inquiries of a third Person are most illegal Evidence.

Court.]

Court.] We are not trying the Filiation of this Family, who is Heir to the Estate of it, but whether Mrs. Heath is guilty of Perjury. There is much more Reason to keep to the strict Rules of Evidence in this Court than ever was; the Time of Trial is short, and we cannot adjourn. Have you any real, positive Evidence?

Mr. MacManus.] We have produced positive Evidence that my Lady appeared to be with Child.

Q. Pray, Madam, in what Degree did she appear to be with Child?

A. Very big with Child.

Mr. MacManus.] Why then the next natural Question is, whether there was an Inquiry about a Nurse?

Mr. Daly.] My Lord, is this a legal Question in this Case? I have not an Opportunity to cross-examine what a third Person says, and shall that be Evidence to deprive me of my Estate? Ask if Mrs. Heath made any Inquiry about a Nurse.

Mr. Serj. Tisdall.] The Question proposed is, whether she knows of any Inquiry made by Lady Altham for hiring of a Nurse, of her own Knowledge?

Jury.] Do you, of your own Knowledge, know any thing of the hiring a Nurse?

A. No, Gentlemen, I do not.

Mr. MacManus.] Did my Lord and Lady ever visit you?

A. They did, upon my Word, and had the Child with them.

Q. What Child?—A. A Boy, Master James we called him.

Q. Pray, whose Child was it?

A. It was their Child in all Appearance, for my Lady was very fond of the Child as any Mother could be.

Q. Give an Account of what passed about that Child, as to any particular Instances of Fondness.

Mr. Daly.] You cannot ask that Question; it is Res inter alios acta, and foreign to this Woman's Prosecution.

Mr. MacManus.] Pray, how old was he?

A. I believe a Year and half, and if a Month more I cannot exactly tell.

Q. When was this Visit made you?

A. I cannot exactly tell, it was a very fine Day.

Q. What Time of the Year was it?

A. In Harvest, the latter-end of Harvest.

Q. How long was it between the Time you saw my Lady with Child, and the Time you saw him at your House?—A. It was more than a Year.

Q. How old was the Child when you saw it?

A. It was a Year and half old when I saw it.

Court.] How did my Lord and Lady treat that Child?

A. As a Father and Mother would treat their Child; and my Lady was as fond of him as a Mother could be of a Child, kissing and embracing him, and calling him Dear.

Q. In what Year was that?—A. Nay, faith, it is hard to tell.

Q. You must tell.---A. I believe the Child was born in the Year 1715, I think he was, as well as I can remember.

Q. What Reason have you for thinking so?

A. By the latter end of April after I was to visit her, I heard next Day that she was brought-to-bed of a Son.

Q. Was you by at his Birth?

A. I was not. I heard there was great Joy and Bonfires.

Q. Did you see the Bonfires?—A. No, I was not there.

Mr. MacManus.] How came they to bring so young a Child to your House?

A. When my Lady came, she said, Mrs. Sutton, since you would not bring your Daughter to see my Son, I brought my Son to see your Daughter.

Mr. Recorder.] I insist that the Declaration of my Lady is no Evidence at all.

Court.] Gentlemen, we are of Opinion that the Declaration of Lady Altham is not Evidence against Mrs. Heath, and therefore do not let us waste our Time so to no Purpose.

Mr. Solicitor.] We are mistaken if we would put the Declaration of Lady Altham as Evidence, but we have a Right to know the Witness's Apprehension of her Declaration.

Mr. MacManus.] This Witness has spoke very materially, that my Lady had a big Belly, and was with Child; I hope the Jury will take notice of it, that being one of the Assignments of the Perjury.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. R. Malone.] I think you have said that Lord Altham frequently invited you to Dunmaine?—A. He did.

Q. And you were never there but once?—A. Never but once.

Q. You said that Nobody was there in the Room but them two?

A. Yes.

Q. And that you were glad of it?—A. Yes.

Q. And that a Bottle of Wine and Glasses were brought, and my Lady toasted Church and King?—A. I did.

Q. You gave a Toast after of the Boy in the Basket?—A. I did.

Q. Now I ask you, before your giving that Toast, was there any Conversation about her being with Child, or any thing said about it?

A. Not at all.

Q. Was you told in the Parlour that she was with Child?

A. Not at all; there was no Discourse of it but after.

Q. What Condition of Life was you in?

A. My Husband was a Farmer indeed.

Q. Who did he derive his Interest under?—A. Madam Pigot.

Q. How much Land did he hold?

A. He paid 10*l.* a Year to Madam Pigot at that Time.

Q. How much Land had you?

A. It was an old Lease, we held above 200 Acres.

Q. What was the Land worth an Acre?

A. Why, really, at that time it might be worth four Shillings an Acre.

Q. You say that they frequently visited you?

A. My Lord did, but my Lady never was there but once.

Q. When they visited you, what Time of the Year was it?

A. As well as I can remember, the latter end of Harvest.

Q. Do you know the Year?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Was it the Harvest after you visited them?—A. No, not at all.

Q. Was it more than one?—A. It was more than one.

Q. Or two, three, or four after?

A. O dear! it was not so much; the Child was about a Year and half old, or within a Month or two, I cannot exactly tell.

Q. Can you say in what Reign it was?

A. Really, I believe it was after Queen Anne died.

Q. In what manner did they go to your House?

A. My Lady rode in the Chariot, and had a Maid that carried the Child, and my Lord rode with Servants.

Q. What was the Servant's Name in the Chariot?

A. She was a good tight, clean, well-dressed Girl, and that is all I know.

Q. In what manner was the Child dressed?

A. He had a red Coat, and Cambrick Frock, and fine quarter'd Cap, and I think, a red Ribband in it.

Q. Was it a Coat and Breeches?

A. Not a Coat and Breeches; a Frock.

Q. Where do you live now?—A. I live now in the County of Kilkenny.

Q. Where there?—A. In the Parish of Rowree, at Ballyvally.

Q. Is your Husband living?—A. My Husband is not living.

Q. Do you live by yourself there?

A. I live with my Daughter, and we live under my Lord Mountgarra.

Q. What Harvest is this you speak of when my Lord and Lady went to your House?—A. It is so long ago, it is hard to know, I must study a while to think of it.

Q. How can you recollect to the being at Dunmaine to a Day, and not now recollect the Year they went to see you?

A. As it did not meddle with me, I did not mind it.

Jury.] Do you know any thing of Mrs. Heath?—A. I never had any Acquaintance with her, I heard my Lady had such a Woman.

Court.] Who do you call next?

Mr. Callaghan.] My Lord, we will now produce one Evan Thomas; he is a Basket-maker; he saw my Lady with Child, saw her increase in her Pregnancy, and made the Cradle after she was brought-to-bed, and was paid for it.

7. EVAN THOMAS.

Mr. Callaghan.] Pray, did you know the late Lord Altham?

Evan Thomas.] Yes, and please you.

Q. Did you know my Lady?—A. I knew her very well.

Q. Where did you live in the Year 1713?

A. In that Year I lived in Ross.

Q. Where did you live in 1714?

A. I worked in Ross the most of the Year 1714.

Q. Did you see my Lady in those two Years?

A. I have seen her at our Church some several times; in the Year 1714 I have seen her there, to the best of my Knowledge.

Q. How often did you see her there?

A. I seen her two or three times, to the best of my Knowledge; but she might be there oftener, for any Thing I know.

Q. Did she appear to be a slender Woman, or with Child?

A. She appeared to me as if with Child, to the best of my Knowledge.

Q. Did she appear to be big with Child?

A. Not so very big because of their Hoops; I saw her handed into the Coach, or the Chariot, or one of them.

Q. What Trade do you follow?—A. I am one that makes all Sorts of Basket-work that are made in the Kingdom.

Mr. Daly.] What, all Sorts of Basket-work?

A. I do not say the best of all Sorts.

Mr. Callaghan.] Did you ever do any Work for Lady Altham?—A. I did.

Q. Tell what it was.---A. She sent a Servant to me.

Court.] How do you know she sent him?—A. He told me.

Q. Did you carry any Work to her House?—A. I did not.

Q. What was it you made?

A. I made in the Year 1715, to the best of my Knowledge, a Cradle.

Q. Did you carry it to Lord Altham's House?

A. No, please your Lordship, I did not.

Q. Who did you deliver it to?—A. I delivered it to a Man.

Q. Name him.

A. They told me he was one Rowley, a House Steward.

Q. Did you know him?

A. I was nothing acquainted with the Man, but he told me.

Q. Do you make the same kind of Cradles for poor People as for People of Fashion; what Sort of Cradle was it?

A. A good Cradle, I delivered it to the Servant, as I suppose, his Name was Rowley, I was told so.

Q. Did you see the Cradle carried to any particular Place?

A. No, he took it from me out of the House, and gave me two Crowns for it.

Jury.] What became of the Cradle?

A. I do not know, but he took it away.

Court.] Where is Rowley?—A. I do not know.

Mr. Callaghan.] For whom did you make that Cradle?

A. Why, the Man came to me.

Q. Do you know who you made it for?

A. He bespoke it for my Lady Altham.

Mr. Harward.] It is strange to my Imagination, my Lord, that it should be suspected, that a Man employed 30 Years ago, to make a Cradle, could be guilty of any Contrivance.

Court.] But this Contrivance may be within these four Months, these six Months, or these twelve Months, and if Hearsay-evidence will convict a Person of any Crime, it may of Treason, and who is or can be safe?

Mr. Just. Blennerhasset.] If you have Rowley, there would be something.

Mr. Harward.] With Submission, my Lord, the Court cannot know whether we are out of the way or not; whatever Secrets are in this Cause are only revealed to us by the Managers of it, and we advise them in the best manner we can to prosecute it.

Court.] As the Time is far spent, we only beg of you to go on in your own way. Call your next Witness.

8. MARTHA TENANT.

Mr. Harding.] My Lord, I am instructed that this Witness was in Company with Lord and Lady Altham the Winter after the Queen's Death, and saw my Lady with child, and that she was quick with Child at that Time.

Court.] I never heard that there was Safety in a Multitude of Witnesses; I have heard it, read it, and you know it, that in a Multitude of Counsellors there was Safety, but never in a Multiplicity of Witnesses.

Mr. Solicitor.] For my Part, my Lord, I think we have established very fully the first Part of this Indictment, not to take up any more Time; but Curiosity makes People glad to see the Bottom of it.

Mr. Harding.] Pray, did you know Arthur late Lord Altham?

Martha Tenant.] I did not know him, I saw him once, and to my Knowledge never since, nor before.

Q. Did you know his Wife?—A. I saw her at the same Time at Dinner.

Q. Where did you see them, and when?—A. I saw them at one Arthur French's in Fleet Street, they lodged in Fleet-street.

Q. When was it you saw them there?

A. I will tell you how I came to visit there—

Q. What Year was it you saw them there?

A. Well! I cannot justly tell the Year, but it was about the Time that they were Whig and Tory, and that way.

Q. Pray, recollect yourself.---A. I believe it was about—I cannot exactly tell; I believe the Year Queen Anne died, there or thereabouts.

Q. Was it before or after the Queen's Death?

A. And that I cannot tell you neither; but I'll tell you the Time of the Year, it was about Christmas, but I cannot tell whether 1714, or 1715.

Q. Did you observe whether my Lady was or was not with Child?

A. I will tell you what brought me there, the whole Truth is this: Mr. French, every one knew, married my Lady Davis's Daughter, and she was a Relation of mine; and upon the Marriage I entrusted him Money, and went to dunn him, and when I came there I saw a great Dinner and Preparations making, and asked the Reason of it. Says I, what is the Meaning of all these Doings, and you have not got your Wife's Fortune into your Hands yet? It is very ill done of you—

Q. Tell what you know of Lady Altham there. Tell what you know yourself.

A. I will tell you all I know myself. I staid there, and when Dinner was over I saw in the Drawing-room my Lady Altham, as they said she was.

Q. Did you know her?—A. Not I indeed.

Q. Can you say it was her?—A. They said it was.

Q. But you must only say what you know?

A. Well, I cannot tell you any more then.

Q. Did any remarkable Incident happen while you were at Dinner there?

Court.] Did she take the Title of Lady Altham?

A. She did, and my Lord was there.

Q. Did you ever see them before?—A. I never saw them before or after, nor knew none of those Lords or Ladies.

Mr. Harding.] What sort of a Woman was she?

A. A lusty Woman, but my Lord had two Eyes at that Time, and they say he had but one after.

Q. What did you observe of my Lady that Day?

A. She came out after Dinner and was sick; she came into the Drawing-room, and they unlaced her.

Q. Who?—A. My Lady Altham, she was called so.

Mr. Harding.] Inform the Court and the Jury, whether any remarkable Incident happened while you were at Dinner there?

A. She was taken sick after Dinner, and came out into the Drawing-room, and we unlaced her, and my Lord said, Mrs. French, it will be your Turn soon to be in the same Condition; and that is all I had to say.

Q. What was the Occasion of his saying so?

A. The Occasion was, that Mrs. French was a new-married Woman.

Mr. Recorder.] She says she did not know either Lord or Lady.

Martha Tenant.] Nor the young Man, nor the old Man.

Mr. Harding.] Inform the Court, whether any Body fainted away, and whether any Account was given of that.

A. My Lady was sick, and unlaced, and my Lord said, Mrs. French, it will be your Turn next; and that is all I know.

9. ANASTACE TOOLE.

Mr. Morton.] We produce this Witness, my Lord, who is a Mantua-maker by Trade, to prove that she made a Silk Gown for Lady Altham, and fitted it on in the Presence of the Traverser, and that my Lady was then with Child.

Mr. Morton.] Did you know my Lady Altham?

Anastace Toole.] I did, Sir.

Q. What Business did you follow?—A. Mantua-making.

Q. Were you at any Time, and when employed by her to do any Work for her?

A. I lived with Mrs. Wright the Year that Queen Anne died, for my Husband went to live in the County of Carlow; I went to her the latter-end of the Year 1714, Queen Anne died in August, and the Candlemas following—

Q. What Year?—A. The Candlemas after Queen Anne died. And my Mistress sent me with the Coat.

Q. To what Place?—A. To Dunmaine.

Q. What did you observe, when you went there?

A. That her Ladyship was big-bellied.

Q. Did you ever fit any Gown upon her?—A. I did.

Q. Who was present when you fitted the Gown?

A. Her own Maid, Mrs. Heath.

Q. Would you know her, if you saw her?—A. Yes, that is she, I believe.

Q. Now, pray, what Condition did my Lady appear to be in then?

A. Her Ladyship seemed to be in her last Quarter, or pretty nigh it, for she was a tall Woman, and carried her Belly very well.

Court.] You observed that she was big-bellied?—A. I did.

Q. Had you had a Child at that Time?

A. I had had a Child and had buried it.

Q. Was you an Apprentice Girl then?—A. No, my Husband was gone to Mr. Wall's in the County of Carlow, and I worked with Mrs. Wright.

Mr. Morton.] Was you married at that Time?—A. Yes, Sir, I was.

Q. You were not an Apprentice?—A. I was not.

Q. Do you know any more of my Lady's being with Child?

A. No, Sir, I know no more.

Vol. IX.

A. I saw my Lady in Ros with the Child, and made a Coat for the Child.

Q. How long was it after that you saw the Child in Ros?

A. I cannot tell how long.

Q. Who gave you the Stuff to make the Coat for the Child?

A. My Lord himself, he bought it at Mr. Harvey's.

Q. What Stuff was it?

A. One Side was a blue Sattin, and the other a Yellow.

Q. How long after you fitted the Gown on my Lady was it that you saw this Child at Ros?

A. After my Lady came to my Mistress to lodge in Ros.

Q. Was it three Months, or four Months, or six Months?

A. Oh! it was more to be sure.

Q. Can you tell how long?—A. I cannot tell more than what I know.

Q. Was it a Year after you fitted the Gown that you saw the Child at

Ros?—A. It was.

Q. Was it any more?

A. Indeed I cannot justly tell you as to that Part of the Story.

Q. Was Mrs. Heath present when you fitted on the Gown?

A. She was by, and gave me a Piece of white Ribband to tie the Shoulders of it.

Q. Had my Lady left my Lord at this Time when you made the Gown for the Child?—A. She had.

Q. Was it a new Gown you made for my Lady, or did you alter an old one?—A. It was a new one, a new white Damask.

Q. How often did you see the Child, and where?—A. Never but once.

Q. Where was that?—A. At my Mistress, Wright's.

Q. Where is that?—A. At her own House in Ros.

Q. Was that before or after the Coat was made for him?

A. It was after.

Q. Did you never see him before?

A. I never saw him before, but that one time.

Court.] Did you see the Child at the Time my Lord gave you the Silk to make the Coat?—A. No, my Lord, I did not.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Recorder.] How long after you made the Gown was it you saw a Child?—A. I cannot justly tell how long.

Q. Did you not say it was a Year?—A. I believe it was.

Q. Was it more, a Year and half, or two Years?

A. I cannot tell whether a Year and half, or two Years.

Q. Was the Child weaned?—A. He was at that Time.

Q. I ask you, upon your Oath, was it two Years after you made the Gown?

A. I cannot justly tell you how long; it was two Months after my Lord gave me the Silk.

Q. But I must know how long after you made the Gown for my Lady?

A. I cannot tell that.

Q. When was it that my Lord gave you the Gown for the Child?

A. After my Lady came to Ros.

Q. When did she come to Ros?—A. I do not know when she came to it; I know she came on a Sunday Evening.

Q. Where did she lodge when you saw the Child?

A. She lodged at Ros then.

Q. Where there?—A. At Mrs. Wright's.

Q. Did you hear of the Separation of my Lord and Lady?—A. I did.

Q. Was it before or after they parted that you saw this Child at Mrs. Wright's?—A. It was after they parted.

Q. Who brought him to Wright's?—A. I cannot tell who brought him.

Q. Did my Lady lodge at any other Place before she went to Wright's?

A. Yes.

Q. Where, and how long?

A. At Captain Butler's, I believe six Weeks or two Months.

Q. Where did she go from Captain Butler's?

A. She then came to my Mistress's.

Q. How long did she stay there?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, a Twelvemonth.

Q. When was it that this Child came?

A. After she had been a considerable Time at Mrs. Wright's.

Q. How long?—A. I cannot tell how long.

Q. How old was he?—A. About two Years old.

Q. Was it half a Year after my Lady came to Wright's that you saw the Child?—A. I cannot justly tell you.

Q. Do you know Mrs. Heath?

A. I have seen her before; yes, I know her.

Q. Where was the first Time you saw her?

A. The first Time I saw her was at Dunmaine, and every Day after she came to lodge at my Mistress's.

Jury.] You say you saw a Child at Wright's about two Years old?

A. I did.

Q. Whose Child was it you saw there?—A. My Lady's, Sir.

Q. Who told you it was my Lady's Child?

A. My Mistress, Mrs. Wright.

Q. Did my Lady herself tell you it was her Child?

A. I had no Conversation with my Lady. I was working at Doctor Elliot's on the other Side of the Way—

Court.] Are you going, Gentlemen, to the same Point?

Mr. Mac Manus.] I believe, my Lord, every Evidence that goes to the first Point, will go to the second.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] The next Evidence that we shall produce is Anne Bennet; she was a Servant to Mrs. Giffard of Ballysop, a Lady who appeared at a former Trial; she lived with her some Years, and often saw my Lady with Child, and heard her Mistress talk of her being big-bellied.

10. ANNE BENNET.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Did you know my Lord and Lady Altham?

Anne Bennet.] Yes, I did.

Q. When did you know them?—A. The latter End of the Year 1714.

Q. Where did they live when you knew them?—A. In Dunmaine.

Q. And where did you live then?

A. I lived at Ballyfop.

Q. With whom there?—A. Mrs. Giffard.

Q. Can you say in what Circumstances Lady Altham was, in respect to her Health, when you knew her?

A. When I saw her first of all, Gentlemen, it was about Christmas Time, whether before or after I cannot tell; and the next Time it was after Christmas, and she looked pretty round; and I said to my Mistress, Had my Lord and Lady never a Child? No, says she, she never had.

Court.] Did you see my Lady with Child?

A. I thought she looked very round, my Lord.

Q. Can you say whether she was with Child or not?

A. Indeed I believe in my Heart she was.

Q. For what Reason did you think so?

A. Because I was the Mother of a Child myself, and knew how she was, she took a Dislike to Victuals at the Table.

Q. How old was you then?

A. Twenty Years of Age, I was the Mother of a Child, and a married Woman too.

Q. You do not appear now to have been that Age at that Time?

A. Indeed then I am fifty-two Years of Age.

Q. Do you know any more than that?—A. No.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Le Hunt.] You say you lived with Mrs. Giffard?—A. I did.

Q. How often did my Lady Altham visit Mrs. Giffard?

A. She visited three Times while I was there.

Q. And how often did your Mistress visit my Lady?

A. She visited my Lady twice.

Q. Was there any great Intimacy between them?

A. There was no great Intimacy, more than that.

Q. Did your Mistress lie-in while you were in the Service?

A. She never did, nor I do not believe she had a Child after I left her.

Q. When did you leave her?—A. I left her in February, 1714.

Q. And how long before had she had a Child?

A. I cannot tell, the Child was running about.

Q. Was she with Child in your Time?

A. I cannot tell whether she was with Child, for I did not wash for her.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] What Reason had you to induce you to believe Lady Altham was with Child?

A. Because she took a Dislike against Victuals, and was very round.

Q. Did you see her after in any Place?

A. Never saw her before or after.

Court.] Who do you call next?

Mr. Solicitor.] I have taken up a Witness, one Edmond Howletts, who brings the Matter directly Home to the Traverser. My Lord, he is a Pedlar, a Man that sells Diaper, and other Cloths about the Country, and he will shew that she bought Diaper for the Child's Use just before the Birth.

Mr. Edmond Malone.] Every one knows that the material Perjury is the Birth, and if they had not a Mind to raise a Dust, they would go to that directly.

II. EDMOND HOWLETTS.

Mr. Solicitor General.] Did you know my Lord and Lady Altham?

Edmond Howletts.] Yes, I did, Sir.

Q. Do you know any Thing of a Child that they had?

A. Yes, I did, Sir.

Q. Give an Account of what you know about it.

A. The first Time I was resorting that House with Goods on my Back, and the first I sold there, there was a Woman there, a Waiting-maid, they called Mrs. Heath.

Q. Do you know her?—A. I do not know whether I would or no.

Q. Well, go on and tell your Story.

A. And she bought a Piece of Diaper from me for my Lady's Service against her lying-in. There is a Brogue upon my Tongue, Sir, I cannot speak very proper.

Q. What did she buy the Diaper for?

A. The Diaper was provided for lying-in, for Clouts.

Q. For whose lying-in?—A. Lady Altham's.

Q. Who told you so?—A. The Woman they called Mrs. Heath.

Q. Would you know her if you were to see her?

A. I did not see her these many Years.

Q. Do you know that Gentlewoman there?

A. She is fatter now than she was at that Time.

Q. Is that she?—A. Why, Sir, I could not swear.

Q. Is that Woman like her?

A. Why then, she is like her sure enough, to the best of my Knowledge.

Q. How often did you see her before that Time?

A. Several Times after that.

Q. What Time was that? Recollect as near as you can.

A. Why then, Sir, it was a little after Christmas.

Q. What Year?

A. I believe it is thirty Years now, to the best of my Knowledge.

Q. Do you keep any Book of your Business?

A. I do not keep a Book, nor I do not know how.

Q. What Goods did you carry to sell?

A. I carried Linen Cloths, and Cambricks, and Holland, and Handkerchiefs.

Q. Do you follow that Trade now?

A. I left off that Trade about seven Years ago.

Q. How long did you follow it?—A. I followed it five-and-thirty Years, and I was a Customer at that House that time.

Q. Did you see any thing relating to this Child at any time after that?

A. After that, I was there, Sir, and my Lady Altham, and her Maid, and the Nurse, and the Child were coming out of the Pleasure-Garden, and when they saw me they went back, and they bade me come in and open my Pack there; and my Lady bid the Nurse ask what she would have; and said, Mrs. Heath, we will see if he has a white silk Hood or Handkerchief, and she bought a white Silk Handkerchief, and red Border about it.

Q. Was it bought for the Nurse?—A. It was.

Q. Who bought it?—A. Mrs. Heath cut it off of my Piece, and paid me the Money that my Lady gave to her.

Q. And who gave it to the Nurse?

A. Mrs. Heath gave it to the Nurse before my Face, and my Lady bought a Ribband, and Mrs. Heath put it on the Child.

Q. Pray, give an Account, do you know any thing else about the Child? Do you remember that my Lord and Lady parted?

A. They parted to my Sorrow, Sir.

Q. How so?

A. There was four Pounds two Shillings due to me: my Lady bought a Piece of Holland for five Pounds five Shillings, and she gave me a Guinea in part; and the Day the Dispute came between them I was going that Way about some Affair of my own, and I heard of it within half a Mile of Dunmain.

Q. How far did you live from Dunmain?

A. About two Miles I lived from them; and I was going about my Business, and I heard the Noise, there was a great deal to do; and on account of my Money due to me, I went to the House to see after it, if I could get it; and when I came near the House, all the Servants were going to and fro, and I was looking on them, and I saw my Lady in a Coach or Chariot, I do not know which it was. God forbid I should wrong my own Soul.

Court.] Take care that you do not; have a care what you say.

E. Howletts.] I stood there, and saw my Lady, and Mrs. Heath, and the Child in the Coach. My Lord came down Stairs in a great Passion, and asked Where was the Child? And some of the Servants said, My Lady has it in the Coach; and just as he was going to throw down every thing about him, he took the Child from her. And my Lady said, Pray, my Lord, did you give me your Word and Honour that you would let the Child go with me wherever I would go? says she; and took her white Silk Handkerchief out of the Place where it was, and wiped her Face, and kissed the Child at parting.

Q. Did you see Mrs. Heath there; was she present at this Transaction, or was she not?

A. She was the same Person that was with my Lady Altham that Day.

Court.] Did the Child go in the Coach?—A. Not at all, Sir.

Jury.] What Day was it that this happened?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, it was Sunday.

Q. I ask you the Day of the Month?

A. I do not keep the Month at all, I am no Scholar.

Q. What Time of the Day was it?—A. To the best of my Knowledge, about Ten or Eleven o'Clock in the Morning.

Q. Was it a Coach or a Chariot?—A. I cannot tell.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Spring.] How long have you been a Dealer in the Linen Trade?

E. Howletts.] I believe these five-and-thirty Years.

Q. How old are you?—A. I am five-and-fifty Years old.

Q. Where did you live at the time you saw this Child?

A. At Ballytekin, within three Miles of Ros.

Q. Where in 1713 did you live?—A. I cannot tell; I am no Scholar.

Q. Where in the Year 1718?

A. I cannot tell that Year; I do not understand your Years that way.

Q. Where did you live twenty Years ago?—A. In the Town of Ros.

Q. Do you know one Eleanor Murphy?—A. I did, Sir.

Q. What Relation is she to you?

A. I have one Nelly Murphy a Sister of mine.

Q. How long has she been married?

A. I believe she is married these twenty Years, or near it.

Q. Is not she married thirty Years?

A. I cannot tell whether she be or no.

Q. Is she married nine-and-twenty Years?

A. Indeed I cannot tell, Sir, whether she be or no; I was not by when she was married; she married in the County of Dublin here.

Q. What Name did she go by thirty Years ago?

A. Only her own Name.

Q. What was that?—A. Howletts.

Q. What Name did she go by nine-and-twenty Years ago?

A. I believe Howletts.

Q. Can you write or read?—A. No, I cannot, Sir, and I am sorry for it.

Q. Was you ever Agent to any Gentleman in the County of Wexford?

A. I am after looking after some Land belonging to Mr. Baily.

Q. Was you ever Agent to him?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever make an Affidavit by the Name of Agent to Mr. Benjamin Baily?—A. Hah!

Q. Did you ever call yourself Agent?

A. My Lord, it was a Mistake if I called myself so.

Q. Who drew that Affidavit for you?

A. I cannot tell any such thing.

Court.] Now tell me truly, who wrote that Affidavit? Did you make an Affidavit?—A. Only what I swore before the Commissioners.

Q. Who were they?—A. Upon my Word, I cannot tell.

Mr. Spring.] Was there a Paper wrote for you to swear, or put your Mark to it?—A. Hah!

Q. Did not you swear an Affidavit before Dr. Stopford in August last?

A. Yes, I do not know but I did.

Q. But you know whether you did or not?—A. Why, I believe I did.

Q. Was it read to you before you swore it?

A. It was read to me sure enough.

Q. Who read it?—A. There was a Gentleman there.

Q. What is his Name?—A. Somebody belonging to Mr. Annesley.

Q. What is his Name, Man?—A. Upon my Word, I cannot tell.

Q. Upon your Oath, who was he?

A. Upon my Word, I cannot tell the Person.

Court.] Gentlemen, this Man was asked whether he made an Affidavit by the Name of Agent to one Mr. Baily, he would not answer for a great while, but seemed to prevaricate, and at last said it was a Mistake if he called himself an Agent. He then was asked if the Affidavit was read to him, and after some Hesitation owned it was read, but does not say by whom, but says he was sworn by Dr. Stopford, in August last.

Mr. Spring.] Upon your Oath, Sir, who was it that read the Affidavit to you?—A. I cannot tell you, upon my Oath.

Q. Was it drawn in Dublin, or the County of Wexford?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, in Dublin.

Q. Where was it drawn?—A. I told you all I had to say.

Q. Who wrote it for you?

A. If I knew that, I would tell you. There was a Clerk there.

Q. Who was he?—A. Somebody that was belonging to Mr. Annesley.

Q. Did

Q. Did you tell all you knew in the County of Wexford, or City of Dublin?—A. In Dublin.

Q. Did you likewise tell it in the County of Wexford?—A. I did not till I told it here.

Q. Was your Affidavit read to you?—A. Yes, it was.

Q. Who read it?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Were you there called Agent to any Body, and whom?—A. It was a Mistake, if I was.

Q. Was you called so, or not?—A. I told them I minded some Land belonging to Mr. Baily.

Court.] Did they call you Agent, or not?—A. To the best of my Knowledge, they did not call me so. All the World knows I was no fit Man to be an Agent to a Gentleman.

Mr. Spring.] Had the Coach two Wheels, or four Wheels, you saw my Lady go away in?—A. There was four Wheels.

Q. Was it open like a Chair, or close?—A. It was close.

Q. Do you know the Difference between a Coach and a Chariot?—A. I cannot tell the Difference.

Q. You say it was not open?—A. I know it was not open.

Q. How many Horses were there?—A. I cannot tell, I think there were four or two, I cannot tell which.

Q. Was it four, or two, or six?—A. Two or four, I cannot tell which.

Q. Who was Coachman?—A. One Dennis Cauntton.

Q. How many Brothers and Sisters have you that are Witnesses in this Cause?—A. Have you ever a Sister that lived with one Macnames?

Q. I cannot tell whether it was or not.

Q. Did your Sister Eleanor Murphy live with Macnames?—A. I cannot tell whether it was or no.

Q. Do you know any Body she lived with?—A. It was from Captain Butler's at Ros that she went to Lord Altham's.

Q. Do you know the Time that she went there?—A. Indeed, if I had known this Trouble, I would know a great deal more of it.

Q. Was it before or after you sold the Linen that your Sister went to the Service?—A. She was not there the first Time I sold the Clouts, and she went there a little after.

Court.] Did you travel the Kingdom round with your Linens?—A. Only the County of Wexford.

Court.] I am surprized then, that you do not know the Difference between a Coach and a Chariot.

Mr. Spring.] Do you know the great Eclipse of the Sun?—A. I do.

Q. Where did you live then?—A. I lived then at Ballyteskin. I do not know but I was in the House of Dunmaine that Day, and coming home within Half a Mile of my own House when the Eclipse came upon me.

Q. Was not you in Dunmaine House that Day?—A. I am not sure I was there, I was very near them I am sure in the Road home.

Q. Say upon your Oath, whether you were not in the House of Dunmaine the Day of that Eclipse?—A. I cannot tell whether I was or not.

Q. Was it before or after that Eclipse that your Sister went to live there?—A. Why, it is about May the Eclipse came, or the latter End of April; it was before that she went to live there; it was before.

Q. Where did she go to live after she left Lord Altham's?—A. I think to one Frank White.

Q. And where from thence?—A. The Time she left Lord Altham's she went to her own Father's.

Court.] This Witness has sworn very materially, if he has sworn true.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall.] The next Witness I am instructed to produce, is one Newton Ricketts, a Coach-maker, and he will prove to your Lordship that Lady Altham was very big with Child; that he after was at Dunmaine, and employed by Lord Altham to make a four-wheeled Chaise, and at the same time my Lady employed him to make a little Chair for the Child.

12. NEWTON RICKETTS.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall.] Did you know Arthur late Lord Altham?—A. Newton Ricketts.] I did.

Q. Did you know his Lady?—A. I did see her, Sir, and was acquainted with her by Name.

Q. Where did you see Lady Altham?—A. I saw her at Dunmaine.

Q. Can you recollect at what Time you saw her there?—A. About two-and-thirty or one-and-thirty Years ago.

Q. Which was it?—A. It is two-and-thirty Years ago.

Q. How long was you acquainted with her at Dunmaine?—A. I was acquainted with her for three Years.

Q. Recollect as near as you can, how long ago it is.

Q. It was three-and-thirty, or two-and-thirty Years ago.

Q. Do you recollect when Queen Anne died?—A. I do not know how long ago it is.

Q. Can you be sure how long ago it is since you knew my Lady at Dunmaine?—A. I think it is one-and-thirty Years, I cannot remember the Years, or Months, or Weeks.

Q. What Trade do you profess, Friend?—A. I profess to be Wheel-wright and Coach-maker.

Q. Were you ever employed by Lord Altham, and when?—A. Oftentimes, for two or three Years, working at the House from Time to Time.

Q. Did you do any particular Piece of Work for him?—A. I made a little Toy-Chair for a Child that was there, that was called Master Jammy Annesley that Time in the House.

Q. Who bespoke that Chair?—A. The Lord Altham desired I should make it; and my Lady and he both came to the Coach-house where I used to work, and desired me to make it.

Q. Where was my Lady at that Time?—A. At Dunmaine.

Q. Was it he or she that ordered you to make the Chair for the Child?—A. My Lord directed me to make it at the Time my Lady was at Dunmaine.

Jury.] Did my Lord speak to you himself?

A. He spoke to me himself. Court.] Did he tell you whose Child this was?—A. I never ask Questions when I go to Gentlemen's Houses; when I see Masters and Misses, I guess they are their own.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall.] Whose Child did you take it to be?—A. The Lord and Lady Altham's Child.

Q. What did my Lord Altham call him?—A. He called him Jammy Annesley.

Q. How was the Child dressed?—A. Dressed as a Gentleman's Son, or young Master should be dressed.

Q. Did you see the Child frequently?—A. I saw him very often at Dunmaine, and at several Places besides.

Q. How did my Lady behave to the Child?—A. I think as a Mother behaves to a Child.

Mr. Smith.] Her Behaviour is not more material than her Words. Words are expressive, but Behaviour doubtful.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Daly.] How many Years ago is it since this Chair was bespoke?—A. I believe about eight-and-twenty and a Half; eight-and-twenty and six Months, or nine-and-twenty, I cannot tell indeed which.

Q. Did you see the Child at that Time for whom it was to be made?—A. I seen the Child; I did, Sir.

Q. Could he walk?—A. He just began to walk that Time, about two Years and Half, or Quarter old.

Q. In whose Care was he?—A. One Joan Laffan took care of him, I believe.

Q. You will consider at the Time this Chair was bespoke from you, the Child was in the Care of Joan Laffan?—A. Yes, Joan Laffan took care of it, I think.

Q. Pray, will you tell me another Thing, can you name any Servant in the House at that Time?—A. I believe there was one Martin Nieff, and Anthony Dyer, and some other Servants that are dead and gone.

Q. Was Nieff present?—A. I believe he was, and Charles Magher.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall.] Are you sure of that?—A. I am sure, I think they were.

Q. And Joan Laffan was the Person that took care of the Child?—A. I think she did.

Mr. Daly.] Do you know one Mr. George Nixon of Newton, in the County of Wexford?—A. I do.

Q. Now I ask you upon your Oath, had you any Discourse with him concerning the Birth of this Child?—A. Upon my Oath, I do not remember it.

Q. Had you with Mr. Henry Miller?—A. I do not remember I had.

Q. What Age are you?—A. I am four-and-fifty and odds.

Q. What Age was you at the Time of making the Chair?—A. I was twenty-four Years of Age.

Q. Did you work for yourself then?—A. Aye, and for my Father.

Q. Where have you lived ever since?—A. Within four Miles of Wexford.

Q. The Name of the Place?—A. Bretherty.

13. ELIZABETH DOYLE.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] Did you know Lady Altham?—A. Elizabeth Doyle.] Yes.

Q. Where did you see her?—A. At Dunmaine.

Q. Did you observe any thing particular about her?—A. I observed that she was with Child.

Q. How do you know that?—A. By her big Belly.

Q. What Time was this?—A. In March.

Q. What Year?—A. About the Time of the Queen's Death.

Q. Was it before or after the Queen died?—A. After.

Q. Have you no other Reason to know my Lady was with Child?—A. Yes, she hired my Mother to nurse the Child.

Q. Was you by?—A. Yes, I was.

Q. Did your Mother nurse the Child?—A. No, she took a Fever, and could not nurse the Child.

Q. Where was it that my Lady agreed with her?—A. At Dunmaine.

Q. Who nursed the Child after, do you know?—A. I cannot tell, Sir, of my own Knowledge.

Q. Do you know Mrs. Heath?—A. I do not know Mrs. Heath; my Lady desired one Mary to bring a Glas of Wine to my Mother, and that is all that I know.

Q. Was any Body present but you when your Mother was hired?—A. I remember Nobody but my Lord and Lady.

Q. Was my Lord by?—A. Yes, Sir, he was.

Q. What was your Mother's Name?—A. My Mother's Name was Elizabeth Richardson, and my Father's William.

Q. What was your Father?—A. He made Bricks for my Lord, and for 'Squire Loftus, and a great many Gentlemen.

 Q. How near did you live to Dunmaine ?
 A. I lived within six or seven Miles.
 Q. Were you acquainted with my Lady Altham ?
 A. No, I was not acquainted with my Lady, but saw her once.
 Q. Where ?—A. Standing at her own Door.
 Q. Can you recollect the Time you saw her ?
 A. I believe I saw her, for I rode with a Gentleman there, Anthony Colclough, she came to the Door to speak to Mr. Colclough.
 Q. How did Mr. Colclough address her ?—A. The Lady Altham, Sir.
 Q. When was this ?
 A. It was in February or March, I cannot exactly tell.
 Q. In what Year ?—A. This Time thirty Years will be soon, to the best of my Remembrance.
 Q. Where was it you saw her ?—A. I saw her at the Door.
 Q. Did you take any particular Notice of her ?
 A. I took Notice of her that she was with Child.
 Q. What Reason have you for saying that ?
 A. Because she seemed big-bellied to me, that is all the Knowledge I have in them Sort of Things.
 Q. Did you see my Lord Altham after ?
 A. I saw Lord Altham after at my Father's House, and at his own House ; he dined and supped at my Father's.
 Q. Did you know the Person you saw was Lady Altham ?
 A. I did not know her, but as Mr. Colclough told me it was Lady Altham.

 A. He asked for Lord Altham, and they told him he was gone abroad.
 Q. Did he go into the House ?—A. He did not go in.
 Q. Did he ask to see my Lady ?
 A. He did not ask to see my Lady, he was wheeling off, when she came out and stopped him.
 Q. Do you remember to see any Body at any Door seven-and-twenty Years ago ?—A. Indeed I do.
 Q. Who ? Name them.
 A. They were no People of Note, worth remarking.
 Q. Were you ever before a Jury before ?—A. Never.
 Jury.] Do not you say that Lord Altham went to your Father's House, and dined and supped there ?
 A. He did, and staid all Night.
 Q. Was that before or after my Lady was brought-to-bed ?
 A. It was before.
 Q. What Time of the Year was it ?
 A. It was in March or April ; he was there two or three Nights.
 Q. Was it before that that you saw her with Child ?—A. It was.
 Q. Was she brought-to-bed then ?—A. No, Sir.
 Q. How soon after was it ?
 A. I do not know, it may be the May following.
 Q. And it was in March or April he was at your House ?—A. It was.
 Court.] Gentlemen, have you any other Witnesses ?
 Mr. Serj. Tisdall.] We have, my Lord.
 Court.] Pray then send for them.

15. JAMES FITZ-PATRICK.

Mr. Harward.] Were you acquainted with Lord and Lady Altham ?
 James Fitz-Patrick.] I knew them particularly well, Sir.
 Q. Pray, Sir, did you know them at Dunmaine ?—A. I did, Sir.
 Q. Did you live in that Country ?
 A. Within five or six Miles of them, Sir.
 Q. Were you frequently at Dunmaine ?—A. I was pretty often there.
 Q. Did you know one Mrs. Mary Heath ?—A. I have seen her at Dunmaine. I cannot tell whether I should know her again.
 Q. Do you think if you saw her you should know her again ?
 A. I do not think I should know her again.
 Q. Do you remember the Name Mary Heath ?
 A. I do remember Mary Heath very well, Sir.
 Q. Now you that were intimately acquainted with my Lord and Lady, as you say, did you observe any Child in the Family ?
 A. Why really, Gentlemen, I saw the Child very often after my Lady parted Dunmaine, and to the best of my Memory, I saw the Child there one Day in the Forenoon while my Lady was there, and Mrs. Mary Heath, I saw her ; and Lord Altham was pleased to be towzing and kissing her, and she told him, if he would not give over, she would call to my Lady ; and I saw a clean dressed Woman with a Child in her Arms come to the Place where I was, to the best of my Memory, I cannot say positively.
 Q. Whose Child was it ?—A. I cannot tell, I took it to be my Lord's.
 Q. What Reasons had you to take it to be his ?
 A. Because my Lord had introduced the Child to me some time before.
 Q. Introduced him ! How ? What did my Lord say ?
 A. I cannot tell the Words, but he introduced him to me after a friendly Manner.
 Q. How did my Lord behave to that Child ?
 A. He was very fond of him, as fond as of his Eyes, and kept him like a Gentleman's Child.
 Court.] Did you see him in my Lady's Time ?
 A. I cannot say positively that I saw him in my Lady's Time ; the greatest Freedom I had with my Lord Altham was after my Lady's Departure.
 Q. Can you take upon you to say that the Child you saw was my Lord's Child ?

Q. I took him to be Lord Altham's, and my Lord had that Regard for that he would not introduce an illegitimate Child to me.
 Q. When you first saw this Child, did you see it before the Separation?
 A. To the best of my Memory, I did once.
 Q. Can you swear positively you did?
 A. I cannot swear positively.
 Q. Now, at the Time that you saw this Child to the best of your Memory before the Separation, did you see Mrs. Heath?—A. I did, Sir.
 Q. Had she the Care of any body upon her at that Time?
 A. Not as I know of.
 Q. Did she take Notice of any Child?
 A. I cannot tell whether she did or not.
 Q. Did you ever see this Child in my Lady's Company?
 A. I never did, Sir.
 Q. How did my Lord treat this Child, did he use him with any particular Fondness?—A. I know my Lord was very fond of him.
 Mr. Harward.] There can be no legal Evidence, I find, but one that is actually present at his Birth.
 Court.] You mistake the Court, Mr. Harward.
 Mr. Harward.] My Lord, I am sure I would not willingly mistake the Court, but what I contend for is, that I have a Right to ask this Question; I humbly apprehend I have, for it is a Point of the Perjury, that there was a Child taken to be my Lady Altham's Child at Dunmaine, and this being the Case, I would ask him whether there was any Child in the Family as the Child of the Family?
 Mr. Smith.] My Lord, this is not the Point, the Point is—
 Court.] Ask him in the very Words of the Indictment, if you will ask him.
 Court.] Was there a Child of Lord and Lady Altham's living at Dunmaine while Mrs. Heath was there, to your Knowledge, as the Child of that Family, while my Lady was at Dunmaine?
 A. Really, my Lord, there was no doubt upon me but there was such Child.
 Q. Can you say positively you saw a Child there while my Lady was there?
 A. To the best of my Memory, I did see the Child while my Lady was there.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Le Hunts.] Where do you live?—A. At Cloughleagh.
 Q. How long have you lived there?—A. These four-and-thirty Years.
 Q. Was you examined on the late Trial in the Court of Exchequer?
 A. No.
 Q. Did you know of that Trial?—A. I did hear of it.
 Q. When was it you first discovered your Knowledge of this Transaction?—A. I cannot tell.
 Q. Was it before the Trial? How came you to be a Witness now and not then?
 A. Because I was subpoena'd now, and was not then.
 Q. Did you ever see Mr. MacKercher?
 A. I have seen him very often.
 Q. Did you see him before the Trial in Ejectment in the Exchequer?
 A. I never did.
 Q. When did you first see him?
 A. I cannot exactly tell you when I saw him.
 Q. You know you are a skilful Man at the Assizes, why did you not disclose this Matter before?
 A. It was fore against my Will that I was brought in at all.
 Q. Do you know Mr. William Sutton?—A. I do.
 Q. Is he a Man of Honour?—A. He is, I believe.
 Q. Had you any, and what Discourse with him about this Matter?
 A. I never had any Discourse with him.
 Jury.] You say you never saw my Lady Altham take Notice of the Child?—A. I never saw them together.
 Q. Did not you say that you were at the House before my Lord and Lady parted, and saw that Child then?—A. I did, Sir.
 Q. Did you know whose Child it was?
 A. I believed it was Lord Altham's.
 Q. Was you told so?—A. I do not know whether I was or no.
 Q. How did you know then that it was their Child?
 A. I took it for granted.
 Q. How old was the Child when you saw it first?
 A. Really, I cannot tell; about eighteen Months, or thereabouts.
 Q. Pray, Sir, was it running about?
 A. It was in the Arms of a Maid or Woman.
 Q. Was she in the Habit or Dress of a Servant of the Family?
 A. She was very clean.
 Q. How was the Child dressed?—A. Oh, the Child was very clean.
 Q. So you know no more of this than that you took it to be their Child of your own Accord?—A. I was not, nor did not doubt it at all.
 Mr. Le Hunts.] Are you sure my Lady was at Dunmaine when you saw the Child there?
 A. I saw it at Dunmaine after the Separation I know, my Lady I believe was not there.
 Q. Was my Lord fond of it at that Time?
 A. Aye, and introduced him to me.
 Q. Did he mention the Mother of the Child?
 A. He did not mention the Mother.
 Q. Who was Butler then?
 A. I cannot tell any of the Servants, nor what Servants I kept myself at that Time. I saw Taylor and Sutton.

16. JANE MURPHY.

Mr. Robins.] My Lord, this Witness was sent for by my Lady Altham to be a Nurse, and in the Presence of my Lady gave the Child Suck, and would have been hired to nurse the Child, but her Husband would not let her stay in the House, and my Lady would not let the Child go out.
 Mr. Robins.] Did you know my Lady Altham?
 Jane Murphy.] I saw her but once in my Life.
 Q. When was that?
 A. It is about nine-and-twenty or thirty Years this May coming, thereabouts.
 Q. What was the Occasion of your going to see her?
 A. My Lord spoke to me two or three Times to go nurse this Boy.
 Vol. IX.

Q. Did you see ever a Child there?—A. I did, Sir.
 Q. How old was that Child then?
 A. About a Month or three Weeks, there or thereabouts.
 Q. Who was present when you saw the Child?
 A. My Lady, and the Woman that brought the Child into my Lady's Room.
 Q. Do you know who that Woman was?
 A. I do not know who she was, I knew no Servant but Bryan MacCormack.
 Q. Where did you live then?
 A. I lived then at the Salt Mills of Tynern, by the Sea-side.
 Q. How far is that from Dunmaine?
 A. Four Miles from Dunmaine, never reckoned but four.
 Q. What was it you did or said to my Lady?
 A. I told my Lady that my Lord sent a Messenger for me to nurse the Child.
 Q. And did you nurse the Child?—A. Indeed I did not nurse him.
 Q. What was the Reason you did not?
 A. My Lady would not let me have the Child out, and I would not stay in the House.
 Court.] Did you ever see my Lady before?—A. I never did.
 Q. Nor since?—A. No.
 Q. Would you know the Woman, if you saw her, that brought the Child into the Room?
 A. I cannot tell whether I would know her or no.
 Q. Did you ever see her since?—A. I never saw her since.
 Jury.] Who nursed the Child the first three Weeks?
 A. I did not examine, nor cannot tell.
 Mr. Daly.] Whose Cloak is that?—A. It is my own.
 Mr. Daly.] I do not believe you.
 Jane Murphy.] Faith, and you may, and I've wore a better before now.
 Mr. MacManus.] The next Witness is Dennis Redmond. This Witness will prove to your Lordship that Lady Altham was with Child, and brought-to-bed of a Child; that he was the Person sent for the Midwife on that Occasion; that he brought one Mrs. Shiels, a Midwife of Ross, to Dunmaine; and that my Lady was delivered of a Child.

17. DENNIS REDMOND.

Mr. MacManus.] Did you know the late Lord and Lady Altham?
 Dennis Redmond.] I did, I knew them both.
 Q. How came you to know them?—A. Because I was a Servant.
 Q. Where did they live then?—A. At Dunmaine.
 Q. Did you frequently see my Lady Altham?—A. I did.
 Q. Was she, or was she not with Child during the Time of your Service?
 A. She was, and all the Servants round said that she was, she looked big.
 Q. Was there any young Child in that Family?—A. There was.
 Q. Whose was it?—A. It was reputed to be Lord and Lady Altham's.
 Q. Was you sent to Ross on any, and what Occasion?
 A. I was, for a Midwife.
 Q. Who sent you?—A. Mrs. Heath.
 Q. Do you know her?—A. I ought to know her.
 Q. Look about and see if you know her.
 A. Upon my Word, I cannot swear directly that that is Mrs. Heath, but that was my Lady's Maid.
 Q. Who sent you of that Errand?—A. My Lady's Maid did.
 Q. Did you go for the Midwife?—A. I went for her.
 Q. And did you bring her?—A. I got the Midwife.
 Q. Who was she?—A. One Mrs. Shiels.
 Q. What did you then do?—A. I fetched her home to Dunmaine.
 Q. What happened after she came to the House of Dunmaine?
 A. Why, after I brought her home, that Night it was a Noise with them all, every one, that my Lady was brought-to-bed of a Son.
 Q. Did you see the Child?—A. I seen him afterwards.
 Q. How soon after the Midwife left the House?
 A. I cannot tell how soon.
 Q. Did you see him the next Day?—A. Not the next Day.
 Q. Did you in five Days, or ten Days?—A. No, I believe not.
 Q. Did you in a Month?—A. I did in a Month.
 Q. In whose Care was it?
 A. I cannot tell, I seen it among the Girls, among the Servants as they were.
 Q. Did you know Joan Laffan?—A. I did.
 Q. And Mrs. Heath?—A. Yes.
 Q. In whose Care did you see it? Name them particularly.
 A. I seen the Child with both one and the other several Times.
 Q. Name them.
 A. Mrs. Heath and Joan Laffan, and with other Girls that I cannot remember.
 Q. Were there any Rejoicings the Night you brought the Midwife?
 A. There was the Night after.
 Q. What was the Nature of that Rejoicing?
 A. There was a Fire there up in the Avenue among the Trees.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Daly.] Did you know one Mrs. Hesther that lived in this Family?
 A. I did, very well.
 Q. Did not they call her my Lady sometimes?
 A. I never heard her called so in my Life.
 Q. Was not she with Child while you were a Servant, upon your Oath?
 A. Upon my Oath, I cannot tell whether she was or not.
 Q. Did not you go, upon your Oath, for a Midwife to lay her?
 A. Upon my Oath, I never did.
 Q. Do you know one Mr. William Sutton of Longrainge?—A. I do.
 Q. What was he?—A. He is a Gentleman.
 Q. Had you ever any Discourse with him concerning your going for a Midwife, and for whom?
 A. Upon my Oath, I never had with Mr. Sutton concerning going for a Midwife for any Person, not that I know of, Sir.
 Q. Do you know Captain Orfeur?—A. I do.
 Q. Had you any Discourse with him?
 A. I had Discourse with him.

Q. Who is he?—A. He is Colonel Palliser's Son-in-law; I was there one Night after riding a Horse for him.

Q. What Servants lived at Dunmaine at this Time? Name them; who was the Butler?—A. It is hard for me to remember at this Time.

Q. Upon your Oath, who was the Butler?—A. One Magher, to the best of my Knowledge, and there was one Dyer there.

Q. Was his Name Anthony?—A. Anthony.

Q. Was he or you in the Service first?—A. I was in the Service before he came there.

Q. What other Servants can you recollect; do you know Mrs. Setwright?—A. If she was there I knew her; she may be there for me, it is out of my Mind.

Q. Who was the House-keeper?—A. I do not know as for that, because there was a Cook there still.

Q. Do you remember the Name of Setwright?—A. I think I remember to hear talk of her.

Q. Who was Coachman?—A. John Weedon.

Q. Was his Wife there?—A. His Wife was living at the Bridge below at this Time.

Q. Did Joan Laffan live in the House at this Time that you brought the Midwife?—A. Upon my Oath, I cannot tell now.

Q. What do you believe?—A. I do not know whether she was or not, for there were several Servants there, and a great many that I do not know now.

Q. Pray, did you ever see this Child in the Hands or Care of Joan Laffan?—A. I did, Sir.

Q. Was not that after my Lord and Lady parted?—A. It was after they parted.

Q. Was he ever in her Care before they parted? In her Care or Hands?—A. How could I mind all these Things?

Q. You must recollect.—A. Upon my Word, I cannot tell.

Q. What Service were you in?—A. After the Hounds and the Hunters.

Q. After them?—A. Aye, taking care of them, and hunt them too, and would to this Day, and ride a Horse too.

Q. When was it my Lord and Lady parted?—A. I cannot be exact.

Q. When did you bring the Midwife there?—A. I cannot keep a Memory of what Year, nor I am no Scholar to keep that in my Head.

Q. Do not you remember the Separation?—A. I remember the Time they parted, but cannot tell what Day of the Week, but I think a Holyday.

Q. What Time of the Day was it? Was it in the Morning?—A. I cannot remember whether it was or not now.

Q. Did my Lady go in a Coach, or on Horseback?—A. In a Coach or Chariot.

Q. How long did you continue in the Service after they parted?—A. I did not stay long there after.

Q. How long?—A. I cannot tell how long, because my Father and Mother were in the Town of Dunmaine, and I went to them; upon my Word I cannot tell how long.

Q. Where did my Lady go?—A. To Ross.

Q. How long did you live in the Service in all?—A. About three Years, or full three Years, or something better, to the best of my Knowledge.

Q. Had not Joan Landy a Child a-nursing at her House?—A. She had my Lord's Child a-nursing.

Q. Was not that Child brought into the House of Dunmaine after my Lord and Lady parted?—A. He used to come in before and after.

Q. But did not he come in for good and all after they parted?—A. He did come for good and all, and was put into the Care of Joan Laffan.

Q. How came he to be taken from Joan Landy?—A. I cannot tell, without he had done nursing.

Q. How long did you live at Dunmaine before my Lady came there?—A. I was there before either of them came.

Q. How long was you in the Service?—A. About three Years or better.

Q. What Time did my Lord and Lady come down?—A. I cannot remember.

Q. How long had you been a Servant before my Lady first came down?—A. I cannot tell how long, but it is three Years I served in all.

Q. How long was you in the Service before she came, and how long after?—A. Let me never go but I cannot remember.

Q. Did not you swear when you were examined on the former Trial that you were two Years in the Service before my Lady came to Dunmaine?—A. I was there; I cannot be exactly how long.

Q. And how long of that three Years was you there after they came down?—A. Why, I believe, to the best of my Knowledge, a Year or something better, I cannot be exact.

Q. Will you tell me how soon after they came down my Lady was delivered of this Child?—A. Indeed, I cannot remember.

Q. Was it a Year, or half a Year, or what Time?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Was you a Servant when she was delivered?—A. I was.

Q. Were you there when Sarah Weedon came down?—A. I was there before she came into the Place at all.

Q. Did you and Mrs. Shiels discourse as you were coming to Dunmaine?—A. How can I remember?

Q. Could she speak English?—A. She could, indeed.

Q. Is she alive?—A. I cannot tell whether she is or not.

Q. Was she an Irish Woman?—A. I cannot tell whether she was or not.

Jury.] You say, Sir, that you saw Joan Landy's Child in the House of Dunmaine before the Separation?—A. In the House I did backwards and forwards.

Q. Did any body take Notice of it?—A. Every one of the Family, one from another used to handle and play with it.

Q. Did you observe my Lord to play with it?—A. I did, and was as fond of him as could be.

Q. Now, you say that after my Lady was turned away, that Child was actually brought home to Dunmaine House?—A. He was that very Time.

Q. And you saw my Lord fond of him then?—A. I saw him fond of him then and after.

Q. What became of my Lady's Child?—A. Why, I believe, this was my Lady's Child; they all said so.

Q. Did not you say it was Joan Landy's Child that was brought to the House?—A. He did come in, the Child she nursed.

Mr. Daly.] Had not Joan Landy a Child?—A. She had, sure enough.

Q. Was not he got by my Lord?—A. They said it was.

Q. Who nursed her Child?—A. I cannot tell, except herself nursed her Child.

Jury.] Mr. Daly asked him, my Lord, who was the Father of Joan Landy's Child, and he says my Lord was; and that she nursed that Child.

Mr. Sol. Gen.] This is a Matter ought to be well understood. The Jury apprehended the Child this Man meant, was the Bastard-child of my Lord Altham by Joan Landy; I desire to know which Child you meant?

Dennis Redmond.] I say, there was a Child that Joan Landy had by a Sailor, or my Lord, or somebody; but this Child did not come to Dunmaine.

Jury.] Had Joan Landy a Child?—A. I cannot tell whether she had of her own Body.

Q. Was she with Child at Dunmaine while you were a Servant there?—A. She was with Child in the Town.

Mr. Daly.] By the Virtue of your Oath, was she or was she not a Servant in the House when my Lady came down first?—A. By virtue of my Oath, I cannot tell.

Q. Did she live there?—A. She was in the Town, to be sure.

Q. Where was Joan Landy when you went for the Midwife?—A. In her Father's House.

Q. How near was that to my Lord's House?—A. It was just below the Dog-kennel.

Jury.] Was not Joan Landy a Servant in the House when my Lady came home?—A. I cannot tell whether she was or not.

Mr. Daly.] Did not you swear on the Trial in the Exchequer, that she was in the House when my Lady came down?—A. She may come in and out, and I am not full sure whether she was or not.

Mr. Smith.] I hope the Jury will take notice that he refuses to answer the Question.

Mr. Daly.] Do you remember Eleanor Murphy and Mary Doyle?—A. Mary Doyle I remember; there were so many they went out of my Mind.

Q. Do you remember Nelly Murphy?—A. I cannot tell whether I do remember Nelly Murphy or not.

Q. Cannot you say whether you do or no?—A. It is impossible to remember, when there were so many of them.

Mr. Callaghan.] We shall now produce Eleanor Murphy.

Mr. Smith.] My Lord, this Witness has been here while Redmond was examined, and has heard what he said upon the Table; and it was a Rule made by your Lordship, that they should not examine any Witness that came into Court before they were called.

Mr. Nelson.] My Lord, I sent for her to have her ready, thinking the Cross-Examination of Redmond would not hold long, and she is but just come.

18. ELEANOR MURPHY.

Mr. Callaghan.] Did you know Lord and Lady Altham?—A. Eleanor Murphy.] Yes.

Q. Pray, was you ever at Dunmaine?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you live there as a Servant?—A. I did.

Q. With whom there?—A. With Lord and Lady Altham.

Q. Can you tell whether my Lady was with Child at any Time, or when?—A. I know she was delivered of a Child.

Q. How do you know that?—A. Because I seen her the Night she was delivered.

Q. Give an Account of all you know of that Matter.

A. Mrs. Heath called me up, and desired me to bring up a Saucepan of Water, and have it warmed.

Court.] Do you know that Mrs. Heath?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. What was she?—A. She was my Lady's Woman, Waiting-maid.

Q. Well, go on.

A. I brought up the Water in the Saucepan, and set it upon the big Parlour Fire. Mrs. Heath called me a little while after to bring it up to the Room in a brown Pan, and I went to my Lady's Room with it, where my Lady was upon her Knees, and she put her Finger in it to see whether it was too hot or cold; and she teamed some Brandy in it to strengthen the Water, as I suppose, to wash the Child.

Mr. Callaghan.] Where was Mrs. Heath?—A. She was attending my Lady.

Q. Do you know of what my Lady was delivered?—A. It was a Boy, for I saw it washed, and Mrs. Shiels put her Hand in her Right-hand Pocket, and brought out her Scissars and cut his Navel-string.

Q. Who were present at this Birth?—A. There were a great many Gentlemen in the Room that I did not know; but I knew one of them, Madam Butler from Ross was there.

Q. Were there any publick Rejoicings at Dunmaine on this Occasion?—A. Yes, the second Night after the Child was born there was a Bonfire alighted by Mr. Taylor's Order and Mrs. Heath.

Q. Do you remember the Christening of this Child?—A. I knew the Day appointed for it to be christened; about a Month or five Weeks after there was a great Gathering for it of many Things.

Q. Was it christened?—A. Doctor Lloyd came there I suppose to christen the Child.

Q. Who was he?—A. He was the Minister of Ross, Sir; I knew him before and after.

Q. Was it Mr. Lloyd that christened it?—A. It was he that christened the Child.

Q. What Name was given to it?—A. Mrs. Heath came down to the Hall and told among the Servants he was called James Annesley.

Jury.] That was his Christian Name?—A. Yes, James Annesley was his Christian Name.

Mr. Callaghan.] What Name was he christened by?—A. He was christened James Annesley.

Q. Do you mean that he was christened James or James Annesley?—A. James Annesley.

Q. Was that his Christian Name only, or his Christian and Surname?—A. That was the Christian Name and Surname and all, and they said it Court.]

Chief.] What was he called when he was christened?
A. James Annesley he was called indeed.
Q. Was he christened James Annesley?
A. He was christened James Annesley.
Mr. Callaghan.] Did you see the Child after at Dunmaine?
A. Yes, I did.
Q. How often, once or twice?
A. Several times, with Mrs. Heath a-dressing of him, when he would be sent for; and there never was a Woman loved a Child better than she did James Annesley.
Mr. Le Hunt.] The Jury want to know if he was christened James Annesley?
Eleanor Murphy.] He was christened James Annesley.
Jury.] How do you know that?
A. This was what I heard Mrs. Heath tell to all the Servants in the Hall.
Mr. Callaghan.] Pray, how long did you continue after this Christening at Dunmaine?
A. A good while.
Q. How long?
A. I believe a Quarter of a Year.
Q. Where was that Child during that Time?
A. He was sent to Joan Landy's out to nurse, she took him with her.
Q. Do you remember the Time of my Lord and Lady's parting?
A. I was not there then.
Q. But do you remember the Time?
A. I do not remember the Time.
Q. Was it before or after that, that Joan Landy got the Nursing?
A. She got the Nursing the Day that he was christened; she came to nurse him the Day before.
Q. Where did you go when you left Dunmaine?
A. I went to Ross, after I left Dunmaine.
Q. Did you see the Child after?
A. I never saw the Child after, only once that he came to Ross with my Lord in the Coach.
Q. Do you understand what a Christian Name and what a Surname is?
A. Yes.
Q. What was the Child's Surname?
A. His Surname is Annesley.
Q. And what his Christian Name?
A. His Christian Name is James.
Q. Was Annesley his Surname or Christian Name when he was christened?
A. It was a Surname, Annesley.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Spring.] Tell me, recollect who were present when the Child was born besides you?
A. There were several.
Q. Name them.
A. Madam Butler.
Q. Who else?
A. I do not know it is so long ago, I should have a good Head to remember them.
Q. Do you remember were any of the Servants by?
A. I remember some of the Servants, Mary Doyle was by.
Q. Was Mary Doyle in the Room?
A. She was in the Room, and Mrs. Heath.
Q. And who else?
A. Why, some Gentlemen, I cannot tell who they were.
Q. Have not you as good a Memory now as a Year ago?
A. I have not.
Q. Is not it as good now as last Year?
A. I do not know but it is.
Q. Was not Mary Doyle there and Madam Butler?
A. Yes, they were.
Q. Do you remember any more?
A. I do not remember any more.
Q. How long had Mary Doyle been in the Service before the Birth?
A. I cannot tell indeed that.

A. Near hand a Quarter of a Year.
Q. And how long after?
A. About half a Year.
Q. Where was you at the Time of the great Eclipse?
A. I do not know.
Q. Do you remember it?
A. I do not remember it, but I remember there was great Thunder and Rain.
Q. Do not you remember the great Eclipse several Years ago?
A. I do not remember it now, but I remember Thunder and Rain.
Q. How came you to remember last Year what you do not remember now?
A. Why, what did I remember then?
Mr. Spring.] The Eclipse.
Q. I ask you, upon your Oath, where you were at the Time of the Eclipse?
A. I was at Captain Butler's at this Time of the Thunder and Rain.
Q. Was there any Darkeness of the Sun in the Morning at the time of that Thunder and Rain?
A. I do not remember it.
Q. Were you not a Servant at Captain Butler's at the Time of the Eclipse?
A. I was there when this Thunder and Rain was, the Eclipse was in the Evening.
Q. By virtue of your Oath, do not you remember the great Eclipse of the Sun?
A. By the virtue of my Oath, I do not remember any other.
Q. Was that Thunder before or after the Child was born?
A. The Thunder was since he was born.
Q. Was not you in Captain Butler's Service then?
A. I was in Captain Butler's House, but not in the Service.
Q. Was not you a Servant at Dunmaine before Lady Altham came to Dunmaine?

A. I was not in it when she came there, it was Mrs. Heath hired me.
Court.] How long did you live at Dunmaine before my Lady came?
A. She was there before I went there.
Q. How long were you in the Service before my Lady was brought-to-Bed?
A. Near a Quarter of a Year.
Q. And how long after?
A. Half a Year.
Q. Do you remember the great Darkeness?
A. I do not, my Lord.
Q. But you were asked whether you remembered it when you were examined on the Trial in the Exchequer, and you said you did.
A. Why, they only asked me then if I remembered the Eclipse, and I said I remember that there was such a Thing.
Q. By virtue of your Oath, did you never say that you remembered the Eclipse?
A. I do remember that Darkeness.
Q. What Darkeness was it?
A. It was a Thunder and Rain.
Q. Was that while you lived at Dunmaine?
A. It was after I left Dunmaine.
Q. What time of the Day was it?
A. It was in the Evening; in the Afternoon.
Q. How long did it continue?
A. The Rain held a Quarter of an Hour.
Q. Did you mention any Thunder and Rain when you was examined before?
A. I was not asked any, my Lord.
Q. Do you remember an Eclipse that happened about the time of the Birth?
A. I do not remember any but that Eclipse that was in the Evening, that there was Thunder and Rain along with it.
Mr. Spring.] Were you not at Dunmaine House when my Lady came down?
A. No, I was not.
Q. Did you ever see her before you saw her at Dunmaine?
A. No indeed, I never did.
Q. Did she go to Dublin while you were in the Service?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. Could she be absent a Month or two and you not know of it?
A. No, she was not, in my Service at all, without she'd go to Church.
Q. Did not you swear formerly that you were in the House when my Lady came first?
A. Indeed, I did not.
Q. Where was you hired?
A. By Mrs. Heath.
Q. Where?
A. In the Parlour at Dunmaine.
Q. And you never saw Lady Altham before?
A. Indeed, I never did.
Q. Did not you say, when you were examined before, that you had seen her at Ross?
A. Indeed I did not, without they took me up wrong.
Court.] Did not you swear upon that Trial, that you were in the Service a good while before my Lady came down?
A. No, upon my Word I did not, my Lord.
Mr. Spring.] Did you not say, that the first Time you saw my Lady was at Captain Butler's before you were a Servant at Dunmaine?
A. Upon my Oath, I did not, that I remember.
Q. Now, I ask you who were the Godfathers and Godmother to this Child?
A. Mr. Colclough, Mr. Cliff, and Mrs. Pigot were Gossips.
Q. What Colclough?
A. Of Rossigarland.
Q. What was his Christian Name?
A. Anthony Colclough.
Q. Who were the other Gossips?
A. Counsellor Cliff, and Madam Pigot of Tyntern.
Q. Whose Wife was she?
A. Why, was not she Captain Pigot's of Tyntern?
Q. I ask you whose Wife she was?
A. She was called Madam Pigot of Tyntern.
Q. Was not she Captain Pigot's Wife?

A. Charles Magher was Butler.
Q. Did you know one Rolph that was Butler?
A. Rolph was not there in my Time.
Q. Did you know Mrs. Weedon? Was she in the House?
A. I heard talk of her; she was not in the House because she was under an ill Character.
Q. Where did she live then?
A. She was at the Bridge below.
Q. How near was that to Dunmaine?
A. To the best of my Knowledge near half a Mile, I cannot tell how long.
Q. Do you remember Mrs. Setwright?
A. I do not remember her.
Q. Who was House-keeper?
A. I think, Mary Doyle, that had the Name of House-keeper.
Q. Where did you live before you came to Captain Butler's?
A. At Frank White's, in Ross.
Q. Where did you live after you left Lord Altham's?
A. At no Place, I was with my own People.
Q. Did you ever live with one Macnamee?
A. I did indeed.
Q. Did you live with him before or after you left Lord Altham's?
A. That was after I left Lord Altham's.
Jury.] Name the Gossips over again; how many were there?
A. Three.
Q. Name them.
A. Counsellor Cliff, Anthony Colclough from Rossigarland, and Mrs. Pigot of Tyntern.
Court.] This is a positive Witness to the Birth, if you can possibly believe, Gentlemen, that she is a Woman that deserves your Credit.
Mr. Serj. Marshall.] I hope your Lordship won't make any Remarks upon the Witnesses till we come to the Close; if we are to support the Credit of our Witnesses, as they appear, we shall never have done.
Court.] I say, if she be a Person of Credit; you would not have me say, she is a Person of undoubted Credit.

19. MARY DOYLE.

Mr. Harding.] The next Witness we produce is Mary Doyle; she, my Lord, is a Witness to the Birth.

A. I stayed after the Christening two or three Days.

Q. Do you remember the great Eclipse of the Sun?

A. I do not remember it.

Mr. Morton.] The next Witness will be one Mary Freeman, who will prove to your Lordship and the Jury, that she saw my Lady Altham at Dunmaine big with Child, and saw the Child in the Care of Joan Laffan; that Mrs. Heath was particularly fond of it, and that she has seen the Child with my Lady in a Coach frequently afterwards.

20. MARY FREEMAN.

Mr. Morton.] Did you know the late Lady Altham?

Mary Freeman.] I did, Sir.

Q. Where did you first see her?—A. In Tyntern, at Madam Pigot's.

Q. At the time you knew her there, what Condition did she appear to be in?

A. She appeared to me as a Woman in her Case, with Child.

Q. Did she appear big?—A. She did indeed, Sir.

Q. At what time was this?—A. To the best of my Knowledge, it was a little before Christmas in the Year that King George the First came in.

Q. Can you recollect whether before or after Christmas?

A. That was the time that Esquire Pigot had the Bonfire in Tyntern.

Q. Was it before or after that Bonfire?

A. Before the Bonfire, for we had it at Michaelmas.

Q. Did you ever see my Lady afterwards, and where?

A. I seen her in Dunmaine very often.

Q. When you saw her there, did you see any Child in and about that House?—A. I did indeed, upon my Word.

Q. What Child was it?

A. I seen the Child with Joan Laffan tending of it, at the time Madam Pigot sent a Letter by me there; I seen it mighty well dressed with Joan Laffan in Dunmaine House, at the time of the Letter I was sent with to be delivered to my Lady Altham.

Q. Did you deliver the Letter?

A. I gave it to Mrs. Heath, into her own Hands, and she went up Stairs with it to my Lady, and told me when she came down, that my Lady was unwell, and could not give me an Answer.

Q. Did

Vol. IX

Q. Did you see the Child at that Time?
 A. I did see the Child that very infant in the Presence of Mrs. Heath.
 Q. Was Mrs. Heath present?
 A. It was in her Presence the Minute that I delivered the Letter: Joan Laffan was in the Kitchen with the Child in her Arms.
 Q. What Time of the Year was this?
 A. It was about this Time of the Year, I cannot tell what Time.
 Q. Are you sure that Mrs. Heath was present and saw the Child?
 A. Joan Laffan had the Child in her Arms in the Presence of Mrs. Heath, when I delivered the Letter to her.
 Q. Mr. Morton.] At the Time you saw this Child, then or any other Time, what Notice did you see Mrs. Heath take of it?
 A. Why indeed, Sir, upon my Word, I know no more than that I was going to the Fair of Rosfs, and I saw her bring out the Child, and she put a Bundle of Cloaths into my Lady's Coach —
 Q. But I ask you, whether at the Time that you saw this Child when you went with the Letter, and then observed this Child in Mrs. Heath's Presence, you observed Mrs. Heath to take any Notice of it?
 A. She did take Notice of it, particular Notice, and was playing with it; indeed she was.
 Q. How old was the Child then?
 A. It was about a Year and half old, to the best of my Knowledge.
 Q. What sort of a Child was it?
 A. It was a pretty light-headed Child.
 Q. Did Mrs. Heath take Notice of it as the Child of a Person of Consequence?
 A. She did indeed.
 Q. As the Child of whom?
 A. As a Gentleman's Child.
 Q. Whose Child was it considered to be?
 A. It was considered my Lady Altham's and my Lord's; as I heard, it was called the young Lord, young Jemmy Annesley; any other I cannot tell you.
 Q. I ask you whether at any Time after this, you saw this Child in company with Lady Altham?
 A. I did.
 Q. Where was the next Place?
 A. I did not see it after that Time, to the best of my Knowledge, 'till I seen him at Rosfs at Madam Butler's.
 Q. Who did you see him with there?
 A. He was in Madam Butler's Arms, for he was brought from Dunmaine that very Day, and she received the Child and carried it up Stairs to my Lady.
 Q. Who brought it to Rosfs?
 A. I cannot tell.
 Q. At this Time in whose Company was it?
 A. There was Nobody but Mrs. Heath that came down Stairs.
 Q. Now I ask you whether the Child that you saw after at Rosfs was the same you saw at Dunmaine?
 A. I cannot tell that, Sir, but the Child was there.
 Q. Was Mrs. Heath present at Butler's?
 A. She was indeed.
 Q. Did she at that Place take any Notice of the Child?
 A. I cannot tell you, Sir, it was at the Head of the Stairs, and I cannot tell that.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Ed. Malone.] Do you remember the Year that you saw my Lady with Child?
 A. The Year King George the first came in.
 Q. Was she big with Child then?
 A. She was.
 Q. You say it was the Year King George came in?
 A. It was the Year he came in.
 Q. Was it not about Christmas you said?
 A. And was not that the Year King George came in?
 Q. I ask you, if you did not say you saw my Lady big with Child about Christmas?
 A. It was about Christmas.
 Q. Where did you see her then?
 A. At Tyntern.
 Q. Was it before or after Christmas?
 A. It was before.
 Q. You went from Mrs. Pigot's with a Letter to Dunmaine?
 A. I did, Sir.
 Q. What Time of the Year was it?
 A. In the Spring.
 Q. Of what Year?
 A. I cannot tell as to that.
 Q. Was it the next Spring after you saw her with Child?
 A. Indeed it was not, nor the Spring after.
 Q. See if you can recollect the Year?
 A. I cannot recollect the Year.
 Q. You knew Counsellor Pigot?
 A. I knew him very well.
 Q. Had any Accident happened to him then?
 A. No, Sir, it was after.
 Q. How soon after?
 A. I do not know.
 Q. Did not he break his Leg in the County of Tipperary?
 A. I cannot tell that.
 Q. Do you remember the Time he broke his Leg?
 A. I was not in the Family then, but in the Town.
 Q. Was Mrs. Pigot at home when he broke his Leg?
 A. I believe so.
 Q. Did she go to him?
 A. She went to him.
 Q. Did she go from Tyntern to him?
 A. She did.
 Q. Mr. Serj. Marshall.] The next Witness is one Thomas Elton, by Trade Glazier; he was called to Dunmaine upon some necessary Repairs of that House some time after the Birth of Mr. Annesley; and he will give your Lordship an Account that he saw this Child in the House, when he was at Work, greatly taken care of by his Father and Mother, and I believe by the Prisoner at the Bar.
 Q. Mr. Serj. Marshall.] If you have any new Witnesses to any new Matter, produce them; you have produced Witnesses to all the Points of the Indictment ready.

21. THOMAS ELTON.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Pray, Sir, what Trade do you follow?
 A. Thomas Elton.] I am a Glazier.
 Q. Do you know a Place called Dunmaine?
 A. I do, Sir.
 Q. Were you at any Time and when at that House?
 A. I served my Apprenticeship in Rosfs to James Morris of Rosfs, and I was at Dunmaine House several times.
 Q. In what Year?
 A. To the best of my Memory, I was bound Apprentice in the Year 1715.
 Q. And what Time was you at Dunmaine House?

A. I was there I believe at several Times.
 Q. Name any particular Time.
 A. I was there in that same Year, and in 1716 and 1717, and 'till the Separation of my Lord and Lady was.
 Q. Who did you see there?
 A. The Lord and the Lady was there.
 Q. Whom else did you see?
 A. I seen Arthur Lord Altham and his Lady, I seen Mary Heath.
 Q. Do you know any other of that Family that were there?
 A. I have remembered to see a Child there.
 Q. What Child was that?
 A. A Child as I thought was the Son of Arthur Lord Altham.
 Q. Where was Lady Altham when you saw this Son?
 A. In the House, Sir.
 Q. In what Manner was this Child treated?
 A. If you please I will tell you. I am a Glazier by Trade, and at Work in the House at several Times I was.
 Q. What Year was this that you saw the Child?
 A. In the Year 1716, to the best of my Knowledge; and upon the same, I was up in the Lady's Chamber at Work, and a Messenger came up, I did not turn my Face about, nor do not know who it was, and I heard a Messenger say, Young Master is below: in some time after my Lady called Mary Heath, and said, Go and bring up my Child. With that, I seen the Child coming up, and upon the same, my Lady embraced it as she was sitting upon the Bed.
 Q. What Year was this?
 A. I think it was 1716. And she kept it there, during the Time I was at Work, which was close upon an Hour.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Recorder.] Say in what time of the Year 1716 this was?
 A. I cannot tell.
 Q. Was it in Spring, or Summer, or Winter?
 A. I cannot tell, upon my Word.
 Q. Was it after, or before Christmas?
 A. Indeed I cannot tell, Sir.
 Q. Upon your Oath, was not it in the Year 1717?
 A. Upon my Oath, it was not in 1717.
 Q. Well then, what time was it in 1716?
 A. I cannot tell, Sir.
 Q. Upon your Oath, was it in 1716?
 A. It was in 1716, but I cannot particularly guess at the Time; I cannot contain that, it is so long ago.
 Q. Mr. Proby, Juror.] How old was the Child?
 A. As near as I can guess, a Year and half, or thereabouts.
 Q. Did you ever hold any Discourse within these few Days with any body upon the Road?
 A. I did not, upon my Oath.
 Q. Did you see Nobody in a Finglafs Chaise between Kilullen Bridge and this?
 A. I believe I saw your Face.
 Q. Do you remember what you told me then about your Knowledge of this Affair?
 A. I do not remember.
 Q. Mr. Proby.] You told me then you had a Subpoena the Day before, and thought it was very hard you should not know sooner what you had to swear; and swore by your Maker there, you knew nothing of the Matter. You said further, you were in so great a Passion you threw the Subpoena and Shilling into the Fire.
 Q. N. B. Witness Elton produced a Paper and said, Here is the Subpoena.
 Q. Mr. Solicitor General.] I am now, with some Satisfaction, to inform your Lordships that we shall call Mr. Higginson; he is a Person of some Reputation. We should not call him so early, but that he is falling sick and not able to attend any longer. This Gentleman will endeavour to prove that he was at Dunmaine at the Time of the Assizes of Wexford, and we will now produce him, though out of time, to shew where my Lady was at that time, and of her being then with Child. You will observe he is now called by way of Anticipation, and before his time.
 Q. Mr. Proby.] My Lord, I have something further to mention that this Man told me, which I had forgot.
 Q. Mr. Serj. Marshall.] I desire, my Lord, that Mr. Proby may be sworn.
 Q. Court.] You must be sworn, Sir.
 Q. Mr. Proby sworn to give Evidence to the Court, and his Fellow-jurors.] When he told me that it was very hard he should have such short Warning, and did not know what he had to swear, I desired him by all means to make haste, for the Trial would be very soon, to get to Town and be instructed there. So I will, says he; and immediately he set into a Gallop, and I never saw him 'till now since.

Q. Mr. Serj. Marshall.] What were the Words he said to you?
 A. He told me, that he was in such a Passion, that he threw the Subpoena and the Shilling into the Fire.
 Q. Mr. Solicitor.] It shews he was a most unwilling Witness.
 Q. Mr. Proby.] His Words were these, By G—d I know nothing of the Matter.
 Q. Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Do not you apprehend that the Man meant by that, that he did not know any thing of the Birth of this Child?
 A. I cannot tell what he meant.
 Q. Upon your Oath, Sir, what do you think he meant?
 A. Upon my Oath, Sir, I believe from the subsequent Expressions, that he knew nothing at all of the Affair.
 Q. Might not such a Person as you saw here clearly imagine, that his seeing a Child in that House was nothing material, if he knew nothing of the Birth of that Child?
 A. He told me he was summoned on the Trial between the old and young Lord, and swore by G—d he knew nothing of the Matter.
 Q. But might not he think that he knew nothing material?
 Q. Mr. Recorder.] The Jury will judge of that.

22. MR. THOMAS HIGGINSON.

Mr. Solicitor.] Mr. Higginson, pray did you know the late Lord and Lady Altham?
 A. Mr. Higginson.] Yes.
 Q. Do you remember to have seen either of them, and when, in the Year 1714 or 1715?
 A. I saw Lord Altham very often; I had the Honour to receive from the Year 1710, Arthur Lord Altham's Rents for Part of his Estate.
 Q. You saw my Lord Altham very often?

A. I saw him very often.
 Q. Do you remember to have seen either of them about the Middle of April 1715?—A. Yes, the Middle of April 1715 I called at Dunmaine.

Q. How came you to call there?
 A. I was Receiver to Arthur Lord Altham, and Arthur late Earl of Anglesea.

Q. Go on, and give an Account of what you know of this Family.
 A. My Lady I saw when I called at Dunmaine, my Lord was not at home.

Q. Do you know any thing of her being with Child?
 A. That time I saw her, I took her to be big with Child.

Court.] What time was that?—Q. In the Middle of April 1715.
 Mr. Solicitor.] What time in April do you say?
 A. The Middle, in Easter Week 1715.

Q. Where did you see her then?—A. At Dunmaine.
 Q. Inform the Court and Jury what Look or Appearance she had of being with Child.

A. She appeared to be big with Child to me, and towards the last Month of her time.

Q. Tell us wherefore it is that you have made yourself sure it was then?
 A. I had a Pocket-book in which I kept my Memorandums; I was receiving Rents for the Earl of Anglesea, and I sent my Son to receive the Rents of the Nanny-water Estate for Lord Altham; I knew he would be at home with the Money; and I called there for Lord Altham to send one to Eniscorthy with me for the Money.

The Witness's Voice being weak, Mr. Smith, an Officer of the Court, is directed to repeat what he should say.

Mr. Smith.] Tell what you say, Sentence by Sentence, and I will repeat it.

Mr. Higginson.] I called to see if Lord Altham was at home to send one with me to Eniscorthy, to get some Money for himself.

Q. Did you see my Lady or my Lord at that time?—A. My Lady only.

Q. How can you be particular concerning the time of your being at Dunmaine?

A. Because the Days that I received Lord Annesley's Rents I had it entered in my Pocket-book, and I gave the Book to the Prime Serjeant Malone at the last Trial.

Q. What were the Contents of that Book?—A. Lord Anglesea's Receipts.

Q. You say Lady Altham looked like a Woman big with Child?

A. She did.

Q. What Conversation had you with her then?

A. Very little, only that I asked for my Lord, and told her what I called for; for I dared not go into the House, for if I had, Lord Anglesea would have turned me out of the Receipt of his Rents.

Q. Tell what passed between my Lady and you.

A. I told her I called to get my Lord to send one with me to Eniscorthy; and my Lady came down and made me drink, and I drank a good Deliverance to her Ladyship in two Glasses of White-wine.

Q. Who did you see with my Lady?

A. The Maid was there, but I do not know her Name.

Q. Now tell us how did you dispose of yourself after you left Dunmaine?

A. I went to Eniscorthy, and dined with Major Rogers that Day there.

Q. Where did you go from thence?

A. To a Friend's House in Wexford early next Morning, Thursday Morning.

Q. Recollect the Day you were at Dunmaine?

A. I was there on Thursday going, and Tuesday coming back.

Q. What Day did you go from Dunmaine to Eniscorthy?

A. I came from Dunmaine to Eniscorthy on Tuesday.

Q. How long did you stay at Wexford then?

A. Not above an Hour I believe, we had but one Pint of Wine.

Q. Did you see Lord Altham at that Assizes?

A. Yes, he gave me the Receipt.

Q. Did you see my Lady there?—A. No, I did not, nor hear of her.

Q. Do you believe, if she had been there, you would not have known it? Could she be there, and you not see her?

A. She might be there for me.

Q. Pray, Sir, you say you were Receiver to my Lord Anglesea, did there come any Account to the Earl of Anglesea of the Birth of a Child?

Mr. Le Hunte.] Where was this Book kept?

A. When John Wilson came to receive the Rents of Lord Anglesea after me, I lent it to him.

Court.] Can you now say that it was the 18th of April, Easter-Tuesday, that you were at Dunmaine, since it appears by your Book you entered Receipts of that Date elsewhere?

A. I left eight Receipts for my Son and Murphy, to give the People that paid the Money.

Q. How came you to enter them the fifteenth and eighteenth?

A. Because they were to go there them Days.

Q. Since your Book shews your Hand-writing at another Place, the time you say you were at Dunmaine, can you, from any other Circumstance, recollect that it was Tuesday the 18th of April that you were at Dunmaine?

A. I believe it was Tuesday the 18th by my Pocket-book.

Court.] See and get an Almanack for the Year 1715.

Q. Does your Pocket-book and this Book contain the same things?

A. The Pocket-book is of different Things from this Book.

Mr. Le Hunte.] Did not you swear on the Trial in the Exchequer, that you received four Pounds from Mr. Houghton the Day before you went to Dunmaine?

A. I believe so.

Q. What Day did you receive that Money?

A. I believe it was on Monday Morning.

A. Several of Ross Tenants did come to Lord Anglesea in July.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Le Hunte.] Pray, Sir, do not you say that you were at Dunmaine on Easter-Tuesday?—A. I was there on Thursday and Tuesday.

Q. Was you there on Easter-Tuesday?—A. I was.

Q. What Year was it?

A. By my Books on Easter-Tuesday in the Year 1715.

Q. Where was you the Monday before?

A. I believe I was at Mr. Giffard's; I was at Houghton's; I know I was in that Neighbourhood on Easter-Monday.

Q. Upon your Oath, Sir, where were you on Easter-Monday?

A. I believe I was at Mr. Thomas Houghton's on Easter-Monday.

Q. How near is that to Dunmaine?—A. I believe four or five Miles.

Q. Why are you so certain of being at Dunmaine and at Houghton's on Easter-Monday and Tuesday?

A. Those were the Days I received Money, and they were entered in my Book, that is the Reason of my Certainty.

Q. Do you know a Place called Peppard's-Castle?—A. I do know it.

Q. How far from Dunmaine is Peppard's-Castle?

A. Which Way would you have me go?

Q. The common Road. How many Miles distant is it?

A. I believe sixteen Miles.

Q. Where were you upon Easter-Sunday?—A. I believe at Clomines.

Q. How near is that to Dunmaine?

A. Four or five Miles, I do not know well.

Q. How far is Clomines from Peppard's-Castle?

A. I believe as far as Dunmaine, it cannot be less than sixteen Miles.

Q. Look at that Paper and see if it be your Hand-writing; is that your Name?—A. I believe it is.

Q. When you gave Receipts, did you date them on the Days the Tenants paid you the Money?—A. Some I did, and some I did not.

Q. Explain yourself.

A. When I would go abroad, I would leave Receipts drawn according to the Days the Tenants promised to pay their Rents, some with my Wife, and some with my Son, and some with Timothy Murphy that received for me.

Q. Is that all your Hand-writing?—A. I believe it is.

Mr. Le Hunte.] I desire that Paper may be read against himself.

Clerk of the Crown.] Received from Mr. William White now and formerly the Sum of twenty-five Pounds Sterl. in full his last Michaelmas Rent, due out of Peppard's-Castle, &c. to the Right Hon. Arthur Earl of Anglesea, received by his Lops Order this 18th April 1715.

Tho. Higginson.

Court.] That is Easter-Monday that Year?

Mr. Higginson.] I will tell your Lordship how that was. I was to pay Major Rogers Money for Timber for my Lord Anglesea, and I left my Son the Receipt to get the Money, who was to meet me there with it.

Q. Is the Date your own Hand?—A. Yes, I believe it is.

Q. And did you date Receipts before you received the Money?

A. Yes, very often.

Mr. Le Hunte.] What time did you enter this Receipt in your Book?

A. When I came home again.

Q. When was that?—A. I entered it on Wednesday, when he brought me the Money to Eniscorthy.

Q. What Money did he bring?

A. He brought me sixty odd Pounds; I gave him eight Receipts to call upon the People with them, and I got the Money on Wednesday.

Q. When did you enter those Receipts in your Book?

A. I believe I entered them before I went from home.

Q. How so?—A. Because they promised me the Payment.

Q. Did you draw this Receipt at the time that it bears Date.

A. I gave this Receipt to Tim Murphy or my Son before I went away, and they told me they would be there that Day with the Money.

Q. See if this be your Book and Hand-writing?—A. It is.

Q. Was this Book kept by you?—A. It was. I lent it to Mr. Wilson.

Q. Is that Entry your Hand-writing?—A. It is my Hand-writing.

Q. When was it entered?—A. It was entered when I came back.

Mr. Mark Whyte.] Reads the Title, viz.

Q. What was the Denomination that Rent was paid for?

A. I do not know indeed, I know no Denomination now, but only Ballysep and Dunmaine.

Q. Did not you swear that you received from Mr. Giffard of Ballysep Ten Pounds on Tuesday?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. Was not that the Day you went to Dunmaine?

A. Yes, I believe I did that Morning.

Q. Did not you say, you received from Patrick Sutton twenty Pounds the Day before?

A. I received some on Friday, and Saturday, and wanted forty Shillings; and they sent it after me on Monday.

Q. Did you swear, or did you not, that you received Sutton's Money on Monday?

A. I did not on Monday. I wanted about forty Shillings, and I got that on Monday or Tuesday following.

Q. Upon your Oath, Sir, did you not swear that you received twenty Pounds from Colonel Sutton on Monday?

A. I do not know whether I did or no; I did receive twenty Pounds in all; but I said then as I say now, that there was forty Shillings behind and he sent it after me on Monday.

Q. What Day did you receive the Money from Mr. Giffard?

A. On Monday I believe.

Q. What did you receive the Money from Mr. Sutton for?

A. It was for the Rent of Clomines.

Q. Lo

Q. Look at that Book now; is that your Hand-writing?
A. The upper Part is, that is my Hand-writing.

Q. And whose is the other?

A. That is my Son's; I told Counsellor Ford so before at Wexford.

Q. Were you present at the Time it was entered?

A. No, he was at Ros, and Joe White the Merchant gave him a Bill for Thirty Pounds, and I allowed this as Cash, the Tenants all received it as Cash; they had a Share in it, and I allowed it as Cash.

Q. Why did not you make your Entries in your Book at that Period of Time?

A. I had not that Book with me; I had lent it to John Wilson.

Q. Was the Money paid by the Tenants at the Time set down in the Book?

A. That was the Bill that every one of them had a Share in.

Q. Was the 30l. received on the 5th of April?—A. The Bill was.

Q. Did not you swear you received the 30l. on Monday?

A. It was good 30l. to me, and so I swore I received it on Monday.

Q. Where is your Pocket-book?—A. I have it not now.

Q. Did not you swear upon your former Examination in the Exchequer, that you were Agent to my Lord Anglesea from the Year 1711, to the Year 1717?

A. No, not till the Year 1717; no, if it be 1717, it is wrong printed.

Q. Upon your Oath, was not you Lord Anglesea's Agent in the Year 1717?—A. I was not discharged till 1718 or 1719 for that matter, but Mr. Wilson came in before that.

Q. Did you continue Agent for my Lord Anglesea after the Year 1717?

A. No, nor that Year, but I received for him in 1716.

Q. You received in the Year 1716?—A. I did then in several Places.

Q. Upon your Oath, did you in 1717?

A. I cannot charge my Memory; I am sure I did in 1716.

Q. Look at this Bond, and see if it be your Hand-writing?

A. I did see it, it is.

Mr. Le Hunte.] My Lord, this Bond is to shew that he was discharged long before this Time, and we desire it may be read.

Mr. Marke Whyte reads part of the Bond, which bears Date the 26th Day of December 1715.

Mr. Le Hunte.] Did you ever settle any Account subsequent to the Account in this Book?—A. Yes, I did; six Months after.

Mr. Solicitor.] Would you be understood that that was the Book you carried about with you?

A. No, this was the Book that was left at home.

Q. What Book did you take with you commonly?

A. I carried a little Pocket-Book about me.

Mr. Recorder.] When you came home to that Book, did you make Entries different from your Pocket-book?—A. Some I did.

Q. How so? then you had no certain Guide for keeping your Accompts?

A. Whenever I was promised any Money, I entered it down in that Book the Day I expected to receive it, and left Receipts with my Wife or Son, for I was very much abroad.

Q. How could you enter the Day before you knew you would be paid?

A. They would keep the Receipts till they got the Money.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall.] My Lord, I desire the whole Conditions and all the Bond may be read; Mr. White read only a Part of it, and I must insist upon the whole being read, to shew that he might have received the Rents for a Year after the Date thereof.

Mr. Bowden reads the Bond as follows:

"Know all Men by these Presents, that I Thomas Higginson of Rahin-gurrin, in the County of Wexford, Gent. am held and firmly bound unto the Right Honourable Arthur Earl of Anglesea, in the Sum of one thousand Pounds Sterl. lawful Money of Great-Britain, to be paid to the said Court.] Not at all; he was superfed.

Court.] If you mean to produce other Evidence to the same Thing, I shall stop you; we have been near twelve Hours in Court, and cannot adjourn.

Mr. Edmond Malone.] And they said, my Lord, they would not take up eight Hours in ten, if the Trial should hold no longer.

Court.] Let us know your next Witness, and what to be examined to; say what they are.

Mr. Serj. Tisdall.] The next is one John Warren, produced to the same Purpose of several others.

Court.] Let him stay then. Is he a Man of Figure? What's his Addition?

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] He is a Gentleman, my Lord.

Court.] Let me tell you, there is no Safety in a Multitude of Witnesses.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] A Multitude of People agreeing to the same Fact greatly corroborates it.

23. Mr. JOHN WARREN.

Mr. Serj. Tisdall.] Mr. Warren, was you ever at Dunmaine?

Mr. Warren.] I never lived at Dunmaine, but I belonged to one Mr. Chambers, that lived at ———, and went there several Times about his Business; my Lord's Steward would buy fat Sheep from him---

Arthur Earl of Anglesea, or his certain Attorney, Executors or Administrators, to the which Payment well and truly to be made, I do bind myself, my Executors and Administrators, firmly by these Presents, sealed with my Seal, and dated this twenty-sixth Day of December, Anno Dom. 1715."

"Whereas the above-named Arthur Earl of Anglesea did constitute and appoint the above-bound Thomas Higginson to be Collector and Receiver of his Rents, Arrears of Rents, Revenues, Duties and Profits of his Lordship's Estate in the County of Wexford for some Time past. And whereas the said Arthur Earl of Anglesea did on the first Day of May last annul and make void the said Power: Now the Condition of the above-written Obligation is such, that if the said Thomas Higginson, his Executors or Administrators, do and shall, on or before the first Day of May next ensuing the Date of these Presents, deliver up to the said Arthur Earl of Anglesea, his Heirs or Assigns, a just and true Account of all such Rents, Duties, Arrears of Rents, Fines, Issues, Goods, Chattels, Profits and Perquisites, as he the said Thomas Higginson hath at any Time heretofore levied or received for the Use of the said Earl, as his Collector or Receiver, and do and shall then pay, or cause to be paid unto the said Arthur Earl of Anglesea, his Heirs or Assigns, all such Sum and Sums of Money, as shall then appear to be and remain due to the said Earl, his Heirs or Assigns, on balancing of such Accompts; and also do and shall at any Time when demanded, well and truly account for, and pay unto him the said Arthur Earl of Anglesea, his Heirs or Assigns, any Sum or Sums of Money, that shall or may at any Time or Times hereafter, within the Space of one Year from the Date above-mentioned appear to have been received by him, the said Thomas Higginson, for the Use, or on the Account of the said Earl, and not accounted for with him by the said Thomas Higginson, on or before the said first Day of May next ensuing (if any such there be) that then the above Obligation shall be void, or else it shall stand in full Force and Virtue."

Sealed and delivered in Presence of us,

Den. Brien, Tho. Higginson.
John Wilson, Junior. 715.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall.] He had a Right, it appears, to collect all the Arrears that were due for a Year, he had a Year allowed him to gather them in.

Mr. Recorder.] The Bond says, if it shall appear within the Space of one Year, that he had received any Sum or Sums of Money; but there is no Power given him to receive any Rents.

Mr. Le Hunte.] Were not you Tenant to Part of Arthur Lord Altham's Estate?—A. Not at all.

Q. Did not you hold a House from him in Ros?

A. I never had a House in Ros.

Q. Who came into Possession of Lord Altham's Estate upon his Death?

A. I do not know, I was not employed then.

Q. Was you Receiver to Lord Altham till his Death?

A. No, till the Year 1717 or 1718.

Q. How far is Ballydaboy from Dunmaine?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. How near is it to Peppard's-Castle?—A. I believe within a Mile.

Q. Is that your Hand-writing?—A. Yes, I saw it before.

Q. Look at it again, was it entered the Time it bears Date?

A. I believe the Wednesday before I left home.

Q. How came you to enter it then?

A. There was a Fair to be on the 19th, and that was the Reason.

Q. Were you ever at Dunmaine, Sir, while my Lord and Lady Altham lived there?—A. I was there several Times whilst they lived there.

Q. Did you see ever a Child there?—A. Indeed I did see a Child there.

Q. What Sort of a Child?—A. They called him Jemmy, he was a Boy.

Q. Whose Child was he?—A. I do not know whose Child, but my Lady called him her Child, and came one Evening and asked, How does my Child do? putting out her Hand to him.

Q. Who did you see the Child with?—A. With a Servant.

Q. Can you say whose Child it was?—A. It is impossible for me to know whose Child it was, my Lord called him his Son.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Le Hunte.] How do you get your Livelihood?

A. I have a Livelihood.

Q. Have you any Trade?—A. I have no Trade.

Q. Upon your Oath, are not you a Beggar?

A. I am not; I have something of a Livelihood.

Court.] Unless you can now tell us what your Witness will say, I assure you we won't have the Time of the Court taken up in this manner.

Mr. Archdale.] For my part, my Lord, if they bring a hundred such Witnesses, I'll never think it worth my while to listen to them.

Mr. Daly.] We'll bring but as few as we possibly can.

Mr. Recorder.] We shall bring very good Witnesses, and come to the Point as soon as we can, when we begin our Defence; but these Gentlemen, I perceive, will not give us an Opportunity.

Court.]

Court. J. Unless you have something new to offer, or a Man of greater Figure or Honour to corroborate what these Witnesses have said, we shall not hear him. If you have any Person of undoubted Credit, in the Name of God produce him.

Mr. MacManus. J. We have many more to examine, and those Witnesses of undoubted Credit, and I hope the Court will indulge us so far as to hear their Evidence. We have examined many, it is true, and I beg Leave to say there has been a great Consistency of Truth in their Testimony, and they have sworn very materially; and, my Lord, if we falsify the Traveller in any one Point, we will falsify her in the whole; we have twelve Men of Honour to try her, and I desire we may be permitted to call Robert Kennight, he is a very material Person in my Brief.

Court. J. What is it that you produce him to?

Mr. MacManus. J. He is a material Witness upon my Paper; he will prove to your Lordship that Lady Altham (which is the first Point before you upon this Perjury) was big with Child. My Lord, they will not let me open his Evidence any further, because he is here.

Court. J. Bring him up.

24. ROBERT KENNIGHT.

Mr. MacManus. J. Did you know the late Lord and Lady Altham?

Robert Kennight. J. Yes, I did.

Q. Where did you live when you knew them?—A. In Garryduffe first.

Q. Did you know them while they lived at Dunmaine?—A. I did, Sir.

Q. How far from that did you live?

A. In the Bounds of Dunmaine, they joined together.

Q. Was my Lady, or was she not with Child at any Time that you knew her at Dunmaine?—A. In my Opinion she was.

Q. Have you any Reason for that Opinion?—A. All the Reason I have for it is, because I seen her big, and like a Woman with Child.

Q. Did you see any Child in the House of Dunmaine?—A. I did.

Q. Did you know of any Bonfires and Rejoicings upon any, and what particular Occasion?

A. I did, for Joy about the young Child that my Lord and Lady had.

Q. Pray, do you know Mrs. Heath?

A. I never knew her, I made no Acquaintance with her.

Q. Do you remember to have seen her at Dunmaine?

A. I never did see her, or know her at all.

I shall ask no more Questions.

Court. J. How many Bonfires were there made?—A. None but one.

Q. Where was it?

A. At the great House, in the Back-side in the Avenue.

Mr. Solicitor. J. My Lord, we have examined such a prodigious Number of Witnesses to one Point, that, if my Judgment had prevailed, you should have had an End of them long ago; but we shall now call our last Witness for the present, and trouble your Lordship no more, except in the Counter-Proof upon the Reply we should have Occasion to produce fresh Proof. This Witness is a Witness that was examined upon the last Trial in Ejectment in the Exchequer, her Name is Joan Laffan.

Court. J. Why did not you call her first?

Mr. Solicitor. J. We look upon her to be a very material one, and hope she will satisfy your Lordship and the Jury of this whole Affair.

Court. J. I was wondering what was become of her all this Time.

25. JOAN LAFFAN.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall. J. Mrs. Laffan, did you know my Lord and Lady Altham?—Joan Laffan. J. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was you ever a Servant there?—A. Yes, Sir.

Q. What was your Service?

A. I was Chamber-Maid when I came there first.

Q. What Time did you come there first?

A. The Year after the Death of the Queen: I was at Colonel Deane's at her Death, and came the Year after to Lord Altham's.

Q. Pray, how long did you continue in that Employment of Chamber-Maid?—A. About a Year and a Half, and then I was employed to nurse Master Jemmy Annesley.

Q. How old was he then?

A. Near upon a Year and Half, or thereabouts.

Q. Pray now, whose Child was he?—A. My Lord and Lady Altham's.

Q. By whom were you employed to nurse him?

A. By my Lord and Lady Altham.

Q. Pray, what Time did you go into my Lord's Service?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, it is the Harvest; I lived at Colonel Deane's till after King George the First came in better than Half a Year, then I left it, and was a little while with my Friends, and then went to Lord and Lady Altham's.

Q. Pray, can you tell in what Month you went there?

A. I cannot recollect the Month, but, to the best of my Knowledge, about Harvest.

Q. In what Year was it?—A. I cannot exactly tell what Year.

Q. But you say it was the Year after the King came in?

A. The Year after, or thereabouts.

Q. How long after you lived as a Chamber-Maid was this Child put into your Care by my Lady?

A. Near upon a Year and a Half after, or thereabouts.

Q. Who was it put the Child into your Care?—A. Lady Altham.

Q. Pray, did Mrs. Heath know that you took Care of it?

A. She did, Sir.

Q. Where was the Child before he was put into your Care?

A. The Child was at Nurse before; when he came from the Wet-nurse, he was put into my Care.

Q. Pray now, how old was the Child when you were hired?

A. I believe the Child was three or four Months old when I was hired, there or thereabouts.

Q. How old do you say he was?

A. About three Months, or better, I cannot exactly tell that.

Q. How old was the Child when put into your Care?

A. Near upon a Year and Half.

Q. How long after you were hired was he put into your Care? About what Time of the Year?—A. About a Year and Half after.

Q. Was you a Year and Half Chamber-Maid before you had the Care of him?—A. Yes, I believe I was near upon it.

Q. How long did you attend this Child before my Lady went away?

A. Half a Year.

Q. How long did you attend the Child before my Lord and Lady parted?

A. About two Years old the Child was when they parted; so that I attended him Half a Year before my Lady went away.

Q. Before this Child was put into your Care, where was it?

A. At the Wet-Nurse.

Q. You say, that before this Child was put into your Care, it was put unto the Wet-Nurse?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it ever brought up by her to Dunmaine House?

A. Yes, it was; sometimes my Lady would go on fine Days and fetch it in the Coach with her, and the Nurse would bring it other Times.

Q. Was Mrs. Heath in the Service then?—A. She was indeed.

Q. Pray how did my Lady behave to it?

A. My Lady was very fond of it.

Q. Who used to dress the Child?

A. Mrs. Heath dressed it; its Day Cloaths were kept in the House, and the Child was dressed by her and my Lady; and the Night Cloaths were kept with the Nurse.

Q. How did Mrs. Heath treat this Child? Was she employed in any Sort about it?

A. Sometimes to dress him, and take him in her Arms that Way, very fond. I know that when there were Jellies made, or Jellies left, it was given to the Nurse, and put into her Whey and Broths to drink.

Q. Was you at Dunmaine at the Time of the Separation?

A. I was there.

Q. Where was this Child then?—A. In the House.

Q. How did my Lady behave to the Child at parting?

A. She desired very hard to take the Child with her, and my Lord would not let her have him.

Q. Pray, was there any thing happened particular to the Child at the Time of the parting?

A. My Lady desired very hard to have the Child; she sent down for Mr. Taylor to come up and hand her down Stairs; so, when he came up, I hope, says she, you had not a Hand in this wicked Plot contrived for me. He said, No, he had not. Says she, If you are so good as to prevail on my Lord to let me have the Child, I do not care if I never let my Foot in Dunmaine again.

Q. What happened upon that?—A. I know that she said so, for I stood at the Stair-head when Mr. Taylor handed her down Stairs.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Spring. J. Where was you hired into the Service of Lord and Lady Altham?—A. My Lady hired me.

Q. Where?—A. In her own House.

Q. Are you sure my Lady hired you?

A. She did indeed, she did not know me, and she sent to a Gentlewoman to get a Character of me, and she said she would give her Word for 1000*l.* for me.

Q. Who was that Gentlewoman?

A. It was Mrs. Synnot, she sent her Footman to her.

Q. You say my Lady was at Dunmaine at that Time?—A. She was.

Q. Upon your Oath, did she continue the whole Month of August at Home?—A. I cannot tell whether she did or not.

Q. Was she, or was she not at Home the Month of August?

A. I cannot tell whether she was at home or not.

Q. Did she lye a Week abroad at any Time in August?

A. I cannot recollect.

Q. Was she a Fortnight abroad in August?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Was she the whole Month of August abroad?

A. I cannot discharge my Memory.

Q. Was she the whole Month of September?—A. I cannot discharge my Memory when she was at home or abroad.

Q. Was she the Month of October?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Was she in November?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Or December?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Was she the Month of January?

A. I thought I did not come here to scold.

Q. Was she absent for three Months together?

A. I cannot tell but she did go away for three Months.

Q. You say that my Lady used to go in a Coach to visit this Child?

A. She did.

Q. Did not you say that the Child was brought every Day to the House by the Nurse?—A. Sometimes the Nurse came up with him, and sometimes my Lady went to the Nurse's to see him.

Q. Did not this continue every Day during the whole Time that the Child was at Nurse?

A. Sometimes, I do not say every Day; but sometimes my Lady would go there, and sometimes the Nurse would bring him to the House.

Q. To what Place did you go after you left that Service?

A. I went to Cheek-Point.

Q. Do you know Mr. William Bolton?—A. I do.

Q. Is he an honest Man?—A. I believe he is.

Q. Do you know Maynard Walker?—A. Yes.

Q. Is he an honest Man?—A. He has a very indifferent Character, and all the Family; I know they helped to ruin me.

Q. Do you know William Elms?—A. I do.

Q. What Character has he?—A. I see nothing by the Man.

Q. What Character did you give him when you were examined in the Exchequer?—A. What Character did he give me?

Q. Did not you swear then that he was an honest Man?

A. I do not say to the contrary now, do I?

Q. Did not you then say, that you could make him blacker than he could you?—A. I do not know but I did.

Q. You say, you saw the Child in the Coach with my Lady when she was going away?—A. I did, and she kissed the Child in the Carriage, and the Child was taken away from her.

Q. What Time of the Day was that?—A. It was after Dinner-time, between that and Evening; towards the Evening.

Q. Repeat that again.—A. It was towards the Evening.

Q. Who used to visit at Dunmaine when you lived there?

A. I

A. I cannot tell the Company exactly.
 Q. Did Mrs. Giffard visit my Lady?—A. She did sometimes.
 Q. Did my Lady visit her?
 A. My Lady visited her sometimes, I cannot tell exactly how often.
 Q. Did you know Mr. Palliser at that House?—A. I did.
 Q. How long did he use to stay there at a Time?
 A. I cannot tell how long.
 Q. Did he see the Child?—A. He did see it.
 Q. Did he know whose Child it was?
 A. He knew the Child was my Lord and Lady's.
 Q. Had he ever the Child in his Arms?
 A. I cannot swear he had the Child in his Arms.
 Court.] Do you know Edmond Howlett?—A. I do.
 Q. Did my Lady go away in a Coach or Chariot?
 A. To the best of my Knowledge it was a four-wheeled Chair.
 Q. Was any Body with her?—A. Yes, Mrs. Heath.
 Q. Was there any Body else with her?
 A. Nobody else that I know of.
 Q. Was the Child in the Chair?—A. I seen the Child was taken to her, and she kissed the Child when it was taken from her.
 Q. Did she desire to have the Child brought to her?
 A. She desired the Child to be handed to her, and then she kissed it.
 Q. How many Horses were there to the Chair?
 A. To the best of my Knowledge there were two.
 Q. Was the Chaise open before or at the Top?
 A. Upon my Word I cannot give my Word for that.
 Q. Was it an open Chair, or a Chariot?
 A. I cannot give my Word for it, what Carriage it was.
 Q. Was it before or after Dinner my Lady went away?
 A. It was after Dinner, Sir.
 Mr. Spring.] Was you ever in the House the Child was nursed in?
 A. I was.
 Q. Was the Wall a Mud or Stone Wall?—A. Stone and Mud, Mortar wall, Stone and Mortar mixed, Stone in the lower Part.
 Q. Do you know Sarah Weedon?—A. I did.
 Q. What did you tell Mr. Bolton concerning my Lady's having or not having a Child?—A. I never told him any Thing, for he never talked to me of the Subject at all.

Mr. Solicitor.] My Lord, I told you she should be the last Witness upon the direct Examination; we reserve a Power to reply to any new Points, if necessary.

Court.] You shall, to any new Facts.

Here the Evidence of the Prosecutor was closed.

Court.] How many Witnesses have you, Gentlemen of Counsel for the Traverser? Have you any Objection on either Side to the Jury having some Refreshment?

Counsel.] We have no Objection.

Jury.] My Lord, we chuse to go on, and will not have any Refreshment at all; but desire Mr. Recorder will consider how long we have been in the Box, and that he will shorten the Trial as much as is consistent with the Benefit of his Client.

Mr. Recorder.] My Lord, it is with the utmost Concern that I am to lay any Thing before the Jury at so late an Hour, but as this is a Matter of great Consequence, I am sure they will hear me with Patience, and I shall make it as short as possible in Ease of the Jury.

My Lord, there are two Points that now are in question; for though there are four or five Assignments of Perjury, yet they all end in two; one is, that Lady Altham was with Child while the Traverser, Mrs. Heath, lived with her; and the other, that she was brought-to-bed of a Son.

My Lord, it appears from the Evidence of the Prosecutor, that my Lady Altham came first into this Kingdom in the Month of October 1713, and the Fact is so, and that she never was in this Kingdom before. This will be material when I come to speak to the Evidence, and remark upon the Particulars of it. It appears from the Evidence, that my Lady came to the House of Mr. Briscoe in this Town; there she stayed till some Time in December, that my Lord Altham came to Town and was reconciled to her, and though they have endeavoured to prove that they left Briscoe's, and went into Lodgings before they went down to Dunmaine, we shall prove that my Lord Altham remained at Captain Briscoe's with my Lady, and never went to Mrs. Vice's, the Place they pretend he removed to, till he went to Dunmaine in the County of Wexford. We shall prove that they remained there, and went from the House of Briscoe to Dunmaine.

My Lord, we shall prove, though they swear that they stayed but three or four Days at Briscoe's after my Lord came, for so Alice Betts and the other Witnesses have sworn, that they stayed at Briscoe's during their Continuance in Dublin; and that my Lady, when she lodged at Mr. Briscoe's, hired Mrs. Setwright, the House-keeper, though those Persons could not remember her Name. We shall prove that Mary Waters was hired for the Chamber-maid, and Betty Doyle for Laundry-maid, and that my Lady sent these Servants down from Briscoe's to Dunmaine before her, two Days before my Lord and Lady set out; and these People will prove that these Servants set out from thence to Dunmaine. We shall prove when they came to Dunmaine what Servants were there, for it will be material to the Jury to know who they were, because we shall not give Evidence of roving, straggling People. We shall prove by a concurrent Testimony of all the Servants of the Family, that my Lady never was with Child at Dunmaine, or any where else in Ireland. We shall prove, that in the Months of September, October and November 1714, when it is sworn she was in this Town sick, and visited by a Physician, that she was then in the County of Wexford. We shall prove that one Mrs. Giffard, a near Neighbour and Acquaintance of Lady Altham's, had Twins, and that my Lady was at the Groaning, and so far from being with Child, that she lamented her not having the Prospect of a Child; and we shall prove that my Lady, at the Time that these Witnesses for the Prosecutor swear that she was at Dunmaine, and near lying-in, and lay the Time in April or May 1715, we shall prove by a Cloud of Witnesses, that she went to the Spring Assizes of Wexford that Year, was at the Assizes, and at the Trial of one Masterfon and Walsh for enlisting Pretender's Men. We shall prove by several Witnesses of undoubted Credit, and by the Person where she lodged, that she was there all the Time of the Assizes, and was there the 25th Day of April, and at the Trial of these People, when Higginson swore that she was at home and big with Child; and it will appear to your Lordship, that she was so far from being with Child, that she did not return to her own House till the twenty-second of April. We shall then prove; that after that she came to Dublin; that she came here in May following, which, if what they swear be true, could not be; for they say she lay-in then, and that it was above three Weeks before she got out of her Chamber. We shall prove that she was in Dublin the King's Birth-day, when the Fire-works were made on that Occasion, which was on the twenty-eighth of May. My Lord, one would imagine that when we shall have given you the concurrent Testimony of all the Servants of the Family, and other undoubted Witnesses touching these Facts, we should have little Occasion for further Proof; but we shall go to Facts that will overturn their Witnesses, and shew that all this is a made, contrived Affair. My Lord, they pretend that this Child was christened, and that Mrs. Pigot and Counsellor Cliff and Mr. Colclough were Godfathers and Godmother; they swear that they were all present at this Christening. These are Circumstances we shall shew to be false; and if we can prove that Mrs. Pigot was not in the County of Wexford from November in the Year 1714, till after the Separation in the Year 1716, all this Contrivance must fall to the Ground. My Lord, we shall prove it incontestably; we shall prove that Mrs. Pigot came to Dublin from the County of Wexford in November 1714, that she was in Dublin in the Year 1715, that her Husband broke his Leg, and happened to lye ill in the County of Tipperary, and that she went to him and continued there, and never returned to the County of Wexford from November 1714, till some Time in the Year 1717, which was after the Separation; and we shall prove what will fix this, that the great Eclipse was the twenty-second of April 1715. Now, they lay that this Christening was in May or June that Year; for they say Lady Altham was brought-to-bed in May, so that Mrs. Pigot must have been in the County of Wexford, if at all at the Christening, in May or June. Now, my Lord, we'll prove that at the Time of the Eclipse, Mrs. Pigot was with her Husband, and was actually in the County of Tipperary the twenty-second of April 1715, and continued there many Months after. When we have proved this, we shall prove that Mr. Cliff was not in the County of Wexford in May or June 1715, the Time of his being sworn to be Godfather to this Child; we shall prove he was in Dublin during the Term, and continued sick here after, till the Middle of June. We shall prove, that at the Time of Mr. Colclough's being said to be Godfather, there was a particular Quarrel between him and my Lord Altham; besides that, Mr. Colclough was a Papist at that Time, and died one; and then you'll judge whether they would have chosen a Papist Godfather to a Child born to inherit so great an Estate and such Honours. When we have proved this, we apprehend that this concurrent Testimony of all the Servants of the Family of my Lady's having never been with Child, and the Proof of her being at Wexford at the Assizes, and after in Dublin, and other Circumstances, will convince any reasonable Man that this is all a Fiction. I could open many other Circumstances, but rather chuse to spare the Time, and let the Jury hear the Witnesses.

Mr. Smith.] My Lord, the first Witness we produce is Mrs. Vice; you have heard of one Vice in Essex-street, to whose House Lady Altham was supposed to go to lodge the first Time she was in Dublin, after my Lord and she were reconciled at Mr. Briscoe's: We have the Daughter of that Lady, and she'll give your Lordship a true Account of that Transaction, and the true Periods of Time concerning their lodging there.

The Examination of the Traverser's Witnesses began at a Quarter before Nine o'Clock at Night.

I. MRS. LETITIA VICE.

Mr. Daly.] Mrs. Vice, I'd ask you a Question, Madam. Pray, do you remember when the late Lady Altham came first into this Kingdom?

Mrs. Vice.] I do remember her. Not when she landed; but I remember her being in the Kingdom.

Q. The first Time that you remember her being in the Kingdom, where did she lodge?—A. I heard she lodged at Capt. Briscoe's.

Mr. Serj. Tisdall.] I am to inform you, you are not to tell what you heard.

Mr. Daly.] Pray, Madam, where did you first see her?

A. I first saw her in my Mother's House in Essex-street.

Q. Pray, can you recollect the first Time that she came to lodge at your Mother's?—A. Indeed, Sir, I can't.

Q. Is it from the Country she came, or from England?

A. From the Country, I believe.

Q. Pray, Madam, what Time was it?—A. Indeed, Sir, I can't tell.

Q. Do you remember any thing of her living at Briscoe's?

A. Yes, I heard she lived there.

Q. Do you remember the Time, Madam, when she lodged there?

A. I only heard she lodged there; I never was to see her there.

Q. Do you know Mrs. Cole?—A. No, Sir.

Q. Do you remember whether my Lady came from the Country to your Mother's?—A. I believe from the Country.

Q. What Reason have you to believe so?

A. I have Reason to believe so.

Q. Why? Did you observe what People came with her?

A. I did not, Sir, I was then very young.

Q. Do you remember the Fire-works that were at the Birth-Day of King George the First; and were my Lord and Lady at your Mother's House then?—A. I remember them being at my Mother's House one Birth-day of King George the First.

Q. How often were they at your Mother's?

A. They were there twice, and I believe once was before the Birth-day; they were there at the Death of the Queen.

Q. Was that the first Time of their being there?

A. I cannot tell whether that was the first Time.

Q. Were they ever there lodging but twice?

A. But twice, to the best of my Knowledge.

Q. Was your Father living then?—A. My Father was dead.

Q. Will you please, Madam, to give a particular Account of the Times they were there?

A. I can't give a particular Account, but that they were there when the Queen died, and one Birth-day of King George the First.

Q. What Day of the Week was that Birth-day?

A. It

A. It was on a Saturday.

Q. Why do you remember it to be on a Saturday?

A. I remember the Restauration was on Sunday, and my Lady had a mind to have a Bonfire made before the Door, and my Mother was not willing there should be one, and there was some Dispute on that; and that makes me remember the Day of the Week.

Q. Do you recollect, Madam, whether there were any Fireworks that Birth-day?—A. I believe there was, Sir.

Q. Did you see any body at those Fireworks looking at them?

A. We were pretty near the Custom-house, and I believe I might see some of them there; but was not with my Lady to see them.

Q. But you say the first Time my Lord and Lady lodged at your Mother's, they came from the Country?

A. To the best of my Knowledge they did.

Q. Pray, Madam, when first my Lady came from England, did they come to visit at your House or not?

A. My Lady dined with my Lord there; but I don't believe she came to lodge till after she came from the Country.

Mr. Morton.] There was a Direction of your Lordship's, that the Witnesses should be kept together till called for; but I am to inform your Lordship here are two of the Witnesses walking about the Court.

Mr. Annesley.] I beg, my Lord, I may explain this Matter to your Lordship; I've been with them for these three Hours, and Mr. Hervey did not leave the Place till it was said he was sent for by the Court.

Mr. Daly.] My Lord, the Witness says, she remembers, that when it was said that my Lady came from England, that my Lord and she came to dine with her Mother.

Q. Where did they lodge at that Time?

A. I heard they lodged at Capt. Briscoe's.

Q. Did they lodge at your House then?

A. Not when they came to dine there.

Q. Did my Lady ever lodge there before?—A. No.

Q. You remember those Fireworks that were at the Time they lodged at your Mother's House; how long did they continue in Town after?

A. I can't tell.

Q. Well, Madam, the last Time, which is the second Time that they came to your Mother's, how long did they continue there?

A. I can't be exact to the Time; they were there a good while, but I can't tell how long, Sir.

Q. What Time of the Year was it?

A. I can't recollect the Time of the Year.

Q. What Time of the Year were they there the second Time?

A. They were there the eight and nine-and-twentieth of May; but how long before that I can't tell.

Q. What Reason have you to be exact as to those Days?

A. Why, the first being the Birth-day, Sir, and the Fire-works being at that Time, and my Lady's Desire of having a Bonfire on Sunday Night, which was the Restauration.

Q. How long did they continue in Town after?

A. I can't be exact how long they continued in Town.

Q. Do you remember any thing of Twelfth-Night?

A. I do remember my Lady was there one Twelfth-Night, but what Year I cannot tell; and I remember there was a Twelfth-Cake.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] You say, you are sure that Lady Altham was at your House at the Death of the late Queen Anne?—A. I am, Sir.

Q. Pray, do you remember the 20th of October following that?

A. No, Sir, I don't.

Q. Do you remember any thing remarkable that happened that Day?

A. I don't.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] I tell you then, that was the Coronation of King George the First.

A. I ask you now, were there not the Fire-works on that Day in Dublin?—A. I don't know indeed.

Q. Do you remember any thing particular of the 20th of October?

A. I do not, Sir.

Q. Can you take upon you to say, that Lord and Lady Altham were not in Dublin in October 1714?

A. I can't take upon me to say whether they were or not.

Q. Can you, that they were not in November 1714?—A. I can't, Sir.

Q. You mentioned a Twelfth-Day; now I ask you, can you say they were not here on the Twelfth-Day in 1714?

A. I can't say that; but my Lady was one Twelfth-day at my Mother's.

Q. Can you say it was not that Year?

A. I can't say whether it was or not.

Q. Pray, can you say, since the only Reason you give was, that there were Fireworks, that it was not the Fireworks on the Twentieth of October 1714?

A. I say it was not that Day that I remark; it was the Twenty-eighth of May, Saturday, and the Sunday was the Restauration.

Q. Can you say that that was not the twenty-eighth of May 1716?

A. Indeed I can't take it upon me to fix the Year; but believe that it was the Year 1715, and my Reason for it was, that it was Saturday.

Q. I ask you, Madam, can you say that it was not May 1716?

A. I do not believe it was May 1716; I say it was on a Saturday, whatever was the Year it was in; whether it was the Year 1715, or 1716, it was on a Saturday, and that was the Year.

Court.] Saturday was the Day in 1715 by the Almanack.

Mr. Serjeant Marshall.] Do you know one Catharine MacCormack?

A. I do, she was my Mother's Servant.

Q. Was she a Servant in the Family at the Time Lady Altham lodged there?—A. She was.

Q. Do you remember that there was any Disturbance or Quarrel between Lord and Lady Altham, while at your House?

A. I do not remember any Particulars of that Sort at all; I was too young to make Observations of that Kind.

Mr. Harward.] You must have been very young indeed at that Time, Madam!—A. Not so young, perhaps, as you may imagine, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Pray, give me leave to ask you how old you were then?—A. I am now three-and-forty, Sir.

Q. Did you never hear of my Lord's sending for Mrs. Lucas the Midwife?—A. I never did.

Q. Was she a noted Midwife at that Time?—A. I believe so, Sir.

Q. She lived near you, Madam?—A. She did so.

Q. Was my Lady at any Time confined at your House?

A. I do not know.

Q. Did Doctor Jemmat ever visit her?—A. I do not know but he might.

Q. And you do not know but my Lady was here in October, November, December and January 1714?—A. I do not know.

Q. What Cloaths did my Lord and Lady wear when they came to your House first?

A. Indeed, Sir, I cannot tell. You could not tell, I suppose, what Cloaths I have on now at such a Distance of Time.

Q. What Cloaths did they wear generally?

A. I do not know; I know my Lady was in Town in the Queen's Mourning. I have seen her too in Colours, in a yellow and silver Silk, a blue and a white Damask.

Q. What was your Reason for fixing the Birth-day to Saturday?

A. My Reason was, because my Lady would have a Bonfire on Sunday, and my Mother was not willing there should be one, and there was a Dispute about it.

Q. What was the Objection your Mother had to the making it?

A. It was, that as she was a Widow, she thought such a Thing as a Bonfire was not agreeable to her, and that was the Reason.

Q. What Day did the King's Birth-day happen on in the Year 1720?

A. I do not know; but my Lady could not be at our House in the Year 1720, because my Mother had left the House.

Court.] The Witness said that the Birth-day that Lady Altham was at her Mother's House was on a Saturday, and whatever Year that happened on, that was the Year. And that was the Year 1715, by the Almanack.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] You mentioned a Twelfth-cake, I think?

A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Was that the first or second Time Lord and Lady Altham were at your Mother's?

A. I cannot be particular whether first or second.

Q. Pray, Madam, how long is it since you first recollected that this Birth-day was on a Saturday?

A. Since I was asked whether my Lady was in Town on a Birth-day.

Q. How long is it since you looked into an Almanack about this?

A. I never looked into an Almanack 'till after I had told that it was on a Saturday, and the Restauration on Sunday, but never till then.

Q. Were not you in Town when the last Trial was in the Exchequer?

A. I was, Sir.

Q. Were not you then applied to?—A. I was applied to.

Q. And did you come?—A. I did not come.

Q. How so?

A. Because I could not recollect any particular Passages at that Time.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Why then it was not till after the Trial that you were set right.

Mr. Daly.] Who applied to you to appear at the Exchequer?

A. There came a Gentleman from Capt. Annesley to know if I knew any thing of this Affair. I sent word I did not, and if there had not been a particular Question asked me about the Fireworks, I should not have recollected.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Who asked that particular Question about the Fireworks?—A. I cannot tell who it was.

Q. From whom were you asked that Question?

A. It was from Mr. Annesley's Family. Mr. MacKercher and Annesley before that came to me to know what I knew of my Lady's lodging at my Mother's; and I told them I knew nothing particular about it.

Q. Who asked you the particular Question about the Fireworks?

A. It was Capt. Annesley's and Lord Anglesea's Friends.

Q. Was this at the Time of the Trial?

A. I do not know when the Trial was.

Q. I tell you then, it began the 11th of November 1743, and lasted for twelve Days; did they ask that Question during that Time?

A. They only applied to me in general, to know if I knew any thing of the Time of my Lady Altham's lodging at my Mother's, and I told them I could not recollect.

Q. Did they at that Time put this particular Question about the Fireworks?—A. They did not.

Q. Did they any Time before the Trial was over?

A. No, they did not. Mr. MacKercher came to me when he came over first, to inquire about my Lady's lodging at my Mother's. I told him I recollected nothing particular about it, and had nothing to say that could serve him.

Q. When was it that that Question was put to you?

A. I cannot remember the Day.

Q. Recollect when that Question was put to you, was it before the Trial at Wexford?—A. It was.

Q. Who was the Person that put the Question to you?

A. I forget by whom, I was sent to by Lord Anglesea's Friends; I do not know whether Mr. Colles did or not, but he was with me.

2. MARY SETWRIGHT.

Mr. Richard Malone.] Were you at any Time, and when, acquainted with Lord and Lady Altham?

Mary Setwright.] I was, Sir.

Q. When were you first acquainted with them?

A. When I was hired to them.

Q. When were you first acquainted?

A. Four Days before I was hired.

Q. When were you hired?

A. About five or six Days before Christmas-day.

Q. In what Year?—A. The Year I cannot tell well.

Q. Where did Lady Altham lodge then?

A. At Captain Briscoe's in Bride-Street.

Q. Do you know how long she had been in Ireland, before you were hired?—A. Not long.

Q. You have said that you were hired at Capt. Briscoe's?—A. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Le Hunt.] How soon did you go from Dublin after you were hired?

A. In four Days.

Mr. Malone.] Pray, after you were hired, did you leave Town, and when?

A. Four Days after.

Q. Where did you go?

A. To Dunmaine, to my Lord's Country-house.

Q. What time did you get there?—A. The Day before Christmas-Eve.

Q. Were there any other Persons that went with you?

A. Two Servants, the Chamber-maid and Laundry-maid.

Q. Who was the Chamber-maid?

A. The Chamber-maid was Mary Waters.

Q. And who was the other Woman?—A. Elizabeth Doyle.

Q. You say that you got to Dunmaine before Christmas?

A. A Day before Christmas-Eve.

Q. Pray, Madam, did my Lord and Lady go there at any time after, and when?

A. They came there the very next Night, Sir.

Q. Now, I would ask you, where did they lodge when you left Town?

A. At Captain Briscoe's.

Q. In what Station were you hired?—A. House-keeper.

Q. How long did you live with my Lady?

A. A Year and a Quarter, or thereabouts.

Q. What time did you leave her?—A. In February.

Q. What Year?

A. Indeed I do not know the Year; but the Eclipse was the Year following.

Q. Do you remember, during the time you lived there, to have seen Mrs. Briscoe or her Daughter there?

A. I did, Sir.

Q. Can you recollect how soon after my Lord and Lady went to Dunmaine, it was that they were there?

A. It was very soon, but I cannot tell how long.

Q. Now, I ask you whether my Lady miscarried, or kept her Room for any, and what Time?

A. Never to my Knowledge.

Q. Did you ever hear it?—A. No, indeed.

Q. Could she have miscarried at Dunmaine during the Time Mrs. Briscoe and her Daughter were there, or kept her Room, without your knowing of it?

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] I must stop Mr. Malone a little, because it is a direct leading Question.

Court.] Was my Lady sick, or confined for any Time while they were in the House?

A. No, not to my Knowledge, my Lord.

Mr. Malone.] You say that you were Housekeeper?—A. Yes.

Q. What Things were under your Care, as House-keeper?

A. I kept the Sugars, the Spices, and Bread, and all those Things, every thing but only Liquor.

Q. Was you at any time, while Mrs. Briscoe and her Daughter were there, called to for any thing under your Care for any Person that was sick?

A. No, not that I know of.

Court.] Did you see my Lady every Day at that time?

A. Every Day in the Week, my Lord, to know her Commands.

Q. Was it possible that she could miscarry, and you not know of it?

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] That, my Lord, must depend upon the Credit of Witnesses, for a Gentlewoman of good Credit has sworn she did.

Jury.] Do you believe that my Lady was with Child at that time?

A. I believe not.

Mr. Malone.] Did Mrs. Briscoe and her Daughter remain at Dunmaine for any and what time after my Lord and Lady got there?

A. Yes.

Q. How long?—A. I cannot exactly tell how long they staid there.

Q. How long might it be?—A. I cannot say particularly.

Q. Pray, do you recollect what time they left Dunmaine, what time of the Year?—A. It was in Summer.

Q. Was it the Summer after my Lord and Lady went to Dunmaine?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. I ask you now, whether my Lord and Lady came from Dunmaine to Dublin at that time, or any time, and when?

A. They went to Dublin in my time.

Q. Was it in the same Year?—A. Yes, Sir.

Q. How soon after Mrs. Briscoe came to Dublin?

A. Indeed I cannot tell.

Q. Was it in the Summer Season of the Year?—A. Yes, it was.

Q. What Time was it that my Lord and Lady returned to Dunmaine next?

A. I cannot exactly tell you what Month it was, but it was in the Summer-time.

Q. Do you know who was Butler in your Time?—A. Thomas Rolph.

Q. Had you any and what Directions in order to prepare any and what Thing for Christmas that Year? What was it?

A. Mine'd Pyes, and those Things that were proper for Christmas-time.

Q. Did you make any Thing particular?—A. I made a Collar of Brawn.

Q. By whose Directions did you make that?

A. By my Lord's and Lady's Directions.

Q. When was it that they returned to Dunmaine?

A. It was in the Summer, it was a great while before Christmas.

Q. Did you at any Time and when see them in this Town?

A. I did after I left them.

Q. When did you leave them?—A. I left them in February.

Q. Upon what Occasion did you see them in this Town, and where, and I would know whether you were called to them for any and what Purpose?

A. They sent the running Footman for me, for to prepare an Entertainment they made for Company.

Q. Where did they lodge then?

A. They lodged at Mrs. Vice's in Dirty-Lane.

Q. What was it they sent to you for?

A. They sent to me to serve the Entertainment, to manage it and see it properly done.

Q. Do you remember at what Time it was?

A. It was Christmas, the Twelfth-day.

Court.] You lived a Year and Quarter and then left them; and saw them in Dublin after; how soon after was it?

A. It was about two Years after I left them that I saw them in Dublin; it was upon a Twelfth-day.

Mr. Malone.] As you were there that Night, do you recollect any of the Persons in Company?

A. Mr. Colclough was one of the Company.

Q. What Colclough?—A. Mr. Casar Colclough.

Q. I think you said that Rolph was Butler at the Time you were in the Country?—A. He was.

Q. When my Lord and Lady returned to Dunmaine, was there any and what thing brought for the Butler?

A. There was Mourning brought down.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Walsh.] Pray now recollect what was the particular Time you came to live with Lord and Lady Altham.—A. In December.

Q. What Year?—A. I cannot tell you the Year.

Q. You must recollect the Year.

A. It was the Year before the great Eclipse, whatever Year that was.

Q. When did you leave her Service?—A. In February.

Q. When?—A. In February before the great Eclipse.

Court.] When was it that you came to Lady Altham?

A. In December, the Year before the Eclipse.

Q. How long did you live with her?

A. A Year and two Months, to the February next but one following.

Q. Was the great Eclipse after you left her?

A. The Eclipse was the April after I left her.

Jury.] Had you the keeping of any China?—A. I had not.

Q. Do you remember any body that had?

A. My Lady's Woman kept what Cups there were.

Q. Do you remember any particular Sawcers?—A. I do not indeed.

Mr. Walsh.] Recollect now, and tell when you came to live with Lord and Lady Altham.

A. I came two or three Days before Christmas.

Q. In what Year?

A. I cannot tell you more than it was the Year before the Eclipse.

Q. How long was the Eclipse after the Time that you came to live with them?—A. It was the April after I left them.

Q. And when did you leave them?—A. In February.

Q. How long did you go to the Country before them, after you were hired?—A. I went four Days before them.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Briscoe and his Wife and Daughter at Dunmaine?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did they all go there together?—A. She and her Daughter came first.

Q. When did he come?—A. I cannot exactly tell the Time he came.

Q. Was it in Summer or Winter?—A. I think in Summer.

Q. What Time in the Summer?—A. I cannot remember.

Q. Was it in Harvest?—A. I cannot remember the exact Time.

Q. How long did he stay there?

A. Mrs. Briscoe stayed a good while, but I do not know how long he stayed.

Q. Are you sure it was in Summer when he came?

A. I cannot tell exactly when it was.

Q. When was it that Mrs. Briscoe and her Daughter came?

A. Just after the Time that my Lady came.

Q. When did my Lady go down?—A. In December.

Q. And when did they go?

A. As near as I can remember in a Fortnight, or some such Thing.

Q. How long did they stay?

A. As good as two Months, I forget if longer.

Q. Do you know did my Lady miscarry at Dunmaine?

A. She never miscarried, to my Knowledge.

Q. As you were House-keeper, what did you keep the Keys of?

A. I kept the Keys of the Sugar and Spices, and several other Things.

Q. Was you yourself ever sick at Dunmaine?

A. I never was sick myself there.

Q. Did you ever miscarry there?—A. I never did.

Q. Was you ever brought-to-bed there?—A. I had a Child there.

Q. When?—A. The June after I went down.

Q. Were Mrs. Briscoe and her Daughter there when you lay-in?

A. They were.

Q. Might not my Lady have miscarried when you were laid up with your Child?—A. I never heard any Thing of it.

Q. Pray, did you see her every Day?—A. Every Day, but when I lay-in.

Q. You said you saw her every Day, and therefore she could not miscarry unknown to you?—A. I was but a Fortnight in all lying-in.

Q. Is it usual for Women to go out in that Time?—A. I did.

Q. Where was you brought-to-bed?—A. At the Dairy-house.

Q. How far distant was that from Dunmaine House?

A. About a Field from the House.

Q. Was my Lady confined to her Chamber at any Time while you lived with her?—A. She was not that I know of.

Q. Might she not unknown to you?

A. I should have heard of it, if she had.

Q. Can you say, upon your Oath, she did not miscarry?

A. She did not to my Knowledge.

Q. Could she not unknown to you?

A. I cannot say she did to my Knowledge.

Q. Could not she unknown to you, when you were out of the House?

A. I believe not, my Lady came to see me when I was lying-in.

Q. Who kept the Keys when you were lying-in?—A. Mrs. Heath.

Q. Did you come to Town when my Lady came to Town, after she was at Dunmaine?—A. I did not come to Town till I left them.

Q. When did my Lady come to Town, after you went down?

A. I cannot exactly tell how long after.

Q. When was it that she came to Town? Recollect yourself.

A. I cannot tell the particular Time.

Q. Did she come the February following?

A. It

A. It was in the Summer following.
 Q. What time in the Summer?—A. I protest, I forget what Month it was.
 Q. Was it in July?—A. No, it was not.
 Q. Was it in August?—A. To the best of my Knowledge, it was August.
 Q. How long did she stay before she returned?
 A. Two Months, or thereabouts.
 Q. Did she go to Dublin after she returned?
 A. She returned in two Months.
 Q. Did you live with her when she returned again?—A. I did.
 Q. In what time did she return?—A. In about two Months she returned.
 Q. How long did you live with her after?—A. Not long.
 Q. How long?—A. I left her in the February following.
 Q. Now recollect and tell the particular time that she returned to Dunmaine.—A. I cannot tell the Month; she staid about two Months away.
 Q. Was she in Dunmaine when you left her?—A. She was.
 Q. When was that?—A. The February after she returned.
 Q. How came she to discharge you?
 A. Something that my Lord said that I took ill made me leave it.
 Q. What Reason have you to remember that my Lady returned in Two Months?—A. It was Summer-time when she went and when she came back.
 Q. Now I ask you a plain Question, was not Lady Altham in this Town in November and December 1714?—A. Indeed I do not know.
 Q. But you must answer that Question; was she in this Town the Months of November and December, before you left her?
 A. She was in Dublin in the Summer.
 Q. Was she, or was she not, here in November and December?
 A. I cannot recollect.
 Q. Can you say that when she went to Town in Summer that she returned in two Months to Dunmaine?—A. I cannot be positive she did.
 Q. Can you be positive she was in Dunmaine in November and December before the February that you left her? Come, Woman, recollect.
 A. I believe they were, I cannot remember.
 Court.] Was my Lady Altham at Dunmaine the November and December before you left her?—A. Yes, she was, my Lord.
 Mr. Walsh.] Do you know Mr. Nesbit, a Clergyman?—A. No.
 Q. Do not you know Mr. Nesbit of St. Catharine's Parish?
 A. I have seen him.
 Q. Had you any Discourse with him lately about this Matter?
 A. Not lately.
 Q. Had you ever any?—A. I had some.
 Q. What was that Discourse? Had you any in relation to Mr. Annesley's being my Lady's Son or not?
 A. He asked me if I knew of her having a Child, and I told him that I never did, nor never heard she had.
 Q. Did not you tell Mr. Nesbit, that if Mrs. Heath swore that my Lady never had a Child, she was a damn'd Bitch?—A. No, I never did.
 Court.] Is that your Indictment that my Lady never had a Child? Your Indictment is, that she never had a Child while Mrs. Heath lived with her.
 Jury.] I think you said you made some Preparations for Christmas at Dunmaine?—A. I made Brawn in it.
 Q. When did you make it?—A. The Christmas I went down.
 Q. When was it my Lord and Lady came to Dunmaine?
 A. They came the very Day before Christmas-day.
 Q. And how then could you make the Brawn against Christmas?
 A. I made it that Year, but not the Day after I went down.
 Q. Was it the Christmas you went there that you made it?
 A. It was that Christmas.
 Q. Who gave you Orders for making it?—A. My Lord did.
 Q. Where was he when he gave you those Directions?
 A. He was at home at Dunmaine.
 Q. Was my Lady there then?—A. She was.
 Mr. Walsh.] Do you remember any Sawcers with smutty Figures on them?
 A. I did not.
 Q. Did you ever hear that any of them were broke by Lord Altham?
 A. I never did; I never did hear of any such at all.

3. Revd. Mr. WILLIAM HERVEY.

Mr. Edward Malone.] He is an antient Man, my Lord, and cannot stay any longer, which makes us produce him now, though out of time, and we are now going to shew that my Lady Altham was at the Affizes of Wexford in April 1715; we examine him out of time, because he is falling sick.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] My Lord, I must complain to your Lordship of his being in Court this some time, and not having been kept with the other Witnesses.

Mr. Malone.] Call Mr. Thomas Bourk to shew when the Wexford Affizes were. I believe the Gentlemen will admit it for shortness Sake, that they were on the 16th of April 1715.

Court.] Do you admit that, Gentlemen?

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] I protest I do not know what to say to it.

Mr. THOMAS BOURK.

Mr. Malone.] What have you got in your Hand?

A. A Record; a Copy of an Estreat.

Q. Where did you get it? From what Office?

A. From Mr. Merryson's Office.

Clerk of the Crown reads the Record, as follows, viz.

Com Wexford

Mr. Spring.] We produce a Clergyman of the County of Wexford, a Man of as good Character as any in it, to shew that my Lady Altham was at that Affizes.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] I desire, Sir, you will please to give an Account, whether you were not in Court the whole time that the other Witnesses were examined, or were not informed of what passed here.

Mr. Hervey.] I was called about an Hour and half ago, and told that the Court wanted me; when I found they did not, I went into the Court of Chancery, and staid there 'till I found the first Witnesses coming; afterwards I stood by the Clock, and I believe you will think it is impossible to hear there any thing that passed here; and not one Word was I informed of what was said.

Mr. Malone.] Do you remember the time the Pretender's Men were tried at the Affizes of Wexford?

Mr. Hervey.] I remember when Mr. Walsh and Masterfon were tried for enlisting Men for foreign Service.

Q. Were you at that Affizes?—A. I was there and heard the Trial.

Q. Pray, Sir, can you fix the Year when they were tried?

A. They were tried in Lent Affizes 1715.

Q. Was it Spring Affizes?

A. It was Lent Affizes; but I believe it happened in Easter that Year.

Q. Were you in Court at the Trial of Walsh and Masterfon?

A. I was in Court.

Q. Who were the Judges?

A. My Lord Chief Justice Forster, my particular Patron and Friend; his Brother was my Tutor when I was in the College.

Q. Who was the other Judge?

A. I do not remember any other Judge, but I know he was there.

Q. Was you in Court at the Trial?—A. I was.

Q. Then I ask you, Sir, whether or no you saw my Lord Altham at that time in Town?

A. I did; I saw him at his Lodgings and at the Court-house, and had Discourse with him in both Places, and never saw him before or since.

Q. In what Cloaths was he dressed then?

A. To the best of my Remembrance, he was in Black.

Q. Were there any Ladies in Court at that Affizes?

A. There were several Ladies in Court.

Q. Were they of any Fashion or Rank in the Country there?

A. I saw a Lady of very good Appearance, though of homely Features, and I asked who she was, and I was told—

Mr. Serjeant Marshall.] You are not to say any thing you were told, you must declare nothing but what you know yourself.

Mr. Hervey.] They said it was Lady Altham.

Mr. Malone.] Did you know that Lady you saw to be Lady Altham?

A. I am morally assured it was her.

Q. Did you ever see her after?—A. I never saw her afterwards.

Q. You saw other Ladies there as well as this Lady?—A. I did.

Q. Did you know them?

A. I took notice of none but Mrs. Giffard, for she was my Relation by Marriage; and I had another Reason why I took notice of her, which was, that I have often heard her blamed—

Q. Was Mrs. Giffard in company with that strange Lady?—A. She was.

Q. Do you remember any Quarrel upon the account of beating a Man at the Affizes?

A. Yes, I remember it very well, and have Reason to remember it.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] My Lord, I do not see to what this Examination can tend.

Mr. Malone.] It is in order to fix the time particularly.

Court.] Go on, Sir.

Mr. Hervey.] I took a King's Evidence to Wexford, one Sinclair, he had gone to France with several others, and when he came home, he was afraid I would represent him to the Justice of Peace and have him prosecuted; to avoid which, he said he would come in and make a Discovery if I would get him pardoned. I said I would; and after I had him, I mounted him before my Portmanteau and took him to Wexford. While he was there some Servants of my Lord Altham fell upon him and beat him for being an Informer, and while they were beating him I caught them, and they had almost murdered him. I took them to Colonel Ram's Lodgings, and we went to my Lord Altham to his Lodgings, and shewed him the bloody Condition that this Fellow was in.

Q. How did you know where my Lord lodged?

A. I was informed that my Lord and Lady lodged at Mr. Sweeney's.

Q. Go on, Sir.

A. We went there to shew my Lord Altham the Treatment his Servants had given this Man, and my Lord said he was ashamed of their Behaviour, that they should be punished for it, and said they should come into Court.

Q. And did they come into Court?

A. There came but two into Court, the rest made their Escape.

Q. Were they punished for this Assault?

A. My Lord Chief Justice Forster was very angry, but fined them only 5^l.

Mr. Recorder.] My Lord, thus he ascertains that Lord Altham lodged at Mr. Sweeney's.

Mr. Malone.] You say that you saw Mrs. Giffard in the Court-house, and that she is your Relation?

A. Yes, her Brother and I took two Sisters in Marriage.

Q. Did she sit next to my Lady Altham that Day?

A. I

A. I do not know whether she was next to her, but she was very near her.

Q. Now I ask you, whether that Lady had any Signs of Pregnancy or not upon her?

A. I took particular Notice of her; she was, to the best of my Remembrance, dressed in Black, was a full-chested Woman, and had a fine, slender Waist.

Q. Did she appear to you as a Woman with Child?

A. She might be very young with Child, for aught I know; but there was no visible Appearance of her being with Child.

Mr. Harward.] This Evidence is founded upon a Supposition that the Lady he saw at Wexford was the Lady Altham; he says he was only told it was she, and cannot say it was of his own Knowledge.

Mr. Hervey.] I am pretty certain the Lady I saw was Lady Altham. I am told, Sir, that you are Counsellor Harward, am not I to believe you are? I am told that Gentleman is Counsellor Daly, I am morally assured of it, and I believe it.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Serj. Marshall.] Pray, Sir, did you see that Lady go into the Court-house, that you were so particular in your Observations about?

Mr. Hervey.] I cannot say I did, but I saw her in Court.

Q. Do you know Mr. Caesar Colclough?—A. Yes, I do very well.

Q. Did not he sit by that Lady a great Part of the Time?

A. I cannot charge my Memory; as I told you before, I took no notice of any but Mrs. Giffard.

Q. I ask you, Sir, whether Mr. Colclough was there or not?

A. He might be there; and I cannot say whether he was or not.

Q. Who were the Persons tried?—A. Jack Walsh, and Mr. Masterfon.

Q. They were tried that Day?—A. They were, Sir.

Q. Are you sure they were tried at that Assizes?

A. They were tried at that Assizes.

Q. You are positive they were tried at that Assizes?—A. I heard them both tried, and I believe at that Assizes; Walsh was tried first.

Q. Are you positive that they were both tried?

A. Indeed I have no Reason to doubt but they were; they were there, and appeared there at the Bar both of them.

Q. Were they convicted or acquitted?

A. Acquitted: Mr. Walsh made a very good Defence.

Q. Whereabouts were you in the Court?

A. I was very near the Judge.

Q. Did you or did you not see Mr. Colclough there?

A. I cannot say I saw Mr. Colclough.

Q. Did you see Colonel Loftus there?

A. I cannot say I saw Colonel Loftus.

Q. Do you recollect any Gentleman of the Country that you saw there?

A. Why, do you believe that I was not there?

Q. 'Tis no matter what I believe, but can you name any one Gentleman that was there?—A. Lawrence Esmond of Ballynastraw was there.

Q. And you remember that Mrs. Giffard was there very positively?

A. I do, Sir.

Q. Now, I ask you, was not Mr. Masterfon tried the Summer Assizes?

A. Indeed I do not know, I know he was in the Dock then.

Q. Did not you say you were sure he was tried that Assizes?

A. I do not know whether he was tried then or no, but he was in the Dock.

Q. Did you see this Lady any where else but in the Court-house?

A. I saw her no where else but there, neither before nor since.

Q. Did she sit or stand during the Time you saw her?

A. I saw her both sitting and standing.

Q. Whereabouts?—A. Almost opposite the Sheriff's Box.

Q. Did you talk to Mrs. Giffard at that time?

A. I did not speak to either of them.

Q. Did you speak to her at that Assizes?

A. I do not remember I did; but if you please I'll give the Reason why I took notice of her more than another.

Q. Give your Reason.

A. She was a near Neighbour of Lord Altham, and was the most conversant there of any others of the Neighbourhood; and my Lady not bearing the fairest Character in the World, I heard Mrs. Giffard blamed for having such an Intimacy there; and therefore when I was told this Lady, that made a very good Figure by her Dress, was my Lady Altham, I took notice of Mrs. Giffard being in her Company; and whether Mrs. Giffard knew it or not I cannot tell, but I have heard her censured for being in it. And if they had lived within three Miles of me, as they did of her, I would not have had Converse with either of them.

Q. Was not there one Doyle, a Clergyman, tried at that Assizes?

A. I cannot tell whether he was tried or not, I saw him in the Dock; he was one I knew in the College.

Q. How came you to be seated so near the Judge?

A. I was near the Judge for two Reasons; for the sake of the Justices of the Peace and Grand Jury.

Q. Do you know Mr. Henry Bolton?—A. Yes, I do.

Q. Was he at that Assizes?—A. He might, but I do not remember.

Mr. MacManus.] I hope at this late Hour they will produce Witnesses to the Point.

Mr. Solicitor.] I desire, my Lord, to make one Observation; which is, that Mr. Hervey's Testimony will account for every thing that has been said concerning the bad Reputation of this Family.

Mr. Le Hunte.] My Lord, We shall now produce one Edmond Bourk, he was Postillion to my Lord Altham before my Lady came to Dunmaine. He will prove that he rode Postillion when the Chariot came to carry my Lord and Lady into the Country, and that they went from Captain Briscoe's, and not from Mrs. Vice's; he will prove that Mrs. Setwright, Elizabeth Doyle and Mary Waters were Servants in the Family, and that he continued in the Service 'till the Year 1716; that he drove my Lady in a Chariot in 1715 to the Spring Assizes of Wexford; that Mrs. Giffard went in the Chariot with her; that Mrs. Heath rode, and that he was one of the Servants mentioned in this Affray, and made his Escape from the Assizes; and he will also prove that my Lady was at a Hurling-Match at a Place called Rathimny Bogg, between Major Sutton and my Lord, at the Time of this pretended Pregnancy.

VOL. IX.

4. EDMOND BOURK.

Mr. Le Hunte.] Did you know Arthur late Lord Altham?

Edmond Bourk.] I did, Sir.

Q. When did you first know him?—A. At his first coming to Ross.

Q. Did you ever live in his Service?—A. I did.

Q. When did you go to live with him?

A. I cannot exactly tell the Year, but I lived almost six Years and two Months with him.

Q. Where did my Lord live then?—A. At Dunmaine.

Q. Did you live there before my Lady came over?—A. I did.

Q. How long after you lived there did she come to live with him?

A. I cannot tell how long.

Q. What was your Service?

A. I was a Postillion, and came up for my Lady to Dublin.

Q. Where did my Lord and Lady go from Dublin?

A. They went from Dublin to Dunmaine.

Q. From what Place in Dublin did they go to Dunmaine?

A. From Captain Briscoe's in Bride-street.

Q. Are you certain that they went from Captain Briscoe's?

A. By the Virtue of my Oath, they did; we took them up there.

Q. Did you know Mrs. Mary Heath?—A. I did, Sir.

Q. What was she?

A. She waited on my Lady Altham as her Gentlewoman then.

Q. When did my Lord and Lady get to Dunmaine?

A. We got to Dunmaine in December, it was about Christmas-Eve.

Q. Who went along with you besides my Lord and Lady?

A. I cannot tell you; but the Chariot broke by Johnstown, and a great many were in Company, but I cannot tell who they were.

Q. Did Mrs. Setwright go with you?

A. Mrs. Setwright was sent down two Days before, and two Maids with her, Betty Doyle and Mary Waters.

Q. Do you remember any body visiting at Dunmaine for any Time?

A. There was Mrs. Briscoe there.

Q. Was any one along with her?—A. Her Daughter was.

Q. How long might they have staid there?

A. I cannot tell, but I was sent with Miss Briscoe to the lower Part of the County of Wexford.

Q. Do you know one Mr. Boyde?—A. I did.

Q. Where did he live?—A. He lived at Roffelare.

Q. Did not you go to his House?

A. We did call there, and stayed there a Night or two, to the best of my Knowledge.

Q. Do you know a Place called Rathimny Bogg?

A. I do; I was born near it.

Q. Did you know Major Sutton?—A. I knew him very well.

Q. Did you know of any Diversion or Sport at Rathimny-Bogg?

A. I remember a great Hurling there.

Q. What was the Occasion of it?

A. I was told it was between Major Sutton and my Lord Altham.

Q. Do you remember any Person that was at that Hurling?

A. My Lady Altham was there, Sir.

Q. Were you at the Assizes of Wexford at any time after this Hurling?

A. I do not know whether it was after or before.

Q. When was that Assizes?—A. Easter Assizes in the Year 1715.

Q. Did you go from the House of Dunmaine to the Assizes?

A. I did, Sir.

Q. Did any body go along with you?

A. My Lady went in the Chariot and one Mrs. Giffard.

Q. Who rode Postillion?—A. I did.

Q. Who was Coachman?—A. John Weedon.

Q. Do you know of any Quarrel that happened at the Assizes, and on what Occasion?—A. I do very well, I have a Reason to know it, Sir.

Q. Tell your Reasons.

A. Some Gentlemen of the County of Wexford were impeached with this thing of enlisting and harbouring Men for the Pretender at that time, and above all, there was the Parish-Priest that is living yet, one Father Michael Downes, and he was our Parish-Priest; and this Downes being impeached, my Lord's Servants, four or five of us, went to see the Priest, and his Prosecutors were with him at the House of one Hatchell's that kept the Swan; we fell out with the Prosecutors, because that we thought to make it up with them not to prosecute the Priest, my Lord; and upon that, when they would not make it up, a Quarrel happened between us, and please your Lordship, and to be sure we paid the poor People very sorely; but next Morning we were taken Prisoners by Mr. Hervey, Colonel Ram, and Mr. Symes, and kept in Confinement from Morning 'till about eight o'Clock at Night.

Q. Was my Lord Altham at the Assizes?

A. My Lord Altham was there.—A little time after I came home he discharged me, because I made my Escape; but two were put on their Trial.

Q. Who were they?

A. They were Ned MacCormack and Bryan Neale, the Running-foot-man and the Groom.

Q. Where did you go after my Lord discharged you his Service?

A. I believe to Kilkenny, and lived with Alderman Barnes there some little time.

Q. Do you know Mr. Lambert?—A. I do very well.

Q. Did you ever live in his Service?

A. I lived with him after I left Kilkenny.

Q. How long did you live in Kilkenny?

A. I believe I did not live in Kilkenny above two or three Months.

Q. Do you remember any Quarrel between my Lord and Lady Altham in your time?—A. I do not remember any Quarrel.

Q. Did they continue to live together as long as you knew them?

3 T

A. They

Q. They did, they were separated after.
 Q. Where did you live then?---A. I believe with Aaron Lambert.
 Q. Where did he live then?---A. He kept a House in Rosi then.
 Q. How far is Rosi from Dunmaine?---A. Four small Miles from Dunmaine.
 Q. Did you see my Lady after the Separation?---A. I did.
 Q. Where?---A. In Rosi.
 Q. Do you recollect the House that my Lord and Lady lodged in at Wexford at the Affizes?---A. I set her down at one Mr. Sweeny's.
 Q. Pray, whilst Mrs. Briscoe was in the House at Dunmaine, did you hear of any Miscarriage that my Lady had?
 A. I never did of any Miscarriage, or of her being with Child 'till within these three Years.
 Q. Did she appear to you to be a Woman with Child?---A. She never did.
 Q. Do you know Joan Landy?---A. I do.
 Q. Do you know of her nursing a Child?---A. I do.
 Q. Was that after my Lady came to Dunmaine?
 A. She was big with Child at the Time my Lady came.
 Q. Where did she live at that Time?---A. In my Lord's House.
 Q. Was she brought-to-bed there?
 A. No; she went to her Father's House to lye-in.
 Q. How far was that from the House of Dunmaine?
 A. As near as I can guess, an English Mile.
 Q. Did you ever see a Child nursed by Joan Landy in the House while my Lady was there?---A. I never did, by Virtue of my Oath.
 Q. Did you ever see a Child of Lord Altham's with Joan Laffan?
 A. I never did, nor nobody else.
 Mr. Mac Manus.] My Lord, he swears that nobody else saw that she took care of the Child, as well as him.
 Mr. Le Hunte.] Did you ever see any Child of Lord and Lady Altham's in the Care of Joan Laffan?---A. Never did, Sir.
 Q. Did you ever see a Child that was Joan Landy's Child with Joan Landy?---A. Yes, I did, Sir.
 Q. Did you live with my Lady at any Time after the Separation?
 A. I did.
 Q. How long after?---A. As near as I can guess, almost two Years after they parted. I waited on her in the Town of Rosi.
 Q. Did you see any Child there with her that was reputed her Child?
 A. I never did.
 Q. Did you ever see any other Child with her there?
 A. Yes, I used to bring in Children myself to her; she was very fond of them.
 Q. What Lodging was you at there?---A. At one Mrs. Wright's.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Serj. Tisdall.] How long did you live with my Lord Altham?
 A. To the best of my Knowledge, about six Years with my Lord and Lady.
 Q. Did they live together during the whole Time you lived with them?
 A. They did not, Sir.
 Q. When were you first hired into the Service?---A. I cannot tell.
 Q. When did you leave my Lord?---A. I left him in the Year 1715.
 Q. What Time of that Year?---A. I cannot tell.
 Q. How soon was it after they came from Wexford?
 A. I cannot tell how soon.
 Q. Was it a Fortnight, three Months, or a Year, or how long?
 A. No; it could not be a Year, or a Quarter of a Year.
 Q. What was the Occasion of your leaving the Service?
 A. The Occasion was that I made my Escape from Wexford, and my Lord promised he would not keep them that escaped.
 Q. Recollect how long you were at Dunmaine before you were discharged.---A. I might have been at Home a Fortnight or three Weeks.
 Q. How long before you left my Lord, did he and my Lady come to live together?
 A. My Lady came in December 1713, to the best of my Knowledge.
 Q. Where was you then?---A. In Dunmaine, and they met in Dublin.
 Q. How soon after did you come for her?---A. I was not long in Town.
 Q. How soon after they met, did you come for her to Town?
 A. I cannot tell how long.
 Q. Was you in Town with my Lord that Winter before they met?
 A. I was not.
 Q. Did you live with them again after you left them in the Year 1715?
 A. I did.
 Q. What Time?---A. I cannot tell.
 Q. Were they separated before you came to live with them?
 A. They were; my Lady was at Rosi at that Time.
 Q. When you returned to live with my Lord, was there any Child in the House?---A. Never a Child that I know of.
 Q. How long did you live with him after you returned?
 A. I cannot tell how long.
 Q. Did you live a second Time with them before the Separation?
 A. To the best of my Knowledge, I did.
 Q. Did you return to the Service before my Lord separated from my Lady?---A. I am not sure whether I did or no.
 Q. Was you in the House at the Separation?---A. I was not.

Q. Where was you at that Time?---A. To the best of my Knowledge, in Rosi with Mr. Aaron Lambert.
 Q. Were you in his Service then?---A. I was.
 Q. How long did you live with him?---A. I cannot tell; but my Lady was some Time in Rosi before I came to live with her.
 Q. Did you return to my Lord's Service after you were discharged that Time after the Affizes?---A. Indeed, I cannot tell.
 Q. Cannot you tell whether you lived with him after at Dunmaine?
 A. I am not positive; I cannot tell you, Sir, whether I ever lived with my Lord again at Dunmaine.
 Q. You say, you were turned away after the Affizes?---A. I was.
 Q. Upon your Oath, did you return to live with my Lord again?
 A. Upon my Salvation, I cannot tell whether I returned again to him.
 Q. Recollect how often you have lived with him.
 A. I remember I lived with him once, because he owed me some Wages.
 Q. What Wages?---A. I believe two Years Wages.
 Q. When were those Wages due to you?
 A. They were due after the Affizes.
 Q. Can you answer or not, whether you returned again to the Service?
 A. I cannot answer whether I did or no.
 Q. Do you know Mr. Amias Bush?---A. I do.
 Q. Had you any Conversation with him?
 A. Not as I can remember, Sir.
 Q. Or with any other Person, that my Lord had a Child by his Lady?
 A. By the virtue of my Oath, I never did declare it to Mankind.
 Q. Did you ever declare that you would go and swear for Lord Anglesea, and be made a Man of?
 A. By the virtue of that Oath I have taken, I never did.
 Q. Did any body offer you any Money for swearing in this Cause?
 A. Yes, Mr. Mac Kercher did.
 Q. What did he offer you?---A. He offered me 300l. for swearing.
 When the Witness said this, there was a loud Huzzza in the Court.
 Q. Who was the Agent that offered you 300l?
 A. Have Patience and I will tell you the Man, one Paul Keating, he offered me 300l. in private between me and himself, if I would join his young Lord, as he called him.
 Q. When was this Offer made you?---A. About this Time two Year.
 Q. Why did not you appear and declare this on the former Trial?
 A. I kept off from the last Trial, and from this 'till I was compelled by Law.
 Q. Was you ever in Company with Mr. Mac Kercher?
 A. I was in the Room with Mac Kercher, and he sent for me, and Mr. Bob Snow carried me up Stairs to an upper Room.
 Q. What is it you can say of Mr. Snow?
 A. Nothing of him, but that I was in Mr. Snow's Room along with Mac Kercher.
 Q. When was this?
 A. About this Time two Year, to the best of my Knowledge.
 Q. What was the Conversation that passed between Mr. Mac Kercher and you?
 A. Why then I will tell you that, Gentlemen. I came in the Evening to Mr. Snow's; Mr. Snow was feed'd as an Attorney against me in a Cause between a Man and me---
 Q. Give an Account what passed in Conversation in the Presence of Mr. Snow.---A. Mac Kercher and Snow went up from the Company, they were to sup there.
 Q. Where?
 A. At Mr. Snow's that Night; and I told my Landlord, Mr. Flood, that Mr. Snow was to be there that Evening; and Snow told me that Mac Kercher, and Annesley, and Livingstone were to sup there that Night; and he told me if I would come there at Eight o'Clock, that I could see Mac Kercher. Upon that I did, and we went up Stairs, Mr. Snow, and Mac Kercher and me, and he asked me if I knew this young James Annesley, Esq. Where is he? says I. I hope, my Friend, you will do nothing against his Interest, says Mac Kercher. Indeed I will not, nor appear at all, says I, if I can help it; so there is all I can remember.
 Q. Did there pass any other Conversation between you that Night?
 A. There might, but not to any Purpose.
 Q. When do you say the 300l. was offered to you?
 A. About this Time two Year.
 Q. And who made you the Offer of it?
 A. Paul Keating, and carried me to one Captain Forrester's.
 Q. When this Offer was made, was any body present?
 A. No, he carried me aside to a little Garden at Captain Forrester's Door, and he said that when the Cause was over I would get the railing of my Family.
 Q. What did he offer you this Money for?
 A. He offered it for to join his young Master James Annesley, because he thought that I knew a great deal by living with Lady Altham, only to give my Promise to testify for James Annesley.
 Q. What did he tell you, you were to swear?
 A. The Words were in general

Mr. Smith.] My Lord, the next Witness is Mrs. Sweeny. Your Lordship observes that the last Witness gave an Account of my Lady Altham's going from Dunmaine to Wexford Affizes, and that she was drove to Captain Sweeny's at Wexford. He, my Lord, is dead: this Mrs. Sweeny is his Widow; her Husband took the House in March 1714, and she has lived there ever since; she will give account that Lord and Lady Altham, Mrs. Giffard and other Persons came and lodged in the House, and that my Lady did not appear to be with Child.

5. Mrs. SARAH SWEENEY.

Mr. Le Hunte.] Where do you live, Madam?
 Mrs. Sweeny.] I live at Wexford.

Q. What is your Christian Name?---A. Sarah.
 Q. How long have you lived there?
 A. These four or five-and-thirty Years.
 Q. Pray, do you know Mr. John Masterfon?---A. I do.
 Q. Did you know Mr. Walsh?---A. I did.
 Q. Do you remember that they were charged with any Crime at Wexford?---A. I do.
 Q. When?---A. In the Year 1715.
 Q. Did you know the late Lord or Lady Altham?
 A. I did; I knew them both, but my Lord much better than my Lady.
 Q. Was

Q. Was it usual for you to let Lodgings?—A. It was.
 Q. Can you recollect whether they lodged at any Time and when in your House?—A. They lodged with me in the Year 1715, in April.
 Q. Do you know upon what Occasion, or what was a-doing in Wexford at that Time?—A. The Assizes was at that Time.
 Q. Pray, Madam, can you recollect how long they lodged with you, and when they came, whether before or after the Assizes?
 A. They came just at the Assizes, and they staid no longer than the Assizes held, four Nights or five, I cannot tell which.
 Q. Can you tell whether any Gentlewoman came with Lady Altham to the Assizes?—A. Yes, there did come Mrs. Giffard, and Mrs. Mary Roe, and there came Mrs. Heath.
 Q. Was Mrs. Heath a Servant to any of the Ladies, or whom?
 A. She was her Ladyship's Woman.
 Q. Where did she lodge?—A. At my House, Sir.
 Q. Can you be certain that it was in the Spring Assizes 1715, that they were there?—A. I am very sure of it.
 Q. Pray, can you give any Reason for that Certainty?
 A. I can give several Reasons, if there was an Occasion.
 Q. Please to inform the Court and the Jury what your Reasons are.
 A. It was in the Year 1714 that I came to that House I now live in. I came to it in July, just before the Queen died; and in 1714 Mr. Sweeney was ill of a Fever, and was just recovered out of it as her Ladyship came to my House; he was recovered the March before she came.
 Q. When she was there did you frequently see her?
 A. I did see her very often, Sir.
 Q. Where did she generally diet in Wexford?
 A. She dined and supped at my House.
 Q. Did she dine and sup at your Table?—A. I dined with her at the Table, and with my Lord, when he dined there.
 Q. Had she any Signs of Breeding, or being with Child?
 A. I did not perceive any, neither do I believe she was with Child.
 Q. Could she have been with Child then and you not know it?
 A. If she had been with Child I should have heard it.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Fitzgerald.] You say, I think, that my Lady came to lodge at your House in April 1715?—A. Yes.
 Q. What particular Reason have you for fixing it in April 1715?
 A. I tell you; in July before the Queen died I came to the House, and the April following she came to lodge there.
 Q. Where did you live before?
 A. At Kenny's-Hall, a little out of Wexford.
 Q. How long did you live there?
 A. From the latter end of the Year 1713, till we left it.
 Q. What particular Time did you leave that Hall?
 A. In July 1714, just before the Queen died.
 Q. Was that House, where you received Lord and Lady Altham, repaired when you took it?—A. We repaired it before we came there.
 Q. After you took the Lease, what Time did you take to repair it?
 A. Not very long; I cannot tell how long.
 Q. Did the Repairs take up three Months?
 A. I believe it might take up three Months; but I was sick at that Time, and do not know how long it was.
 Q. What Time was it you took the Lease?
 A. We took the Lease in the Year 1714.
 Q. What Time of that Year?—A. In the Beginning of 1714.
 I have the Lease if you have a mind to see it.
 Q. Do you know a Man called Nicholas Duffe?—A. I do.
 Q. What is he?—A. He was Master of a Vessel for my Husband.
 Q. Did he live with you then?—A. He did not live with us then.
 Q. Was not he Master of the Ship at that Time?
 A. He quit that Employment before I was married to Mr. Sweeney. He went Master before for him.
 Q. Did he live in your House in April 1715?—A. No, he did not.
 Q. Did he live with you when you took the House and you were sick?
 A. He was at Sea in 1714, when I was ill of the Fever, and he came home at that Time in the Year 1714, and was not employed after, for my Husband parted with the Ship.
 Q. You say he was not in April 1715, in your House?
 A. Not to live with me.
 Q. Was not he then Master of your Husband's Ship?
 A. He was not in that Employ, we were building a Ship then.
 Q. Was not he in the Town of Wexford in the Year 1715?
 A. I do not know but he might.
 Q. Do you know Captain Maxwell?—A. I do, very well.
 Q. Do you know his Wife?
 A. I do; I am very well acquainted with her.
 Q. Did they not visit you in April 1715?
 A. I cannot tell in what Year, I do not know but she might be there, and they lived in the House where I lived in before.
 Q. Do you know one David Conolly?—A. I do not know any such Body as Conolly, I know one David Connell.
 Q. Was he a Servant of your's at that Time?
 A. He was not a Servant, but in and out with me.
 Q. How long did he live with you?—A. Really I cannot tell.
 Q. What do you think of that Man, what is his Character?
 A. Why really, I never thought it worth my while to enquire; he did my Business well enough.
 Q. Did you and Mrs. Maxwell visit frequently?
 A. Yes, we did, and I was Godmother to one of her Children.
 Q. What is Mrs. Roe's Name now?—A. Mrs. Crumpton.
 Q. Did you declare to any Person of your Acquaintance in Wexford that you were not sure when Lady Altham was at your House?
 A. I do not know whether I did or no; to be sure at the beginning I could not recollect it, but after, when I considered about it, I found it out.

Q. Did she never lodge with you but once?—A. Never but once.
 Q. Was she never there at the Water-drinking Season?
 A. She never was.
 Q. And that Time she lodged with you was at the Assizes?
 A. It was at that Time.

Mr. Smith.] This Lady has mentioned that her Sister, who is now Mrs. Crumpton, came to Wexford at that Time in Company with Lady Altham; she was then called Roe, my Lord; we shall now produce her to the same Point.

Court.] Do not you think you have proved it already without producing her?

Mr. Daly.] I would produce Mrs. Giffard and no more to that Fact, I own it.

Court.] Call Mrs. Giffard.

Mr. Smith.] This Mrs. Giffard not only was at Wexford with my Lady at the Assizes, but was a particular Intimate of the Family, and she will prove to your Lordship, that she not only accompanied my Lady to the Assizes, but that she returned from Wexford to Dunmaine with her, and saw my Lady almost every Day while she stayed there, and never saw or heard of a Child; and your Lordship must recollect that one of the Witnesses did mention, that she was censured for her great Intimacy in that Family; and that Joan Laffan said, she and my Lady were very great.

6. Mrs. ANNE GIFFARD.

Mr. Le Hunte.] Mrs. Giffard, are you a married Woman, or a Widow?
 Mrs. Giffard.] A Widow.

Q. The Widow of whom?—A. Of Ravenscroft Giffard.

Q. What is your Christian Name?—A. Anne.

Q. Where did your Husband live?

A. At Ballysop, in the County of Wexford.

Q. Do you know a Place called Dunmaine?—A. I do.

Q. How far is Ballysop from Dunmaine?

A. Not two Miles, a Mile and half or thereabouts.

Q. How long have you lived at Ballysop?

A. We went to live there forty Years ago, and continued to live there till now, only seven Years that I lived at Rojs.

Q. Do you remember the late Lord and Lady Altham?

A. I do remember them very well.

Q. Where did they live when you knew them?

A. They lived sometimes in Dublin, and sometimes at Dunmaine.

Q. Do you remember when my Lady first came to live at Dunmaine?

A. I do.

Q. When was it?—A. In the Year 1713, two or three Days before Christmas-day, as I think; I am not positive to the Day.

Q. Were you intimately acquainted with her?—A. I was indeed.

Q. Did you ever see her with Child whilst you knew her?

A. Upon my Oath, I never knew it, nor never heard it.

Q. Did you ever know of her having a Child at Dunmaine?

A. I never did indeed, Sir.

Q. Do you remember to have travelled with her at any Time to any and what Place?—A. I did to Wexford in a Chariot.

Q. From whence?—A. From Dunmaine.

Q. Did you go with my Lady in the Chariot?

A. I did, and my Lord rode.

Q. What Time of the Year, and what Year was it?

A. I believe it was in the Spring.

Q. Of what Year?

A. The Time when Mr. Masterfon and Walsh were tried.

Q. Where did you lodge in Wexford?—A. At Mrs. Sweeney's.

Q. Who lodged with you there?—A. My Lord and Lady Altham.

Q. You mentioned something of Walsh and Masterfon, what is the Reason that you remember any thing of them?—A. Because my Lady Altham and I were in Court to hear their Trials.

Q. What do you call Court?—A. At the Session-House.

Q. What is the Use of that House?

A. The House where the Judges are.

Q. Were you and she in that House at this Time of the Assizes?

A. We were indeed.

Q. How long did you stay in Wexford that Time?—A. We stayed four Days.

Q. Did my Lady and you travel together from Wexford?

A. I came home with her in the Chariot, and lay there that Night.

Q. Do you remember any Woman-servant to have travelled with you?

A. Mrs. Heath; she rode.

Q. Were any other Persons with you?—A. My Husband went.

Q. And who else?—A. A Sister of mine went.

Q. What was her Name?—A. Mary Roe.

Q. Is that her Name at present?—A. Her Name now is Crumpton.

Q. Where did you go to from Wexford?—A. Back to Dunmaine.

Q. Where did you lie that Night?—A. I lay there.

Q. How long was you acquainted with Lady Altham after your Return to Dunmaine?—A. Whilst she stayed at Dunmaine.

Q. Do you remember any remarkable Eclipse of the Sun?

A. I do, the Eclipse was just after we came from Wexford; the Friday after we came home, I was at a Burying that Day and know it.

Q. What I ask you now is, whether during your Acquaintance with Lady Altham you perceived her to be with Child, or knew her to be with Child?—A. I did not, nor never heard her talk of it.

Q. How often did you visit?—A. Frequently, sometimes twice, sometimes once a Week, or a Fortnight, or so.

Q. Did you go to the same Parish Church?

A. Sometimes; she very often came to White-Church.

Q. Can you recollect after her coming to Dunmaine, that she went to Dublin?—A. I remember she went once or twice to Dublin.

Q. Have

Q. Have you been in the Room with her when she dressed or undressed herself?—A. Yes, I have pretty often.

Q. Did you ever observe any Symptoms of Pregnancy?

A. Upon my Oath, I never did.

Q. I ask you, Madam, whether my Lady was big-bellied at the Assizes?—A. Indeed she was not.

Q. Do you know one Anne Bennet that was formerly your Servant?

A. I never had a Servant of that Name in my Life.

Q. Do you know any Person of the Name of Bennet that lived with you?

A. I do not know any one of the Name of Bennet that lived with me.

Q. Is there any one of the Name of Anne that lived with you, that is now married to the Name of Bennet?

A. They say so; I heard so to-day, but I know nothing of it.

Q. Did you ever tell any Servant of your's of the Name of Anne, that my Lady had been with Child, or had a Child?

A. I never did, I could not say it.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Harward.] If I do not mistake, you were examined at the Trial in the Exchequer?—A. I believe I was; to be sure I was.

Q. Did not you then swear to all the Company that went with you to Wexford?—A. And so I do now.

Q. Were you not asked at that Trial, to give an Account of all that went with you to that Assizes?—A. Well, I was.

Q. Did you give that Account?

A. I did, of every one that I remembered.

Q. What I ask you now is, did you give an Account that this Mrs. Roe went along with you?—A. No, I did not.

Q. Then you did not give an Account that she went?

A. No, Sir, I did not.

Q. In what Manner was it that she went?—A. She rode.

Q. Did she ride single or double?—A. She rode single.

Q. How did Mrs. Heath ride?—A. Single too.

Q. Pray, Madam, Lord Altham rode, I suppose, too?—A. Yes.

Q. And how did my Lady and you go?

A. It was a Chariot-and-Six that we went in.

Q. By virtue of your Oath, was not you in Mourning for a Brother of your's at that Time?

A. I was not; I was in Mourning, but not for him; he was dead a great while before that.

Q. Was it not to hear this Trial that you and Lady Altham went to Wexford?

A. I do not remember whether it was that or no we went for; but we went there to hear it when we were in Wexford.

Q. So that it was Curiosity that carried my Lady and you into the Court-house to hear these Trials?

A. We went to see Wexford; to be sure it was our Curiosity that carried us into Court when we were there.

Q. Was not that the only Motive that induced you to go there?

A. It was not that that induced us to go.

Q. What induced you to go?—A. We went for our Pleasure.

Q. Was you ever in a Court-house before for your Pleasure?

A. Indeed I was in that same very often before when I was a Girl; but what signifies that?

Q. Upon the Trial in the Exchequer did you not say, that you could not tell whether it was before or after the Queen's Death that this Trial was?—A. Well, I do not know whether I said it or no.

Q. Did you not upon that Trial say so?

A. Indeed I cannot tell whether I said it or no.

Q. Recollect whether you did not upon that Trial say, you did not know whether their Trial was before or after the Queen's Death?

A. Why, Sir, if I went after the Queen's Death, you know that I could have said nothing else; what do you mean by saying that upon that Trial I said I could not tell whether before or after?

Q. Did not you say upon that Trial that you did not know whether it was before or after the Queen's Death?

A. I do not believe I said any such Thing at all.

Q. Did you or did you not say upon that Trial that it was before or after?

A. Upon my Word, I cannot tell that I said any such Thing.

Q. If you cannot tell whether you said that it was before or after the Queen's Death that you went to Wexford, how can you say now that it is either one or the other?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Would you be understood to say that you do not know whether it was before or after the Queen's Death that you went to Wexford?

Court.] Is not that fully said already?

Mr. Harward.] I do not apprehend it so, my Lord.

Q. Which was it, by virtue of your Oath, was it in the Queen's Time, or after her Death, that you went with Lady Altham to the Assizes?

A. I could not tell you now; I do not know, Sir.

Q. Now, Madam, I ask you this, how came it that you could not tell that this Mrs. Roe went with you?

A. I might have remembered it indeed, but I did not at that Time.

Q. Had you at this Time any extraordinary Intimacy or Business with Mrs. Sweeney?—A. She is my Sister.

Q. Oh! I did not know that, Madam. Pray, were you in Mourning then?—A. I believe I was.

Q. For whom?

A. I cannot tell whether for any body; I wore Black sometimes.

Q. Were you in Mourning for any body at that Time?

A. I wore Black, but I cannot tell whether I was in Mourning for any body.

Q. Was my Lady in Mourning?—A. She was.

Q. As to this Trial that you went to see, give us some Account of what passed there.

A. I remember nothing of the Trial, but that I saw the Gentlemen in the Dock.

Q. Did you stay, Madam, till they were acquitted or not?

A. Indeed I cannot tell.

Q. Who sat by you in Court?—A. Lady Altham.

Q. Did not Mr. Colclough sit by her?—A. He did.

Q. Did not he hand her in and out of Court?—A. I believe he did.

Q. Are you sure he did?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, he did.

Q. Did not you swear on the Trial in the Exchequer, that you could not tell whether he did or not?

A. I say, to the best of my Knowledge, he did.

Q. Who went into the Court-house with Lady Altham?

A. He and I and Lord Altham went with her.

Q. Did not you swear that you could not tell whether he did or not?

A. I cannot recollect whether I did or not.

Q. Did you know any of my Lord's Family?

A. I knew Ralph the Butler, and Anthony Dyer, my Lord's Gentleman.

Q. Did you know Bourke?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you know John Weedon?

A. I did, and Mrs. Setwright too, I was often there and knew them.

Q. What was Bourke?—A. The Postillion.

Q. Was Doyle the Clergyman tried at the same Time?

A. He stood on the Side-bar, and was not tried that Time.

Q. Did you know the Judges?—A. I knew one Forster, I believe.

Q. Did Lord and Lady Altham go to Dublin after this?

A. They went to Dublin soon after Wexford Assizes.

Q. Did not they go twice after?

A. I cannot tell indeed, I remember once they did.

Q. Did not you swear on the Trial in the Exchequer that you could not tell whether it was before or after my Lord returned from Dublin that you were at Wexford Assizes?—A. I never did.

Q. Madam, do you know one Mrs. Bushe?

A. Not I, indeed I do not.

Q. Did you ever declare, to your Remembrance, that you did not know but this Assizes was in the Year 1716?

A. I cannot remember whether I did or no.

Q. Did you, or did you not?

A. Not that I know of, indeed I did not: I am sure not to Mrs. Bushe.

7. SARAH WEEDON.

Mr. Smith.] Before she comes it will only be proper to observe to your Lordship, that she has been mentioned by some of the Witnesses as being the Coachman's Wife at the Time of the Birth; and, my Lord, Mrs. Sarah Weedon was the Coachman's Wife, and she will give your Lordship an Account of her Knowledge of the Family at Dunmaine during the Period of Time to which the Birth is sworn to; and I believe, when she is produced and has given her Evidence, that you will think she is not a material Witness for the Prosecutors, as she was upon a former Occasion sworn to be.

Mr. Morgan.] Do you know a Place called Dunmaine?

Sarah Weedon.] Yes, Sir, I do.

Q. Did you know Lady Altham?—A. Yes, Sir.

Q. And Lord Altham?—A. Yes, Sir.

Q. Where was you when my Lady came first to Dunmaine?

A. I was at Dunmaine.

Q. How long did you continue there after she came?

A. I believe very nigh three Years, to the best of my Knowledge.

Q. Did you know one Mrs. Briscoe?

A. I did, Sir.

Q. Did you know her Daughter?—A. I did.

Q. Did you see them at Dunmaine?—A. I did, Sir.

Q. Pray now answer, where was you at the Time that they were there?

A. I was in the House, Sir.

Q. Did you know of any Accident that happened to Lady Altham during the Time they were there?

A. I did not know of any Accident that happened to her.

Q. Any Miscarriage?

A. Upon my Word, I never knew nothing of it.

Q. What Condition in point of Health was my Lady in during the Time that they were there?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, she ailed nothing at all.

Q. Did you ever hear of any and what Accidents happening upon account of Sawcers during the Time they were there?

A. I protest I remember no such Thing.

Q. No China broke?—A. I do not remember any such Thing, Sir.

Q. I ask now, whether you know of any of that Family to be delivered of a Child during the Time you were at Dunmaine?

A. I do.

Q. Who was that?—A. One Hesther, that my Lord called Ponty.

Q. I ask you whether this Hesther was delivered of this Child before or after my Lady came to Dunmaine?—A. Before, Sir.

Q. Do you know of any other Person delivered after she came?

A. Not in the House, Sir.

Q. Do you know of any out of the House?

A. Mrs. Setwright was, and myself out of the House.

Court.] Was Lady Altham with Child while you were at Dunmaine?

A. She was not, my Lord.

Q. Did you see her with Child at any Time whatever?

A. Upon my Word, I did not. My Lord, what I say is Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Morgan.] You say that this Hesther was delivered of a Child, can you recollect the Midwife?

A. If I should tell you the Truth, they sent for one Mrs. —, I forget her Name, — Mrs. Shiel in Ross; but to tell you the Truth, before Mrs. Shiel came, I delivered her.

Q. Who was sent for Mrs. Shiel?

A. Really I cannot tell; there was a Fellow in the House, but I cannot tell his Name now.

Q. Now recollect and say, whether any other Persons were brought to-bed at Dunmaine during your Time?—A. There was Juggy Landy.

Q. Now I ask you, did you see this Child of her's?—A. I did.

Q. Did you know it?—A. I did, Sir.

Q. Did you see it at any other Place?

A. I

A. I did, Sir.
 Q. With whom?—A. A great while afterwards, when we were in the County of Carlow, the Child was brought there.
 Q. To what Place?—A. To Carrickduffe.
 Q. Who was it with there?—A. It was in the House.
 Q. With whom do you mean?—A. With Lord Altham.
 Q. Was that the very Child?
 A. I say, Sir, it was the same I saw with Joan Landy at Dunmaine.
 Q. Did you ever see any Child at Dunmaine considered as my Lord Altham's Child by his Lady?
 A. Never in my Life; I would not say it for all the Estate that ever Lord Anglesea had, if it was false.
 Q. Where do you live now?—A. I live in Connaught.
 Q. With whom there?—A. With Colonel Blakeney.
 Q. At what Place does he live?—A. At a Place called Abbart.
 Q. Have you any Children?—A. I have, Sir.
 Q. What are they?—A. Sons.
 Court.] What is it you propose by this Evidence?
 Mr. Morgan.] What I propose by this Evidence is this, that we shall shew a very unfair Attempt made upon this Woman on the Part of the Prosecutors.
 Court.] Mr. Mac Kercher has made an Affidavit, which I wish, for his Sake, he had not.
 Mr. Morgan.] He says, my Lord, in his Affidavit, he served this Woman with a Subpœna; I hope I may ask her that Question.
 Court.] Go on, Sir.
 Mr. Morgan.] Was you served with a Subpœna by him, and when?
 A. I cannot tell the Day of the Month, it came one Day, and I was to appear in Dublin the next Day.
 Q. How far is Colonel Blakeney's House from Dublin?
 A. It is threescore and three Miles off.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Callaghan.] Did you live as a Servant in the House of Dunmaine?
 A. I did, Sir.
 Q. In what Station were you there?
 A. I was House-keeper before my Lady came there.
 Q. Was you so after?—A. I was not; Mrs. Setwright was.
 Q. In what Capacity did you serve in the House after she went there?
 A. I was in the House after she went there.
 Q. But I ask, did you serve in the House after?
 A. I did after, because I did every thing that was to do.
 Q. How long did you continue to live in the House?
 A. I lived in the House 'till I took a House of my own.
 Q. When was that?
 A. I cannot tell exactly the Time, but it was just at the End of the Avenue, and I was as frequently in the House then, as I was before.
 Q. I ask you how soon after my Lady went to Dunmaine was it that you left the House?—A. I cannot tell exactly the time, Sir.
 Q. Was it a Month?
 A. Oh! a great deal more than one, or two, or three.
 Q. Was it before or after Mrs. Briscoe and her Daughter went there?
 A. I was in the House when they came there.
 Q. I ask you only, whether you were a Servant living in the House at the time they went there?—A. I was.
 Q. Upon your Oath, did not you keep an Alehouse at the Bridge then?
 A. No, not 'till after they went there.
 Q. Did you keep an Ale-house there before Mrs. Briscoe and her Daughter left Dunmaine?—A. No, I did not, to the best of my Knowledge.
 Q. What time did they go to Dunmaine?—A. I cannot tell the Year, nor Month, nor any thing of that, it is too long ago for my Memory.
 Q. How long did they stay there?—A. I cannot tell that again.
 Q. How long after they left it was it that Mrs. Setwright was brought-to-bed?—A. I cannot tell; she was with Child coming to the House; but I cannot tell the time she was brought-to-bed.
 Q. Was it a Month, or six Weeks, or two Months after they left Dunmaine, that she was brought-to-bed?
 A. Mrs. Briscoe's Daughter was a Gossip to the Child, to the best of my Knowledge, and they were there at the same time.
 Q. Was you out of the House at the time Mrs. Setwright was brought-to-bed?—A. I think I was not out of the House then.
 Q. Were you or were you not?—A. I cannot tell that exactly.
 Q. But you are sure you were a Servant when Mrs. Briscoe went away?
 A. No, I did not say that: I say, to the best of my Knowledge I was in the House.
 Q. You remember Mrs. Hesther's being brought-to-bed?
 A. I do, very well.
 Q. Was that before or after my Lady went to Dunmaine?
 A. It was before my Lady went there.
 Q. You mentioned the Midwife's Name?—A. Shiel it was.
 Q. Could that Midwife be sent for any Purpose to Lady Altham?
 A. She could not, because Lady Altham never had a Child; she never had a Child.
 Q. Was not it before Lady Altham went to Dunmaine that Hesther was brought-to-bed?—A. Yes, do not I tell you so?
 Q. I think you say you were at Carrickduffe?—A. I was, Sir.
 Q. Was not you there upon a Day, that was celebrated as a Birth-day of Lord Altham's Son?—A. There never was such a thing in this World.
 Q. Can you take upon you to say there was not?
 A. I am as positive of it as of any thing in the World.
 Q. Had you any Conversation with any body in relation to Lady Altham's having had a Child?—A. No, never since I was born.
 Q. Upon your Oath, did you never say that my Lady had a Child?
 A. Never, in the course of my Life.
 Mr. Recorder.] Now we shall judge whether Mr. Mac Kercher's Information be true or not.
 Court.] He was certainly misinformed.

8. ELEANOR THOMAS, alias FISHER.

Mr. Le Hunte.] The Evidence she will give is this—Court.] Do not open it now she is here.
 Mr. Le Hunte.] What is your Name?—Eleanor Thomas.] Eleanor Thomas.
 Q. Is that the Name you go by now?
 VOL. IX.

A. Eleanor Fisher is; my maiden Name was Thomas.
 Q. Did you know one Mary Waters?—A. I did.
 Q. Did you know the late Lady Altham?—A. I did, Sir.
 Q. Did you ever live in her Service?—A. I did.
 Q. When did you go there?
 A. I cannot tell you the Year, but I was the second Servant she hired after she came to Dunmaine.
 Q. What was the Nature of your Service?—A. I was House-maid.
 Q. How long did you live with my Lady?
 A. I lived a Twelvemonth with her.
 Q. Where did you go when you left the Service?
 A. I went to one Mr. Bunbury's of Ballyfeskin.
 Q. Did you ever hear of one Mrs. Briscoe and her Daughter's being at Dunmaine?
 A. I was in the House at the same time.
 Q. What House?—A. My Lord's in Dunmaine.
 Q. Whilst you were House-maid, do you remember to have seen them there?—A. I did.
 Q. Did you continue there 'till they left it?
 A. I did indeed.
 Q. Do you know of Lady Altham's having a Miscarriage at Dunmaine?
 A. Indeed I never did.
 Q. Did you know Mrs. Pigot?—A. Indeed I did.
 Q. Of what Place?—A. Of Tyntern.
 Q. Did you ever live in her Service?
 A. I lived eight Years Maid and Wife with her.
 Q. When did you go to live with her?
 A. I went to her after I left Dunmaine.
 Q. I thought you said you went to Mrs. Bunbury's?
 A. I was only a Year at Bunbury's.
 Q. How long did you live with Mrs. Pigot?
 A. I was eight Years Maid and Wife with her.
 Q. Did you live any where in her Service but at Tyntern?
 A. No where but at Tyntern.
 Q. Can you recollect the Time she was living there when you was hired?—A. I was a Twelvemonth her Servant at Tyntern before she came from Dublin.
 Q. When did she come from Dublin to Tyntern?
 A. I went to her at Lammis, and the Lady-day Twelvemonth following she came to Tyntern.
 Q. What Year was it?—A. Indeed, Sir, I cannot tell.
 Q. Where did she live for that Year?—A. In Dublin, Sir.
 Q. Who hired you then?—A. Her Steward, James Byrne, hired me.
 Q. Was there any Separation between Lord and Lady Altham, to your Knowledge?
 A. I remember they parted; I was at Tyntern at the same Time.
 Q. Was Mrs. Pigot there at that Time?
 A. I think she was; I cannot tell positively.
 Q. Whilst you were at Dunmaine and Mrs. Briscoe there, did you hear that Lady Altham miscarried of a Child?
 Mr. Walsh.] That is a leading Question; do not answer it, Woman.
 Court.] Did you ever see Lady Altham with Child?
 A. I never saw her with Child, nor never heard of her having a Child.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Mac Manus.] You say, you lived at Dunmaine?—A. I do, Sir.
 Q. What Year?—A. Indeed, Sir, I cannot tell you the Year.
 Q. Upon your Oath, what Year did you go to live there?
 A. I can tell you the time of Year, but not the Year.
 Q. Can you tell the Year you left Dunmaine?
 A. I served her Ladyship a Year.
 Q. Was it in the Year 1716 or 1717 that you left her Service?
 A. I cannot tell, if you would shoot me for that.
 Court.] Where were you hired?—A. In Dunmaine House.
 Q. Who hired you?—A. My Lady hired me herself.
 Q. During the time that you were there, did you see any Child there?
 A. I never did.
 Q. Did you see Lady Altham frequently?
 A. I did, I was the next Servant to Mrs. Heath, and often saw her.
 Mr. Mac Manus.] Did you see the Furniture of that House?—A. I did.
 Q. Did you see any Sawcers with odd Figures on them?
 A. I never saw the Sawcers.
 Q. Did you never see those bawdy Sawcers in the House?—A. I never did.
 Q. Do not you believe they were there?
 A. I do not know; I never did see them.
 Q. Did you never hear of a Miscarriage occasioned by the breaking of the Sawcers?—A. I never saw or heard of a Miscarriage.
 Q. Did you never hear it among the Servants?
 A. I never did, upon my Word.
 Q. Upon your Oath, did you never hear it?
 A. Upon my Oath, and upon my Life, I never did.
 Q. Could there not be a Miscarriage and you not know of it?
 A. There could not, Sir; for my Lady could not miscarry unknown to me.
 Q. Could she do any Office of Nature unknown to you?
 A. I do not know what you mean.
 Mr. Bradstreet.] The next Witness will shew your Lordship where Mr. Cliffe, who is said to be Godfather to this Child, was from the fifth of May 'till the Middle of June 1715. His Son will appear here to prove that; and will shew some Rules of the Court, where he made Motions during that Time.
 Mr. Walsh.] I believe many a Rule is entered in a Lawyer's Name that he knew nothing of.
 Mr. Bradstreet.] First, we will produce his Son, to shew where he was in the Year 1715. We will shew that first.
 Court.] If this be as you have opened it, it will be the most material Thing that has happened yet; and I believe there will be little in the Thing after, for it cuts off two or three of the most material Witnesses on the other Side.
 The Night being pretty far advanced, Mr. Cliffe had retired to his Lodgings, and the next Witness called was Mrs. Halpen; but she being also out of the way, Mr. Tench was called.

John Trench, Esq.
Mr. Spring.] Pray, Sir, inform the Court and the Jury, whether you had any Knowledge of Mrs. Pigot of Tynern?—Mr. Trench.] I had, Sir.

Q. You did know her?—A. I knew her, Sir.
Q. Was any Friend of your's concerned for her in her Affairs?
A. My Father received her Rents for above thirty Years.

Q. Who was concerned in the Management of her Affairs, and Receipt of her Rents in the Year 1715?—A. My Father was.

Q. Can you give the Court and the Jury an Account where Mrs. Pigot was in the Month of November, 1714, and from thence down to the latter End of the Year 1716?—A. From my own Knowledge I do not know where she was; but from Letters I can tell you.

Q. Have you any Reason to enable you to form a Judgment where Mr. Trench was in—

Court.] Where was Mrs. Pigot in November 1714?

A. Of my own Knowledge I cannot tell where she was.

Mr. Spring.] Are your Father's Accompts, and Papers, and Letters, come to your Hands?—A. I have them, Sir.

Q. Have you any Accompts relating to Mrs. Pigot's Affairs in the Years 1714, 1715, or 1716, in his Hand-writing?—A. I have in the Year 1715.

Court.] It is proper to ask him if he has such; but what then? That won't prove where Mrs. Pigot was.

Mr. Spring.] My Lord, my next Question is, Whether he has any Letters of Mrs. Pigot to his Father?

Court.] That will not do. If she was produced here as a Witness, you might produce her Letters to confront her. We are not now upon the Proof of Similitude of Hands.

Mr. Spring.] Was you at Tynern in the Year 1714?

A. I cannot tell where I was in 1714.

Q. Were you there in the Year 1715?—A. I was there in 1715.

Q. Where were you in May 1715?—A. Indeed, Sir, I cannot tell.

JO. JAMES WALSH.

Mr. Edward Malone.] We produce this Witness, my Lord, to shew that Mrs. Pigot was in another Country, at another Place attending her Husband, who broke his Leg, at the Time they pretend she was God-mother to this Child.

Mr. Edmond Malone.] Are you a married Man?

James Walsh.] Yes, Sir.

Q. In what Family did your Wife live when you married her?

A. In the Family of Mrs. Pigot.

Q. What Mrs. Pigot, Sir?—A. Mrs. Pigot of Tynern.

Q. Did you know Counsellor Pigot?—A. I did, Sir, very well.

Q. I ask you, then, if you recollect at any Time when any, and what Accident or Hurt happened to him?—A. I do, Sir.

Q. Tell it.

A. Mrs. Pigot went to Dublin in 1714, about November or December, I am not sure in what Month, and some time after Christmas Mr. Pigot went to London, and he came back again—

Q. Was it in January 1714-15, that he went to London?

A. I believe thereabout.

Q. Well, go on.

A. He came back I believe about March, or thereabouts, and he went to his Estate in the County of Limerick, and happened to break his Leg or Thigh in the Year 1715.

Q. What Time in the Year 1715?

A. April I believe, or March, or thereabouts.

Q. At what Place did he break his Leg?

A. They tell me, Sir, at Glengoole; I was not with him there.

Q. How do you know he broke his Leg?

A. I know, because Mrs. Pigot went from Dublin to him.

Q. What Time did she go to him?—A. She went about April 1715.

Q. Where was she to go to?—A. Either to the County of Tipperary or County of Kilkenny, I cannot tell which.

Q. How soon after he went to the County of Limerick did she leave Dublin?—A. I cannot tell exactly how soon she left Dublin, but she stayed there till she brought Mr. Pigot home.

Q. To what Place?—A. To her House upon Arran's-Quay.

Q. What Time was that?

A. I cannot exactly tell the Time; I believe it was in the Year 1715.

Q. How long might she have staid away with him?

A. I cannot tell exactly; I believe it was more than a Month; I believe it was two Months, I do not exactly know.

Q. When they came to Dublin, how long did they continue in Dublin without going into the Country again?

A. They staid in Dublin till she buried Mr. Pigot in 1717.

Q. Are you positive that she remained all that Time in Dublin, without going any where to the County of Wexford?

A. Yes, Sir, I can say that safely; and that she went home in the Year 1717, and sent me back to Dublin to make a Monument for Mr. Pigot at the Outside of St. Paul's Church.

Q. How long after their Return to Dublin was it that he died?

A. He died in the Year 1717.

Court.] Are you sure that Mrs. Pigot was not at Tynern in the Year 1715?

A. She was not, upon my Oath.

Q. Nor in the County of Wexford?

A. Indeed she was not, my Lord.

Q. How many Years did you live with her in all?

A. I cannot tell how many Years, but I lived with her from his Death to her Death.

Q. And you are sure she was not in the County of Wexford from the Time she came to Dublin, till she buried him?

A. I am sure she was not.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Harward.] Pray, Sir, where were you in Christmas 1714?

A. In Dublin, Sir.

Q. Where did you live in Dublin?—A. On Arran's-Quay.

Q. Was you a House-keeper there?

A. I generally kept Mr. Pigot's House when they were in the Country, but that Year I did not.

Q. Did you keep his House in Christmas 1714?—A. I did not, Sir.

Q. Where were you then?—A. On Arran's-Quay.

Q. Where were you in the Beginning of March 1714?

A. I was in Dublin then.

Q. Where in Dublin?—A. In Lodgings of my own.

Q. Where were you May-day 1715?—A. In Dublin, Sir.

Q. Are you sure you were?—A. I was indeed, Sir.

Q. Where in Midsummer 1715?—A. In Dublin.

Q. Now, I ask you upon your Oath, was Mr. Pigot or Mrs. Pigot in their House at Dublin in the Beginning of March 1714?

A. No, they did not come to Dublin till November 1714.

Q. Where was Mrs. Pigot in March 1714?

A. In the County of Wexford.

Court.] Do you mean March 1713-14, or March 1714-15?

A. In March 1714-15 she was in Dublin.

Q. Where was she in March 1713-14?

A. I cannot tell, my Lord, I believe in the County of Wexford.

Mr. Harward.] Where was Mr. Pigot the first of May 1715?

A. I cannot tell you whether in Dublin, or that he was sick where he got his Hurt.

Q. Can you say, upon your Oath, where he was the first of May 1715?

A. Indeed I am not sure whether he was in Dublin, or whether he was where he broke his Limb.

Q. Now, Friend, where was Mrs. Pigot when the great Eclipse was?

A. I believe she was with her Husband where he broke his Leg.

Q. Was you in the County of Tipperary at the Time of the great Eclipse?—A. I was not.

Q. Where was she at that Time?

A. I suppose she was with Mr. Pigot.

Q. Don't be supposing with me; you know you ought to tell nothing but what you know; do you know where she was at the Eclipse?

A. She was, and I take it upon my Oath, she was where Mr. Pigot broke his Thigh.

Q. Where was that?—A. In the County, I believe, of Tipperary.

Q. How do you know that she was not in the County of Wexford?

A. Because I know she was not.

Q. Was not you in Summer 1715 in Dublin?

A. I was, Part of the Summer 1715.

Q. How do you know that she was where her Husband lay ill at the Time of the Eclipse?

A. I know it very well; she was with Mr. Pigot where he broke his Leg.

Q. Did you see her with him?—A. No, I did not.

Q. Why will you swear then she was with him?

A. Why, because I am sure of it.

Q. How are you sure of it?

A. She told me she was going to him, I knew that she went there, and we all knew that she went there.

Q. Have you any other Reasons for being so positive?

A. There are Letters from under her Hand, giving an Account that she was there.

Q. What Letters?—A. To her Agent Captain Trench.

Q. Pray now then, is not that the Reason that you know she was there?

A. It is only one Reason.

Q. Tell another Reason.

A. Why, I am sure she was there, because I know she went there, and all that were along with her told me so.

Q. Do you know of your own Knowledge where she was?—A. No.

Court.] Did you see Mr. Pigot when he came to Dublin?—A. I did.

Q. In what Condition did he then appear to you?

A. He appeared as if he had a Leg broke, and was very bad.

Court, to the Jury.] The Witness says, he saw Mrs. Pigot go down to her Husband, and saw them return together.

Mr. Recorder.] Where he swears that she went to her Husband at a certain Time, that she was going to her Husband, and that he saw her come back with him, with his broken Leg, it is as full Evidence as is necessary.

II. MARY WALSH.

Mr. Lee.] What is your Husband's Name?

Mary Walsh.] James Walsh.

Q. Did you know Mrs. Pigot?—A. I did.

Q. Did you know her in the Year 1715?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. Where was she then?—A. In Dublin then.

Court.] Where did she go from Dublin?

A. She went to where Mr. Pigot broke his Thigh.

Q. Where was that?—A. Beyond Kilkenny, going up to Munster.

Q. Was you with her?—A. I was not.

Q. How do you know she went there?

A. Because she was sent for when he broke his Thigh.

Mr. Lee.] When did Mrs. Pigot come to Town after that?

A. I cannot tell when she came up.

Q. Who came with her?

A. Mrs. Wallace and others, I cannot tell who.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Pigot after?

A. Sure I was with him when he was buried.

Q. Do you remember when he came to Dublin after he had broke his Leg?

A. Why, I believe he came when she came.

Q. Who came to Town with Counsellor Pigot?

A. I cannot tell you, Sir; I cannot remember that.

12. JOHN CLIFFE, Esq.

Mr. Bradstreet.] My Lord, this is the Evidence that I have already open'd.

Mr. Bradstreet.] What is become of your Father?—Mr. Cliffe.] Dead.

Q. What Profession was he of?—A. A Lawyer at the Bar.

Q. Do you remember where your Father was in May and June 1715?

A. I cannot take upon me to say where he was; he was in this Kingdom, but whether in Country or Town I cannot take upon me to say from my own Memory.

Q. Where was you at that time? — A. I believe I was at the College.

Q. Pray, recollect and consider now, where your Father was in those Months?

A. I cannot take upon me to say, from my Memory, where he was in May 1715.

Q. Where do you say you yourself were at that time?

A. I was in the College at that time.

Q. Did your Father attend the Terms regularly at that time, or not?

A. I believe he did; but I cannot take upon me to say that I remember his keeping Terms regularly; I believe he did.

Mr. Bradstreet. It appears to your Lordship that Mr. Cliffe was a Lawyer at the Bar; now, we are to falsify the Testimony of some Witnesses produced on the other Side, who swear he was Godfather to this Child, and therefore I hope we shall be at Liberty to shew some Rules of the Court, to prove that Mr. Cliffe was here in May and June in the Year 1715.

Mr. Serj. Tisdall. I desire to know first, whether you have other Questions to ask the Witnesses.

Mr. Bradstreet. My Lord, I remember when the Testimony of a Person was defeated, by shewing that the Name of a Lawyer was to a certain Bill. He said, that the Lawyer was dead before that time, the Record was produced, and his Name was at the Record in the Cause of Reynolds and Sandys. We produce this Witness to shew that those Witnesses, who swore his Father was Godfather to my Lord Altham's Child, swear false; cannot we, in addition to his Testimony, shew the Rules of the several Courts that his Father made Motions in at that time?

Mr. MacManus. My Lord, I only get up to answer Mr. Bradstreet. I do apprehend, that a Bill in Chancery is not Evidence, and the Reason is, because any Man may file a Bill in the Name of another; and therefore, unless you can shew some Proceedings have been had upon it, you cannot produce it in Evidence. The same Rule will hold in a curiory Motion in Court, which may be made by one Person and have another's Name to it.

Mr. Daly. It is never done on the Equity Side, it is always moved in Court publickly.

Court. I think it must appear, who the Counsel is that makes the Motion.

Mr. MacManus. The Attorney is the Person to whom you must give notice, and is answerable for all the Proceedings; the Lawyer's Name may be, and often is mistaken by the Officer of the Court, it not being material what Lawyer moves.

Court. The Question is, Whether attested Copies of the Acts of a Court of Record may not be produced, proved and given in Evidence to falsify a Witness, to shew that a Person sworn at a certain Time to be in one Place, was then at another?

Mr. Daly. The Indenture of a Fine is read against a Man every Day.

Mr. Solicitor. By Act of Parliament?

Mr. Daly. It is not made Evidence by Act of Parliament.

Court. Put the Case distinctly.

Mr. Bradstreet. I say, my Lord, I put it thus: After the Evidence of this Gentleman, his Father appearing to be a Lawyer at the Bar, and after the Evidence that has been given on the other Side of his being Godfather to a Child at Dunmaine at such a Time, I offer these Rules of his on Motion, to shew that he was not at Dunmaine at that Time, but in these Courts, and I instance the Case of Reynolds and Sandys for a Precedent.

Mr. Robins. Are they litigated Motions?

Mr. Bradstreet. They are litigated, and Hearings and open Pleadings.

Mr. Thomas Bourk.

Mr. Bradstreet. What is that in your Hand?

Mr. Thomas Bourk. Rules in the Court of Exchequer in Easter Term 1715.

Q. Are they all out of that Court? — A. They are, Sir.

Q. Are they true Copies? — A. They are.

Mr. Serj. Tisdall. I believe it is an established Rule in Evidence, that the greatest Certainty must be had, that the Nature of the Thing to be proved will admit of. This is Evidence of no sort of Certainty, because it depends upon a Person not on his Oath, and because he incurs no Penalty by falsifying the Name of the Lawyer. He is not upon his Oath not to put the Name of the Lawyer to the Record, and it is no more than a falsifying Evidence; and besides, Records can only be produced as Evidence between the Parties to them.

Mr. MacManus. I apprehend it no sort of Evidence at all.

Mr. Bradstreet. What I apprehend is this, that this is Evidence which is contradictory to the Evidence that they have produced to this Point. Here are Motions that have been litigated, that have not passed of course; but I say, they have been litigated, so that it is to be presumed, that he was litigating these Matters; and if so, it is impossible he could be at Dunmaine at that time. And as such, I hope, is good Proof, and especially since he is dead.

Court. I think it may be read to Contradict a Witness; and I know that the Officer is so far from being permitted to do this Thing of falsifying a Name, that he is under a great Penalty for it.

Mr. Bradstreet. The Register is answerable, though committed by the Deputy.

Court. I think it may be read in contradiction to the Witnesses.

Mr. MacManus. Your Lordship is going to establish a Rule that may be of dangerous Consequence.

Court. I am not going to settle a Rule, but I only tell you what I think is and ought to be allowed as Evidence. The Journals of both Houses of Parliament have been produced in Evidence.

Mr. Walsh. I beg leave to consider this —

Court. Read the Notes and Orders.

Mr. Whyte reads, This is the 5th of May 1715.

Powell v. Goodwin Ex. } Mr. Cliffe pro Q. prays Interest for the 246 l. which the Defendant's Testator received since they were paid of Goodwin. } the Mortgage Money.

Mr. Baly. I do not oppose Plaintiff's having a Decree for the Money, but they move for Interest, and I am surprized at their demanding of Interest.

Cur. Take a Decree for the Money reported, and Interest for the Money reported from the Time the Report was confirmed; and take an Injunction forthwith to be put in Possession, and take a Decree for the Rent that fell due the 25th of March last.

Court. He must be personally in Court at that Motion.

Mr. Whyte. The next is the 6th of May, 1715.

Birmingham et al. } Mr. Cliffe pro Q. moves on the last Notes for putting off the giving of the Judgment of the Court on Affidavit.

Lord Shelburne } The next is the 9th of May, 1715.

Lawless v. Shee } Mr. Cliffe pro Q. moves on last Order for putting off the Hearing a Week.

The next is the 11th of May, 1715.

Birmingham et al. } Mr. Cliffe prays a Day to speak to this Matter.

Lord Shelburne } The next is the 12th of May, 1715.

Archer v. Rogers } Mr. Cliffe pro D. moves for Time to answer personal Interrogatories as to several Books, in regard the Books are very large, and produces an Affidavit of this Matter.

The next is the 13th of May, 1715.

Watson v. Butler } Mr. Cliffe pro D. moves for to dissolve the Injunction.

The next is the 14th of May, 1715.

White & Ux. v. Gale et al. } Mr. Cliffe pro Q. moves on the Notes upon the Hearing.

The next is the 31st of May, 1715.

Thomas White v. David Dunbarr } Mr. Cliffe opens the Defendant's Answer.

The next is the 1st of June, 1715.

Archer v. Rogers } Mr. Cliffe pro D. the Plaintiff never demanded any Custom for Timber these fourteen Years.

The next is the 18th of June, 1715.

Birmingham v. Lord Shelburne } Mr. Cliffe pro Q. moves on the Order for Liberty to read the Bill and Answer in the Cause of Stewart against the Lord Shelburne.

The next is the 23d of June, 1715.

King v. Gore et al. } Mr. Cliffe pro D. moves on Affidavit for a Commission to examine.

The next is the 25th of June, 1715.

Birmingham et al. v. Lord Shelburne } Mr. Cliffe pro Q. Stewart et al. have a Decree against Lord Shelburne, Evans et al. and they have a Decree for the 29,503 and also for the 21,032 Acres, and on the Hearing of this Cause the Bill of Stewart and others and the Lord Shelburne's Answer was offered to be read, but the Court has not yet read that Bill and Answer; prays that Bill and Answer may be read, before the Bill is dismissed.

Mr. Bradstreet. How many of your Name were at the Bar in the Year 1715?

Mr. Cliffe. I know of no Person of that Name but my Father.

Q. Did you ever attend the Courts? — A. I did not, Sir.

Q. Did you know Mr. Anthony Colclough, Sir? — A. Yes.

Q. Of what Religion was he? — A. He was reputed a Papist.

Q. Is he alive or dead? — A. I have heard that he is dead.

Q. Did not he die a Papist?

A. He was reputed a Papist during his Life.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. MacManus. Did you attend the Terms in the Year 1715 or 1716? — A. I did not attend in 1715 or 1716.

Q. Was your Father the only Person of the Name that professed the Law?

A. There might be another, but I never heard of any.

Mr. Walsh. It has not been taken notice of in what Terms these Motions have been made. Here is a Chasm of about a Fortnight between the first and last Motion, and there is so between the two Terms. The first Rule is on the 5th of May, the last the 25th of June, so that it must be in two Terms that they were made.

Court. So it was.

Mr. Walsh. Well, then there was a short Vacation, when he might have been in the Country, and stood Godfather to the Child.

Court. But you will consider, one of the Witnesses said the Christening was four or five Weeks, and another three or four Weeks after the Birth.

13. Mrs. PENELOPE HALPEN.

Mr. Lee. What was your Maiden name? — Mrs. Halpen. Hunt, Sir.

Q. Whose Daughter are you? — A. Daughter to John Hunt of Glan- goole, near Killenaule, in the County of Tipperary.

Q. Where did he live in the Year 1714, 1715, and 1716?

A. He lived there, Sir.

Q. Do you remember the Eclipse of the Sun? — A. I do.

Q. Where was you at that time? — A. I was at my Father's House then.

Q. Were you acquainted with Counsellor Pigot and his Wife?

A. I was.

Q. What was the Occasion of your being acquainted with them?

A. He broke his Thigh near my Father's House, and came and lay there till he was cured.

Q. When was that? — A. In the Year that the Eclipse happened.

Q. Was Mrs. Pigot there?

A. She was there at the Time of the Eclipse.

Q. How long did she stay after the Eclipse? — A. I cannot tell indeed.

Q. How long was she there before? — A. I cannot tell indeed.

Q. Was

Q. Was she a Fortnight, or a Month, or how long?
 A. I cannot tell how many Days.
 Q. Who came there first, he or she?—A. He came first.
 Q. How long was he there before she came?
 A. He was a few Days before she came.
 Q. Who came with her?—A. Mrs. Wallace.
 Q. In what State of Health was he?
 A. He was in his Bed with that broken Leg.
 Q. How long did he keep his Bed?
 A. I cannot tell how long he kept it; whether a Month or six Weeks I cannot tell.

Court.] How long did his Wife stay with him?
 A. I believe more than a Month.
 Mr. Lee.] Were they visited by any body while they stayed there?
 A. By several.
 Q. Can you recollect any one that visited them?
 A. Mr. Caesar Colclough was there; whether to pay him a Visit or not I cannot tell, but I saw him there.
 Q. Did they leave your Father's House together?
 A. They did, to the best of my Memory and Knowledge.
 Q. Where did they go to from your Father's House?
 A. I cannot tell indeed.
 Court.] Did they come to your Father's before or after the great Eclipse?
 A. Before.
 Q. Was Mrs. Pigot there before the great Eclipse?
 A. She was indeed.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] Can you be positive of the Time that she came to your Father's House?—A. I cannot tell what Time.
 Q. Can you say whether she was there at the Time of this Eclipse?
 A. Yes.
 Q. Are you sure she was?—A. I am sure she was.
 Q. Was any Person with her at that time?
 A. Mrs. Wallace and she were there.
 Q. Have you any particular Reason for being so certain?
 A. Yes, Sir, I was in the Garden when the Eclipse happened, and I called Mrs. Wallace out, to the Garden, to look at the Eclipse with me.
 Q. When was the Eclipse?—A. I cannot tell, Sir.
 Q. How long after the Eclipse did Mrs. Pigot stay?
 A. I cannot tell indeed.
 Q. How long did she come before it?—A. Nor how long before she came.

Mr. Le Hunte.] My Lord, we now produce Mr. Sutton, who will shew your Lordship that Dennis Redmond in the Year 1718 told him, that he carried a Midwife to Dunmaine to deliver one there, who was called my Lady.

14. WILLIAM SUTTON, Esq.

Mr. Le Hunte.] Pray, Sir, do you know Dennis Redmond?
 Mr. Sutton.] I do, Sir.
 Q. When did you first know him?—A. I believe in the Year 1717.
 Q. Was he ever in the Service of you or your Mother?
 A. He lived in the House with us in the Year 1717.
 Q. Had you ever a Sister at that Time?—A. I had.
 Q. Had she any Occasion for a Midwife?—A. She had, Sir.
 Q. Was any body sent for a Midwife?—A. Dennis Redmond was sent.
 Q. Will you give an Account of what you remember of the bringing her by him to your Sister?
 A. I believe it was in February 1717 that I sent him to Ross for Mrs. Shiel; he went out pretty early in the Morning, so as I expected him home before Dinner, but he did not return till an Hour or two in the Night, which made me imagine he had Occasion to go further for her; and when he came home, I went to the Stable to look what Condition the Horse was in. When I came into the Stable, I found him taking care of the Horse, and asked him how he came to stay so late; he told me he could not get her to come away sooner; and upon examining the Horse, I took up the Saddle and Pillion; and found him very warm and wet; upon which, I asked him how that came? He said, he could not tell, unless that unhappy Woman had pissed upon the Pillion, for that she was fond of Drink, and had served him so once before.

Q. Upon what Occasion did he tell you he had been sent for her before?
 A. He told me he had brought her once from Ross to Dunmaine for a young Gentlewoman, as he called her, that was kept by my Lord Altham.
 Q. Go on, Sir.
 A. He named the young Gentlewoman's Name, but I will not take upon me to swear her Name; I do not remember now what he called her.
 Q. Who was it he said he brought the Midwife for?
 A. He said, he brought her for a young Gentlewoman kept by my Lord Altham.
 Q. Did he ever tell you that he fetched one for my Lady Altham?
 A. He never did.
 Q. What is the Character of Redmond, is he to be credited upon his Oath?
 A. Why, of late Years he is not reckoned a Man of Veracity in our Country.
 Q. Is he to be believed upon his Oath?
 A. I should take but very little Notice of his Oath now.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Mac-Manus.] Why now?
 A. From his general bad Character in the Country.
 Q. How long has he had that general bad Character?
 A. He has not had a good one these several Years.
 Q. Do you know him to have perjured himself?
 A. I did not know him to have perjured himself in a Court of Justice.
 Mr. Edmund Malone.] We now produce Nicholas Croake, and he will shew that my Lady Altham stayed in Dunmaine in the Months of October and November 1714, that she went to Dublin in May following, and stayed in Dublin all the Year 1715.

15. NICHOLAS CROAKE.

Mr. Edmund Malone.] When did you first become acquainted with Lord and Lady Altham?
 Nicholas Croake.] The first time that I knew Lord Altham was in the Year 1711.

Q. And when with my Lady?—A. In the Year 1713.
 Q. Where did you live in the Year 1713?—A. At Ballycarrigmore.
 Q. How near is that to Dunmaine?
 A. I believe very near two small Miles the high Road, but to go a short Road it is much nearer.
 Q. You say in the Year 1713 you first knew my Lady, where was it you first saw her?
 A. In 1713, that was the first time that I saw her at Dunmaine, some time after she came there, in December 1713.
 Q. Do you know Rathimny Bogg in that Country?—A. Very well.
 Q. Do you know any thing particular that happened there?
 A. I do, very well.
 Q. Give an Account of what you know.
 A. In the Year 1714, his Lordship and Major John Sutton made a Hurling-match, to be hurl'd at the Green of Rathimny.
 Q. What time of the Year was that Hurling-match?
 A. It was hurl'd in September 1714, or the Beginning of October 1714; I cannot tell whether in October or the latter End of September.
 Q. Pray, Sir, how long after that, and when did you see Lady Altham at Dunmaine?
 A. I saw her that Day at the Hurling Green in her Chariot.
 Q. Was my Lord there?—A. He was on Horseback.
 Q. Pray, Sir, were you at any time and when at Wexford in the Year 1715?
 A. I was there at the Assizes in 1715, which happened upon Easter Week.

Q. I ask you, Sir, whether there were any and what Persons of Consequence there that you took notice of?
 A. Lord and Lady Altham were there.
 Q. Between the time of the Hurling-match and the time of the Assizes, did you visit them at Dunmaine?
 A. I was very often at Dunmaine in the Year 1714, when they lived there.
 Q. Were you ever there in November 1714?
 A. I was often there between the Hurling-match and Christmas 1714.
 Q. Were you there in November that Year?—A. I cannot tell that.
 Q. Did you see my Lord and Lady often between the Hurling-match and the Assizes?—A. I did, Sir.
 Q. When you saw my Lady at the Assizes, did you observe her to be with Child?
 A. I never did, by the Virtue of my Oath, nor never heard she was 'till this Affair.

Q. After the Assizes, can you recollect any Misfortune that happened in your Family?
 A. When I was at Wexford Assizes, my Father, being ill for several Months before, died; when I came home the 20th of April 1715, he was dead before I came home, and was buried that Friday that the great Eclipse happened, the 22d of April.

Q. Do you remember any Rejoicings at Dunmaine about the Time of the Eclipse, and on what Occasion?
 A. I cannot tell you on what Occasion, but on the 23d of April, being St. George's Day, that my Lord made a Merriment, it was on a Saturday, the Day after my Father's Burying.
 Q. Did my Lord Altham celebrate any Day, and what Day in the Year with Dancing and Merriment?
 A. That Day he did, the 23d of April 1715, and the 23d of April 1714 before.

Q. Did you see Lady Altham at the time you were there?
 A. I saw her there, indeed.
 Q. Was she present at the Diversion?—A. She was.
 Q. In what Condition did she appear, as to being with Child then?
 A. By the Virtue of my Oath, I never saw her appear as to say she was any way big, or with Child.
 Q. How soon after did they go from Dunmaine to Dublin?
 A. They went in May 1715 to Dublin.
 Q. Did you see them at any time after, and when?
 A. I saw them in August 1715.
 Q. Was that the August after the Assizes?
 A. It was in August 1715 that I saw them in Dublin.
 Q. Did you see them at any time that Year besides, and how soon after?
 A. I did see them in October 1715, and in February 1715 I seen them here; and in April 1716, the latter End of that Month I came to Town to my Lord, and staid till he went into the Country in May 1716.
 Q. Where was my Lady then?—A. I saw her at her Lodging.
 Q. Where?—A. At Mrs. Vies's in Essex-street.
 Q. Can you say when my Lord returned to Dunmaine?
 A. He went from Dublin to Dunmaine in May 1716.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Mac Manus.] You say, you knew my Lord and Lady Altham at Dunmaine?—A. I did, Sir.
 Q. Pray, how often did you see them there?
 A. I cannot tell, but very often.
 Q. I think you said, that my Lady was not with Child when you saw her?

A. I did say so, and I never heard it 'till this Affair.
 Q. Might not she have been with Child and you not know it?
 A. I should have heard it in the House where I was so conversant.
 Q. Might not she have been with Child and you not know it?
 A. I never knew her to be with Child.
 Q. What sort of a Woman was Lady Altham?
 A. She was a clever proper Woman.
 Q. Was she tall?—A. She was tall.
 Q. May not a tall Woman be with Child and you not observe it, if she was young with Child?
 A. If she was, I never saw it nor heard it.
 Q. Did you ever hear that she miscarried?—A. I never did.
 Q. You say you were at the Assizes of Wexford?—A. I was.
 Q. Was you there in Easter Assizes 1716?
 A. In Easter Assizes 1715, I was there.
 Q. Were you there in Easter Assizes 1716, or any other Assizes?

A. I cannot tell but I might be at other Affizes, I do not remember which now.

Q. How came you to know you were there in 1715?

A. I gave you a Reason before, that my Father was ill when I went to the Affizes, and I found him dead when I came home.

Q. Was Mr. Colclough at that Affizes?—A. I believe he may be there.

Q. Would not you have seen him, if he had been there?

A. There may be several there, that I did not see.

Q. Name any Person you did see there.—A. I saw Lady Altham there.

Q. How came you to take more particular notice of her being there than of Mr. Colclough's?

A. Because I was much better acquainted with them than him; and I had very great Reason for it.

Q. Did you see her go into Court?—A. I did not.

Q. Was she in it to your Knowledge?—A. She was, as I was told.

Q. Were you in the Court during the Affizes?

A. I was in it sometimes, and I cannot tell well whether I was or not, but I believe I was.

Q. What coloured Cloaths had she on at Wexford then?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Where was it you saw her at that Affizes?

A. At her Lodging at Captain Sweeney's, at Wexford.

Q. Where did he live?

A. In the Street as you go down towards the Gaol.

Q. How came you to see her there?

A. Because I came to his Lordship about some Business.

Q. Did you see her whenever you went to see my Lord at any other Time?—A. Perhaps I might, and perhaps not.

Q. Where was my Lord at Wexford when you saw him?

A. I saw him at Captain Sweeney's House.

Q. And where did you see my Lady?

A. She was coming out of the Room when I saw her.

Q. What sort of Cloaths did she wear then?

A. I cannot tell what sort of Cloaths, it is so long since.

Q. Pray, Sir, when did you hear of your Father's Death?

A. Not until I came home, in the Night.

Q. How long was you at home after he was buried?

A. I came home before he was buried, he died on Wednesday, and I came home that Night, and he was buried on Friday the twenty-second of April.

Q. How far do you live from Dunmaine?

A. About two Miles, or thereabouts.

Q. Was you at Dunmaine the twenty-third of April?

A. I was there the twenty-third of April, the Day after my Father was buried.

Mr. Mac Manus.] How many Days did you stay at the Affizes?

A. Two Days, Sir.

Q. Were you there the first Day of the Affizes?

The Witness is directed to go off the Table.

The Examination of the Witnesses for the Traverser ended at three o'Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Solicitor.] I mentioned to your Lordship some time ago, that if these Gentlemen offered any thing new, we would reserve a Liberty of replying, and encountering some Testimony that we expected on the other Side. It relates to the Transaction at Wexford, on which they lay great Weight; in answer to which, for the Satisfaction of the Jury, we shall beg leave to have two or three Witnesses produced.

Court.] Well, be it so. Who do you call?

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] We shall now call Mr. John Masterfon, the very Man that was tried at that Affizes.

Mr. Malone, Mr. Daly, &c.] Not one of the Witnesses said that he was tried, but that Walsh was.

Mr. Robins.] This is to shew whether Lady Altham was there or not.

1. Mr. JOHN MASTERFON.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] Was you at the Affizes of Wexford in Spring 1715?—Mr. John Masterfon.] I was, Sir.

Q. Pray, Sir, was you arraigned there?—A. I was.

Q. Can you say whether there was any Lady at the Court-house the Day you were arraigned?

A. There were some Gentlemen there, but I know of no Lady.

Q. Did you take notice of any of them?

A. There were two Aunts of mine, and a Sister of mine, and two Cousin-Germans.

Q. Who were they? Name them.—A. My Aunt Swords, my Aunt Talbot, my Sister Colclough, and my Aunt Talbot's two Daughters.

Court.] Did you know Lady Altham then?—A. I did.

Q. Did you see her in the Court-house that Day?

A. I take it upon me, to the best of my Knowledge, to say, that I did not see her.

Q. Do you know Mrs. Anne Giffard?—A. I did know her formerly, but have not seen her since the last Time I seen her at Wexford.

Q. Did you see her in Court?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, she was not there.

Q. Was she in Wexford at that Affizes?

A. If she was, she was not in Court.

Q. How do you know?—A. Because I did not see her.

Q. And might not she be there for all that?

A. She might be in Disguise, may be.

Q. Would you know her now if you saw her?

A. I do not believe I would, for I live very remote from that Part of the Country, and have not seen her a long time.

Q. Might not she be there and you not see her?

A. Not, except she kept behind Backs.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] Did you know Lady Altham before that Affizes?

A. I have seen her before at Ross at Captain Butler's, my Wife's Father-in-Law's.

Q. Were you acquainted with her Face?—A. I was.

Q. Did you, or did you not see her in the Court at the Affizes?

A. I did not see her, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Daly.] Was Lord Altham there?—A. He was.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] Was Caesar Colclough there?—A. He was.

Q. Whereabouts was he in the Court-house?

VOL. IX.

A. I do not remember whereabouts he was.

Court.] This is improper; it is not regular, Mr. Serjeant. It is Evidence to the same Fact, your Evidence now must be only to discredit the Witnesses.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] My Lord, it is a new Fact arisen upon their Testimony.

Q. Did you see Lady Altham there at any other Affizes?—A. I did.

Q. At what other Affizes?

A. I cannot tell which Affizes, but it was after that, and I have seen Mrs. Giffard with her, and it was not the Affizes I was tried.

Q. Are you sure it was not the Affizes 1715?—A. It was not.

Q. Were you tried at that Affizes?

A. I was arraigned, and tried then, and acquitted with Honour.

Q. Was Mr. Walsh tried at the same time?

A. He was not tried by the same Jury, nor the same Day.

Q. Pray, were you both at the same time in Court?—A. We were, Sir.

Mr. Recorder.] I ask you, Sir, were you under so little Concern, as that you reckoned all the Ladies in the Court?

Court.] You establish him as a Witness properly produced, if you cross-examine him.

Mr. John Masterfon.] There were more Women that I do not remember.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] We beg leave to produce Mr. Colclough.

Jury to Mr. Masterfon.] What was the Day you were tried on?

A. I believe it was on Wednesday I was tried, to the best of my Memory, and I believe it was the twentieth of April.

Q. On what Day was Mr. Walsh tried?

A. Mr. Walsh was tried the Day before me.

Q. Did the Court sit the Day after you were tried?

A. I did not mind that, for I was drinking with my Friends and minding other Business, and did not mind that; I believe the Judges discharged the Country.

Q. Were you in Court when Walsh was tried?—A. I was.

Mr. Mac Manus.] Mr. Colclough has met with a very great Misfortune by the Death of a valuable Son, but for the Sake of publick Justice he will appear here.

2. CAESAR COLCLOUGH, Esq.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] Were you at the Spring Affizes of Wexford in the Year 1715?

Mr. Caesar Colclough.] I was, Sir.

Q. Did you see Lady Altham or Mrs. Giffard there?

A. I did not that I know of.

Q. Were you in the Court-house when the Pretender's Men were tried?—A. I was.

Q. Pray, Sir, were Lady Altham and Mrs. Giffard there?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, they were not.

Q. Did you sit by them at those Trials?—A. I did not, Sir.

Q. Pray, Sir, did you hand either of them into Court?—A. I handed neither of them into Court, by the Virtue of my Oath.

Q. Did you attend the whole Trial?

A. I did, and was there before and after.

Q. You were acquainted with Mr. Pigot, I presume?—A. What Pigot?

Q. Counsellor Pigot, that was married to Mrs. Pigot of Tyntern.

A. Yes, he was married to my Relation.

Q. Can you say where he was in Spring 1715?

A. To the best of my Knowledge, he was then in England.

Q. Do you remember his breaking his Leg?—A. I do, Sir; I remember he broke it at Glengoele in the County of Tipperary.

Q. Pray, Sir, what Year was that?

A. In the Year 1716, to the best of my Knowledge.

Q. Did you go to the County of Tipperary to see him?

A. I was in Town here when he broke his Leg, and my Cousin Pigot wrote to me, she had a Jointure upon that Estate, and wrote to me that I should come—

Mr. Daly.] I must object to this Evidence Mr. Colclough is going into; those Letters, Sir, that you received from Mrs. Pigot are not Evidence.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] Do you know Dennis Redmond?—A. I do.

Q. Pray, Sir, what Character does he bear; is he a Man to be credited upon Oath?

A. Upon my Word, I believe he is to be credited upon his Oath; if you will ask me for my Reasons, I will give them to you.

Q. What is his general Character?

A. He has as good a Character as any Man of his Abilities that I know of in the World; I have known him these twenty Years.

Q. Pray, Sir, do you know when Counsellor Pigot died?

A. I believe in the Year 1719, or thereabouts; he was buried in St. Paul's Church, the Time of his Death is on his Tomb there; I believe it was 1718 or 1719, or thereabouts, I am not certain.

Court.] Do you know whether Mrs. Pigot went to her Husband when he broke his Leg?

A. She did; and staid with him 'till he came to Dublin.

Q. Do you remember what Year it was?

A. It was in the Year 1716, as near as I can recollect.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Recorder.] Can you swear that Lady Altham was not at the Affizes in the Year 1715?

A. I can, as positively as I can swear any thing in the World.

Q. Can you, that she was not at the Affizes?

A. I can, that she was not in the Court.

Q. Can you swear that she was not in the Town?

A. I cannot take upon me to swear that she was not in the Town.

Q. Can you swear that Mr. Pigot did not break his Leg in the Year 1715?—A. I can, to the best of my Memory.

Q. But can you positively swear that he did not break his Leg in the Year 1715?

A. I can swear that it was not in the Spring 1715, because I was at the Wexford Affizes, and my Cousin wrote to me to come to her.

Q. Where was she?—A. She was at Glengoele.

Q. At whose House there?

A. At one Hunt's, it was a thatched House.

Q. Do you remember Penslope Hunt, a Daughter there?

A. I cannot tell, I might see Women there, but did not take such Notice as to remember them.

Q. Do not you believe that Mr. Hunt's Family knew when Mr. Pigot broke his Leg? Was not it broke near them?

A. Upon my Word, Sir, I do not believe they knew better than I; because I was directed by my Cousin to come down, and I did; and I found her there, and Surgeons setting his Leg, and I am sure it was the Year 1716.

Q. Where was Mrs. Pigot in the Year 1715?

A. She was in the Winter 1714, I am positive that she was at Tynern, and she seldom left it till towards May, or thereabouts.

Q. Do you know James Walsh?—A. He did not live with her then.

Q. Did not he live with her in the Year 1715?

A. No, Sir, nor his Wife neither.

Q. Where did they live?

A. They lived in Town, or somewhere else, but not in our Family.

Q. Was not he an Attendant of the Family at that Time?

A. No, Sir, I believe he was then a Door-keeper to the Play-house.

Q. Upon your Oath, do you know that of your own Knowledge?

A. I do know it so far, as I had it from his own Mouth, upon my Oath, that he was a Door-keeper at the Play-house.

Q. How long before that was he in their Service?

A. He had not been in the Service before.

Q. Was not he in the Service at all?

A. He was afterwards, but he was not in the Service at the Time Mr. Pigot broke his Leg at all.

Jury.] Was Lord Altham at the Assizes of Wexford in 1715?

A. I do not recollect any Thing about him at all; I was told he was, but he was a Man taken very little Notice of.

Q. Do you know whether he was in Court or not at the Trial?

A. I do not know whether he was in the Court or not.

Mr. Recorder.] Do you remember where you were at the Time of the Eclipse?

A. I was in the County of Wexford; I was hunting on the Mountain of Forth at the very Instant of the Eclipse.

Q. Did you, or did you not see Lord Altham at Wexford Assizes?

A. I did not see him there, to the best of my Knowledge.

Q. Recollect, and say upon your Oath, whether you did or no?

A. I do not recollect, I cannot say I did not see him or that I did, upon my Oath.

Mr. Serjeant Tisdall.] We shall trouble your Lordship but with two Witnesses more, and them but to two short Points. The first relates to Edmond Bourke; we produce Mr. Bush to give an Account of that Man, and a Character of him too.

3. ARTHUR BUSH, Esq.

Mr. Solicitor.] Do you know Edmond Bourke?

Mr. Bush.] I do, him of Collombkill.

Q. Do you remember that he was a Postillion to any body?—A. I do not.

Q. What is he now?—A. He is a kind of a Farmer now.

Q. Had you any Discourse with him about the Affairs of the Anglesea Family?—A. I had a Discourse with him.

Q. Give an Account what that Discourse was.

A. A little after the Time that Mr. Annesley and Lord Anglesea were at Ross, examining Witnesses, this Bourke came to my House about some Business of a Justice of Peace, and after I had done what he came about, I asked him whether he was at Ross, and what was doing there? He told me there was a great deal of Company, and he said he gave some Evidence there. I then asked him on which Side he was a Witness; he told me, on the Earl's Side. What was it, says I, that you had to say? He swore that he was Servant to Lord Altham, when he lived at Dunmaine, and that there was a Kitchen Maid there that my Lord had got with Child, that she was under the Cook in the Kitchen, and that all the Family disliked her, because she took a great deal upon her for lying with my Lord. That one Day there was a Hare in the Kitchen to be dressed for Dinner, and the Cook took the Skin of the Hare off and threw it at her, and hit her upon the Back, and said, Damn you, for a Whore, if I can do nothing else, I will mark your Bastard. Some Time after, he said, she was brought-to-bed of a Son, and they were all desirous to see if it had that Mark, and they run to see it, and it had the Mark of the Hare's Skin upon the Back of it. I told him, this is a very material Thing, and I thought you were a cunninger Fellow than to be pinned down to swear such a Thing as that. Oh! says he, if they do not like that, I can say that my Son was that Day drowned, and that I was a Madman and did not know what I was doing. He swore further, that there was a Quarrel between my Lord and Lady Altham on Account of Tom Pollifer; and upon that, he said, they parted, and my Lord lived at a Place called Dunmaine, and she in Ross, and he went with a Compliment from my Lord to my Lady, with a How-do-you-do, and said, that he saw my Lord very fond of the Child; and, says he, I spoke to my Lord about it and said, How can you be so very fond of that Bastard? Why, says he, I got him, and I will take Care of him, I will get him to be a Captain of Horse.

Q. What Character has this Bourke?

A. He is of a very bad Character.

Q. Is he to be believed upon his Oath?

A. I will not believe him; nor no one that ever heard talk of him would believe him.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. I have known him these six-and-twenty Years, and I have known him under a bad Character during that Time.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Recorder.] Had you any Discourse with this Man about a Child of Lady Altham's?

A. No indeed, he told me that she never had a Child.

Mr. Justice BLENNERHASSET.

Gentlemen of the Jury, The Traverser, Mary Heath, is indicted for Perjury, committed by her on her Examination in the Court of Exchequer, in a Cause wherein Campbell Craig, Lessee of James Annesley, was Plaintiff, and the Earl of Anglesea, Defendant. The several Assignments of Perjury in the Indictment are as follow:

First, It is laid in the Indictment, that she swore on that Trial that Lady Altham never had a Child, while she, the Traverser, lived with her.

Secondly, That Lady Altham never had a Child at Dunmaine in the County of Wexford.

The third is, That there never was a Child as a Child of Lord Altham's and Mary his Lady christened or living at Dunmaine House, while she, the Traverser, was there.

The fourth, That she never saw a Child in the Hands or Care of Joan Laffan while she was at Dunmaine.

And the fifth is this, That Lady Altham did not miscarry of a Child at Dunmaine.

The Indictment, Gentlemen, averreth the contrary of all these Facts, sworn by the Traverser, to be true, and that she has been guilty of malicious, wilful and corrupt Perjury. There have been many Witnesses produced by the Prosecutor in Support of this Indictment, and many in Support of the Traverser; and it has been admitted, that there was a Verdict in that Cause tried in the Exchequer, and that Verdict was given on the Side of the Party, who was to gain by having the Traverser's Testimony discredited: And it is also admitted, that those several Facts above-mentioned were sworn by the Traverser on that Trial in Exchequer. It is likewise admitted by both Sides, that the Traverser lived with Lady Altham from the Month of October 1713, the Time of her first coming into this Kingdom, till the Year 1729, when Lady Altham died. All these are admitted, to shorten the Time.

[The first Witness examined by the Prosecutor was Mrs. Henrietta Cole, whose Testimony related to the Miscarriage of Lady Altham.

She swears, that Lady Altham came over in 1713. That Lord and Lady Altham lived at Dunmaine. That they, and Mrs. Cole, and her Mother, were at Dinner at Dunmaine. That there were Sawcers of indecent Images brought to Table, which were broke by my Lord, whereby my Lady Altham received a Fright, and that Mrs. Heath came and alarmed her Mother that Night with the Indisposition of Lady

Altham; and that Mrs. Cole was in Bed with her Mother, when Mrs.

Heath desired her Mother to make haste, and rise, for that Lady

Altham was extremely ill. And the Witnesses said, she believed, that Lady Altham miscarried, for that she saw the Abortion in Lady Altham's

Closet; she first said, that the Abortion was shewed to her by her Mother, and did not remember any particular Conversation about a Miscarriage, with Lady Altham; that Lady Altham was confined to her Chamber a Fortnight, and that she mentioned this Affair to Mr. Mont's Family.

This is the Substance of her direct Testimony. But she is not quite so consistent when cross-examined.

You observe, Gentlemen, that Mrs. Cole says, that Lord and Lady

Altham went from her Father, to lodge at another Lodging, and that from thence they went to Dunmaine. In this Point, the Witnesses for the Traverser stand in Contradiction to her; for they swear, that Lord and Lady Altham went directly from Mrs. Cole's Father's House to Dunmaine. Mrs. Setwright, who was hired to be the Housekeeper, is particular in her Testimony herein, that Lord and Lady Altham went from Mrs. Bristow's, and not from Vice's, to Dunmaine. Mrs. Cole said, that Setwright was brought-to-bed in Dunmaine. Setwright and she agree in this Part of the Evidence.

Mrs. Cole said, she was examined in the Court of Exchequer, and there declared, that she and her Mother went down to Dunmaine, from Dublin, in March or April, in the Spring immediately following

Lady Altham's coming over to this Kingdom. But now she corrects herself, and says, she then mistook the Time, for that it was in February she and her Mother went to Dunmaine. She says, the Accident of China Sawcers happened two Months after going to Dunmaine, and that four Gentlemen and her Mother and she dined with Lord and Lady

Altham that Day, and were present at that Accident: She does not mention who they are, but conceals their Names. In her Testimony, she describes the Room. She tells you, Gentlemen, that Lord Altham emptied the Sawcers very carefully from the Sweetmeats, and threw them down, one by one. She swears, that Lord Altham knew his Lady was with Child. She says, that she believes that she swore, that she was about 13 Years old, at the Time of the former Trial; but now

she says she was born in the Year 1691, so that she must be then about 23

Years old, and differs now 10 Years from the Account she gave of her Age on her former Examination. She tells you now, that one might observe the large Eyes and Head of the Abortion. She admits to have said, on the former Trial, that her Mother told her it was an Abortion; but now she says, that her Mother and she went into the Closet together. She said on the former Trial, that Lady Altham sat next to her at Table, but now she says that Lord Altham sat next to her; and excuses herself from these Mistakes, that they all arose from the Confusion she was in at the Time of her Examination.

She now will not be positive that Lady Altham went to Vice's before she went to Dunmaine, but is positive she went to other Lodgings. Says, she does not remember the Housemaid at Dunmaine, nor Bourke the Postillion. She tells you, she paid a Visit to Mr. Boyd's.

She was asked if she knew Anthony Dyer, one of the Servants; She said she did not. She was asked if she was at Dunmaine on St. George's-day; she said she believed she was. She was asked if she remembered any Smock-Race to be at Dunmaine that Day; she said she did not remember of any Smock-Race. She denies she ever had any Discourse with Mr. Mark White, that she could swear for Lord Anglesea, if her Lease was renewed. She said she did not know of any Fire, or Candle, being in the Room when Mrs. Heath came to alarm her Mother of Lady

Altham's being ill; but the Manner of her knowing Mrs. Heath was,

by her Voice.

The next Witness in behalf of the Prosecutor was Dr. Fennell. He swore that he was Physician to Lord Altham several Years. He swears,

That Lord Altham came to his Lodging to acquaint him of the Indi-position of his Lady, and that he went along with my Lord to see her, and found her very warm, and prescribed for her; but that afterwards he discovered by her all the Symptoms of Pregnancy, and that she told him she was gone three Months with Child. She said she was regular 'till about two Months past, and thereupon he ordered her medi-

Medicine.

"Medicines: He further said, he believed, that Lady Altham was with Child, and that her Complexion was altered, as pregnant Women are. He was asked on the Cross-Examination, whether there was any infallible Rule to know a real from a false Conception. He said, the Colleges of Physicians of Dublin, or London, or the Royal Society in London, could not as yet determine that Point.

"Hellen Moncrieff was the next Evidence. She swore, that Doctor Walker recommended her as a Nurse to Lady Altham. That she met him in Stafford-street the Beginning of November or December 1714. That she was three times at my Lady's Lodgings, that she appeared as big with Child as any Woman that had been gone six or seven Months, that she laid her Hands on her Belly near her Petticoat; though she was not quite so critical as the Doctor was in his Profession, yet she seemed to know more of Lady Altham's Pregnancy than the Physician knew. When she was cross-examined, she said, she did not observe any Child to move in her Belly.

"Mrs. Bush was next examined. She said, she was acquainted with Lady Altham, and saw her at New Ross in February 1714; and that she seemed then to be with Child; and that she was in Mourning for Queen Anne. That she was introduced to her there, and in a Day or two paid her a Visit. She says that she saw her after the latter End of June, to the best of her Recollection, without her big Belly. There was nothing certain in her Testimony, and nothing material arose from her Cross-Examination; therefore, Gentlemen, I will not trouble you therewith.

"Alice Betts swore, that she wished Lady Altham Joy, and in November 1714, and after, had some Conversation with Mrs. Heath; and that she used to joke with her about Lady Altham's being with Child. She said, that Lady Altham appeared with Child, and that it was easy to be seen that she was with Child; that it was before or after Christmas.

"Mary Sutton swore, that she dined at Dunmaine, and tasted the Boy in the Box.

"As to Evan Thomas, and Martha Tenant, their Testimony was not very material. You have it, Gentlemen, in your Notes.

"Anstace Toole said, she fitted a Gown on Lady Altham, and that Mrs. Heath was present. That she saw the Child at Ross, and made a Gown for the Child, and said that she never had any Conversation with Lady Altham about the Child.

"Anne Bennett said, she believed in her Heart, Lady Altham was with Child, and that Lady Altham looked very round.

"Edward Hewlett was the next Witness, who was examined after Bennett. You have seen, Gentlemen, the mean Figure and Appearance he made. He swore he sold Clouts to Mrs. Heath, for Lady Altham's Lying-in. That on the Day of Separation of Lord and Lady Altham, her Ladyship kissed the Child in the Coach at parting. He said that this happened about ten or eleven o'Clock in the Morning. But here, Gentlemen, I must take notice, that all the other Witnesses say it was in the Afternoon Lady Altham went from Dunmaine, the Day of the Separation; and herein contradict Hewlett.

"It is of no Purpose to mention all the Cross-Examinations, therefore I shall not repeat them to you.

"Newton Rickets said, that he made a small Chair for a Child, but did not swear, that Lord and Lady Altham called him their Child, but that they behaved to him as such. I shall likewise not trouble you with his Cross-Examination.

"Elizabeth Dyle swore, that her Mother fell ill of a Fever, which prevented her nursing the Child. On her Cross-examination she said, that Madam Cole desired her to go to Dunmaine last Summer to give an Account of what she could say, and that she was not at Dunmaine for twelve Years before.

"James Sinnot swears, that he saw Lord and Lady Altham at his Father's House, and observed that Lady Altham was with Child, and that the Child was afterwards at Dunmaine, and that Lord Altham had ordered the Child to be brought to Table to be shewn to the Witnesses and Mr. Ivory, as his Son and Heir. This Piece of Evidence is somewhat extraordinary, that Lord Altham should call his Son and Heir to be shewn to him, and that he never saw the Child but once.

"James Fitzpatrick says, that he saw a Child in the Arms of a clean, orderly Woman, and that he took it to be Lord Altham's legitimate Child; and the only Reason he gave for it was, that he believed Lord Altham had that Regard for him that he would not introduce his illegitimate Child to him, and that, to the best of his Memory, he saw the Child once before the Separation. But I must observe to you, Gentlemen, that no Witness of Figure has been produced to satisfy you that Lady Altham miscarried, or was brought-to-bed.

"You have given great Attention, Gentlemen, to the Evidences of both Parties, and you have them on your Memory, therefore in regard it is so late, at this Time I shall not trouble you farther with a Repetition of them."

Gentlemen, I see you are all greatly fatigued; I do not wonder at it, for I think we have sat here without Refreshment for near twenty-two Hours. You have heard the Evidence on both Sides, and seen the Witnesses, so that it will be unnecessary to take up more of your Time. I shall only observe to you, that the Crime the Traverser stands charged with is a Crime of a high Nature; the Consequence of a Conviction is no less than to make her perpetually infamous, never to be believed after in a Court of Justice; and therefore it is that Men of Honour will see, that Evidence is clear and demonstrative, before they will lay such an Imputation by their Verdict on any body: You will, for this Reason, weigh the Testimony on both Sides, and compare the Credit of the Witnesses; and if, on the whole, you shall believe that the Balance goes on behalf of the Crown, you will then find the Traverser guilty; if, on the other Hand, the Testimony in favour of the Traverser outweighs the Crown Evidence, or is equal with Respect to Credit, even in that Case Juries rather incline to Mercy than otherwise; so that, Gentlemen, you'll go together, and I'll wait for you till you please to return with your Verdict.

Lord Chief-Justice MARLAY.

Gentlemen,
My Brother has summed up and observed upon the Evidence, so far as he has gone, as clearly and distinctly as possible.

There have been Twenty-five examined on behalf of the Prosecutor, besides three new ones produced on the Reply, and no less than fifteen on the Part of the Traverser. To repeat every thing they have said would be endless, and almost impossible, considering the Time already taken up in this extraordinary Trial.

I shall only observe to you, that in a criminal Case of this Nature, the Testimony to convict any Person of so great and infamous an Offence, ought to be so full, clear and consistent, that there can be no Room to doubt the Truth of what it is offered to prove.

Whether what you have heard on behalf of the Prosecutor, be such of itself, considered without Regard to what has been given in Evidence for the Traverser, you are the proper Judges.

Though there are many Witnesses for the Crown, there are few material ones; and it has been observed to you already, that the bare Declarations of my Lord or Lady Altham are not Evidence in this Case.

The first Witness produced, Mrs. Cole, is a material Witness; my Brother has fully repeated her Testimony; I shall not add to his Observations; she swears to the Miscarriage, and there is no other Witness brought to support her Testimony, though two contradict her.

The eleventh, Edmond Hewlett, a Pedlar, is in some measure a material Witness; he swears that the Child was owned by Lady Altham before Mrs. Heath, and a Ribband bought for it by my Lady, and put on the Child by the Traverser, and Diaper bought for it for Clouts, before it was born, by the Traverser. You have seen and heard him, and are the best Judges how far he is to be credited.

James Fitzpatrick, the fifteenth, swears, though not so fully, to the same Purpose, the publick owning of the Child; and to this Purpose are those who are produced to prove the Enquiry for a Nurse, and the Child's being carried about by my Lord and Lady Altham.

Eleanor Murphy, the eighteenth, and Mary Doyle, the nineteenth Witnesses, are both material, and swear positively, that they were present at the Birth of the Child; and Dennis Redmond, the seventeenth, produced, swears almost as fully to the same Purpose, though he does not swear himself an Eye-witness of the Birth.

Joan Laffan, the last produced by the Prosecutor, is a very positive and material Witness, if you credit her; she dry-nursed the Child in the House with my Lord, and she says, with my Lady too, where the Traverser saw him every Day. As to all the others, they are only Evidences as to their Belief and Opinion, merely conjectural.

Doctor Fennat, the Person of most Skill, told you, that neither he, nor the College of Physicians here; nor that in London, assisted by the Royal Society, can distinguish between a false Conception and a real Pregnancy.

I said the other Witnesses were only to their Belief and Opinion; I must except Thomas Higginson, who would have been a material Evidence, if his Memory did not fail him.

Now, Gentlemen, if you believe Eleanor Murphy, Mary Doyle, Dennis Redmond, and Joan Laffan, you have sufficient Evidence to convict the Traverser, Mrs. Heath; but if you should not think them Persons of Credit, you have not sufficient positive Evidence on which you can ground such a Verdict.

Three of these Witnesses, Murphy, Doyle, and Redmond, swear to my Lady Altham's being delivered of a Son, and swear it very positively.

But if they swear truly, this Child was born at Dunmaine, and very near Easter, in the latter End of April, or Beginning of May 1715; and christened at Dunmaine by Mr. Lloyd, a Clergyman of the Church of England, three, or four, or five Weeks after its Birth, and had for God-fathers and Godmother, Mr. Cliffe, Mr. Anthony Colclough, and Mrs. Pigot of Tyntern, who were all present.

If there was no Child of my Lady Altham's born at the Place and Time they positively swear to, nor christened there, they are, I mean all these three Witnesses, directly perjured.

Now, if my Lady Altham was at Wexford Assizes at that time, she could not be delivered of a Child at Dunmaine. If Mr. Cliffe and Mrs. Pigot were, one in Dublin, and the other in the County of Tipperary, from the latter End of April till six Weeks after Easter, they could not possibly stand in Person as Godfathers to a Child of my Lady Altham's, christened at Dunmaine in three, or four, or five Weeks after it was born.

Observe, Gentlemen, that it appears by the Almanack, that Easter Day in the Year 1715, fell on the 17th of April; the great Eclipse of the Sun happened on the 22d of April; King George the First's Birthday, the 28th of May, was on a Saturday. On that Birth-day my Lady Altham was in Dublin. The Spring Assizes of Wexford began on Easter-Eve that Year. My Lady Altham is sworn to have been there.

Now, as to my Lady Altham's being or not being at the Spring Assizes of Wexford in 1715, if the Matter should stand doubtful; because, tho' three Witnesses of Credit have sworn she was, yet Mr. Masterison and Mr. Cesar Colclough swear they did not see her there; yet it is impossible that Mrs. Pigot and Mr. Cliffe could be at a Christening at Dunmaine, when they were at many Miles Distance at the time that Christening was, if there were ever any such Thing.

Mr. Cliffe is proved by the Records of the Court of Exchequer to have been in Dublin.

And Mrs. Pigot, by a Witness, (who, if she swears the Truth, cannot be mistaken) to have been at Mr. Hunt's in the County of Tipperary.

I must observe to you, that Mr. Arthur Bush, the third and last Witness produced by the Prosecutors on their Reply, swears only to discredit Edmond Bourke the Postillion, a Witness on behalf of the Traverser.

If you believe the Traverser's Witnesses, particularly Mrs. Giffard, Mary Setwright, and Sarah Weedon, my Lady never was brought-to-bed at Dunmaine; and consequently Joan Laffan, who swears that she had this Child put into her Hands by my Lord and Lady Altham, and that she dry-nursed it at Dunmaine, and all the rest of the positive Witnesses for the Prosecutor, are not in the least to be credited.

You, Gentlemen, are Judges of the Fact; 'tis your Business to weigh the Testimony on both Sides, and, as you find one or other deserve Credit, to find the Prisoner Guilty, or acquit her.

At Half-an-hour after four o'Clock the Jury left the Box, and after twenty Minutes Stay, returned with their Verdict for the Traverser, Not Guilty.

XXVIII. The Trial of WILLIAM CHETWYND, Esq. for the Murder of Mr. THOMAS RICKETTS, before the Right Honourable Robert Willmot, Esq. Lord Mayor of the City of London, the Right Honourable the Lord Chief Justice Lee, the Honourable Mr. Baron Reynolds, Mr. Serjeant Urlin Recorder, and others his Majesty's Justices of Oyer and Terminer for the City of London, and Justices of Gaol Delivery of Newgate, holden at the Old-Bailey for the said City and County of Middlesex, the 12, 13, 14 and 17 of October 1743.

Counsel for the Crown.

Mr. Serjeant Wynne.
Mr. Moreton, afterwards Recorder of London.
Mr. Erskine.
Mr. Purcas.

WILLIAM CHETWYND was indicted at Common Law for the Murder of Thomas Ricketts.

He was likewise indicted on the Statute of Stabbing by the Name of William Chetwynd, of the Parish of St. Ann, Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. for that he not having God before his Eyes, &c. on the 26th Day of September, in the 17th Year of his Majesty's Reign, with Force and Arms, in the said Parish, and the said County, in and upon Thomas Ricketts, in the Peace of God, and our Lord the King, then and there being, feloniously did make an Assault; and with a certain Knife made of Iron and Steel, of the Value of Six-pence, which he, the said William Chetwynd, then and there had, and held in his left Hand; him, the said Thomas Ricketts, in and upon the right Side of the Belly of him the said Thomas, below the Navel of him the said Thomas, then and there feloniously, and in the Fury of his Mind did strike and stab (he the said Thomas Ricketts then and there not having any Weapon drawn, nor the said Thomas Ricketts then and there having first stricken the said William Chetwynd), and that the said William Chetwynd, with the Knife aforesaid, did then and there give to the said Thomas Ricketts in and upon the right Side of the Belly of him, the said Thomas, below the Navel of him, the said Thomas, one mortal Wound, of the Breadth of half an Inch, and of the Depth of three Inches, of which mortal Wound the said Thomas, at the Parish aforesaid, and County aforesaid, from the said 26th Day of September until the 29th of the said Month of September, did languish, and languishing did live; upon which said 29th Day of September, the aforesaid Thomas Ricketts, in the said Parish, and the said County, of the said mortal Wound did die; and so the Jurors aforesaid do say, that the aforesaid William Chetwynd the aforesaid Thomas Ricketts feloniously, and in the Fury of his Mind, did kill and slay, against the Peace of our Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

He was a third Time indicted on the Coroner's Inquisition, for feloniously slaying the said Thomas Ricketts.

The Counsel for the Prisoner desired, that as the Prisoner had the Misfortune to be extremely deaf, he might have the Liberty of standing at the Inner Bar; which the Court readily granted.

The Counsel for the Prosecution having opened the several Indictments, and set forth the Circumstances relating to the Fact, they proceeded to examine their Witnesses.

Master WILLIAM HAMILTON sworn.

Counsel. I think you are one of the young Gentlemen who boarded at Mr. Clare's Academy in Soho-Square?—A. Hamilton. Yes, I am.

Q. Was you boarded there last September?—A. Yes.

Q. Was the Prisoner at the Bar at board there then?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember one Mr. Thomas Ricketts being there?

A. Yes, I was present when the Prisoner and Mr. Ricketts were together in the Room.

Q. What Time was it?—A. It was on the 26th of September.

Q. Who was in the Room when you went in?

A. There was one Samuel Malcher, Thomas Ricketts, and Mr. Chetwynd; they were the only Persons in the Room.

Q. What was the Conversation turning upon? What were they talking about, when you came into the Room?

A. Mr. Chetwynd had got some Cake, and Mr. Thomas Ricketts desired Mr. Chetwynd to give him a Piece of his Cake; Chetwynd denied it him; I asked him for a Piece, and he likewise denied it me.

Q. What happened then?

A. Hannah Humphreys came into the Room about that Time. Mr. Chetwynd took the Cake, and cut a Piece off, and laid the Piece upon the Bureau, and locked the other up; with that Mr. Ricketts came and took the Piece of Cake off the Bureau; Mr. Chetwynd asked him for it; and Mr. Ricketts laughing, went up to the Maid, and told her, he had taken a Piece of Mr. Chetwynd's Cake; with that, Mr. Chetwynd came up to him, and demanded it of him again.

Q. Did Mr. Ricketts deliver it to him again?—A. No.

Q. Did Mr. Ricketts refuse to deliver it?

A. Mr. Ricketts did not refuse to deliver it.

Q. What Answer did Mr. Ricketts give Mr. Chetwynd, when he asked him for the Cake again?

A. He gave him no Answer, but continued laughing.

Q. You mean he was laughing with you, not laughing at the Prisoner.

Counsel for the Prisoner.

Mr. (afterwards Sir Richard) Lloyd.
Mr. (afterwards Mr. Baron) Legge.
Mr. Hume Campbell.
Mr. Hatfell.
Mr. Stracey, afterwards Recorder of London.

Prisoner's Counsel. That is nice indeed!

Prosecutor's Counsel. What happened next after this?

Hamilton. After Mr. Chetwynd demanded the Cake, and Mr. Ricketts giving him no Answer, he struck him immediately with the Knife, which he had in his Hand.

Q. Was it back-handed?—A. It was back-handed.

Fury. I desire he may speak a little louder; Was Ricketts behind him when he struck him with the Knife?

A. Mr. Ricketts's Side was to Mr. Chetwynd's. He was standing by his Side.

Q. How near were you to them?—A. Not very near.

Q. Where did you stand?—A. I stood a little Way before them.

Q. Where was this Blow given?

A. Just here about upon the Side (pointing to the right Side of the Belly).

Q. Did you see him pull the Knife out?

A. I did not see him pull it out.

Q. How do you know it was a Knife that he struck him with?

A. Because it was the same Knife that he cut the Cake with.

Q. What followed upon that?

A. Mr. Ricketts cried out he was afraid he was stabbed.

Q. Did Mr. Ricketts fall down?

A. No; he laid his Hand upon his Side, and said he was stabbed.

Q. What Sort of a Room is it?—A. It is a pretty large Room.

Q. What Part of the Room did the Scrutoire stand in?

A. It stood in the Corner of the Room by the Window; the Window and the Scrutoire were on the same Side.

Q. What Kind of a Knife was this?

A. It was a Sort of a French Knife.

Q. Was it a Penknife? or what Knife was it?

A. It was a pretty large Knife.

Q. Was it a Clasp Knife?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see Chetwynd cut the Piece of Cake?—A. No.

Court. Did you see the Deceased take it away?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Chetwynd see him take it away?—A. I cannot tell that.

The Counsel for the Prosecution having done with this Witness, he was examined on behalf of the Prisoner.

Prisoner's Counsel. Mr. Hamilton, if I understand you right, the Deceased and you asked Mr. Chetwynd for a Piece of Cake, and Chetwynd refused it?—Hamilton. Yes.

Q. So he was not willing to give either of you any?—A. No, he was not.

Q. I think you said Mr. Chetwynd took the Knife out of his Pocket?

A. I said he cut a Piece of Cake; I did not say he took the Knife out of his Pocket.

Q. I think it was a Cake that they call a Simnel; was it not?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. I think they are very hard, with a Crust on the Outside, and difficult to be cut?—A. It was pretty hard.

Q. Then that may possibly require more Strength than he had in one Hand, to cut it; he cut it down did not he?

A. I did not see him cut it.

Q. You said he took his Knife and cut it?

A. Yes he did cut it.

Q. Then tell me whether or no (I am sure I will do fairly, God forbid that I should do otherwise) Mr. Chetwynd did not refuse to give any of the Cake to Mr. Ricketts?

A. Yes, he did refuse it.

Q. Who did he cut the Cake for? was it not for himself?

A. I believe it was.

Q. Then he did not cut it for any body else; I think you said, he laughingly told the Maid he had got it?—A. Yes.

Q. And upon that Mr. Chetwynd demanded it from him again, and he laughed, but did not deliver it?

A. He made him no Answer, but did not deliver it.

Q. Did he ask him to give it him again before this unhappy Accident happened?—A. Yes, he did.

Q. Pray tell me whether he did not besides his Laughing, endeavour to keep the Cake from him?—A. I did not observe that.

Q. Please to tell me, whether, as you were School-fellows together, you were not all good Friends?—A. Yes, we were.

Q. Which of the two was biggest?

A. Ricketts was larger than Chetwynd.

Q. I am obliged to the Gentlemen on the other Side, for intimating that Mr. Chetwynd gave Mr. Ricketts a Piece of Cake before; I would ask you whether Mr. Chetwynd did not give Mr. Ricketts a Piece that Morning?

A. I heard he did.

Q. How long was that before this Thing happened?

A. I do not know how long it was. This happened about one o'Clock.
Q. When this unfortunate thing happened, what did Mr. Chetwynd say immediately upon it?—A. Really, I do not know.

Q. I think, Sir, you were telling the Court of a French Knife; I own I do not know what they are; but the Question I would ask you, is, Whether most of you young Gentlemen do not carry these Knives in your Pockets?
A. I have heard so; it was a Knife that he always had.

Q. And I suppose many of you had such Knives?
A. I cannot tell, as to that, Sir.

Q. I am obliged to you for the Candour you have used in your Evidence; I have no more Questions to ask you.

Court. Can you recollect, how these young Gentlemen lived together, whether there was any Ill-will between them, or whether they lived in a friendly Manner?

Hamilton. I think they lived as the other Scholars did.

Court. Do you apprehend there was any Malice between them?

Hamilton. I never knew of any Malice between them.

Court. How did the young Gentleman behave after he had given that Wound?—Hamilton. I did not see him afterwards.

Master SAMUEL MALCHER sworn.

Court. How old are you?—Malcher. I am thirteen next January.

The Court asked Malcher what he thought would become of him, if he did not speak the Truth? To which he replied, he should be unhappy everlastingly.

Court. Were you present at this unhappy Affair?—Malcher. Yes.

Counsel. Then give us an Account of what you heard, and what you saw.

A. Mr. Ricketts asked Mr. Chetwynd for a Piece of his Cake, and Mr. Chetwynd gave him a Piece; he asked him for another Piece, and he refused it him.

Q. How long was that after he had given him the first Piece?

A. It was about a Quarter of an Hour; and after he had refused it him, he went out of the Room, with the Cake under his Arm, and then came into the Room again.

Q. What Room was it?

A. It was the Room where Mr. Chetwynd lay.

Q. What Room did he go into, when he went out of his own Room, after his refusing him the Cake?

A. He did not go into any Room; he only went out of the Room to the Head of the Stair-case, and then came in again.

Q. Did he open the Bureau then, or was it open before?

A. I cannot justly recollect that.

Q. You say he had the Cake with him?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he cut it upon?—A. He cut it upon the Bureau.

Q. You say he cut a Piece, what did he do with it?

A. He laid it down upon the Bureau, and Ricketts came and took it—snatched it away.

Q. Did Chetwynd see him take it away?

A. I cannot tell whether he did or no.

Court. How did Chetwynd stand?—Malcher. He had his Back to Ricketts.

Court. Where did the Cake lie?

Malcher. The Cake was before Chetwynd, and Ricketts put his Hand beside him, and took it away, and then he went to the Window.

Counsel. Where did he carry it?

Malcher. He went to the second Window with it.

Q. How far was that from the Bureau?—A. I believe about a Yard.

Q. What did he do after that?—A. Mr. Chetwynd came and stabbed him.

Q. In how long Time was that after he took the Cake?

A. I believe it was a Minute.

Q. Was it so long as a Minute?—A. I do not know whether it was quite so long as a Minute, or not, it was but a very little Time.

Q. Did Chetwynd ask for his Cake?—A. I was not near enough to hear it; I was at my Box, at the other End of the Room.

Q. Is it a small Room?—A. It is not a very large Room.

Q. What happened after that?

A. Mr. Ricketts told the Maid he was stabbed, and then he went down Stairs.

Q. Was Hannah Humphreys in the Room?—A. Yes.

Q. What did she say?—A. She said, he was stabbed.

Q. What was said or done afterwards?—A. Really I do not know.

Q. Had Ricketts any thing in his Hand?—A. He had nothing in his Hand that I saw; nor said any thing to provoke him, as I heard.

[Cross-Examination by the Prisoner's Counsel.]

Counsel. You was present at the Beginning of this Transaction, was you not?—Malcher. Yes.

Q. Was you present before Mr. Hamilton came up?—A. Yes, Sir.

Q. When Mr. Ricketts had the Piece of Cake given him, that was before Mr. Hamilton came up, was it not?

A. Mr. Hamilton did not see him give it him.

Q. They were good Friends before this, were they not?

A. I think so, they used to be so.

Q. When Ricketts asked him for the second Piece of Cake, was not he teasing of him?

A. No, he teased him about the first; and then he went out of the Room, and Ricketts followed him.

Q. You say, Mr. Chetwynd carried the Cake under his Arm out of the Room, and Ricketts followed him; and then Chetwynd came into the Room again, and Ricketts followed him still, did not he?—A. Yes.

Q. Then he came to his Bureau, Ricketts following of him still?

A. Yes; and then I saw Mr. Ricketts take the Piece of Cake up, which Mr. Chetwynd had laid upon his Bureau.

Q. Then Mr. Chetwynd turned about to ask for his Cake again?

A. I did not hear him ask for it.

Q. He went after him, did not he?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it not for his Cake?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Did Ricketts shove him?—A. Not that I saw.

Q. When Ricketts took the Cake from Chetwynd, had Chetwynd his Back towards him?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Ricketts reach over his Shoulder, or take it under his Arm?

A. He went under his Arm, and took the Cake.

Q. Did he touch him?—A. I cannot tell that.

Q. You say immediately upon that he went to the Window, how far was that from the Bureau?—A. About a Yard or two.

Vol. IX.

Q. Pray, now, when Chetwynd went to cut the Cake (you were there all the while); did Ricketts offer to assist him in it, did he offer to lend him a Knife?—A. Yes, he did, and had it open.

Q. What did Chetwynd say then?

A. Chetwynd said, he had a Knife of his own.

Q. Pray, had Ricketts a Knife in his Hand?

A. Yes, he had a Knife, and offered to lend it Mr. Chetwynd.

Prosecutor's Counsel. I should be glad to know whether he did not put that Knife into his Pocket again?—Malcher. I do not know that he did.

Q. Here is a Question misunderstood I believe; did the Knife that you speak of belong to Mr. Chetwynd; or to Mr. Ricketts?

A. The Knife belonged to Mr. Ricketts.

Prisoner's Counsel. That is a fair Answer to the Question.

Court. Ricketts's Knife was opened before Chetwynd's; were both the Knives open at the Time this unhappy Accident happened?

Malcher. Mr. Chetwynd's Knife was not opened when Mr. Ricketts offered him his Knife; but he refused it, and said he had one of his own.

Court. Was Ricketts's Knife open then?—Malcher. Yes.

Court. Were they both open when the Accident happened?

Malcher. No, Ricketts's was clasped, and put into his Pocket; on Mr. Chetwynd's refusing it, and before the Cake was cut and put upon the Bureau.

Court. Then you saw him clasp his Knife when Chetwynd refused it, and put it into his Pocket?—Malcher. Yes.

Court. And this was before this Wound was given?—Malcher. Yes.

Prosecutor's Counsel. Was it before the Cake was cut and laid upon the Bureau?—Malcher. Yes, it was.

HANNAH HUMPHREYS sworn.

Counsel. Pray give us an Account what you know of this unhappy Affair.

Humphreys. The young Gentlemen were in the Dining-room, and I was in the next Room; I heard a Noise, upon which I went into the Dining-room and asked them what they did there, and what was the matter they were not in their own Rooms; Mr. Ricketts made Answer, that he wanted a Piece of Cake of Mr. Chetwynd; I said to Mr. Ricketts, Have not you had a Piece? He said No, and smiled. I looked at Mr. Ricketts, and said, I believed he had had some, for he had some Crumbs of Cake upon his Lips; Mr. Ricketts smiled again, and said, he wanted another Piece, or a bigger Piece.

Q. Where was Mr. Chetwynd then?

A. Mr. Chetwynd at that Time was at his own Bureau, cutting his Cake.

Q. How far was Mr. Ricketts off the Bureau?

A. He was as near as I can guess about two Yards from the Bureau; Mr. Ricketts went up to the Bureau to Mr. Chetwynd, and Mr. Chetwynd lifts up his Arms, and says, Don't, Mr. Ricketts; and Mr. Ricketts then took the Cake.

Court. Mention in what Manner he took it.

Humphreys. I think, to the best of my Knowledge, it was over Mr. Chetwynd's Shoulder.

Counsel. Where did you stand at that Time?

Humphreys. I stood at the Corner of the middle Window, and Mr. Ricketts almost faced me, not quite, but was a little sideways of me.

Court. Had Mr. Ricketts the Cake in his Hand?

Humphreys. He had the Cake in his Hand.

Court. How far were you off the Bureau then?

Humphreys. I was then from the Bureau about three Yards, and Mr. Ricketts came up to me, and said, Hannah, I have got some Cake. (I had a Stocking in my Hand which I was darning.) Upon Mr. Ricketts's saying he had got some Cake, Mr. Chetwynd came from his Bureau to my Right-hand, and in a very short time Mr. Ricketts said, Hannah, Mr. Chetwynd has stabbed me. I looked at him.

Prosecutor's Counsel. Did you see Mr. Chetwynd come from the Bureau?

Humphreys. Yes.

Q. Where did Mr. Ricketts stand?—A. Mr. Ricketts stood just by me.

Q. Now tell us whether you saw this Stab given?—A. I did not see it given.

Q. Did you observe that Mr. Ricketts had any Thing in his Hand?

A. He had nothing in his Hand but a Bit of Cake.

Q. Did you observe that Mr. Ricketts had struck Mr. Chetwynd?

A. No, he had not struck him, and was not seemingly in any Anger.

Q. You say that at this Time Mr. Chetwynd came up and stabbed Mr. Ricketts?

Prisoner's Counsel. No; that is not right.

Court. She said Mr. Ricketts told her so.

Prisoner's Counsel. I do not doubt your Candour, but you are mistaken in the Evidence; repeat it again.

Humphreys. I saw Mr. Ricketts come from the Scrutore, and he said, Mr. Chetwynd has stabbed me. Says I, Mr. Ricketts, you joke. Mr. Ricketts had put his Hand to his Side: I bid him take his Hand away, and then I saw a little Blood; Mr. Chetwynd, said I, you have done very well. Mr. Chetwynd said, Hannah, if I have hurt him, I am sorry for it.

Prosecutor's Counsel. Did you observe who were in the Room?

Humphreys. I saw Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Ricketts, and Mr. Chetwynd.

Court. Did you hear Chetwynd ask Ricketts for his Piece of Cake?

Humphreys. I did not hear him.

Counsel. What became of Mr. Chetwynd after that? where did he go?

Humphreys. He went out of the Room.

Q. How long did he continue in the House?

A. He continued in the House till Tuesday Morning.

Q. That was the next Morning; did he give any Notice of his going away?—A. I cannot tell that.

[Counsel for the Prisoner on the Cross-Examination.]

Counsel. Tell us where this Room was, where you heard the Noise before you went to them.—Humphreys. It was on the same Floor.

Q. Did you hear any Rustling of Feet, or only their Tongues?

A. It was only their Tongues; it is my customary Way when I hear any Noise among the young Gentlemen to go to them, in order to persuade them to be quiet.

Q. Where was Mr. Chetwynd when you came into the Room?

A. Mr. Chetwynd was at his Bureau, and Mr. Ricketts was standing in the Room, and he said he wanted a Piece of Cake of Mr. Chetwynd.

Q. Was this Mr. Ricketts's Room?

A. No, Mr. Ricketts had a Room up another Pair of Stairs.

Q. Then he was got into Mr. Chetwynd's Room, which was the Occasion of your asking him what he did there?

3 Y

A. Yes,

A. Yes, it was the Room where Mr. Chetwynd lay; he had not a Room to himself.

Q. Was there any Conversation about the Cake, or any asking for Cake before you went into the Room?

A. I do not know, he only said he wanted another Piece of Mr. Chetwynd's Cake.

Q. Was Mr. Chetwynd's Back toward you?—A. Yes.

Q. Then consequently it must be to Mr. Ricketts?

A. Yes—Mr. Chetwynd put out his Arms a little to keep Ricketts from the Cake. It was but a very little Way thus, extending his Arms a little from his Body, and raising them up, and Mr. Chetwynd said, Don't, Mr. Ricketts.

Q. Did you observe Mr. Ricketts then offer to take the Cake, or to touch Mr. Chetwynd?

A. I only observed him to take the Cake.

Q. But did you see him touch him?—A. I did not see him touch him.

Q. That is very odd, because putting out his Arm, and saying Don't, shews as if he had done something.

A. He might touch his Cloaths, when he took away the Cake.

Q. Was not he taller than Mr. Chetwynd?

A. He was a great deal taller than Mr. Chetwynd, he might for his Height reach over Mr. Chetwynd, and take the Cake.

Q. Could he take it over his Shoulder, or over his Head without touching him?

A. Over his Shoulder he might do it without touching him.

Q. Did he take the Cake over his Shoulder or over his Head?

A. I think it was over his Shoulder.

Q. Did not Mr. Ricketts laugh when he had got the Cake?

A. Mr. Ricketts came away laughing, and said, he had got a Bit more Cake.

Q. Was there any Motion or Action between them before this Thing happened?—A. There was not any Motion or Action at all that I saw before this happened.

Q. Did you stand facing the Bureau?

A. The Bureau was behind my Back, and Mr. Ricketts stood facing me, as I stood sideways to the Window, with my Work in my Hand, and Mr. Chetwynd was by my right Hand, we all three in a Manner touched one another.

Q. How could this be done without your seeing it?

A. I did not see it done.

Q. And then the first Thing you heard was, that he was stabbed?

A. That was what Mr. Ricketts said.

Q. And you at that Time did not believe it?

A. No, I did not believe it; for when Mr. Ricketts said he was stabbed, I lifted my Eyes off my Work, and said, Mr. Ricketts, you joke.

Q. Was there any Blow given?—A. I believe there was no Blow; I did not see any; I did not at first believe that there was a Wound.

Q. As you did not believe it, it is plain that Mr. Chetwynd did not believe it; for he said, If I have hurt Mr. Ricketts, I am sorry for it. Did he look to have Anger in his Countenance?

A. No; he looked with Concern; and said, Hannah, if I have hurt Mr. Ricketts, I am sorry for it.

Mr. BEESTON LONG sworn.

Prosecutor's Counsel. Pray, Mr. Long, inform the Court what Discourse passed between you and the Deceased, after he had received the Wound.

Mr. Long. I came to Town on Monday Night, the 26th of September, and found a Letter from Mr. Clare; wherein he acquainted me, that Mr. Ricketts had met with an untoward Accident, and had received a Wound from a young Gentleman in the House, but that he thought there was then no Danger; this Letter having been wrote in the Morning, I enquired if there had been any subsequent Message from Mr. Clare; I was told there had not: I did not go to Mr. Ricketts that Night, not thinking there was any Occasion for so doing; but in the Morning, I determined to take the Advice of Mr. St. Hill, who being a Gentleman very eminent in his Profession, we always take his Opinion, when any Accident happens to the young Gentlemen under our Care: I wrote a Letter to him, and desired he would meet me at the Academy that Day [that was on Tuesday], which he did; and I found there Mr. Shipton and Mr. Middleton, who had likewise been called in; these three Gentlemen, with Mr. Mac Cullock, the Surgeon of the House, viewed Mr. Ricketts's Wound, and thought him in very great Danger; they continued attending him till Thursday Morning the 29th, when he died.

Q. What Account did Mr. Ricketts give you of the Occasion of this Accident?

A. Mr. Ricketts told me, that on the Monday, about Noon, he was sent to call Mr. Chetwynd to fence, and found him in the Dining-Room, with a Cake, of which he asked him for a Piece, which he gave him; that he then asked Mr. Chetwynd for another Piece, which he refused; and cut a Piece of the Cake, and laid it upon his Bureau, which stood at the End of the Room; Mr. Ricketts, to tease Mr. Chetwynd, for having refused him, (but without any Intention of eating or keeping it) took up the Piece of Cake, carried it to the middle Window, and said to a Maid, who stood there, Hannah, I have got a Piece of Cake; and he said that Mr. Chetwynd followed him, and immediately stabbed him in the Belly.

Prisoner's Coun. You said, you came to Town that Monday, did you see Mr. Ricketts that Day?

Mr. Long. I came to Town that Monday Night, and found a Letter from Mr. Clare; I did not see Mr. Ricketts that Day; for I did not apprehend there was so much Danger, as I afterwards found there was.

Q. How many Surgeons had you?

A. There were four Surgeons; three were called in; and there was Mr. Mac Cullock, the Surgeon of the House.

Q. I should be glad to know, whether Mr. Ricketts gave any Account to you of any Passage that happened immediately after the taking of the Cake?

A. He said, that after he had taken the Piece of Cake, he carried it to the middle Window, where the Maid stood; and said, Hannah, I have got a Piece of Cake; and that Mr. Chetwynd came up to him, and stabbed him without speaking a Word.

Q. Without whose speaking a Word.

A. Without Mr. Chetwynd's speaking a Word.

Q. Did you ask him in what Manner he had lived with this young Gentleman the Prisoner, whether they did not live in Friendship?

A. He said, he never had had any Quarrel with him; and I have Reason to think it to be true, because Mr. Ricketts was a Lad of a remarkably good-natured Disposition.

Q. Did you ask him any thing farther?

A. Mr. Ricketts was generally, when I saw him, in such extreme Torment, that I did not care to trouble him with too many Questions.

Q. Did not he tell you he forgave him?

A. He did say that he forgave him.

Prosecutor's Counsel. Call Mr. St. Hill.

Prisoner's Counsel. There is no Occasion for it.

Prosecutor's Counsel. The Jury must have Satisfaction, that the Wound was the Occasion of his Death.

Mr. PETER ST. HILL sworn.

Prosecutor's Counsel. Pray, Sir, give the Court an Account in what Condition you found the Deceased.

Mr. St. Hill. On Tuesday the 27th of last Month I received a Letter from Mess. Drake and Long, desiring me to go to Mr. Clare's Academy in Soho-Square, to see a young Gentleman that they had the Care of, who the Day before had been accidentally wounded: I met there Mr. Shipton, Mr. Middleton, and Mr. Mac Cullock; and by Mr. Mac Cullock's Account of the Wound, who first dressed him, and the Symptoms that attended it, we had too much Reason to fear that it had penetrated into the Cavity of the Belly, and that some of the Viscera were wounded; for his Belly was much swelled, and cross the upper Part of it so very painful, as to deprive him of all Rest, and his Pulse was extremely quick, and contracted. The next Day we met again—he had had a very unquiet Night; his Pulse was extremely quick and low; and though his Belly was not so much swelled, yet his Pain cross the upper Part of it was more severe, and attended with a continual Hickup, and frequent bilious Vomiting.

Q. Pray, Sir, inform us, whether you think that Wound was the Occasion of his Death? what Depth was the Wound of?

A. It is not easy to know the Depth of a Wound after it has penetrated into the Cavity of the Belly: But, upon the whole, I think we have given our Opinion in such a Manner, that Nobody will doubt, but that the Wound was the Occasion of his Death.

Q. Then you do think that Wound to be the Occasion of his Death?

A. I do think it to be the Occasion of his Death.

Q. In what Part was the Wound given?—A. It was on the right Side of the Belly, two Inches obliquely below the Navel.

[A Piece of the Blade of the Knife was produced, which was about three Inches long, and sharp at the Point.]

Counsel to Humphreys. Did you see the Knife in Mr. Chetwynd's Hand?

Humphreys. Yes.

Q. What kind of a Knife was it?

A. It was a Knife with a long Handle.

Q. Was it a long Blade?

A. It was such a Blade as this; this is but a Piece of it.

Q. It is a French Couteau.

Prisoner's Counsel. It is no such thing, it is only a common French Knife.

Mr. PETER MAC CULLOCK sworn.

Counsel. Mr. Mac Cullock, pray, give an Account how you found the Deceased.

Mr. Mac Cullock. I was called at half an Hour after One, on the Monday, to go to Mr. Clare's; when I came there, I asked to see the Knife, and the Knife was produced.

Q. Was it produced broke?

A. Yes, it was produced to me then broke, as it is now. I probed the Wound; but did not find at that Time, that it had penetrated into the Cavity of the Belly; the Deceased's Pulse was extremely low, but I thought that was owing to the Fright: I went the next Day; and then upon searching the Wound, I found it had penetrated into the Cavity of the Belly, and found it to be a very bad Case; upon that Mr. Middleton was sent for; and after that Mr. St. Hill, and Mr. Shipton.

The Counsel for the Prisoner called no Witnesses, admitting that the Fact had been fairly laid before the Court by the Evidence, and acknowledged the Candour of the Gentlemen concerned for the Prosecution, in representing it to the Jury without any Aggravation; but insisted, on his behalf, that however his Hand might have been unhappy, his Heart was innocent; that this Fact therefore could not amount to Murder at Common Law, which the Lord Coke defines to be an unlawful killing another Man with Malice afore-thought, either expressed by the Party, or implied by the Law; that in this Case, there was not the least of that Ingredient, their own Evidence having shewed they were Friends, Friends to the last Hour, Friends to the dying Hour; when the Gentleman said, He forgave him. That it being proved there was a Friendship subsisting, it would be talking against the Sense of Mankind, to say the Law could imply any thing contrary to what is plainly proved. That Deliberation and a Cruelty of Disposition makes the Difference between Manslaughter and Murder. For which Purpose Holloway's Case was cited.

If A be passing the Street, and B meeting him, takes the Wall of A, and thereupon A kills him, this is Murder; but if B had jostled A, this jostling had been a Provocation, and would have made it Manslaughter, 1 Hale's Hist. Pl. Cr. 455.

If I see another's Child beat, or Wife debauched, it would be Murder in me to kill the Party, not so in the Parent or Husband.

A sudden Challenge and fighting immediately, the Challenge is held to be a sufficient Provocation.

NUMBER I.

Holloway's Case, 4 Charles I.

* Holloway was indicted for the Murder of one Payne. The Indictment was, that he with Malice forethought tied the said Payne to a Horse's Tail, and caused the Horse to drag him on the Ground three Furlongs, whereby the Shoulder of the said

Payne was broke, whereof he instantly died. On Not Guilty pleaded, the Jury found a special Verdict, that the Earl of Darby was seized in Fee of Ojersley Park in Middlesex, and made the said Holloway Woodward of the said Park; and that the said Payne, with others unknown, entered the said Park, to cut Wood there; and that the said Payne climbed up a Tree, and with an Hatchet cut down some Boughs thereof.

The Law makes a Difference between a Person's killing another, when he is doing a lawful Act, and when he is doing an unlawful Act. If the Master designeth moderate Correction to his Servant, and accordingly useth it, and the Servant by some Misfortune dieth thereof, this is not Murder, but per infortunium; because the Law alloweth him to use moderate Correction, and therefore the deliberate Purpose thereof is not ex malitia præcogitata.

But if the Master design an immoderate or unreasonable Correction, either in respect of the Measure, or Manner, or Instrument thereof, and the Servant die thereof; if it be done hastily, and without Deliberation, this would be Manslaughter; if done with Deliberation and Design, it would be Murder. L. C. J. Hale in his Hist. Pl. Crim. p. 454.

Shall the young Boy at the Bar, who was doing a lawful Act, be said to be guilty of Murder? He was rescuing what was his own; the Witnesses have told you, that after he had given the poor Boy, Ricketts, a Piece of Cake, Ricketts went to him for more; he denied it him; he had a Right to keep his Cake, the other had no Right to take it; and he had a Right to retake it.

There are Cases in the Books which make a Difference between Murder and Manslaughter: If a Man takes * up a Bar of Iron and throws at another, it is Murder; and the Difference in the Crime lies between a Person's taking it up, and having it in his Hand; Chetwynd had the Knife in his Hand, and upon that a Provocation ensues, for he did not take the Knife up; if he had, that might have shewn an Intention to do Mischief. It may be doubted, whether or no, when he had this Knife in his Hand for a lawful Purpose, and in an Instant struck the other, whether he considered he had the Knife in his Hand; for if, in his Passion, he intended to strike with his Hand, and struck with the Knife, not thinking it was in his Hand, it is not a striking with the Knife.

That in respect to the Statute of the first of James I. † it had always been looked upon as a hard Law, and construed therefore constantly very strictly by all the Judges in Favour of the Prisoner. That when the Facts amount only to Manslaughter at Common Law, it has been the Custom of the Courts ‡ to acquit upon this Statute.

That this Act was made for a particular Purpose §: On the Union of the two Kingdoms, there were national Factions and Jealousies, when wicked Persons, to conceal the Malice lurking in their Hearts, would suddenly stab others, and screen themselves from the Law, by having the Act looked upon as the Result of an immediate Quarrel.

thereof; and that Holloway came riding into the Park, and seeing Payne on the Tree commanded him to descend, and he descending from thence, Holloway struck him two Blows upon the Back with his Cudgel; and Payne having a Rope tied about his Middle, and one End of the Rope hanging down, Holloway tied the End of that Rope to his Horse's Tail, and struck Payne two Blows upon his Back; whereupon the Horse running away with him, drew him upon the Ground three Furlongs, and by this means brake his Shoulder, whereof he instantly died; and Holloway took Payne, and threw him into a Bush, behind the Pales of the Park. And whether upon all this Matter found, the said Holloway be guilty of the Murder, they pray the Direction of the Court, &c.

This special Verdict was removed by Certiorari into the King's-Bench, and depended three Terms: And the Opinion of all the Judges and Barons was demanded, and they all (except Hutton, who doubted thereof) held clearly, that it was Murder. For when the Boy, who was cutting on the Tree, came down from thence upon his Command, and made no Resistance, and he then struck him two Blows, and tied him to the Horse's Tail, and then struck him again, whereupon the Horse ran away, and he by that means was slain, the Law implies Malice, and it shall be said in Law to be premeditated Malice, he doing it to one who made no Resistance. Whereupon he was adjudged to be hanged, and was hanged accordingly. Croke, Charles, 131. Palmer, 545. W. Jones, 198. See this Vol. page 63.

* John Grey being indicted for the Murder of William Golding, the Jury found a special Verdict to this Effect, viz. We find, that the Day, Year, and Place in the Indictment mentioned, John Grey, the Prisoner, was a Blacksmith; and that William Golding, the Person killed, was his Servant; and that Grey, his Master, commanded him to mend certain Stamps, being Part belonging to his Trade, which he neglected to do; and the said Grey, his Master, after coming in, asked him, the said Golding, why he had not done it; and then the said Grey told the said Golding, that if he would not serve him, he should serve in Bridewell; to which the said Golding replied, that he had as good serve in Bridewell, as serve the said Grey, his Master; whereupon the said Grey, without any other Provocation, struck the said Golding with a Bar of Iron, which the said Grey then had in his Hand, upon which he and Golding were working at the Anvil; and with the said Blow he broke his Skull, of which he died; and if this be Murder, &c. This was held to be Murder by all the Judges of the King's-Bench, with the Concurrence of the Lord Chief-Justice Bridgman. See page 64.

† Jac. c. 8. An Act to take away the Benefit of Clergy for some kind of Manslaughter. To the end that Rabbing and killing Men on the sudden, done and committed by many inhumane and wicked Persons, in the Time of their Rage, Drunkenness, hidden Displeasure, or other Passion of Mind, contrary to the Commandment of Almighty God, and the common Peace and Tranquillity of this Realm, may from henceforth be restrained through Fear of due Punishment to be inflicted on such cruel and bloody Malefactors, who heretofore have been thereunto emboldened, by presuming on the Benefit of Clergy,

Be it therefore enacted, &c. That every Person which shall stab or thrust any Person, that hath not then any Weapon drawn, or that hath not then first stricken the Party which shall so stab or thrust, so as the Person so stabbed or thrust, shall thereof die within the Space of six Months then next following, although it cannot be proved that the same was done of Malice forethought, yet the Party so offending, and being thereof convicted, &c. shall suffer Death, as in case of Wilful Murder.

Provided always, That this Act, or any Thing therein contained, shall not extend to any Person or Persons which shall kill any Person or Persons se defendendo, or by Misfortune, or in any other Manner than as aforesaid; nor shall extend to any Person or Persons, which in keeping and preserving the Peace, shall chance to commit Manslaughter, so as the said Manslaughter be not committed wittingly, willingly and of Purpose, under Pretext and Colour of keeping the Peace; nor shall extend to any Person or Persons, which in chastising or correcting his Child or Servant, shall besides his or their Intent and Purpose, chance to commit Manslaughter. This Act to continue until the End of the first Session of the next Parliament. 3 Car. c. 4. continued.

‡ At a Meeting of all the Judges, on Saturday, the 28th of April, 1666, at Serjeants-Inn, to consider of such Things as might in Point of Law fall out in the Trial of the Lord Morley, who was on Monday to be tried by his Peers for a Murder; they were all of Opinion, that the Statute of 1 Jac. for stabbing a Man not having first struck, nor having any Weapon drawn, was only a Declaration of the Common-Law, and made to prevent the Inconveniences of Juries, who were apt to believe that to be a Provocation to extenuate a Murder, which in Law was not. Kelyng 54.

Mr. Lindon, who had been Clerk of the Indictments at Hicks's-Hall a great many Years, on being applied to on Mr. Chetwynd's Case, said that if a Man was found guilty of Manslaughter, on an Indictment for Murder at Common-Law, it was the Custom, if he was indicted on the Statute of Stabbing likewise, to find him Not Guilty on that Statute. Yet in December Sessions 1700, John Cowland, Gent. was tried for the Murder of Sir Andrew Slanning, Bart. at the Rose Tavern, in Drury-lane, on three Indictments. 1. For Murder, at Common Law. 2. On the Statute of Stabbing.

3. Upon the Coroner's Inquest for the Murder of Sir Andrew, when the Jury acquitted him of the first Indictment for Murder at Common Law, and on the third for Murder on the Coroner's Inquest, but found him guilty on the Statute of Stabbing; and he was executed at Tyburn, December 20, 1700, Old-Bailey Trials, Vol. I. p. 21.

§ This Statute was enacted in the Time of King James the First, when many Animosities arose between the English and the Scotch, who using Daggers were accustomed to stab many of the English, ex improviso, which could not have been done by a flat Sword, the usual Weapon of the English; therefore this Statute was designed to secure defenceless People from Surprise, supposing that whoever struck would be prepared. Rex v. Keite. Lord Raymond, 139.

NUMB. IV.

At the Sessions in the Old-Bailey, March 22, 1638.

¶ David Williams was indicted specially upon the Statute 1 Jac. for the Death of Francis Marbury; on which a special Verdict was found, viz. That upon St. David's-day the Prisoner, being a Welshman, had a Leek in his Hat; and that there was, at the same Time, in Waggers, a Jack-a-lent in the Street put up with a Leek; and one Nicholas Redman, a Porter, said, Look at your Countryman; and the Prisoner being therewith enraged, threw an Hammer at Redman, to the Intent feloniously to hit him; but missing him, the Hammer did hit Francis Marbury, whereof he died; and so the said David the said Francis with the said Hammer did stab and thrust the said Francis then not having any Weapon drawn, nor then having first stricken the said David, It was resolved he was not within that Statute, but guilty of Manslaughter at Common Law. W. Jones, 432. 1 Hale Hist. Pl. Cr. 469.

This Case, I fear, hath been the Occasion of some Mistake in the Decision of Questions of this Kind: I concur with the Judgment, that it is not within the Statute of Stabbing, for it is not such a Weapon, or Act, that is within that Statute; neither could he be found guilty of Murder, but only Manslaughter, for the Indictment was for no more. But if the Indictment had been for Murder, I do think that the Welshman ought to have been convicted thereof; for the Provocation did not amount to that Degree, as to excite him designedly to destroy the Person that gave it him. NUMB. V.

The Protector and Buckner.

Mich. 1655. In the upper Bench. Stiles, 467.

¶ Buckner was indicted upon the Statute of 1 Jac. made against Stabbing, at the Justice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, for killing of Horwood; and upon the Evidence given for the Protector, the Jury found a special Verdict, which was to this Effect, viz. That Horwood and another Man with him came into the Lodging of Buckner, being in Drury-lane; and when they were come into the Lodging, that other Man took down a Sword in the Scabbard which hung there, and stood at the Door of the Chamber with this Sword undrawn in his Hand, and kept the Door to keep Buckner from going out, till they might bring a Bailiff to arrest Buckner for a Debt which he owed Horwood; whereupon, upon some Discourse between Buckner and Horwood, Buckner takes a Dagger out of his Pocket, and stabs Horwood, and kills him; and whether this was within the Statute of Stabbing was doubted by the Jury. Upon which Buckner was committed to Newgate, and after the Body and the Cause was removed into this Court by Habeas Corpus and Certiorari, and argued divers Times at the Bar, and at last on the Bench:

And first Arthur Harris, of Lincoln's-Inn, opened the Record, and only put the Question; and then, on the Behalf of the Prisoner it was moved, that he might have a Copy of the Record, and Counsel assigned him, such as desired, which the Court granted; then it was prayed he might be bailed; but that the Court would not grant, but turned him over to the Marshal, and gave a Day for the Protector's Counsel to be heard.

At which Day Tawfden, for the Protector, made this Question, Whether Buckner was to have his Clergy in this Case, or were debarred by the Statute or not? And he said, this Question should not have been made by the Jury as they have done upon the special Verdict, but the Court ought to have made it; for the Jury are only to proceed upon Matter of Fact, and not upon Matter of Law; and he argued, that he ought not to have his Clergy, for the Statute of 1 Jac. doth not create the Offence, but leaves it to the Common-Law, and only takes away the Clergy from the Party that commits it; and to prove this, 1. It is not within the Words of the Statute, and 2dly, It is not within the Meaning of the Statute, neither in its Preamble, nor in the Body, or in the Proviso thereof; for Buckner was not first struck, nor had he a Weapon drawn against him, altho' he was kept a Prisoner in his Chamber, which was not a considerable, but a slight Provocation of him to move him to so foul a Fact. And within the Body of the Act, there are no Acts expressed, but having a Weapon drawn against him, or being first struck, and this Enumeration of the Acts excludes all other, as it is in the Statute of Fines, and in the Statute which takes away Clergy. Also the Reason of Law requires to allow the Clergy to one that is first stricken: But here is no such Reason, and the Party might have had his Remedy against Horwood, for coming into his Chamber, and imprisoning of him, by an Action of Trespass; and the having a Weapon drawn, was a Reason for the other to defend himself.

Finch (Heneage) for the Prisoner argued, that the Prisoner was only guilty of Felony at the Common-Law, and is not within the Statute, by which his Clergy should be taken away. For first, the Statute is to be literally interpreted, because it is made the only Points insisted upon by way of Defence for the Prisoner, were Questions of Law, in which the Jury were to be guided by their Opinion) the Facts proved and admitted, did not clearly, in the first place, amount to Murder at Common-Law; and in the second place, whether there could be the least Doubt in point of Law, but that this Case was within the Statute of 1 James I. c. 8.

Upon the first it was admitted, that to constitute Murder there must be Malice.

But it was argued, that Malice was of two Kinds: either express and in fact, or implied by Law.

That when one Person kills another without Provocation it is Murder *, because the Law presumes and implies Malice from the Act done.

And therefore, where-ever any Person kills another it is Murder, unless some sufficient Provocation appear.

But that it is not every Provocation which extenuates the killing of a Man from Murder to Manslaughter.

A slight or trivial Provocation is the same as none, and is not allowed by Law to be any Justification or Excuse for the Death of another.

And therefore no Words of Reproach or Infamy, whatever provoking Circumstances they may be attended with; no affronting Gestures or deriding Postures, however insolent or malicious, are allowed to be put in the Balance with the Life of a Man, and to extenuate the Offence from Murder to Manslaughter. Kelyng 130. Croke El. 779.

For the same Reason, no sudden Quarrel upon a slight Provocation shall justify such an act of Cruelty as one Man's stabbing another, though it is done immediately in the Heat of Passion. As if two Persons, playing at Tables, fall out in their Game, and the one upon the sudden kills another with a Dagger; this was held to be Murder by Bramley at Chester Affizes. See this Vol. page 63.

In like manner, no Trespass on Lands or Goods shall be allowed by Law to be any Excuse for one Man's attacking another in such a Manner as apparently endangers his Life, and could not be intended merely as a Chastisement for his Offence; because no violent Acts beyond the Proportion of the Provocation receive Countenance from the Law. And therefore if a Man beats another that is trespassing upon his Goods or Lands, and does not desist, he will be justified by Law; because what he does is only in Defence of his Property, and no more than a Chastisement to an Offender.

But (says the Lord Chief Justice Holt) if one Man be trespassing upon another, breaking his Hedges, or the like; and the Owner, or his Servant, shall upon Sight thereof, take up an Hedge-Stake, and knock him on the Head, that will be Murder; because it is a violent Act, beyond the Proportion of the Provocation. Kelyng 132.

That applying the Rules of Law to the present Case, it was plain, that the violent Act done, bore no Proportion to the Provocation. All the Provocation given was taking up a Piece of Cake, which is not such an Offence, as can justify the Prisoner's attacking the Person, who took it up, with an Instrument, that apparently endangered his Life, or rather carried certain Death along with it.

And lastly, That Grey's Case before cited (Kelyng 64. and 133.) was much stronger than the present: Where a Master, who was provoked with the Neglect, Disobedience, and Insolence of his Apprentice, and had therefore a Right by Law to chastise him; immediately upon receiving the Provocation, took up a Bar of Iron, at which he was then working, and struck his Apprentice, who afterwards died of the Blow. This was by all the Judges held to be Murder, notwithstanding it was done upon a sudden, and notwithstanding the Provocation, and the Right which Grey had as a Master to correct his Servant. For having exceeded Measure herein, what he did was malicious.

Upon the second Indictment it was said, that the Gentlemen who had argued on behalf of the Prisoner, had, in order to raise a Doubt upon this Point, in effect contended that the Statute of 1 J. I. should never be allowed to comprehend any one Case whatsoever, or extend to any one Offender.

For if Persons indicted upon that Statute, were to be acquitted where-ever the Case would have been Manslaughter at Common-Law, the Statute would be entirely frustrated, and have no kind of Effect whatsoever.

made in restraint of the Common-Law, and it was made only to prevent Feuds between the English and the Scottish Nation, which were then apt to break forth, and the Quarrel here was not a drunken and sudden Quarrel, but acted upon Deliberation, and here is an Assault so great used against the Prisoner, that it amounts to the striking of him, 43 E. III. f. 41, 42. E. III. f. 7. and the Imprisonment of him is more than an Assault, and here is found a forcible Entry into his Chamber, and the sending for a Bailiff, and the standing at his Chamber Door with a Sword in the Party's Hand, though not drawn, which is as much in effect as if it had been drawn; and 23 Car. the Clergy was allowed to two Persons that aided and assisted a third Person in stabbing of a fourth Man, and that because the Clergy shall not be taken away by Intentments.

Glyn (Chief Justice). The Statute hath not been so favourably construed as hath been argued, for here is no Stroke, nor Weapon drawn for his present Defence, as the Statute intends; and stabbing with a Tobacco-pipe, and with a Halberd, hath been adjudged to be stabbing within the Statute, and the Statute doth not say being first assaulted, as this Case is, but first stricken, and I conceive not that there are any Words in the Statute that will keep you out of it. Day was given over to the next Term.

At which Day the special Verdict was again repeated by Serjeant Maynard, and by him it was argued for the Prisoner, that he was not within the Statute 1 Jac. of stabbing, because first, here was an unlawful Imprisoning of Buckner in his own Chamber, and this could not be without an Assault; next this Statute is not to be literally interpreted, for if there be Acts of Terror used against one, although a Weapon be not drawn, yet he is not within the Statute, although he kill another, for the taking up of a Candlestick to strike another hath been adjudged a Weapon drawn; and he cited Patge and Horwood's Case; and all the Persons that came into his Chamber were Trespassers, and one of them taking the Sword in his Hand, how could it be known what Mischief might have been done with it? Cook's Case 14 Caroli, one may do a lawful Act by unlawful Means, and although Buckner did ill, yet is he not within the Statute.

Arthur Harris on the other Side argued, that the Act was stabbing within the Statute, and ousted the Prisoner of his Clergy, and that he is within the Meaning and Words of the Statute. The Statute intended to prevent the killing of Men suddenly, which is the worst of all other killing; for it is, as it were, to destroy not only the Body, but even to kill Body and Soul also, and therefore though the Statute be penal, yet it is not to be favourably interpreted, it being made for the Peace and Quiet of the Nation. The killing is the Matter aimed at in the Statute, and it matters not whether the Party be killed with a Faulchion or a Pistol, as Williams's Case was, that killed another, by throwing a Taylor's Goose at him, and he is not within the Saving of the Statute though he was assaulted, and the other stood with the Sword in the Scabbard in his Hand, 36, 37 Eliz. Hanger and Molin's Case in the Exchequer Chamber. The Words of the Statute are, "not being first struck;" but an Assault is not a striking, and so he is out of the Letter of the Statute; and here is no Weapon drawn, for the Sword was in the Scabbard, which is no more than a Staff in a Man's Hand, Stat. 5 E. VI. c. 4. and it is like a Pistol uncocked; and if the Sword had been drawn it would not have altered the Case, because it was not in Horwood's Hand, who was slain, but in another's, and you cannot extend the Statute further.

Glyn (Chief Justice). Will you have it argued any more?—Finch. No.

Glyn (Chief Justice). I have considered of the Verdict, and consulted with the Statute, and advised with all the Judges, and they are of my Opinion. This is a good Law, and to be interpreted strictly, yet I hold the Prisoner is not within it, for the Scope of the Statute appears by the Preamble, the Body, and Saving of it, which do all confirm my Opinion. My first Reason is, because I find that the Intent of the Statute is against sudden killing; but here was not a sudden killing, and the Statute takes not away the Clergy from all manner of Manslaughter; and here was a Trespass and an Imprisonment acted against the Prisoner before he killed Horwood, and so the Act was not suddenly done. 2dly, The Body of the Act seems to mean, that there ought to be Malice in the Case, and it doth not intend we should stick to the very Words of it; and here the Party slain might have foreseen the Danger, and defended himself. 3dly, The Proviso excepts divers Particulars out of the Law, and the Word killing is only in the Proviso, so that there is Provision made how the Statute shall be interpreted, viz. That it must be sudden killing, which is not so here, for there are Provocations, and Time intervening betwixt them and the stabbing, and the Verdict finds no pre-conceived Malice, and the Statute extends to no other killing by the Proviso. And if one be assaulted by Thieves which have no Sword drawn, and the Party assaulted stabs one of the Thieves, he is not within the Intent of the Statute, although he be within the Words of it; or if one be assaulted in his House, and the Assaulter hath no Weapon drawn, and one of the Assaulters be shot, yet the Party assaulted is not within the Statute. 15 Car. in Davy and Williams's Case, it was adjudged by all the Judges, that he that killed another by throwing a Hammer at him was not within the Statute, because there was a preceding Provocation of him. And if two assault a third Person, and one of them strike the third Person, and the third Person kills the other that did not strike him, I do not conceive he is within the Statute, for it is the Assault of both, and shall also be adjudged the striking of both.

Asb (Justice) held he was within the Statute, because it was not unlawful to come to arrest him, and here was no Weapon drawn, and so it was adjourned to another Day.

At which Day Buckner was again brought to the Bar, Asb (Justice) repeats the Special Verdict, and made the Question, Whether this Fact of Buckner be within the Statute of 1 Jac. enacted against stabbing? And he argued that it was, and that Buckner could not have his Clergy, because the Statute shall be taken beneficially for the Commonwealth, and not for the Prisoner, who is a particular Person, and the Intent of the Statute is to take away the Clergy for some Felony; neither by the Common-Law, nor by the Law of God is there Clergy given for killing a Man, and it was the Papists Power that introduced the Clergy to be given for Manslaughter, and also for Murder, in diminution of the Common-Law, and of Regal Power, yea, and of the Law of God also; and if a Woman kill one, she shall not have her Clergy, but be hanged; which shews that by the Common-Law the Clergy was not given for Manslaughter. And by the Law of God I find no Difference between Murder and Manslaughter, for it makes no Difference between hot Blood and cold Blood, as we do now distinguish; and every Word in the Statute methinks doth take away the Clergy by way of Argument, even from the Title of the Act to the very End of it; and here is a great Sin to be punished, and great Inconveniences would follow to admit of the Clergy in such Cases as this is, and here was a sudden killing as the Act expresseth, for it was done with a Dagger which was not seen, but suddenly drawn out of a Pocket, and no Weapon was drawn against him; for the Provocations alledged, they cannot amount to the drawing of a Weapon, or such a Provocation as the Statute intends, for all the Acts done by Horwood amounted but to a Trespass, and cannot be such a Provocation as should cause Buckner to fear his Death, for no Violence was used to his Person by striking, or drawing of a Weapon, or otherwise, and the sending for Bailiffs to arrest him cannot be such a Provocation as the Statute intends, which is to put the Party in fear of his Life, and the Party knew that Horwood came with an Intent only to arrest him, and not to kill him, nor did the Party slain do any thing against Buckner to provoke him; and there is by Presumption of Law a pre-conceived Malice in Buckner to kill Horwood, which is seen by his sudden Manner of stabbing him; and Davy and Williams's Case, urged on the other Side, is not like to this Case. I grant if one kill a Thief suddenly it is not within the Statute, for such killing was never intended to be prevented by it. The worst Words one Man can give another are not a sufficient Provocation within the Statute, for speaking of Words doth much differ from drawing of a Weapon: Nor is this a killing se defendendo, or by Misfortune, but abiding at the Common-Law, and so the Clergy is taken away by the Statute, and those of Serjeants-Inn in Fleet-Street, amongst whom are Barkly, Foster, and Rolle, who have been Judges, are of my Opinion.

Glyn (Chief Justice) held it not within the Statute. He argued long much to the Effect as formerly; but having taken cold, I could not distinctly hear him. Adjourned.

This Case was again argued, Trin. 1656, to inform Justice Warburton, who was called to that Bench, after the former Arguments and Opinion of the Court delivered much to the same Manner as formerly, by Finch for the Prisoner, and Baldwyns for the Protector; and thereupon my Lord Chief Justice Glyn and Justice Warburton were of Opinion against Justice Asb, and so Judgment was given for the Prisoner, that the Stabbing was not within the Statute, but was only Felony at the Common-Law, and the Prisoner was admitted to his Clergy, and burnt in the Hand accordingly.

* He that doth a cruel Act voluntarily, doth it of Malice pre-conceived, 3. Inst. 61. Some have been led into Mistake, by not well considering what the Passion of Malice is; they have construed it to be a Rancour of Mind lodged in the Person killing, for some considerable Time before the Commission of the Fact; which is a Mistake arising from the not well distinguishing between Hatred and Malice. Envy, Hatred, and Malice, are three distinct Passions of the Mind. Lord Chief Justice Holt in Mosgridge's Case. See this Vol. page 61.

Watts and Brains. B. R. 1599.

† Appeal of Murder for the Death of her Husband. The Defendant pleaded not guilty; and upon Evidence at the Bar it appeared, that two Days before her Husband's Death, he and the Defendant fighting upon a Quarrel then betwixt them, the Defendant was hurt in that Fray; and the third Day after, the Plaintiff's Husband, passing by the Defendant's Shop, the Defendant pursued him suddenly, and the Husband's Back being towards him, so as he perceived him not, the Defendant struck him upon the Calf of his Leg, whereof he instantly died; the Defendant to excuse himself, affirmed, that he, who was slain, when he came by his Shop, smiled upon him, and wiped his Mouth at him, and therefore, for this mocking of him, he pursued him. And it was much enforced by the Defendant's Counsel, that it was a new Cause of Quarrel; and so the Stroke is not upon any precedent Malice, and therefore it is not Murder: but all the Court severally delivered their Opinions, that if one make a wry or distorted Mouth, or the like Countenance upon another, and the other immediately pursues, and kills him, it is Murder; for it shall be presumed to be Malice precedent, and that such a slight Provocation was not sufficient Ground, or Pretence, for a Quarrel; and so delivered the Law to the Jury, that it was Murder, although what the Defendant pretended had been true; whereupon, the Jury going from the Bar, notwithstanding the Evidence was pregnant against the Defendant, Eight of them agreed to find him not guilty, but the other Four withstood them, and would not find it, but to be Murder; and on the next Day Morning, two of the Four agreed with the Eight, to find him not guilty; and afterwards the other Two consented in this Manner: that they should bring in, and offer their Verdict not guilty; and if the Court disliked thereof, that then they all should change the Verdict, and find him guilty. And upon this Agreement, they came to the Bar, and the Foreman pronounced the Verdict, that the Defendant was not guilty; and the Court much disliking thereof, being contrary to their Direction, examined every one of them by the Poll, whether that was his Verdict; and Ten of the first Part of the Panel, severally affirmed their Verdict, that the Defendant was not guilty; but the two last affirmed how they agreed, and discovered the whole Manner of their Agreement; whereupon, they were sent back again, and returned, and found the Defendant guilty. And, for this Practice, Harris, the Foreman, was afterwards fined 100 Marks, and the other Seven, who agreed with him at the first, every of them was fined 40 l. and the other two, who agreed with the Eight, although they affirmed that it was, because they could not endure, or hold out any longer; yet for that they did not discover the Practice, being examined by Poll, but affirmed the Verdict, were fined each of them at 20 l. and all of them imprisoned; but the other two were dismissed, yet blamed, for such a Manner of consenting in abuse of the Court. And afterwards the Defendant was adjudged to be hanged.

Since it was only made in order to exclude such Persons as stabbed others upon the sudden, not upon their Guard, from the Benefit of Clergy; and was intended as a Sort of Correction to the Common-Law, by restraining such Offenders, through Fear of due Punishment, who were emboldened by presuming on the Benefit of Clergy, allowed by the Common-Law.

But if it is to exclude none from their Clergy, who at Common-Law would have been entitled to it, it can never have any Effect, and may as well be repealed.

That whatever the Reasons might be which first gave Rise to this Statute, the Legislature thought it of general publick Benefit, and therefore afterwards continued it by a subsequent Law.

And, if the Statute is to have any Force or Effect at all, there cannot be a Doubt but that it must extend to the present Case.

It is expressly within the Words; Mr. Ricketts was stabbed, having then no Weapon drawn in his Hand, and not having before struck the Person who stabbed him.

It is plainly within the Intention; which is declared in the Preamble to have been in order to punish Stabbing, or killing upon the sudden, committed in Rage, or any other Passion of the Mind, &c.

And the principal Reasons upon which the Determination in Buckner's Case is founded, conclude strongly against the Prisoner:

For it is there argued, that Buckner was not within the Statute, because it appeared to have been made to prevent sudden killing, the worst of all killings, of a Person not upon his Guard.

And secondly, because in that Case the Party slain might have foreseen the Danger, and defended himself.

But the unfortunate Person killed in this Case, had no Opportunity either of foreseeing the Danger, or of avoiding it, or making any Defence; but was killed on the sudden, before he could apprehend any Danger.

And therefore it was submitted to the Court, whether upon the Facts proved and not denied, the Consequence of Law was not clear that the Prisoner was guilty within both Indictments.

Mr. Baron Reynolds and Mr. Recorder Serjeant Urrin, (being the only Gentlemen of the long Robe on the Bench, when Mr. Chetwynd was tried) taking Notice of the Points of Law that had arisen, the learned Arguments of the Counsel, and the many Cases cited upon this Occasion, were of Opinion, that it would be proper to have the Facts found specially, that they might be put in a way of receiving a more solemn Determination. A Special Verdict was accordingly on all Sides agreed on, and drawn up to the following Purport, viz.

The King against William Chetwynd, the same against the same, and the same against the same.

We find that Thomas Ricketts, on the 26th of September last, being a Scholar at Mr. Clare's Academy, in Soho-square, was in a Room in the said Mr. Clare's House, in which the said Mr. Chetwynd used to lie, (and not Mr. Ricketts) in Company with the Prisoner William Chetwynd, William Hamilton, Samuel Malcher, and Hannah Humphreys, a Maid-servant in the said Mr. Clare's Family; that the said Mr. Chetwynd, the Prisoner, having his own Cake in his Hand, which was a hard Cake, called a Simnel, and hard to cut, the deceased, Thomas Ricketts, asked the said Mr. Chetwynd to give him a Piece, upon which the said Mr. Chetwynd gave him a Piece; that the said Thomas Ricketts afterwards asked him, the said Chetwynd, to give him some more of his Cake, which the said Chetwynd refused, and thereupon, the said Chetwynd went out of the said Room with his Cake under his Arm, and the Deceased followed him out of the said Room; upon which, the said Chetwynd returned again into his said Room, and went to his own Bureau, and cut another Piece of the Cake for himself; the said Ricketts offered to lend the said Chetwynd his Knife to cut the Cake, and at the same Time pulled his Knife, being a clasped Knife, out of his Pocket, and opened it; but the said Chetwynd, refusing to make use of the said Ricketts's Knife, saying, he had a Knife of his own, the said Ricketts put up his Knife again; and immediately after this, the said Chetwynd being then at his Bureau, cut off a Piece of the said Cake with his own Knife, being a common Knife, and such as Mr. Chetwynd and his School-fellows generally used, and laid the same Piece of Cake upon the Top of his Bureau for himself; that the said Chetwynd, standing then with his Back to the rest of the Company, was putting the rest of his Cake into his Bureau, and, whilst he was so doing, the Deceased came up, and put his Hand over the said Mr. Chetwynd's Shoulder, whereupon, the said Mr. Chetwynd raising his Arms, said to the said Deceased, Don't, Mr. Ricketts; the said Mr. Ricketts immediately snatched the said Piece of Cake away, against the Consent of the said Mr. Chetwynd, which lay upon the Top of the said Bureau, and went up to the said Maid-servant, who was about two or three Yards off, and said, laughing, Hannah, I have got a Piece of Mr. Chetwynd's Cake, which he shewed to her in his Hand; that thereupon immediately the said Mr. Chetwynd followed the Deceased, with his Knife in his Hand, and demanded the said Mr. Ricketts to return him his Piece of Cake; the Deceased, Mr. Ricketts, returned no Answer to this, but continued laughing, and did not return the Piece of Cake; upon which, the said Mr. Chetwynd struck the said Mr. Ricketts backhanded, with the said Knife which he had kept in his Hand all along, and with which he had cut the said Cake, (the said Ricketts being then only in his Waistcoat, which was at that Time unbuttoned) and gave him a Wound upon the Right Side of the Belly below the Navel, which penetrated into the Cavity of the Belly (the Deceased not having before struck the Prisoner, and not having at that Time any Weapon in his Hand); that immediately after, the Deceased cried out, Hannah, Chetwynd has stabbed me; and then the said Hannah said to the Prisoner, What have you done? Upon which the Prisoner looked on the said Hannah with Concern, and said, If I have hurt Mr. Ricketts, I am sorry for it. We find that there never had been any Quarrel or Malice between the Deceased and the Prisoner, but that they constantly had lived in Friendship together; and we find likewise, that the Deceased was about the Age of Nineteen*, and Mr. Chetwynd about the Age of Fifteen; and that of this Wound the Deceased died, on the 29th of the said September: and whether upon the whole, the Prisoner is guilty of all, or any of the several Indictments, the Jurors submit to the Judgment of the Court.

Soon after this Trial, Roger Drake, Esq. and other Friends of Mr. Ricketts, laid the following Case before Sir John Strange:

The King } THE Defendant was tried the last Sessions at the Old against } Bailey for the Murder of Mr. Thomas Ricketts, and he Chetwynd. } Jury brought in the following special Verdict:

"That Thomas Ricketts, on the 26th of September 1743, being a Scholar at Mr. Clare's Academy in Soho-square, was in a Room in the said Mr. Clare's House in which the said Chetwynd used to lie and not Mr. Ricketts, in Company with the Prisoner William Chetwynd, William Hamilton, Samuel Malcher, and Hannah Humphreys a Maid-servant in the said Mr. Clare's Family. That the said Mr. Chetwynd the Prisoner having his own Cake in his Hand, which was a hard Cake called a Simnel, and hard to cut, the deceased Thomas Ricketts asked him for a Piece of it, which the said Mr. Chetwynd gave him. That the said Thomas Ricketts afterwards asking the said Chetwynd to give him some more of his Cake, the said Chetwynd refused, and thereupon the said Chetwynd went out of the said Room with his Cake under his Arm, and the Deceased followed him out of the said Room; upon which the said Chetwynd returned again into his said Room, and went to his own Bureau and cut another Piece of Cake for himself: the said Ricketts offered to lend the said Chetwynd his Knife to cut the Cake, and at the same time pulled his Knife (being a clasped Knife) out of his Pocket and opened it; but the said Chetwynd refusing to make use of Mr. Ricketts's Knife, saying, he had one of his own, the said Ricketts put up his Knife; and immediately after this the said Chetwynd being then at his Bureau, cut off a Piece of the said Cake with his own Knife (being a common Knife, and such a one as the said Chetwynd and his School-fellows generally used), and laid the same Piece of Cake upon the Top of his Bureau for himself. That the said Chetwynd, standing then with his Back to the Company, was putting the rest of the Cake into his Bureau; and whilst he was so doing, the Deceased came up and put his Hand over the said Chetwynd's Shoulder, whereupon the said Mr. Chetwynd raising his Arms said to the Deceased, Don't, Mr. Ricketts; and the said Mr. Ricketts immediately snatched the said Piece of Cake away against the said Chetwynd's Consent, which lay upon the Top of the said Bureau, and went to the said Maid-Servant about two or three Yards off and said, laughing, Hannah, I have got a Piece of Chetwynd's Cake, which he shewed to her in his Hand; that thereupon immediately the Prisoner Mr. Chetwynd followed him with his Knife in his Hand, and demanded the said Mr. Ricketts to return his Piece of Cake; the deceased Mr. Ricketts returned no Answer to this, but continued laughing, and did not return the Piece of Cake, upon which the Prisoner struck him back-handed with the said Knife, which he had kept in his Hand all along, and with which he had cut the said Cake, the said Ricketts being then only in his Waistcoat which was then unbuttoned, and gave him a Wound upon the right Side of the Belly below the Navel, which penetrated into the Cavity of the Belly, the Deceased not having before struck the Prisoner, and not having at that time any Weapon in his Hand. That immediately after the Deceased cried out, Hannah, Chetwynd has stabbed me; and then the said Hannah said to the Prisoner, What have you done? Upon which the Prisoner looked on the said Hannah with Concern, and said, If I have hurt Mr. Ricketts I am sorry for it. We find that there never had been any Quarrel or Malice between the Deceased and the Prisoner, but that they constantly had lived in Friendship together. We find likewise that the Deceased was about the Age of nineteen, and Mr. Chetwynd about the Age of fifteen, and that of this Wound the Deceased died upon the twenty-ninth of the same September. And whether upon the whole the Prisoner is guilty of all or any of the several Indictments, the Jury submit to the Court."

Mr. Chetwynd is still in Newgate; it is apprehended Mr. Chetwynd will apply to his Majesty for a Pardon before the special Verdict is argued, or if not he will do so afterwards, in Case the Judges should be of Opinion that the Facts stated in the special Verdict should be Murder. To prevent this, and his escaping the Justice due for his Offence, if the Law declares him to be guilty of Murder, it is proposed to bring in an Appeal of Murder, and to that end your Opinion is desired.

Q. Whether the Offence found by the special Verdict is Murder or Manslaughter?

"I am strongly inclined to think this will be adjudged to be Murder."

The Deceased's Father and eldest Brother are both resident in Jamaica. It is apprehended that an Appeal if brought must be brought by the eldest Brother, who is the Heir at Law of the deceased.

Q. Whether such Appeal can be brought by Mr. Barham and Messrs. Drake and Long, for and on his behalf; or must the same be brought by the Heir in Person?

"The Appeal must be commenced by the Heir in Person if he is of full Age, if not by Guardian."

As the Heir is resident in Jamaica, and it will be some time before he can be in England, and as a Year and a Day from the time of the Death is allowed for bringing such Appeal, so if Mr. Chetwynd should in the mean time obtain his Pardon,

Q. Whether he will upon pleading such Pardon be discharged out of Custody without Bail, and if so and he cannot afterwards be apprehended within the Year and Day, how is the Appellant to save the Benefit of his Appeal?

"If there is no Appeal commenced when the Pardon is pleaded, I hardly think the Court will require Bail upon allowing the Pardon; but it will be proper to shew that the Heir is expected, and in order to give time for his appearing it may be proper to enter Caveats, being offered as to the Age of the Prisoner, the Jury formed their Judgment thereof;

* That Mr. Ricketts was about Nineteen Years of Age was admitted: No Evidence being offered as to the Age of the Prisoner.

"and desire to be heard, as a Means to procure some Terms where-
"by the Opportunity of having the Appellee forthcoming may be "secured: If the Appeal is commenced in time, it will not be any Ob-
"jection that the Appellee is not apprehended within the Year."

Q. Whether an Appeal may be brought immediately, or must the Ap-
"pellant wait the Determination of the special Verdict?

The Appeal must be commenced within the Year and Day, and the "Appellant is not bound to wait the Determination of the special Ver"dict before he commences it. The Court perhaps may give the Appel-
"lee Time to plead upon that Account, but this should be opposed."

Q. Whether the Appellant is obliged to enter into any Recognizance
"with Sureties to prosecute his Appeal with Effect; and suppose, upon
"trying such Appeal, the Jury find the Offence only Manslaughter; is
"the Appellant or his Sureties liable to any Damage, Fine or Punish"ment for bringing such Appeal?

The giving Pledges to prosecute is recited in the Writ, and I believe
"there is some Security given to the Sheriff before he serves the Writ;
"though in Bambridge's Case it was omitted. But it is out of doubt, if "the Jury find it to be Manslaughter, that will be a sufficient prosecuting
"it with Effect, and protect the Appellant and his Sureties from any "Damage, Fine or Imprisonment."

If the Defendant should be found guilty upon the Appeal,
"Q. Whether the King can relieve or respite the Execution of the "Judgment, or any otherwise interfere therein?

"I apprehend that upon a Conviction of Murder on an Appeal, the "Crown cannot interfere."

Upon the whole, under the Circumstances of this Case, your Opinion
"is desired."

Q. Whether it is advisable for Mr. Ricketts to appeal in case Mr. Chet-
"wynd should obtain a Pardon; or would such a Proceeding be consid"ered as severe or vindictive?

The Youth of the Offender, the Suddenness of the Action unattended
"with any aggravating Circumstances, and the Friendship which the "Jury find to have subsisted to the Moment of the fatal Accident, make "me incline to think, that even the Appellant, if he should succeed in "his Suit, would hardly insist upon the Rigour of the Law; and then
"considering he is now abroad, I think the Gentlemen who have hitherto
"prosecuted and obtained the present Verdict, will be well justified in "acquiescing under the Pardon, (supposing the King should grant it)
"after they have laid the State of the Case properly before those through "whose Hands it is to take its Progress."

J. STRANGE.

31st October, 1743.

After the beforementioned special Verdict was found, the Relations of "the Prisoner, who were Persons of some Figure in the World, had a Meet"ing with his Counsel, to consult what was most proper to do in this Af"fair, whether to endeavour the bringing on the arguing of the special Ver"dict, or immediately to apply to his Majesty for a Pardon.---The Coun"sel, considering the Youth of the Prisoner, and the Length of Time he "might lay in Newgate, before the Determination of the special Verdict,
"advised the applying directly to his Majesty for a Pardon.---Whereupon "the following Petition was delivered to the Lords Justices, (the King be"ing then at Hanover) viz.

To their Excellencies the Lords Justices in Council,

The humble Petition of William Chetwynd, an Infant of the Age of 15 Years,

Most humbly sheweth,

THAT the Petitioner was tried at the last Sessions of Oyer and Ter-
"miner at the Old-Bailey, on three Indictments preferred against him in "the Name of his Majesty, for the Murder of Thomas Ricketts his School-fel"low, on the Trial whereof the Jury brought in a special Verdict in the "Words following, viz.

That Thomas Ricketts, on the twenty-sixth Day of September last, being "a Scholar at Mr. Clare's Academy in Soho-Square, was in a Room in the "said Mr. Clare's House, in which the said Chetwynd used to lie and not Mr.
"Ricketts, in company with the Prisoner William Chetwynd, William Ham"ilton, Samuel Malcher, and Hannah Humphreys a Maid-servant in the said
"Mr. Clare's Family. That the said Mr. Chetwynd, the Prisoner, having "his own Cake in his Hand, which was a hard Cake called a Simnel, and
"hard to cut; the Deceased, Thomas Ricketts, asked him for a Piece of it,
"which the said Chetwynd gave him. That the said Thomas Ricketts after"wards asking the said Chetwynd to give him some more of his Cake, the said
"Chetwynd refused; and thereupon the said Chetwynd went out of the said
"Room with his Cake under his Arm, and the Deceased followed him out
"of the said Room; upon which the said Chetwynd returned again into the "said Room, and went to his own Bureau, and cut another Piece of the "Cake for himself; the said Ricketts offered to lend the said Chetwynd his "Knife to cut the Cake, and at the same Time pulled his Knife (being a
"claspd Knife) out of his Pocket and opened it; but the said Chetwynd re-
"fusing to make use of Mr. Ricketts's Knife, saying, he had a Knife of his "own, the said Mr. Ricketts put up his Knife again; and immediately after "this the said Chetwynd, being then at his Bureau, cut off a Piece of the said
"Cake with his own Knife, being a common Knife, and such a one as the "said Chetwynd and his School-fellows generally used, and laid the same Piece
"of Cake upon the Top of his Bureau for himself. That the said Chetwynd
"standing there, with his Back to the rest of the Company, was putting the "rest of his Cake into his Bureau, and whilst he was so doing, the Deceased
"came up and put his Hand over the said Chetwynd's Shoulder; whereupon
"the said Mr. Chetwynd, raising his Arms, said to the Deceased, Don't, Mr.
"Ricketts; and the said Mr. Ricketts immediately snatched the said Piece of "Cake away, against the said Chetwynd's Consent, which lay upon the "Top of the said Bureau, and went to the said Maid-servant about two or "three Yards off, and said, laughing, Hannah, I have got a Piece of *Chet-
"wynd's* Cake, which he shewed her in his Hand. That thereupon im"mediately the Prisoner, Mr. Chetwynd, followed him with his Knife in "his Hand, and demanded the said Mr. Ricketts to return him his Piece of "Cake; the deceased Mr. Ricketts returned no Answer to this, but conti"nued laughing, and did not return the Piece of Cake; upon which the Prisoner struck him back-handed with the said Knife which he had kept

"in his Hand all along (and with which he had cut the said Cake), the said
"Ricketts being then only in his Waistcoat, which was then unbuttoned,
"and gave him a Wound upon the right Side of the Belly, below the Navel,
"which penetrated into the Cavity of the Belly, the Deceased not having "before struck the Prisoner, and not having at that Time any Weapon in "his Hand. That immediately after the Deceased cried out, Hannah, *Chet-
"wynd* has stabbed me; and then the said Hannah said to the Prisoner, What "have you done? Upon which the said Prisoner looked upon the said Han"nah with Concern, and said, If I have hurt Mr. Ricketts I am sorry for it.
"We find there never had been any Quarrel or Malice betwixt the De"ceased and the Prisoner, but that they constantly had lived in Friendship
"together; we find likewise that the Deceased was about the Age of "Nineteen, and Mr. Chetwynd about the Age of Fifteen; and that "of this Wound the Deceased died the 29th of the same September;
"and whether upon the whole, the Prisoner is guilty of all or any of the "several Indictments, the Jury submit to the Court. That as it is expressly "found, by this special Verdict, that there never had been any Quarrel or "Malice between the Deceased and the Prisoner, but that they constantly
"lived in Friendship together; and as the fatal unhappy Wound your Pe-
"titioner gave the Deceased was the Effect of a sudden and instant Provo-
"cation, and for which he has ever since been, and still is, under the deepest
"and most inexpressible Affliction, and as the Prisoner had not the most "remote Apprehension of murdering the Deceased, and in regard to your "Petitioner's tender Age,

Your Petitioner most humbly hopes he may, under all the Circumstances of this "unfortunate Case, be considered as a proper Object of the Royal Mercy,
"which your Petitioner most humbly prays your Excellencies will be graciously
"pleased to extend to him, by granting him the Royal Pardon for the said
"Offence.

And your Petitioner, as in the strictest Gratitude and Duty bound, shall "ever pray, &c.

When their Lordships were pleased to refer it to the Attorney and Solici-
"tor-General, who made the following Report thereupon:

A Copy of the Report of his Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor-General, on "Mr. Chetwynd's Petition.

To the King's most excellent Majesty in Council.

May it please your Majesty,

IN humble Obedience to their Excellencies the Lords Justices Commands
"signified to us by Mr. Stone, by his Letter of 25th October last, directing "us to take the annexed Petition of William Chetwynd, an Infant of the Age
"of fifteen Years, into Consideration, and report our Opinions what may be "proper to be done therein; We have taken the same into Consideration,
"after having been attended by the Agent and Counsel of the Pe-
"titioner, and also by the Agent and Counsel for Mr. Roger Drake
"and Mr. Beecham Long, under whose Care Thomas Ricketts the De"ceased mentioned in the Petition had been placed by his Father, who now
"lives at Jamaica; and which said Mr. Drake and Mr. Long opposed before "us the Prayer of the said Petition.

The Petition states, That the Petitioner had been tried at the last Ses"sions of Oyer and Terminer at the Old Bailey, on three Indictments, for the "Murder of the said Thomas Ricketts his School-fellow, on the Trial where-
"of the Jury brought in a special Verdict, which the Petition sets forth par"ticularly; and prays, that as it is expressly found by this special Verdict,
"that there never had been any Quarrel or Malice between the Deceased
"and the Petitioner, but they constantly lived in Friendship together, and
"as the fatal unhappy Wound the Petitioner gave the Deceased was the "Effect of a sudden and instant Provocation, and for which he hath ever
"since been, and is still under the deepest and most inexpressible Affliction,
"and as he had not the most remote Apprehension of murdering the De"ceased, and in regard to his tender Age, the Petitioner most humbly hopes
"he may, under all the Circumstances of his unfortunate Case, be consid"ered as a proper Object of the Royal Mercy, which he most humbly
"prays may be extended to him, by granting the Royal Pardon for the said
"Offence.

We have inquired into the Case, and find that the Petitioner was in"dicted on three Indictments, whereof Copies are annexed, for the killing "of the said Thomas Ricketts; one of which was on the Coroner's Inquest,
"which had found him guilty of Manslaughter; another at Common Law
"for Murder; and the third on the Statute of Stabbing, of the first Year
"of King James the First, Chap. 8th, all which were tried at the last Ses"sions of Oyer and Terminer at the Old Bailey; and the Jury found a special
"Verdict, which is not yet drawn up in form, but the Minutes thereof signed "by the Jury are in the following Words, viz.

Middlesex.] The King against William Chetwynd, the same against the same,
"and the same against the same.

That Thomas Ricketts, on the twenty-sixth of September, being a Scholar
"at Mr. Clare's Academy in Soho-Square, was in a Room in the said Mr.
"Clare's House, in which the said Chetwynd used to lie, and not Mr.
"Ricketts, in Company with the Prisoner William Chetwynd, *William Ham-
"ilton*, Samuel Malcher, and Hannah Humphreys, a Maid-servant in the said
"Mr. Clare's Family.---That the said Mr. Chetwynd the Prisoner having his "own Cake in his Hand, which was a hard Cake, called a Simnel, and hard
"to cut, the Deceased, Thomas Ricketts, asked him for a Piece of it, which
"the said Chetwynd gave him; that the said Thomas Ricketts afterwards ask"ing the said Chetwynd to give him some more of his Cake, the said Chet-
"wynd refused, and thereupon the said Chetwynd went out of the said Room,
"with his Cake under his Arm, and the Deceased followed him out of the "said Room; upon which the said Chetwynd returned again into his said
"Room, and went to his own Bureau, and cut another Piece of the Cake
"for himself; the said Ricketts offered to lend the said Chetwynd his Knife to "cut the Cake, and at the same Time pulled his Knife (being a claspd
"Knife) out of his Pocket, and opened it, but the said Chetwynd refusing
"to make use of Mr. Ricketts's Knife, saying, he had a Knife of his own,
"the said Mr. Ricketts put up his Knife again; and immediately after this, the "said Chetwynd being then at his Bureau, cut off a Piece of the said Cake with his his Knife, being a common Knife, and such a one as the said Chetwynd and his School-fellows generally used, and laid the same Piece of Cake upon the Top of his Bureau for himself; that the said Chetwynd standing then with his Back to the rest of the Company, was putting the rest of his Cake into his Bureau; and whilst he was so doing, the Deceased came up and put his Hand over the said Chetwynd's Shoulder, whereupon the said Mr. Chetwynd, raising his Arms, said to the Deceased, Don't, Mr. Ricketts; and the said Mr. Ricketts immediately snatched the said Piece of Cake away, against the said Chetwynd's Consent, which lay upon the Top of the said Bureau, and went to the said Maid-servant about two or three Yards off, and said, laughing, Hannah, I have got a Piece of Chetwynd's Cake, which he shewed her in his Hand; that thereupon immediately the Prisoner, Mr. Chetwynd, followed him with his Knife in his Hand, and demanded the said Mr. Ricketts to return him his Piece of Cake; the Deceased Mr. Ricketts returned no Answer to this, but continued laughing, and did not return the Piece of Cake, upon which the Prisoner struck him back-handed with the said Knife, which he had kept in his Hand all along, (and with which he had cut the said Cake) the said Ricketts being then only in his Waistcoat, which was then unbuttoned, and gave him a Wound upon the Right Side of the Belly, below the Navel; which penetrated into the Cavity of the Belly; the Deceased not having before struck the Prisoner, but that they had constantly lived in Friendship together. We find likewise, that the Deceased was about the Age of Nineteen, and Mr. Chetwynd about the Age of Fifteen; and that of this Wound the Deceased died the twenty-ninth of the same September; and whether upon the whole the Prisoner is guilty of all or any of the several Indictments, the Jury submit to the Court:

As the Minutes of the special Verdict have stated the Case with all its Circumstances so very minutely, no other Evidence was offered on either Side to mitigate or aggravate the Charge. And we beg leave humbly to certify your Majesty, that it lies entirely in your Majesty's Royal Breast, to pardon the Petitioner or not; and if your Majesty shall be graciously pleased to extend your Royal Mercy to him, there can be no Objection thereto in point of Law.

All which is humbly submitted to Your Majesty's great Wisdom.

W. MURRAY.

Upon which his Majesty (being then returned from Hanover) was pleased to order his Most Gracious Pardon, for the said William Chetwynd, to be made out. As soon as this came to be known, a Caveat was entered against passing the same at (Lord Gower's) the Lord Privy-Seal's Office; whereupon the Lord Privy-Seal sent to Sir Thomas Abney, Knt. one of the Judges of the Court of Common-Pleas, to assist him at the Hearing the same; Sir Thomas in a very genteel Letter begged to be excused, on account of his former Intimacy with Walter Chetwynd, of Grendon in Warwickshire, Esq. the young Gentleman's late Father; upon which the Lord Privy-Seal sent to the Lord Chief Baron, to desire his Assistance at the Hearing of Counsel (at Whitehall) for and against passing the said Pardon; when after hearing the Arguments, (Serjeant Wynne and Mr. Morton for the Caveat, and Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Legge against it) the Lord Privy-Seal declared he had heard no Reasons sufficient given against allowing the same, and put the Privy-Seal to the said Pardon. After which the Friends and Relations of the Deceased entered a Caveat against passing the same at the Lord Chancellor's; when the Right Honourable the Earl of Hardwick ordered the Counsel on both Sides to attend him at his House in Ormond-street; when after hearing the Arguments on both Sides, his Lordship said, he had no doubt with him about passing the said Pardon, and ordered the Great Seal to be put to it. When the Prisoner came to Westminster-hall in Hilary Term to plead this Pardon, it was strongly opposed by Counsel; but after hearing the Arguments on both Sides, Lord Chief Justice Lee declared, he had heard no sufficient Reasons offered against the Prisoner's taking the Benefit of his Majesty's Pardon; which he did directly by pleading it on his Knees, and was immediately discharged.

† Slaughterford was acquitted before Holt, at Surrey Assizes; and he took Bail to answer an Appeal; which was afterwards tried at Bar, and the Party convicted and hanged. Strange, Vol. II. p. 1204. Slaughterford's Case was this:

Christopher Slaughterford (Son of a Miller, himself a Maltster of some Substance, near Guildford in Surrey) courted one Jane Young, who thereupon left her Service in order to be married to him; was seen in his Company October 5, 1708, but never heard of afterwards; whereupon he was suspected of murdering her, taken up, and committed to the Marshalsea; and at the Lent Assizes following, was tried at King's Bench, in Surrey, for the said Murder, and acquitted. However, he was ordered to remain in Gaol, many People thinking him guilty. The Father and Friends of the Deceased being poor, a Subscription was set on foot and Money raised, and an Appeal was brought against the said Slaughterford by Henry Young, Brother of the Deceased. He was brought to the Queen's-Bench Bar at Westminster, the second Day of the Term following, and tried before the Lord Chief Justice Holt, on the said Appeal, and convicted on very strong Circumstances, and ordered for Execution on Saturday July 9th. Slaughterford being led to the Gibbet from Guildford (to which Place he was carried from the Marshalsea), the only Request he had to make to the Executioner was, that he might throw himself off: And they were almost the only Words he uttered there; for being tied up, before the Executioner could descend to do the rest of his

DOMINUS REX. V. CHETWYND.

A Special Verdict, on an Indictment for Murder, was found at the Old-Bailey, and removed into the King's Bench; but before Argument the Defendant obtained his Majesty's Pardon, which he pleaded upon his Knees; and it was allowed. Then the Counsel for the Prosecutor insisted, that by Vertue of 3 H. VII. c. 1. the Court ought to require Bail for his Appearance to answer an Appeal; there being an Affidavit produced, that the Brother and Heir was beyond Sea, but expected in time; and it was also insisted, that by Vertue of 5 and 6 W. and M. c. 13, the Court should take Security for the Good-behaviour. The Statute 3 H. VII. c. 1. runs: "That if any Person charged as Principal or Accessory, be acquitted at the King's Suit, within the Year and Day, the Justices, before whom he is acquitted, shall not suffer him to go at large; but either remit him again to the Prison, or else let him to bail, after their Discretion, till the Year and Day be past."

Upon this Clause it was argued, that the Case of pleading a Pardon after a special Verdict, was stronger than the Case of an Acquittal by a Jury, which took away all the Presumption of Guilt; and that this was an actual Acquittal, and is called so in the Pardon. The Judgment is Quod eat inde sine Die, and if he is again indicted, he may plead Autre fois acquitte, 11 H. IV. 41. Bro. 26. Coron. 26, 133. Pitt. N. B. 251. G. and the Record being moved into the King's Bench, this Court are the Justices before whom he is acquitted; and it is not discretionary only as to the Point between Bail and Imprisonment, the latter of which the Prosecutor did not insist upon.

But as to this Point, the Court were of Opinion, that the present Case was not such as the Act of Parliament meant; and this being to subject the Prisoner to a second Trial, which before he was not, he not being indictable (Kelynge 23.) till the Time to appeal was elapsed; till this Act gave such a Prosecution; it was therefore to be construed strictly, and confined literally to an Acquittal by Verdict (Kelynge 104.) upon an Arraignment at the King's Suit; and it was material, that no Instance could be shewn of requiring such Bail upon pleading a Pardon; on the contrary, Bowen in Mich. 8 Ann. was discharged without Bail. Acquittal, they said, must be understood in a Course of Law, and not an Interposition of the Crown's Mercy.

The other Point, as to Sureties for the Good-behaviour, depended on the 5 and 6 W. and M. c. 13. which enacts, "That the Justices before whom any Pardon for Felony shall be pleaded, may, at their Discretion, remand or commit the Person pleading it to Prison, till he shall enter into a Recognizance with two Sureties, for his good Behaviour, for any time not exceeding seven Years; and if the Party be an Infant (which was the present Case) then he is not to be bound, but must find Sureties." Upon this Clause, therefore, the Prosecutor insisted upon Sureties for the Good-behaviour, and instanced 2 H. P. C. 394, where it is said, that at Common-Law, without the Aid of 18 Eliz. c. 7. a Party acquitted may be bound to his Good-behaviour, if of ill Fame.

The Counsel for the Prisoner did not much oppose giving Sureties, and said, they had them ready; and Mr. J. Wright and Mr. J. Dennison were inclined to take them; but as there had yet been no Instance since the Act, and this was merely discretionary, the Chief Justice (Sir William Lee) was unwilling to make the Precedent in the Case of an Infant, where some favourable Circumstances were stated in the Verdict. And the Case Hale cites out of Rastal's Entries, was, where (as the Record says) testatum fuit cur per fide dignos, that the Defendant was of ill Fame; and at last the others came in to discharge him without Security.

N. B. I (Sir John Strange) on behalf of the Prosecutor, (the Heir being beyond Sea) desired it might be taken notice of, that we did not waive our Demand; and upon that the Court said, it should be their own Act, upon the Discretion of the Court.

The whole Expence attending this Prosecution, at Consultations, Fees to Counsel at the Trial, at the Attorney General's, at Lord Privy Seal's, at the Lord Chancellor's, and at the King's Bench on pleading his Pardon, and Imprisonment in Newgate from October to February, amounted to above 1300l.

This William Chetwynd, Esq. was the Last Heir-male of the Chetwynds of Grendon in Warwickshire, and Rudgley in Staffordshire. For though (on the Death of his elder Brother, Walter Chetwynd, Esq. who caught a Fever by attending Captain Clark's Trial at the Old Bailey, April 1749, of which he died) he came into a good Estate, as Heir at Law (his Brother Walter's Will being in part set aside on a Trial in B. R.) he enjoyed it but a few Years.

Office, in turning him off the Ladder, he had swung himself off. He seemed to die with a resolute Obstinacy, but delivered the following Paper to the Sheriff.

Guildford, July 9, 1709.

"I being brought here to die, according to the Sentence passed upon me at the Queen's-Bench Bar, for a Crime of which I am wholly innocent, thought myself obliged to let the World know (that they do not reflect on my Friends and Relations whom I have left behind me much troubled for my fatal End), that I know nothing of the Death of Mrs. Jane Young; nor how she came by her Death directly or indirectly; though some have been pleased to cast Reflections on my Aunt. However, I freely forgive all my Enemies, and pray to God to give them a due Sense of their Errors, and in his due time to bring the Truth to light. In the mean time, I beg every one to forbear reflecting on my dear Mother, or any of my Relations, for my unjust and unhappy Fall, since what I have here set down is the Truth and nothing but the Truth, as I expect Salvation at the Hands of Almighty God; but I am heartily sorry that I should be the Cause of persuading her to leave her Dame; which is all that troubles me, as witness my Hand this 9th Day of July."

XXIX. The Trial of FRANCIS TOWNLEY, Esq. for High-Treason, (in levying War against his Most Sacred Majesty King George the Second) at the Court-House at St. Margaret's-Hill, Southwark, before the Right Honourable the Lord Chief Justice Lee, the Right Honourable the Lord Chief Justice Willes, Mr. Justice Wright, Mr. Justice Dennison, Mr. Justice Foster, Mr. Justice Abney, Mr. Baron Reynolds, and Mr. Baron Clive; with Sir Thomas De Veil, Knt. and Peter Theobalds, Esq. (both Justices of the Peace for the County of Surry, and Gentlemen named in the Special Commission) July 15, 1746*.

THE whole Pannel (108) being first called over in the Prisoner's Presence, after he had made several Challenges, the following Jury-men were sworn†.

1. Daniel Ponton of Lambeth, Starch-maker.
2. John Haywood of Chelsham, Gent.
3. Michael Cuffe of Battersea, Gardener.
4. Francis Bartholomew of Egham, Gent.
5. Robert Wood of Epsom, Baker.
6. William Brooker of Walton upon Thames, Brewer.
7. Edmond Browne of Croydon, Brewer.
8. Thomas Belch of Coulsdon, Gent.
9. Thomas Dawson of St. George in Southwark, Brazier.
10. William Taylor of St. Saviour in Southwark, Brewer.
11. Thomas Lintall of the same, Cloth-worker.
12. James Paine of Seal, Yeoman.

Then the Clerk of the Arraignment (after Silence commanded) read over his Indictment to him, which was as follows:

Surry. Be it remembered, That at a Special Session of Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol-Delivery of our Sovereign Lord the King, of and for the County of Surry, holden at the Borough of Southwark in the said County, on Monday the twenty-third Day of June, in the twentieth Year of the Reign of our said present Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, before Sir William Lee, Knight, Chief Justice of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, appointed to hold Pleas before the King himself, Sir John Willes, Knight, &c. (naming the rest of the Judges and Commissioners present) and others their Fellow-Justices and Commissioners of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, assigned by Letters Patent of our said present Sovereign Lord the King under his Great Seal of Great Britain, made by Virtue of the Statute made in this present Parliament, intituled, An Act for the more easy and speedy Trial of such Persons as have levied or shall levy War against his Majesty, and for the better ascertaining the Qualifications of Jurors in Trials for High-Treason, or Misprision of Treason, in that Part of Great Britain called Scotland, to the said Justices and Commissioners above-named and others, and to any three or more of them (of whom our said present Sovereign Lord the King willed that any of them the said Sir William Lee, [naming some others of the Judges] and others in the same Letters Patent named and appointed shall be one, to deliver the Gaol of the said County of the Prisoners therein being, or such as shall or may be detained in the same, on or before the first Day of January, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Forty-six, for or on Account of the High-Treason mentioned in the said Statute in levying War against our said present Sovereign Lord the King within this Realm, and to enquire by the Oath of good and lawful Men of the same County of all such High-Treasons in levying War against our said present Sovereign Lord the King within this Realm by the said Prisoners, or any of them, or by any other Person or Persons who are now in actual Custody for or on Account of the same, or who are or shall be guilty of High-Treason in levying War against our said present Sovereign Lord the King within this Realm, and shall be apprehended and imprisoned for the same on or before the said first Day of January, in the said Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Forty-six, and the same High-Treasons to hear and determine according to the Form of the said Statute, by the Oath of Sir William Richardson of Bermondsey, Knt. Sir Abraham Shard of Kennington, Knt. Sir Thomas Hankey of Clapham, Knt. Sir Peter Thompson of Bermondsey, Knt. Josias Wordsworth of Adcombe, Esq. Percival Lewis of Putney, Esq. Samuel Atkinson of Croydon, Esq. John Copeland of Camberwell, Esq. Charles Haskins of Croydon, Esq. Joseph Creswick of Streatham, Esq. William Clarke of Southwark, Esq. Joseph Willoughby of Croydon, Esq. Thomas Bevois of Bermondsey, Esq. Elias Bird of Rotherhithe, Esq. Thomas Tarrant of Southwark, Esq. Edward Steevens of Southwark, Esq. Henry Robinson of Wandsworth, Esq. John Heathfield of Croydon, Esq. Nathaniel Green of Southwark, Esq. Isaac Eeles of Lambeth, Esq. John Smith of Lambeth, Esq. Hammett Richardson of Bermondsey, Esq. Samuel Nicholson of Croydon, Esq. good and lawful Men of the said County, being then and there sworn and charged to enquire for our said present Sovereign Lord the King, touching and concerning the Premises in the said Letters Patent mentioned, It is presented, that the Bill of Indictment to this Schedule annexed is a true Bill.

The Jurors for our present Sovereign Lord the King upon their Oath present, that Francis Townley, late of the City of Carlisle, in the County of Cumberland, Esq. otherwise called Francis Townley, late of the same Place, Gentleman, John Hamilton, late of the City of Carlisle, in the County of Cumberland, Esq. otherwise called John Hamilton, late of the same Place, Gentleman, Alexander Abernethy, late of the same Place, Gentleman, otherwise called Alexander Abernethy, late of the same Place, Surgeon, and George Abernethy, late of the same Place, Gentleman, &c. being Subjects of our said present most Serene Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, not having the Fear of God in their Hearts, nor having any Regard for the Duty of their Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as false Traitors and Rebels against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, their supreme, true, natural, lawful, and undoubted Sovereign Lord, entirely withdrawing that cordial Love, and that true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said present Sovereign Lord the King should and of Right ought to bear towards our said present Sovereign Lord the King; and also devising, and (as much as in them lay) most wickedly and traitorously intending to change and subvert the Rule and Government of this Kingdom, duly and happily established under our said present Sovereign Lord the King, and also to depose and deprive our said present Sovereign Lord the King of his Title, Honour, and Royal State, and of his Imperial Rule and Government of this Kingdom, and also to put and bring our said present Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction, and to raise and exalt the Person pretended to be Prince of Wales during the Life of James the Second, late King of England, and so forth, and since the Decease of the said late King, pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Title and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, to the Crown and to the Royal State and Dignity of King, and to the Imperial Rule and Government of this Kingdom, upon the tenth Day of October, in the nineteenth Year of the Reign of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, at the City of Carlisle aforesaid, in the County of Cumberland aforesaid, with a great Multitude of Traitors and Rebels, against our said present Sovereign Lord the King (to wit) to the Number of three Thousand Persons (whose Names are as yet unknown to the said Jurors), being armed and arrayed in a warlike and hostile Manner (to wit), with Colours displayed, Drums beating, Pipes playing, and with Swords, Clubs, Guns, Pistols, and divers other Weapons, as well offensive as defensive, with Force and Arms, did falsely and traitorously assemble and join themselves against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, and then and there with Force and Arms did falsely and traitorously, and in a warlike and hostile Manner array and dispose themselves against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, and then and there with Force and Arms, in Pursuance and Execution of such their wicked traitorous Intentions and Purposes aforesaid, did falsely and traitorously prepare, order, wage and levy a publick and cruel War against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, then and there committing and perpetrating a miserable and cruel Slaughter of and amongst the faithful Subjects of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, and also then and there during the said War with Force and Arms did with the said Traitors and Rebels so assembled, armed and arrayed as aforesaid, falsely and traitorously against the Will of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, enter into and take Possession of the said City of Carlisle, and the Castle thereto belonging within the same City, (the said City and Castle being a City and Castle of our said present Sovereign Lord the King) and the said City and Castle with Force and Arms then and there did falsely and traitorously possess, hold, keep, maintain, and defend, against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, against the Duty of their Allegiance, against the Peace of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and also against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided.

To this Indictment the Prisoner pleaded, Not Guilty.

N. B. This Indictment and Caption were made use of against all the Rebels who were tried in Surry, except Aneas Macdonald; save that the Overt-Acts were laid in different Counties of England or Scotland, as the Cases respectively required; and also save that the Overt-Act of taking and possessing the City and Castle of Carlisle was not charged on those who were not concerned in that Part of the Rebellion.

Clerk of Arraignment. Gentlemen, upon this Indictment the Prisoner at the Bar has been arraigned, and thereunto has pleaded, Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to enquire, whether he be guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find him Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since: If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it; and if you find he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty: If you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

* Though there were no Trials of the Rebel Commoners in 1745, printed in the Collection of State Trials; yet we shall insert here a short Account of a few of the Trials of the principal Commoners concerned in the Rebellion in 1745-6, as printed at that Time, (with Additions) to shew they were Persons of no Consequence or Estate concerned in that unnatural Rebellion; being either Men of small Fortunes, or who had run out what they had, or Tracesmen, who took Part in that desperate Undertaking.

† For the several Steps taken relating to the Rebels, previous to their Trials, see Judge Foster's Reports, Page 1, 2, 3.

The Counsel for the King were Mr. Attorney General, Sir John Strange, Mr. Solicitor General, Sir Richard Lloyd, and the Honourable Mr. York; and for the Prisoner, Mr. Serjeant Wynne, and Mr. Clayton.

Mr. York, Counsel for the King. May it please your Lordship, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Indictment against Francis Townley, the Prisoner at the Bar, and sets forth, &c. (as is before mentioned). To this Indictment he hath pleaded Not Guilty; we shall produce our Witnesses to make good the Charge against the Prisoner, which if we do, we doubt not that you will find him guilty of the Indictment.

Mr. Attorney General (Sir Dudley Rider). My Lords, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar, having been deeply engaged in the late unnatural and wicked Rebellion begun in Scotland, and carried into the Heart of this Kingdom, in order to overturn our present happy Constitution in Church and State, hath made it necessary for this Prosecution against him: I do not doubt but in the course of our Evidence we shall make it appear to your Satisfaction, that the Prisoner with two others, whose Names are Blood and Fletcher, and other their Confederates, did assemble in a warlike Manner, and procured Arms, Ammunition, and other Instruments of War; and composed a Regiment for the Service of the Pretender to these Realms, to wage War against his present most sacred Majesty; and did march through and invade several Parts of this Kingdom, and unlawfully did seize his Majesty's Treasure in many Places for the Service of their villainous Cause, and took away the Horses and other Goods, Merchandize, and Chattels of many of his Majesty's peaceable Subjects. And that during the said March the Prisoner, with other Rebels, in open Defiance of his Majesty's undoubted Right and Title to the Crown of these Realms, frequently caused the Pretender's Son to be proclaimed in a publick and solemn Manner as Regent of these Realms; and himself marched at the Head of a pretended Regiment, which they called the Manchester Regiment.

My Lords, I shall not take up the Time of the Court in saying a great deal, for all that the Prisoner is charged with will appear so full and plain from the Evidence we shall produce for the King, that there will not be the least Doubt with the Jury, to find him guilty.

Sir John Strange then spoke to the following Effect: My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case likewise for the Crown: I am very far from aggravating this Case against the Prisoner at the Bar, but I cannot help observing, that the Engagements which the Prisoner had embarked in, would have overturned one of the most glorious and free Constitutions that ever was framed, and I believe I may venture to say, is the only one in the whole World.

If an Attempt to subvert the Government, to destroy the King, and set up a Papish Pretender; if marching in an hostile manner, carrying on a bloody and destructive War in this Nation, can move Compassion, or be extenuated, any Rebellion may be palliated over and excused, since scarce any Circumstance can be added in Aggravation of that which hath lately been raised and carried on in this Kingdom.

Every Body knows the Rebellion broke out in Scotland with a small Number of People, and made a very great Progress, 'till at last the Rebels had the Audaciousness, with the Pretender's Son at their Head, to fight his Majesty's Forces at Preston Pans, and then the Rebellion burst into England, and the Prisoner at the Bar was with them in Lancashire, particularly at Preston, and several other Places, and then they proceeded to Manchester, where the Prisoner formed a Regiment, and accepted a Commission to be Colonel of the said Regiment, from the eldest Son of the Pretender, and wore a white Cockade, and a Plaid Sash, as a Mark of his Authority, and the Party he sided with; and then advanced from Manchester to Derby with his Regiment, where the Rebel Army halted some few Days; but being apprehensive of the Duke of Cumberland's attacking them, it so alarmed them, that they marched back with great Precipitation 'till they came to Carlisle, where he acted as Commandant of the City, and gave out Orders to the Garrison, amongst which he ordered the Houses of some of his Majesty's faithful Subjects to be set on fire, but was afterwards obliged by the Duke to surrender to the King's Pleasure; and though Humanity may induce you to have Compassion towards the Prisoner, yet if it is proved he is guilty of the Crimes laid to him, the Justice of this Nation calls aloud for his Punishment.

For no less was to be a Sacrifice than his Majesty and his Royal Family (a Succession of Princes, appointed by Divine Providence to be not only the Preservers of our Rights and Liberties, but to be the Guardians of the Protestant Interest in Europe), to appease the Fury of a Set of unsatisfied People, who have associated in this most wicked and unnatural Rebellion, and who envied us, the faithful Subjects of his Majesty, the Blessings we enjoyed uninterrupted, of our Religious and Civil Rights and Privileges.

These People, in order to divert themselves, and amuse the Ignorant, had on their Standards or Colours, Mottoes that they imagined would be grateful, viz.

LIBERTY and PROPERTY,
CHURCH and KING.

But your Lordship and the Gentlemen of the Jury, as well as the unfortunate Person who stands before you at the Bar, will excuse me if I take upon me to interpret the Meaning of their famous Motto or Inscription on their Colours, which, not to take up too much of the Time of the Court, I shall do in few Words.

The Liberty they designed, was nothing less than Slavery; their intended Property was Plunder, which too many of the good People of this Kingdom hath found; their Church was Popery, and the Meaning of their King, was only to make these free Kingdoms a Province to France. We shall now call our Witnesses, who will give such Proofs against the Prisoner, that I doubt not, Gentlemen of the Jury, you will find him guilty of the Treason he stands charged with.

Mr. Solicitor General (Hon. W. Murray, Esq.) Call Roger Mac Donald.

Roger Mac Donald being sworn, said, That he knew Colonel Townley the Prisoner, that he saw him at Derby, and on the Retreat of the Rebel Army from thence, he marched at the Head of the Manchester Regiment, as Colonel of the same.

This Witness also said, that he saw him with a white Cockade in his Hat, a Brace of Pistols, and was accounted as principal Officer between Lancaster and Preston, and he appeared at the Head of the Regiment, with Colours flying, and Drums beating, and that he had on a Plaid Sash.

This Witness was then asked, What Number at that Time the Rebel Army might consist of? and he said, to the best of his Knowledge, he believed 5600 Men, but not all armed.

This Witness farther deposed, That the Prisoner at the Bar was always looked upon by both Officers and Soldiers, as Colonel of the Regiment called the Manchester Regiment; and that he gave Command to all the Officers under him, who obeyed his Command as their principal Officer. That the Regiment had a Flag with these Words on one Side, viz. Liberty and Property; and on the other, Church and King. That they had some Artillery with them, and the Prisoner always appeared at the Head of his Regiment.

Cross-Examination.

Prisoner's Counsel (Mr. Serjeant Wynne) Pray have you had no Promise of Pardon?

Witness. I have had no certain Promise of Pardon. I was first examined, at Inverness, by the Judge Advocate of Scotland, but he did not assure me of a Pardon.

Prisoner's Counsel. Did not you expect it?

Witness. I cannot say but I did expect to be pardoned, for I was only a Servant. I was brought ashore very poor, and without any thing to subsist on.

King's Counsel. You say you saw the Prisoner, in the Retreat from Derby, command his Regiment: Was not he looked upon as Colonel?

Witness. Yes, I saw him on Horseback very often, and he always rode at the Head of the Regiment on a bay Horse.

Sir Richard Lloyd. Call Samuel Maddox; who appeared, and was sworn.

Maddox said, The first Time he saw the Prisoner, Colonel Townley, was at Manchester, about the sixth, seventh, or eighth Day of December last, but the Day he could not particularly remember; and said the Prisoner was made Colonel of the Manchester Regiment by the Pretender's Son; and one Reason why he was certain he was Colonel of the Regiment, was, that a Guard from the said Regiment was mounted every Day, and Centinels placed at the Prisoner's Quarters; that he, the said Maddox, marched out with him in the Station of an Ensign, but never had any Commission, though he carried the Colours as such; that the Prisoner wore a Sword and a Brace of Pistols, with a white Cockade in his Hat; and that the Prisoner gave Command as Colonel of the Regiment, and that he ordered the said Manchester Regiment to be drawn up in the Church-Yard in Manchester, where the Pretender's Son reviewed them, and that he marched at the Head of the Regiment as Colonel to Derby. Their first Day's March from Manchester was to Winslow, where the Prisoner appeared also at the Head of the Regiment, and had a white Cockade in his Hat, a Plaid Sash, a Brace of Pistols, and a Sword; that their next Day's March was to Macclesfield, where he, this Witness, signified, he had an Inclination to leave the Regiment, and return home to his Master at Manchester, but was intimidated from so doing, by being threatened, and told, that if he did he would have his Brains knocked out.

This Witness farther deposed, That when they were at Derby with the Rebel Army, they beat up for Volunteers for the Manchester Regiment, commanded by the Hon. Colonel Francis Townley; and the same was done by the particular Order and Direction of the Prisoner.

That when the Rebel Army retreated from Derby, Colonel Townley, the Prisoner, and some of his Regiment, took out of a House between Derby and Ashborn, a Sack full of Arms, which were concealed under some old Writings; that the said Arms were taken with them to Ashborn, and lodged all Night in the Prisoner's own Room, and disposed of afterwards among his Men; that the Prisoner had two Centinels always at his Door all Night, for fear the Duke of Cumberland was nearer to them than they imagined; that the Prisoner marched as Colonel of the Manchester Regiment, in their Retreat from Derby to Carlisle; sometimes at the Head of the Regiment; that when they came to Carlisle, the Prisoner was made by the Pretender's Son; Commandant of Carlisle, and had another Commission given him by the Pretender's Son to raise a Regiment of Horse; that so soon as the main Body of the Rebel Army were gone from Carlisle for Scotland, he the Prisoner took on him the Command of the whole Rebel Forces left there; and that he gave Orders for the Guns to be mounted, and also ordered a House to be burnt; which was accordingly done, alledging that several of the King's Forces had fired from it, and annoyed the Pretender's Army; and that he particularly directed and caused several Chevaux de Frize to be made, and fixed at the Gates and Entrance to the City, to prevent his Majesty's Horse and Dragoons from approaching it; that the Prisoner ordered some of the Rebel Army then in Carlisle, to make a Sally out to bring in some Sheep, and that the Prisoner mounted the Walls, with a Pistol in his Hand, to give notice if the King's Forces were near where the Men were to go; that the Prisoner paid the Men of his own Company himself, as all the Captains of Companies did theirs; and that he had heard the Prisoner when in Carlisle, in company with other Officers, complain that he was fourscore Pounds out of Pocket in paying his Men; that before the Capitulation, this Witness heard the Prisoner have some Words, and was seemingly in a great Passion with Colonel Hamilton, who was Governor of the Castle or Citadel of Carlisle, for surrendering the Place, and not making a Defence to the last; and that he heard the Prisoner declare, that it was better to die by the Sword, than to fall into the Hands of these damned Hanoverians.

This Witness being particularly asked by the King's Counsel, if he had at any time seen the Prisoner in Carlisle act as an Officer, said, That he had particularly seen him encouraging the Rebel Soldiers to make Sallies out on the King's Forces.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Serjeant Wynne. Mr. Maddox, after the Surrender of the Town and Citadel of Carlisle, did not you all expect Mercy?

Maddox. We were all put Prisoners into the Church.

Serjeant Wynne. Did you all expect to be hanged?

Maddox. I cannot say that, for we were in expectation of being at Liberty again soon.

Serjeant Wynne. Pray do not you expect a Pardon, or have you had any Promise of a Reward for what you have done in this Affair?

4 A

Maddox.

Maddox. I cannot say I have ever had any Promise of a Reward.
Serj. Wynne. I find you are a very smart young Man, and I desire to be answered to this Question; Pray, have you had any Promise of a Reward or Pardon, or do you expect any Reward or Pardon, after having given your Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, or the other Prisoners that are in Custody?

Maddox. My Brother came to me when I was in New-Prison, and he did advise me to do the best I could for myself, and serve my Country. Soon after one of his Majesty's Messengers took me away; and I have been at his House ever since, only at those Times I went to be examined; Nobody ever told me that I should be pardoned, but my Friends advised me to do what I have done. If I could have a free Pardon, I should be very thankful for it.

Mr. Clayton. (another of the Prisoner's Counsel.) Mr. Maddox. Did not his Royal Highness the Duke (when you surrendered Prisoners) promise you Mercy?

Maddox. All the Terms his Royal Highness said we were to expect, were, we should not be put to the Sword, but that we should be left to his Majesty's Pleasure; which two Scots Officers who went to the Duke, and whose Names were Abernethy and Forbes, told us; and that the People in Carlisle were to deliver up all their Arms at the Gate, and the Officers were to go into the Church.

King's Counsel. Call Austin Coleman, who appeared and was sworn, and said, He saw the Prisoner at the Bar in Carlisle, who was called Colonel Townley, and commanded the Manchester Regiment, and was made Commandant of the said City by the Pretender's Son; and if any of the Soldiers wanted Arms, they applied to him, and he furnished them with Firelocks, Pistols and Bayonets; and that he often had seen the Prisoner order the Guard to mount, and always acted as their chief Officer, and all the other Officers took their Orders from him as their Superior.

Cross-Examination.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Pray, Sir, inform me what Time you saw the Gentleman at the Bar at Carlisle, was it in the Month of November?

Coleman. I cannot tell what Month it was, I know I saw him at Carlisle when it was in Possession of the Rebels, and he had a Commission from the Pretender's Son.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Did you ever hear him say he had a Commission?

Coleman. No, I never did.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Then what you say signifies nothing.

King's Counsel. Call Capt. Carey of the Foot-Guards, who appeared.

King's Counsel. Pray swear the Captain; which being done, Capt. Carey said, That he received Orders by Lord George Beauclerk, from his Royal Highness Duke William, to take Care of the Governor of Carlisle, and had his Royal Highness's Orders to examine all the Rebel Prisoners Papers, amongst whom he applied to the Prisoner at the Bar, who said he had delivered his Commission before to Major Adams. He further said, That the Prisoner had some Guineas in his Pockets, and his Watch, which he did not take from him; for his Royal Highness's Orders were, not to take any Money out of the Pockets of any of the Officers, only to seize all publick Money that they had collected; for that what Money they had in their Pockets might be of Service to them in their Confinement. That this Evidence indorced all the Papers that he found on such of the Officers as he searched, and said, the Capitulation was signed by the Duke of Richmond, Lieutenant-General in the Army; wherein the Rebels in Carlisle were to be at the King's Pleasure.

Counsel for the King. Sir, are you sure that in the Capitulation that was signed by the Duke of Richmond, it was mentioned that the Prisoners should be reserved for the King's Pleasure?

Capt. Carey. I cannot take upon me to be certain of that; but I think so.

King's Counsel. Do you know the Duke of Richmond's Hand-writing?

Capt. Carey. No, I never saw his Grace write.

Then a Paper was shewn him, which he said was the Capitulation, and was read, as follows:

"All the Terms his Royal Highness will or can grant to the Rebel Garrison of Carlisle, are, That they shall not be put to the Sword, but be reserved for the King's Pleasure.

"If they consent to these Conditions, the Governor and principal Officers are to deliver themselves up immediately, and the Castle, Citadel, and all the Gates of the Town are to be taken Possession of forthwith by the King's Troops. All the small Arms are to be lodged in the Town Guard-Room, and the rest of the Garrison are to retire to the Cathedral,

* As some People may be willing to know what the Rebels called, The Capitulation on the Surrender of Carlisle; and as several of those unhappy Persons in their dying Speeches asserted, That their Lives were taken away contrary to the Laws of Nations and of Arms, as appears by the Capitulation granted them at the Surrender of that City; to contradict so false an Assertion, we shall here insert all the Messages, &c. that passed on that Occasion, whereby it will appear, that nothing was granted them but, "that they should not be put to the Sword, but reserved for the King's Pleasure;" which Terms they consented to accept, as appears by Colonel Hamilton's, and the other Officers Answer to the Terms offered by his Royal Highness, viz. On the first Platoon of the Old Battery firing, (December 30, 1745) the Rebels hung out the White Flag; whereupon the Battery ceased, and they called over the Walls, That they had two Hostages ready to be delivered at the English Gate, on the opposite Side of the Town; his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland then ordered Colonel Conway and Lord Bury to deliver two Messages marked in Writing, to be signed by Colonel Conway; the second Message being designed as an Answer to a Person's Letter, who called himself a Frenchman.

In about two Hours they returned, and brought a Paper signed John Hamilton; whereupon they were sent back with the Terms signed by the Duke of Richmond, by Order of his Royal Highness; and about Four they brought a Paper signed also by the said John Hamilton; on which Brigadier Bligh took Possession of the City.

Copy of his Royal Highness's Message to the Rebels at Carlisle, upon their hanging out a White Flag, Monday Morning, the 30th of December, 1745, sent by Colonel Conway.

His Royal Highness will make no Exchange of Hostages with Rebels, and desires they will let him know by me, what they meant by hanging out the White Flag.

To let the French Officer know, if there is one in the Town, that there are no Dutch Troops here, but enough of the King's to chastise the Rebels, and those who dare to give them any Assistance.

Signed,

Col. Conway,
 Aid de Camp to his Royal Highness the Duke.

where a Guard is to be placed over them. No Damage is to be done to the Artillery, Arms, or Ammunition." Head Quarters at Blackall, 30 Dec. Half an Hour past Two in the Afternoon.

By his Royal Highness's Command,
 Signed Richmond, Lenox, and Aubigny, Lieutenant-General of his Majesty's Forces.

King's Counsel. Call Captain Nesbit of the third Regiment of Foot Guards; who appearing, and being sworn, said, He went by order of his Royal Highness the Duke to visit and examine the Rebel Officers in Carlisle; and that the Prisoner was one of them, and went by the Name of Colonel Townley, and Commandant of Carlisle.

King's Counsel. Swear Captain Vere, which was done.

King's Counsel. Sir, will you be pleased to tell my Lords, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, what you know of the Prisoner at the Bar being in the late unnatural Rebellion?

Capt. Vere. I saw the Prisoner on the 20th of November at Carlisle, for I was taken Prisoner a little before by the Rebel Army; he was called Colonel Townley, Colonel of the Manchester Regiment, and Commandant of the Town. On the 25th of December he appeared with a white Cockade; I went up to Colonel Hamilton's Room, where we talked of a Capitulation, and Mr. Hamilton was willing to agree to it: We then wrote a Letter to his Royal Highness the Duke, and the Messenger who carried it was made a Prisoner; and Mr. Hamilton desired me to go to Captain Abernethy, and the Scotch Officers, and they all agreed to what was done, and the next Day they hung out the White Flag.

Sir John Strange. Did not Townley appear as the Commanding Officer?

Capt. Vere. Yes, I saw his Commission in the Guard-Room.

Sir John Strange. Did you see it in his own Hands?

Capt. Vere. I cannot say I did.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Pray, Sir, what are you?

Capt. Vere. I am an Officer, and was sent by his Grace the Duke of Newcastle upon the publick Service, and was taken Prisoner before by the Rebel Army.

Mr. Davidson, a Grocer of Carlisle, was the next Witness, who being called and sworn, deposed, That he had seen the Prisoner at Carlisle, where he acted as Colonel of the Manchester Regiment, and Commandant of the City of Carlisle; he was present when he ordered a House to be set on Fire at Carlisle; and on this Deponent's asking him the Reason for it, he replied, That several of the Elector of Hanover's Men had fired from it, and annoyed his Men.

Here the King's Counsel rested it.

The Counsel for the Prisoner proceeded now to his Defence, and pleaded, That Mr. Townley was a Gentleman of a good Family, and that his Education was suitable to his Birth; but by some Misfortunes in his Family was obliged to retire to France, which happened in the Year 1728. Being a Man of Spirit, he was soon taken Notice of by the French Court, and being recommended to his most Christian Majesty, as a Person capable of a Post in his Army, the King gave him a Commission; in consequence of which he served at the Siege of Philipshurgh, under the Marshal Duke of Berwick, who lost his Life before the Walls of that Place. He there behaved with such Courage and Conduct as gained him the Respect and Esteem of all the Officers in the Army. He executed all the Orders of his Superiors with the greatest Intrepidity, and exposed himself on every Occasion in such a Manner, as if Life was of no Signification, when Honour and the Service of his Master stood in Competition with it. He was likewise in several other Sieges and Engagements, where his Behaviour was always such as became a Man of Honour; and as he received the Pay of his most Christian Majesty, he thought it his Duty to serve him with all the Fidelity he was capable of. Thus he continued in that Service from the Year 1728, till a few Years since that he came into England, where he privately resided till about the Time of the breaking out of the Rebellion. And the French King imagining he might be of Service in promoting his Views, in the Invasion which he had meditated against these Kingdoms, sent him a Colonel's Commission, to enable him to raise Forces, and to assist his Ally, the Pretender, in his Expedition to Scotland. Thus it appears, that he has been sixteen Years in the Service of France; that he has had the French King's Commission during all that Time; and consequently was as much in the Service of France as any Officer in the French Army; and therefore they were humbly of Opinion, that Col. Townley had as just a Right to the Cartel, as any French Officer that has been taken by the English, during the Progress of the War between the two Kingdoms.

John Hamilton's Answer to his Royal Highness the Duke's Message to the Rebels in Carlisle, December 30, 1745.

In Answer to the short Note sent by his Royal Highness Prince William, Duke of Cumberland; the Governor, in Name of himself, and all the Officers and Soldiers, Gunners and others, belonging to the Garrison, desires to know what Terms his Royal Highness will be pleased to give them, upon the Surrender of the City and Castle of Carlisle; and which known, his Royal Highness shall be duly acquainted with the Governor and Garrison's last or ultimate Resolution, the White Flag being hung out on Purpose to obtain a Cessation of Arms for concluding such a Capitulation. This to be given to his Royal Highness's Aid de Camp.

Signed,

John Hamilton.

His Royal Highness's Declaration to the Rebels, sent by the Colonels Conway and Lord Bury, Aid de Camps to his Royal Highness, after receiving John Hamilton's Letter, December 30, 1745.

All the Terms his Royal Highness will or can grant to the Rebel Garrison of Carlisle, are, that they shall not be put to the Sword, but be reserved for the King's Pleasure. If they consent to these Conditions, the Governor and principal Officers are to deliver themselves up immediately, and the Castle, Citadel, and all the Gates of the Town, are to be taken Possession of forthwith by the King's Troops. All the small Arms are to be lodged in the Town Guard-Room, and the rest of the Garrison are to retire to the Cathedral, where a Guard is to be placed over them. No Damage is to be done to the Artillery, Arms, or Ammunition. Head Quarters at Blackall, 30 December, Half an Hour past Two in the Afternoon.

By his Royal Highness's Command,

Signed Richmond, Lenox, and Aubigny, Lieutenant-General of his Majesty's Forces.

The Rebels Answer to the Terms offered them by his Royal Highness, December 30, 1745. The Governor of Carlisle, and all the Officers composing the Garrison, agree to the Terms of Capitulation given in by his Grace the Duke of Richmond, Lenox, and Aubigny, Lieutenant-General of his Majesty's Forces, recommending themselves to his Royal Highness's Clemency, and that his Royal Highness will be pleased to interpose for them with his Majesty; and that the Officers Cloaths and Baggage may be safe, with a competent Time to be allowed the Citizens of Carlisle to remove their Beds, Bedcloaths, and other Household Furniture impressed from them for the Use of the Garrison in the Castle. The 30th of December, at Three in the Afternoon. We

We must acknowledge that the King's Counsel have opened the Nature of the Indictment with all the Candour that could be expected, and have not exaggerated the Charge against the Prisoner beyond the Bounds of Humanity and Good-nature; and we humbly hope they will be of Opinion with us, that tho' the Prisoner at the Bar should unhappily be found acting in this unnatural Rebellion, yet as he acted under a Commission from the French King, he has a Right to the Cartel for settling the Exchange of Prisoners that may be taken on either Side, in the War now carried on between the two Kingdoms.

The Evidence we have to produce in Behalf of the Prisoner, are only three. The first is Capt. Carpentier, who will prove, we hope, to your Lordships Satisfaction, that Col. Townley was many Years in the French Service, under a Commission from the French King; and since his being taken at Carlisle has been constantly supplied from France; the other two, who are John Hayward and Thomas Dickinson, we shall bring to invalidate the Evidence of Maddox, by shewing the Badness of his Character, and that he is such a Man whose Testimony is not to be credited.

And the Prisoner's Counsel farther observed, that the Indictment was insufficient, for that they had not mentioned the Day in the Indictment when the Treason was done, and that the glorious Statute of the 7th of King William III. which was justly esteemed the Bulwark of English Liberty, directed, that nothing shall be given in Evidence but what is inserted in the Indictment; and that the Time not being mentioned in the Indictment when the Treason was acted, is sufficient to quash it, because it might be so long past as to entitle the Prisoner to the Benefit of the Limitation enacted in the said King's Reign; and that Act says, That no Person shall be convicted, or suffer for High or Petit Treason, unless a Prosecution is begun against the Person who committed such Treason, in three Years after the Commission of such Treason.

Counsel. Pray call Mr. Carpentier; who appeared, and was sworn.

King's Counsel. Pray, what would you ask this Gentleman to?

Prisoner's Counsel. To prove that the Prisoner had a Commission from the French King, and that he was at the Siege of Philippsburg.

Court. That will be against you; for no Man that is a liege Subject of his Majesty can justify taking up Arms, and acting in the Service of a Prince that is actually in War against his Majesty.

On which Carpentier was set aside, without being examined.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Pray call John Hayward; who appeared, and was sworn.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Pray Sir, do you know Samuel Maddox, and how long have you known him?

John Hayward. Yes, Sir, about two Years.

Mr. Serj. Wynne. Pray, what Character doth he bear?

John Hayward. He bears such a very bad Character, that I would not believe him upon his Oath.

Cross-Examined.

Sir John Strange. I hope you believe that every Person that joined with the Rebels are bad Men?---Hayward. Yes, Sir.

Sir R. Lloyd. What Business are you of?---Hayward. I am a Glover and Leather-seller at Manchester. [After being examined, he went out of Court, but was recalled.]

Solicitor Gen. Mr. Hayward, Pray, did you see the Prisoner at the Bar in Manchester?

Hayward. No, I never saw the Prisoner before.

Counsellor Clayton. Pray call Thomas Dickinson; who appeared, and was sworn.

Sir, do you know Samuel Maddox?

Dickinson. Yes, Sir; he was bound Apprentice to an Apothecary at Manchester.

Counf. Clayton. Pray, what Character does he bear?

Dickinson. A very bad one.

Counf. Clayton. Would you believe him upon his Oath?

Dickinson. No, I would not, especially upon Life and Death.

Sir John Strange. For what Reason do you take upon you to swear he is not to be believed upon his Oath?

Dickinson. I do not know particularly; but I have heard he was a very bad Apprentice, and that he had wronged his Master.

Sir John Strange. Do you know his Master?

Dickinson. Yes; his Master is in London now.

Sir John Strange. So, for no other Reason, than because you have heard he was not a good Prentice, you take upon you to swear he is not to be believed on his Oath. I suppose you have other bad Prentices in Manchester?

Dickinson. Yes, there are.

Mr. Att. Gen. Dickinson, Did you ever see the Prisoner at Manchester at the Time the Rebel Army was there?---Dickinson. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was he doing there?

Dickinson. He was Colonel of the Manchester Regiment.

Mr. Att. Gen. What, in the Pretender's Service?

Dickinson. Yes, in the Rebel Army.

The Evidence for the Prisoner being all gone through, Mr. Solicitor General replied to what had been objected by the Prisoner's Counsel to the Indictment.

Mr. Solicitor General stood up, and made a Reply to the Prisoner's Counsel, wherein he observed, "The first Overt-Act of High-Treason charged against the Prisoner, is compassing and imagining the Death of the King; the next is, adhering to the King's Enemies, and levying of War against his Majesty's Person and Government; and this is founded on the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third. And levying of War by one or more Persons, is Treason. That this War has been levied, and that Acts of Hostilities have been committed by the Prisoner, I do not doubt but that it has been sufficiently proved to you, Gentlemen of the Jury; there is no Occasion to prove explicitly all that is laid in the Indictment; but that War has been levied against his Majesty, has been sufficiently proved and admitted by the learned Counsel for the Prisoner; it has been proved, likewise, that the Prisoner, with a tumultuous Number of Rebels and Traitors, did assemble in several Parts of his Majesty's Dominions, and levied a cruel and destructive War. The Counsel on the other Side would insinuate, that the Crime was committed before the Day laid in the Indictment, therefore the Day of the Commission in the Indictment should be inserted. But admitting it was so, this Indictment is good; for in the Case of Sir Harry Gray, it was the Opinion of all the Judges, that Sir Harry was guilty, notwithstanding that the Fact was committed twelve Years before the Indictment; and it is recent in the Memory of many Gentlemen of the Law, that this was the Case of Chandler, Laver, and Bradshaw; and so it was allowed in constructive Treason, in the Case of Damery and others; in the Reign of the late Queen Anne, for pulling down of Meeting-houses, and many Cases of the like Nature in Sir Matthew Hale's Pleas of the Crown; for which several Reasons, and what has been mentioned before, I humbly conceive your Lordships will over-rule this Exception, as having no Weight." (Upon which the said Motion was over-ruled by the Court.) Then my Lord Chief Justice Lee summed up the Evidence very impartially to the Jury.

After which the Jury consulted together in Court, but not agreeing in their Verdict, withdrew about ten Minutes, and when they returned into Court, were called over by the Clerk of the Arraignment, and answered to their Names.

Clerk of the Arraignment. Gentlemen of the Jury, are you agreed on your Verdict?---Jury. Yes.

Clerk of the Arraignment. Who shall say for you?---Jury. Our Foreman.

Clerk of the Arraignment. Francis Townley, hold up your Hand. (Which he did.) How say you? Is Francis Townley guilty of the High Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?---Foreman. Guilty.

Clerk of the Arraignment. What Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements, had he at the Time of the said High Treason committed, and at any Time since, to your Knowledge?---None.

Clerk of the Arraignment. Hearken to your Verdict, as the Court has recorded it; You say that Francis Townley is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, and you say he had no Goods, nor Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the Time of the said High-Treason committed, or at any Time since to your Knowledge, and so you say all?---Jury. Yes.

Then Mr. Jones, Keeper of the County Gaol of Surry, was ordered to take Care of the Prisoner.

Mr. TOWNLEY's Case, July 15, 1746.

HIS Counsel moved that before any Juryman should be brought to the Book, the whole Pannel might be called over once in the Prisoner's Hearing, that he might take notice who did and who did not appear; which they said would be a considerable Help to him in taking his Challenges. This was done by Order of the Court, and the Attorney-General did not oppose it.

Every Juryman as he came to the Book was asked, whether he was a Freeholder or no. Those who answered that they had no Freehold in the County, were examined upon a Voire dire to that Matter; and on their answering that they had no Freehold, were set aside. Those who answered that they had both Freehold and Copyhold were asked, whether both put together did amount to 10l. a-Year; and if they did, that was admitted to be a good Qualification, though the Freehold alone was under 10l.

The Court grounded this Rule on the Bill of Rights, 1 W. M. St. 2. c. 2. 4. 5. W. M. c. 24. S. 15. and the 4th and 5th W. M. compared.

The Prisoner's Counsel offered to call a Witness to shew that he was at the Time of the Rebellion in the Service and Pay of the French King, and so intitled, as they insisted, to the Benefit of the Cartel for Exchange of Prisoners: But the Court declared that such Proof is not to be admitted. It is no Defence in a Court of Law, nor is it so much as an Excuse, that he had entered into the Service of an open Enemy. See the Case of Aneas Macdonald.

They then insisted on what they (very improperly) called the Capitulation at the Surrender of Carlisle. In this likewise the Court over-ruled them. It is no Sort of Defence in a Court of Law. But to prevent Misconstructions, Colonel Carey was examined touching the Terms upon which the Surrender was made. And he swore, that the Duke expressly reserved the Rebels in Carlisle to be dealt with as His Majesty should please.

The Court then observed, that the Prisoners had received the whole Benefit of the Terms offered by the Duke, in that they were not immediately put to the Sword, [See Lord Winton's Trial 6. St. Tri.] but were reserved for his Majesty's Pleasure; which now appears to be, that they shall have a fair Trial, and Liberty to make their Defence according to Law.

They then insisted that the Overt-Acts are charged in the Indictment to be committed on the 10th of October, and that all the Evidence is of Overt-Acts subsequent to that Time; and said, that however the Resolutions with regard to this Point may have been before the 7th W. III. yet now, by that Act, no Evidence is to be given but of Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment; and consequently the Overt-Acts must be proved in such Manner as they are laid: That in this Case especially the King's Counsel are not at Liberty to vary in their Proofs from the Day laid, since they have confined themselves in the Indictment to one Day, and have not charged (as they said in most of the Precedents it is charged) that the Defendant did commit the Treason charged on him on the Day laid, and at divers Days and Times, as well before as after.

To this Mr. Murray, the Solicitor General, answered, That the 7th W. III. makes no Alteration with regard to this Point, so as to make either Time or Place more material than they were before the Act. The Act indeed saith, That no Evidence shall be given of any Overt-Acts not laid in the Indictment: But what is or is not Evidence of such Overt-Acts, is left upon just the same Foot in this respect as it was before the Act; what was Evidence at Common Law is in this respect Evidence still; and as to the charging the Overt-Acts at divers Days and Times as well before as after the Day particularly mentioned, he said, that the greatest Part of the Precedents he had seen of Indictments for levying War, which is the present Case, do charge the Overt-Acts on one Day only.

Sir Richard Lloyd offered to speak on the same Side; but the Court told him, he need not give himself the Trouble of speaking to the Point, on which there could be no Doubt, and over-ruled the Objection.

The following Warrant was soon after sent to the Sheriff, viz.

SURREY.

A T a Special Session of Oyer and Terminer and Goal Delivery of our present Sovereign Lord the King of and for the County of Surrey holden at the Borough of Southwark in the said County on Monday the Twenty-third Day of June in the Twentieth Year of the Reign of our said present Sovereign Lord GEORGE the second by the Grace of God of Great-Britain France and Ireland King Defender of the Faith and so forth before Sir William Lee Knt. Alexander Abernethy, James Gadd otherwise Gad, Thomas Furnivall, Christopher Taylor, Andrew Blood otherwise Blyde, are attainted on their own Confession of High Treason in levying War against our Sovereign Lord the King within this Realm.

Francis Townley, George Fletcher, William Brettaugh otherwise Bratter otherwise Bratter, Thomas Chadwick otherwise Chaddock, Thomas Deacon, James Dawson, John Berwick, John Saunderson, Thomas Syddall, Charles Deacon, James Willding otherwise Whelding, David Morgan, are attainted on Verdict of High Treason of levying War against our Sovereign Lord the King within this Realm.

Let the several Prisoners above-named return to the Gaol of the County of Surrey from whence they came and from thence they must be drawn to the Place of Execution and when they come there they must be severally hanged by the Neck but not till they be dead for they must be cut down alive then their Bowels must be taken out and burnt before their Faces then their Heads must be severed from their Bodies and their Bodies severally divided into four Quarters and these must be at the King's Disposal.

John Hunter is acquitted by Verdict of High-Treason in levying War against our Sovereign Lord the King within this Realm and must be discharged.

Let Execution be done on Wednesday the Thirtieth Day of July Instant.

W. Lee,
M. Wright,
Ja. Reynolds,
T. Abney,
M. Foster,
E. Clive.

Of the above Seventeen, Abernethy, Gadd, Furnivall, Taylor, Brettaugh, Saunderson, Charles Deacon, and Willding were reprieved, and the other Nine executed July 30.

The Prisoner Townley was executed according to his Sentence on Kennington-Common, on Wednesday the 30th of July 1746.

After he had hung six Minutes, he was cut down, and having Life in him, as he lay upon the Block to be quartered, the Executioner gave him several Blows on his Breast, which not having the Effect designed, he immediately cut his Throat; after which he took his Head off; then ripped him open, and took out his Bowels and Heart, and threw them into a Fire, which consumed them; then he slashed his four Quarters; and put them with the Head into a Coffin, and they were carried to the New Jail in Southwark, where they were deposited till Saturday Aug. 2. when his Head was put on Temple-Bar, and his Body and Limbs suffered to be buried.

This unfortunate Person was about 38 Years of Age, born near Wigan in Lancashire, of a very good Family. His Uncle Mr. Townley, of Townley-Hall, in Lancashire, was tried in Southwark, before Judge Powis, for being in the Rebellion in 1715; and tho' acquitted by his Jury, yet not thought innocent by the Publick; for many of his Men who were tried at other Places, for going into the Rebellion with him, were convicted and executed.

In 1727, he went over to France, and entered himself a Volunteer in the French King's Service; and in 1728 obtained a Commission from the King of France, and continued abroad about 15 Years. He was at the Siege of Philipburg, when the Duke of Berwick's Head was shot off, and was near the Duke at that Time. He was also in the French Army, when the Germans made such a sudden Attack upon that Quarter of the Army where Marshal Broglis commanded, as obliged the Marshal in a terrible Fright to run away without his Breeches. He was likewise in several other Actions and Sieges, and, as was said by his Friends, he always behaved well and with Honour.

The Reason of his leaving the French Service, about five Years since, and coming to England, was to live some Time in his own Country with his Friends; and when the Rebel Army came into England, he went and met them between Lancaster and Preston; and came with them to Manchester, where the Pretender's Son gave him a Commission to raise a Regiment of Foot, which was immediately done; and the young Pretender, on leaving him at Carlisle, gave him another Commission to raise a Regiment of Horse.

His Behaviour from the first of his being taken Prisoner at Carlisle, to the Time of his Trial, was of a Piece; he frequently saying that he could not be hurt, for that he had a Commission from the King of France, and so must be exchanged upon the Cartel; but when he was convicted, he seemed a little more serious, and often said, he expected no Mercy.

He was much more reserved than many of his Fellow-Sufferers; and would not talk a great deal to any body but his particular Friends and Brother-Prisoners.

The Morning of his Execution, and even at the fatal Place, he shewed no manner of Signs of Dread, but said he hoped he should be happy in the next World.

XXX. The Trial of GEORGE FLETCHER, for High Treason, at the Court-house, St. Margaret's-bill, Southwark, on Wednesday, July 16, 1746.

THIS Day the Court, according to Adjournment, met at Ten in the Morning, where there were present, the Lord Chief Justice Lee, Mr. Justice Wright, and Mr. Baron Reynolds.

And also the other Officers, that attended the Court the preceding Day, took their Seats; and Proclamation being made by the Cryer, he proceeded to call the Jury, and ordered the Keeper of the County Gaol to set George Fletcher to the Bar; which being done accordingly, the following Gentlemen (after the Prisoner had made ten Challenges) were sworn in for the Jury.

The Names of the Jury.

- 1 Daniel Penton of Lambeth, Starch-maker.
- 2 Michael Cusse of Battersea, Gardener.
- 3 Michael Constable of Dorking, Yeoman.
- 4 William Brooker of Walton upon Thames, Brewer.
- 5 Edmund Brown of Croydon, Brewer.
- 6 Thomas Belch of Coulsdon, Gent.
- 7 Christopher Stokes of Bermondsey, Fellmonger.
- 8 William Taylor of St. Saviour, Brewer.
- 9 Thomas Lintall, of Ditto, Cloth-worker.
- 10 Francis Simmonds of Puttenham, Yeoman.
- 11 James Paine of Seal, Yeoman.
- 12 Richard Sparkes of Wonerth, Yeoman.

The Lord Balmerino, who had neither Counsel nor Witness at his Trial, insisted on the same Point. And the House out of their extreme Tenderness in case of Life (after my Lord Chancellor had delivered his Opinion clearly that the Time is not material, provided the Treason be committed before the Bill found) put the Question to the Judges. Lord Chief Justice Lee delivered the unanimous Opinion of the Judges, that the Day is not material, provided the Treason be proved to have been committed before the finding of the Bill. Foster's Report of some Proceedings on the Commission for the Trial of the Rebels, p. 9.

And they being all sworn, took their Seats in the Jury-box; and Proclamation was again made for Silence, whilst the Indictment was reading to the Prisoner.

Note, The Indictment was the same as that of Townley's (convicted the Day before), the Treason being laid to be committed the same Time, at the same Place, and in the same Manner.

After the King's Counsel had opened the Charge, the following Evidence was called against the Prisoner.

Ormsby Mac Cormack, being sworn,

King's Counsel. Mr. Mac Cormack, pray look upon the Prisoner, and then tell the Court, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, what you know of him; and speak out loud, that you may be heard.

Mac Cormack. The first time that I saw him, was before the Rebels marched from Manchester to Derby.

King's Counsel. What Appearance did the Prisoner make at Manchester? Did you look upon him to be an Officer?

Mac Cormack. He had a white Cockade in his Hat, and marched as Captain in the Manchester Regiment. I saw the Flag that belonged to the Regiment flying, and the Motto was, Liberty and Property, Church and King.

King's Counsel. Did he march with all the Rebel Army? Were there any Pipes playing?

Mac Cormack. There were Pipes playing before the Highland Rebels; but none in the Manchester Regiment.—I saw him also at Derby.

Prisoner's Counsel. Pray, Friend, how came you to know him so particularly?—Mac Cormack. They called him Capt. Dawson.

[Here the Counsel for the Prisoner interrupted the Witness, because there is one Dawson now in Custody, who was an Officer in the said Regiment, and the Prisoner's Name is Fletcher.]

King's Counsel. Look at the Prisoner again.

(Looking earnestly at him.)

Mac Cormack. Though I may mistake his Name, I am sure he is the Person that I saw at Derby, tho' I cannot positively say he gave any Command there as an Officer. I saw him at Preston, and other Places along the Road, till we came to Carlisle.

King's Counsel. Was you with him at Carlisle?

Mac Cormack. I was at Carlisle; but he was there before I came, and there I saw him act as a Captain; and when the Soldiers were drawn up in the Castle-Yard, I saw him there, and saw Arms distributed to some of the Soldiers who had none.

Prisoner's Counsel. Did you see him distribute any Arms to any of the Soldiers?—Mac Cormack. I cannot say that I did.

Prisoner's Counsel. Then who distributed those Arms?

Mac Cormack. It was a Scotch Officer, whom I am informed is since killed.—I heard so.

King's Counsel. Was not the Prisoner at the Bar at Carlisle when the Duke was before the Town?

Mac Cormack. Yes, I am sure he was, and commanded as an Officer; he had a white Cockade in his Hat, an Highland Plaid Sash, lined with white Silk, and all Military Accoutrements that Officers have.

King's Counsel. Then you are certain as to his Person?

Mac Cormack. I am certain this is the Gentleman, for he mounted the very first Captain's Guard that was mounted at Carlisle. I saw him at the Surrender, and he was carried into the Church, and made Prisoner with the rest of the Officers.

Serj. Wynne. Are you sure he is the very Man?

Mac Cormack. I am very sure of it, tho' he has been long out of my Sight.

L. C. J. Consider you are upon your Oath, and what you say affects his Life.

Mac Cormack. I am sure he is the very same, I know his Person perfectly well.

Serj. Wynne. How can you be so positive to him, did you ever see him before you came to Manchester?—Mac Cormack. Not to my Knowledge.

Serj. Wynne. Where did you come from, what Countryman are you?

Mac Cormack. I am an Irishman, I came from Ireland.

Serj. Wynne. What brought you to Manchester?

Mac Cormack. I am a Weaver by Trade, and I came to Manchester last May was Twelvemonth to seek for Business, and I continued there, and worked till the 30th of June; then Business falling short, I went into Warwickshire, and worked as a Haymaker for my Living.

Cross-Examination.

Prisoner's Counsel. It is a little extraordinary, that you should take such particular Notice of the Prisoner; was you in the Rebel Army; was he your Commander?

Mac Cormack. No, he was not; *Capt. * Peter Moss* was my Commander.

Serj. Wynne. Had you any Command in the Rebel Army, was you either a Captain, or a Lieutenant?

Mac Cormack. I had no Command at all.

Counsel. How came you hither to give your Evidence?

Mac Cormack. I was taken into Custody by Mr. Carrington, one of the King's Messengers, at West-Chester, and I did not know I was to come to London to be an Evidence.

Counsel. Have you had any Promise of a Pardon?

Mac Cormack. I have not, nor never had to my Knowledge.

Sir John Strange. Pray call Samuel Maddox, who appeared, and was sworn.

King's Counsel. Mr. Maddox, do you know Mr. Fletcher, the Prisoner at the Bar?

Maddox. I know him very well; and in the Month of last November, but I cannot particularly remember the Day, I saw him at the Dog-Inn in Manchester, where there were several Persons assembled, and his Name was put down as an Officer in a new-raised Regiment, called the Manchester Regiment; he marched as a Captain from Manchester to Winslow, and from thence on to Macclesfield, where the said Regiment was drawn up in the Church-yard; and all the Soldiers who were unarmed had Arms delivered unto them; the Prisoner, Mr. Fletcher, had there a Sword by his Side, and appeared in his Regimentals, as Captain, with a white Cockade, and a Plaid Sash.

The Rebels at Macclesfield were in general in Confusion for want of Men, and very much dreaded the King's Forces. I was determined to return to Manchester, and communicated my Thoughts and Intentions to several of my Comrades; the Prisoner, Mr. Fletcher, heard of my Resolution at a Place called Blacketsey, and then he came to me, and told me it would be a scandalous Thing to make a dishonourable Retreat; and putting his Hand in his Pocket pulled out a great Parcel of Gold, and told me I should never want while that lasted. I marched with him to Derby, and back to Carlisle afterwards.

Cross-Examination.

Prisoner's Counsel. How came you to be at the Black-Dog at Manchester?

Maddox. I went there accidentally; I was with the Regiment three Days before it marched, and I was never sober all the Time.

Prisoner's Counsel. What, not sober all the Time?

Maddox. I mean not all the Time I was at Manchester.

Prisoner's Counsel. Where did you see the Prisoner besides at Manchester?

Maddox. I saw him at Penrith, and I saw him at Carlisle, with other Officers, and with the Pretender's Son; at both which Places he acted in the Capacity of a Captain: And when Carlisle was surrendered, he went into the Church with other Officers.

Prisoner's Counsel. Have you had no Promise of a Pardon?

Maddox. I have had none; I told you so, Sir, several times before.

Prisoner's Counsel. What, did none of your Friends advise you, or persuade you to do what you have done?

Maddox. I cannot say, but one of my Relations persuaded me to do what I could to save my own Life.

Prisoner's Counsel. Could not Mr. Fletcher have escaped to save his Life, if he would?

Maddox. I cannot tell but what he might; for Capt. Bradshaw got away, but he soon joined the Army again.

Prisoner's Counsel. Pray what Character does the Prisoner bear at Manchester?

Maddox. I do not know much of his general Character; I have seen him at the Assembly with the Ladies: He was a Chapman, and dealt in Linnen before this Affair.

King's Counsel. Pray call Thomas Bradbury, who appeared and was sworn.

King's Counsel. Mr. Bradbury, pray what do you know, or what have you to say against the Prisoner at the Bar?

Bradbury. I lived at Manchester when the Rebels were in that Town; and one Morning when a Serjeant and Drum were beating up for Volunteers at the Exchange for the Pretender's Manchester Regiment, I happened to be there, where I believe there were more than 1000 People assembled: And when the Serjeant had done his Speech, and concluded with saying God bless King James and Prince Charles! the Prisoner pulled off his Hat and hallooed.

Cross-Examination.

Prisoner's Counsel. As you live at Manchester, pray what Character does the Prisoner bear at that Town?

Bradbury. A good Character for aught I know, for I only came here to speak the Truth.

King's Counsel. Pray call Austin Coleman, who being sworn, was asked if he had ever seen the Prisoner act as an Officer?

Coleman. Yes, I have seen him act as a Captain at Preston, Penrith, and at Carlisle, when it was surrendered to the Duke of Cumberland.

Prisoner's Counsel. What Countryman are you?

Coleman. I am an Irishman, and I came to Manchester about twelve Months ago.

Thomas Craig was then called by the King's Counsel, and being sworn, was asked what he knew of the Prisoner?

Craig. I saw him march from Manchester; I saw the Colours of the Manchester Regiment flying, and the Drums beating; and I saw him act on the March as Captain, and I saw him surrender at Carlisle to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland's Troops.

King's Counsel. Pray call Capt. Nevet, who appeared and was sworn.

King's Counsel. Pray, Sir, give the Court and the Jury an Account of what you know of the Prisoner at the Bar.

Capt. Nevet. I was at Carlisle when the Rebels surrendered the Town to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland. When the Officers of the Garrison surrendered themselves Prisoners, and were in Custody, I had a particular Order from his Royal Highness to go to the Place of their Confinement, to take the Names, Ranks, and Qualities of all those that were there. When I called on the Prisoner at the Bar, he told me he was a Captain; and when I had taken the Names of all the rest, and what Commissions they had under the Pretender's Son, I went and made a Report that Evening to the Duke, and his Royal Highness commanded me the next Day to go to the same Place; and I called over their Names, and he answered by the Name of Captain Fletcher.

The Prisoner's Defence.

Prisoner's Counsel. Call Anne Aston, who was sworn. Do you know the Prisoner?

Aston. Yes, Sir, I have known him ever since he was born, for I have lived in the Family 27 Years; he managed the Trade for his Mother at Salford, just over the Bridge at Manchester, and he had a very good Share of Business for a Young Man. The Rebels came the 29th of November to Manchester, and we had a great many of them quartered upon us; Mr. Fletcher's Mother was very uneasy at the Sight of them; and went away, because she could not bear to see them eat and drink, and make free with every Thing in the House. They tarried at Manchester three Days, and upon the 8th of December, they returned again to Manchester, and Capt. Robinson, who commanded the Soldiers who were at our House before, came a second Time, and asked for our Master; he went out; and there were half a Dozen of Soldiers at the Door, and swore they would have him; and I never saw him after. I do not know he ever did a bad Thing in his Life; he always behaved well and dutiful to King George, and all the Royal Family. I never saw the least Willingness in him to join with the Pretender; all the Family were of the Church of England, and when they dragged him away, he went away with Tears in his Eyes.

She was Cross-Examined by Sir John Strange; and prevaricated so much in her Answers in most Questions that were asked of her, that no Credit was given to her Evidence.

Charles Worral was produced and sworn, who said, he knew the Prisoner an Apprentice, and had sold him Goods, and that the Prisoner paid him honestly; but as to his Principles, he knew nothing of them.

Then John Hayward† was called and sworn, and being asked what Business he followed, he said, he was a Dealer in Leather.

Prisoner's Counsel. What do you know of the Prisoner?

Witness. I cannot say that I know much of his Notions one way or other.

Prisoner's Counsel. I think, Sir, you live at Manchester?

Witness. Yes, I do, Sir.

Prisoner's Counsel. Then pray inform the Court and the Gentlemen of the Jury, so far as you know, what past at Manchester relating to the Prisoner, during the Time the Rebels were there.

Witness. I cannot say any Thing particularly.

* Peter Moss escaped out of Newgate the Night before the Rebel Prisoners were removed by Habeas Corpus, and hath not been heard of since.—Died in France.

† This is the same Person that was Evidence the Day before for Colonel Townley.

Prisoner's Counsel. Pray do you know that at the Time the Pretender's Party were beating up for Volunteers, at the Exchange in Manchester, the Prisoner was present, and took off his Hat and hallooed?

Witness. I was not out of doors at that Time; I had a Relation lay dead in my House at the same time.

The Prisoner's Counsel not having any thing more to say in his Defence, and the Testimony of Mrs. Ann Acton having very little Weight with the Court and Jury, after my Lord Chief Justice had summed up the Evidence, the Jury, without going out of Court, found the Prisoner, Guilty.

N. B. The Prisoner desired his Fetters might be taken off whilst he was on his Trial, which the Court granted; but after his Conviction, the Court gave the Gaoler Direction to iron him again, and take an especial Care of his Prisoner, for that he was convicted of High-Treason.

This Prisoner was executed the same Day, viz. the 30th of July 1746, in the same Manner as Townley, and his Head with Townley's was put up on Temple-Bar, on Saturday the 2d of August, the Saturday following their Execution.

He was about 28 Years of Age, and was bred up in Salford, adjoining to Manchester, where his Parents lived, who were very substantial People. His Father had been some time dead, but his Mother was then living, whose Business he managed. He was reckoned before he took on in the Rebel Army, to be a young Man of a good Character; but being unhappily prejudiced against the present Royal Family, he was very ready to join the Pretender's Forces as soon as they came to Manchester; and he gave Murray, the Pretender's Secretary, 50*l.* for his Captain's Commission.

There is one Thing pretty singular in the Story of Mr. Fletcher, which must not be omitted, because it shewed the Heartiness of the Man in the Cause he endeavoured to support. At his Trial, Mr. Maddox, who was a principal Evidence against him, swore, that when the Rebels were at Manchester, they were in great Confusion for want of Men, and mightily disheartened at the Approach of the King's Forces; upon which he (Maddox) determined to leave them, and return to Manchester; and communicated such his Intention to several of his Comrades; which being told to Fletcher, he came to Maddox, and expostulated with him about it; telling him, what a Scandal it would reflect upon him to leave his Friends at a Juncture, when they had the greatest Occasion for his Assistance; that if he wanted Money, he need but speak, and he should have whatever he had Occasion for; and at the same time putting his Hand in his Pocket, shewed him a Handful of Gold.

Fletcher's Behaviour during the Time of his Confinement in Newgate, was, as the rest of his Fellow Rebel Prisoners, very cheerful; and he continued so during the time he was under Sentence of Death, even from the Gaol to the Place of Execution, and was the same to the last. He was a young Man of very good Parts, and very often acknowledged, that he had brought this Misfortune upon himself by his Obstinacy; for that his Mother had begged and intreated of him, even on her Knees, that he would keep himself out of the Rebellion; and when no Persuasions could prevail upon him, she offered him a thousand Pounds to do with as he pleased, if he would hearken to her Advice: But all to no Purpose; and therefore that he had Nobody to thank but himself for the Consequences that had happened.

At the Place of Execution he delivered Papers to the Populace, as the rest of them did, the Contents of which Papers were, that they died in a good Cause; that they did no way relent at what they had done, and doubted not but their Deaths would in time be revenged; and many treasonable and other vile Expressions not fit to be here mentioned.

XXXI. The Trials of THOMAS CHADWICK and WILLIAM BATTRAGH, for High Treason, at the Court-house Southwark, July 16, 1746.

THOMAS CHADWICK and William Battree, otherwise Battro, otherwise Battragh, otherwise Bretab, were both brought to the Bar, and both agreed in their Challenges of the Jury; but before Mr. Chadwick was tried, he desired his Irons might be taken off, which was done directly; and after having challenged thirteen Jurymen, the Twelve following Gentlemen were sworn to try them.

- 1 Francis Bartholomew of Egham, Gent.
- 2 Thomas Dawson of St. George's, Brazier.
- 3 William Shurlock of Sher, Yeoman.
- 4 Richard Toy of Richmond, Grocer.
- 5 John Fielder of Essex, Yeoman.
- 6 James Vinal of Essex, Wheelwright.
- 7 John Otway of Ashed, Yeoman.
- 8 Thomas Puplett of Banstead, Yeoman.
- 9 John Start of Epsom, Chandler.
- 10 George Hart of Croydon, Callico-printer.
- 11 William Bridgestock of Croydon, Farmer.
- 12 John Rowles of Croydon, Wheelwright.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Samuel Maddox; who appearing in Court, was sworn.

King's Counsel. Mr. Maddox, Pray relate to my Lord and the Gentlemen of the Jury, what you know concerning the Prisoners at the Bar, or either of them.

Maddox. (looking on the Prisoners at the Bar) I know both of them; Mr. Chadwick was a Lieutenant, and Mr. Battragh served as an Ensign in the Manchester Regiment in the Rebel Army.

King's Counsel. Pray how did Mr. Chadwick appear; did he appear as an Officer?

Maddox. Chadwick wore a laced Hat, with a white Cockade in it, and I saw both of them march from Manchester; and when they marched, Mr. Battragh had on a Scotch Plaid Sash, lined with a white Ribband; I was with them when they marched from Manchester to Winslow; there were a great many Men lifted as we went on the Road.

King's Counsel. Can you take upon you to say that either of the Prisoners at the Bar enlisted any?

Maddox. I cannot be positive to that; but there were a great many Men enlisted by Captain Deacon upon our March from Manchester. Both the Prisoners appeared on Horseback as Officers; and I myself carried the Colours out of Manchester. And as we were upon the Road on our March, I saw the Prisoner, Battragh, carry the Colours once or twice, whereon was the Motto, LIBERTY AND PROPERTY, CHURCH AND KING.

King's Counsel. Did any thing remarkable happen at Winslow, relating to the Prisoners? did they act as Officers?

Maddox. I know nothing at all particular there.

King's Counsel. What Rout did you take when you left Winslow?

Maddox. We marched on for Derby.

King's Counsel. Did the Prisoners all along appear as Officers, and act as such?

Maddox. Yes, they did, Chadwick as a Lieutenant, and Battragh as an Ensign: I saw them at Penrith, and at Preston; Battragh belonged to Captain James Dawson's Company, but I do not know what Company the other Prisoner belonged to; and I saw both of them reviewed by the Young Pretender.

King's Counsel. And what further happened? Tell my Lord and the Gentlemen of the Jury every thing you know relating to this Matter.

Maddox. I cannot say any thing more that is very material, only that from Manchester all the Way they acted as Officers.

King's Counsel. Do you remember any thing that was remarkable when you came to Lancaster?

Maddox. I remember that all the Officers were very merry there, and Mr. Chadwick proposed to entertain them with a Tune; and myself, and most of the Rebel Officers went into Lancaster Church, and went up into the Organ Gallery, and Mr. Chadwick played a Tune on the Organ.

King's Counsel. What Tune did he play?—Maddox. He played The King shall enjoy his Own again; and we were all very merry.

King's Counsel. Pray inform the Court, if you saw any of the Prisoners at Carlisle.

Maddox. Yes, I saw both the Prisoners at Carlisle, in the Room with the Young Pretender.

King's Counsel. How came they in particular to be in the Room with the Young Pretender?—Maddox. We were all drawn up together to take Leave of him, before he left Carlisle.

King's Counsel. Was the Town of Carlisle put in a Posture of Defence against the King's Forces?

Maddox. Yes; we opposed his Majesty's Forces, and I saw both the Prisoners mount Guard in the Town Hall, where a Guard was placed a Day or two after the Pretender left the Town.

King's Counsel. Was you present when the Town was surrendered to his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland?

Maddox. I was; and both the Prisoners were put into the Ailes of the Church, amongst the other Rebel Officers.

Cross-Examination.

Prisoner's Counsel. How long have you known Battragh, or Battro, as they call him?

Maddox. I have known him two Years and upwards, he was an Attorney's Clerk, and came and persuaded me to join with the Young Pretender's Army, before I had an Inclination so to do: This we talked of privately in his Bed-chamber; he told me he had new Linnen made on purpose, and was going to the Sadler's to bespeak Bags to carry his Linnen and other Things in.

Prisoner's Counsel. Had not you and the Prisoner a Quarrel at Carlisle? I think you had a Trial of Skill there.

Maddox. That I confess, and I will tell you what it was about; it was about a very foolish Affair.—Provisions being a little scarce at Carlisle, I had some Sausages, and the Prisoner would have them from me, and I not caring to part from them, caused a Quarrel, and we fought together.

Prisoner's Counsel. Did not you tell him you would do for him, or bereaved on him, or some Words to that Purpose?

Maddox. No, never as I remember; I would not swear any Man's Life away for a Sausage.

Prisoner's Counsel. Do not you swear in expectation of saving your Life?

Mr. Att. Gen. It is not a proper Question;—that has been answered already.

Sir J. Strange. Do you expect to save your Life by false Swearing?

Maddox. No, I do not indeed; I will swear nothing but the Truth; and what I have sworn in this honourable Court, is all Matter of Fact.

King's Counsel. Pray call Thomas Craig; who appeared, and was sworn.

King's Counsel. Well, Sir, what have you to say to either of the Prisoners that stand by you?

Craig. I know Mr. Chadwick very well; but I cannot say that I have so much Knowledge of Battragh. I remember seeing Mr. Chadwick at Manchester, with a Cockade in his Hat: Then I afterwards saw him march from Manchester to Winslow, as a Lieutenant: I saw him at several other Places on the Road, and also at Penrith, where he still appeared as a Lieutenant.

King's Counsel. Then you are sure he was a Lieutenant in the Rebel Army?

Craig. Yes; he marched from Manchester to Penrith Moor as such, then I saw him at Carlisle, and there he mounted Guard as a Lieutenant. I am sure that I saw him once mount Guard.

Cross-Examination.

Prisoner's Counsel. Do not you expect to have a free Pardon?

Craig. As to that I must trust to his Majesty's Mercy.

Prisoner's Counsel. How came you to know Mr. Chadwick so well; do you know him so very well that you can be positive to him?—Craig. I have known him many Years, and I belonged to the Manchester Regiment.

King's Counsel. Call Austin Coleman; who was produced, and sworn.

King's Counsel. Give an Account, Mr. Coleman, to my Lords and the Jury, what you know of the Prisoners at the Bar.

(Coleman being sworn, and looking on them, and then pointing to Battragh.)

T nat

That Gentleman's Name is Battragh, and I have seen him at Derby; and the other is Chadwick, and him I have seen at Manchester; there he appeared as an Officer with a Plaid Sash, and a laced Hat, with a white Cockade in it: I did not see Battragh have any. They both appeared as Officers in marching along; they were sometimes on Foot, and sometimes on Horseback.

King's Counsel. Do you know any thing of their being at Carlisle?

Coleman. I saw them both in the Guard-Room with Capt. Fletcher.

King's Counsel. Did they wear their Sashes there, as other Officers did?

Coleman. I cannot remember that; but when the Town was surrendered to the Duke of Cumberland, they were put into the Church with other Rebel Officers.---I am sure of that.

(Ormsby Mac Cormack was next produced and sworn.)

King's Counsel. Do you know either of the Prisoners?

Mac Cormack. Yes, I have seen both of them in the Manchester Regiment; I saw Battragh with the Rebel Army, and he carried the Colours from Penrith to Carlisle.

King's Counsel. And did you see him at Carlisle?

Mac Cormack. Yes, I saw him there when the Town was besieged by the Duke of Cumberland.

King's Counsel. Did he ever mount Guard at Carlisle?

Mac Cormack. Not to my Knowledge; but I have seen him in the Guard-Room, with a Sword, a Sash, and a Cockade.

King's Counsel. And you always took him to be an Officer there, did you not?

Mac Cormack. Yes, for I very well remember that he was walking up and down the Castle Yard, as an Officer, when the Arms were distributing to the Rebel Soldiers there, and Mr. Chadwick was with them.

(John Collins, a Boy of 13 Years of Age, was called and sworn.)

Prisoner's Counsel. Do you know the Nature of an Oath, Child?

Collins. Yes, I do; I know I am sworn to speak the Truth, and I shall never be happy if I do not.

King's Counsel. Do you know either of the Prisoners? was you among the Rebels at Carlisle?

Collins. Yes, I was, and was a Servant to Capt. Lowther, and we were taken Prisoners by the Duke at Carlisle, where on my Knees I begged my Life of his Royal Highness, which he generously granted, and God bless him for it. I saw both the Prisoners at Carlisle, and there they always acted as Officers in the Manchester Regiment; Chadwick as a Lieutenant, and Battragh as an Ensign: I know them both perfectly well.

King's Counsel. Pray call Captain Nevett, who was sworn.

King's Counsel. I think when Carlisle surrendered to his Royal Highness the Duke, you had a Command from his Royal Highness to go to the Church where the Officers were Prisoners; and to take their Names.

Capt. Nevett. Yes, I had, Sir.

King's Counsel. Do you remember to have seen either of the Prisoners at the Bar at Carlisle?

Capt. Nevett. Perfectly well: The first Time that I saw them, Mr. Chadwick gave in his Name as a Lieutenant in Townley's Manchester Regiment; and the other Prisoner, Battragh, told me he was an Ensign in the same Regiment; I noted it so in my Paper: And on making a Report to his Royal Highness the Duke, and giving in a List of their Names and Qualities, I was ordered to go the next Morning, and I went accordingly, and called all the Prisoners over by their Names, and they answered, Chadwick as a Lieutenant, and Battragh as Ensign.

The King's Witnesses being all gone through, and neither of the Prisoners making any Defence, or calling any Witnesses to their Characters, the Jury, without going out of Court, found both the Prisoners Guilty of High Treason; and the Court ordered the Irons to be put on Mr. Chadwick again.

The Prisoner Chadwick was executed on Kennington-Common, on Wednesday the 30th of July, 1746, according to his Sentence; and his Head was preserved in Spirits, and sent down to Carlisle or Manchester, to be put up as those of Townley and Fletcher's had been on Temple Bar; but his Body was delivered to his Friends to be buried.

He was about 32 Years of Age, of very honest and creditable Parents in Manchester, and whose Father then lived there, and followed the Trade of a Tallow-Chandler and Soap-boiler. This unfortunate Man was bred up to the same Trade; but he playing pretty well on several Instruments, kept some of the most polite Company of the Place, and never followed any Trade.

He was a Person of great Resolution, and could, as he used to say, look Death in the Face with as much Pleasure as he could a Friend who came to visit him, and could meet it with as much Good-will. His Behaviour, during the whole Time of his Confinement, was always cheerful and merry, taking all Manner of Pleasures the Gaols afforded; and frequently declaring, that what he had done he was not sorry for, for if it was to do again, he would act in the same Manner.

The Morning of his Execution, whilst they were at Breakfast, Mr. Chadwick said to Mr. Berwick, Ah! Duke (for this is the Name that Berwick went by in the Rebel Army) our Time draws very near; though as to my Part, I am as hearty as ever I was in my Life. Mr. Berwick replied, As to my Part, I think we all look pretty well, and I declare Death don't shock me in the least. I hope God will be merciful to us all; for I can lay my Hand on my Heart, and say, the greatest Injury I ever did was to myself and Relations; and though I have brought them and myself to Disgrace, they have been so kind as to forgive me, and would have saved my Life had it been in their Power.

The other Prisoner Battragh received his Majesty's most gracious Reprieve.

XXXII. The Trial of THOMAS THEODORUS DEACON, for High Treason, at the Court-house, St. Margaret's-hill Southwark, July 17th, 1746.

THE Court being sat, the following Judges being present, viz. Lord Chief Justice Willes, Mr. Justice Abney, and Mr. Justice Foster, Thomas Deacon was put to the Bar.

King's Counsel. Call Mr. Samuel Maddox; who appeared, and was sworn.

King's Counsel. Mr. Maddox, give an Account to the Court and Jury what you know of the Prisoner that stands by you.

Maddox. I saw him at the Bull Head at Manchester, where he sat at a Table, writing down the Names of such as enlisted in the Pretender's Service; for which he was paid for every Name enlisted, One Shilling. There were several blue and white Ribbands lying before him, which, when he was not writing, he made up into Favours, and gave them to the Men enlisted. I saw him march from Manchester to Winslow as an Officer, wearing a Plaid Waistcoat, with laced Loops, a broad Sword by his Side, a Brace of Pistols stuck in his Girdle, and a Cockade in his Hat. When he beat up for Volunteers at several Places, he made a very long Speech, inviting all Gentlemen Volunteers to come and serve Charles, Prince Regent, and they should have good Quarters, be well used by the Officers, and enter into present Pay, and when they came to London, they should receive five Guineas to bear their Expences Home, if they thought proper to leave the Service, and should receive Thanks, and have a Protection. At Winslow he was ordered by the Pretender to march to Derby as a Guide, with Ammunition, &c. that had been seized; and at Leake he went with Thomas Syddall and James Bradshaw to raise Recruits, and joined the Rebel Army again at Manchester. That at Preston he commanded his Company, and gave Directions to the Officers under him, who obeyed him; and that at Carlisle he mounted Guard in the Town-hall during the Siege.

Thomas Bradbury, another Witness, swore, That the Prisoner was a Captain in the Rebel Army, and was dressed as above. That he, the Witness, being a Servant to a Printer at Manchester, the Prisoner, with other Rebels, came to him, in the Absence of his Master, and compelled him to print a treasonable Paper, which they called a Manifesto, and likewise an Advertisement; both which were delivered into Court and read. The Advertisement, or Hand-bills, were distributed by the Rebels, offering all fitting Encouragement to such as would enlist with them; and that he the said Deacon was in a great Hurry, and came several Times to the Printing-Office, and threatened Mr. Bradbury, if he did not get the Papers ready, he should be severely punished;---and that he the said Deacon brought with him, when he came for the said Papers, a great Number of Horse belonging to the Rebel Army, who threatened to pull down the House.

Thomas Craig, another Witness, swore, That he saw the Prisoner mount Guard at Manchester, Preston, and Carlisle; that he was Lieutenant-Colonel, and promoted for his great Diligence, in raising Recruits.---Capt. Nevett swore, that the Prisoner said, his Name was Thomas Deacon, and that he was a Captain in the Manchester Regiment.---Capt. Carey confirmed Capt. Nevett's Testimony.

The Prisoner had no Witnesses to produce, so the Jury found him guilty of the Indictment. Death.

Mr. DEACON'S CASE, July 17, 1746 *.

IN Mr. Deacon's Case, his Counsel objected to the receiving the Evidence of a Printer touching the Prisoner's obliging him to print the Pretender's Manifesto at Manchester, and his publishing of it there, while the Rebel Army was in the Town; and also to the reading the Manifesto. They insisted that this ought not to be given in Evidence, because it is an Overt Act not laid in the Indictment; and also because the Orders were given and the Manifesto printed and published in Manchester, and all the Overt Acts are laid in Cumberland.

But it was answered by the Court (Lord Chief Justice Willes, Justice Abney, and Justice Foster), that an Overt Act not laid may be given in Evidence, if it be a direct Proof of any of the Overt Acts that are laid.

One of the Overt Acts charged in this Indictment is the assembling and marching Modo Guerino, in order to depose the King, and to set the Pretender on the Throne. It is proved that the Prisoner with the rest of the Rebel Army was at Manchester, and appeared in an hostile Manner there. Now what stronger Proof can there be that the Prisoner joined this Army for the Purpose mentioned in the Indictment, than his causing to be printed and dispersed among the People the Pretender's Manifesto? It never was doubted that the being present with Rebels and joining in proclaiming the Pretender, might be given in Evidence on such an Indictment as this; and yet that Circumstance was never expressly laid in any Indictment. But 'tis sufficient that it proves Quo Animo the Rebel Army was raised, and Quo Animo the Prisoner joined it.

As to the Objection that this Fact was not committed in Cumberland, where all the Overt Acts are laid, Mr. Justice Abney and Mr. Justice Foster held, that it is indeed necessary on this Indictment that some Overt Act laid be proved on the Prisoner in Cumberland; but that being done, Acts of Treason tending to prove the Overt Acts laid, though done in a foreign County, may be given in Evidence.

And the Manifesto was read.

Lord Chief Justice Willes declined giving any Opinion on the second Point. But no Objection was made during the whole Course of the Trials to the giving Evidence of Overt Acts in a County different from that where the Fact was laid, an Overt Act having been first proved in the proper County. And that sort of Evidence was given in almost all the Trials †.

This unfortunate young Man, who was about twenty-two Years of Age, was the Son of Dr. Deacon of Manchester, who gave him a liberal Education, and designed to have brought him up to his own Profession; but he was unhappily prejudiced in Favour of the Pretender against the present Royal Family, by the Company he frequently conversed with; and by their Persuasion, took on in the Rebel Army as soon as it came into Manchester, and he had often declared before the Rebels came to the Town, that he would join them as soon as they did; and was one of the most strenuous Zealots for the Cause amongst them.

It was very unfortunate for his Family his taking a Commission in the Pretender's Service, for by his Example his two other Brothers did the same, one of whom died in the Pretender's Service, and Charles the Younger was condemned, but reprieved on account of his Youth.

His great Activity in the Service made him so far taken Notice of by the Young Pretender, that he was made Lieutenant-Colonel of the Regiment, and was to have been Colonel of the same, as soon as Colonel Townley had raised his new Regiment of Horse.

His taking Leave of his Brother, Charles Deacon, in the County Gaol, was very moving; his Brother declaring he had rather have suffered with him, than to survive him; and that was the only Time any particular Alteration could be discerned in him, and then he was in great Agonies, and wept.

He was executed with Townley and the rest, on Kennington-Common, on Wednesday the 30th of July 1746, in the same Manner as Townley. His Body was delivered to his Friends to be buried, and his Head was preserved in Spirits, and sent down to Carlisle, or Manchester, to be put on one of the Gates.

XXXIII. The Trial of JOHN BERWICK, for High-Treason, at St. Margaret's-Hill, Southwark, July 17, 1746.

JOHN BERWICK was then brought to the Bar, and being arraigned on the same Indictment with the other Manchester Officers, the Jury were sworn to try him. The Treason, and Overt Acts of Treason, were laid to be committed on the 10th of November.

The first Witness for the King that was called and sworn, was Samuel Maddox; and he deposed, That he had often seen the Prisoner, particularly at Manchester, and other Places, and that he always appeared as an Officer, and gave his Command; he saw him at Carlisle; and that he was there when the Town surrendered.---Mr. Bowker, the Manchester Constable, said, That he saw him in the Town, and that he appeared in the same Garb as the other Officers belonging to the Regiment which they called the Manchester Regiment.

The Counsel for the Prisoner insisted, that the Charge was not proved, for that in all Cases of High-Treason, there must be two positive Witnesses to prove the Fact, and, as they apprehended, that was not done sufficiently by the two Witnesses that had been examined; on which the King's Counsel called Capt. Nevil and Capt. Carey, who both appearing, and being sworn, deposed, That when they went into Carlisle by the Duke's Order, to take an Account of what Rank all the Officers were, the Prisoner gave in his Name to them as a Lieutenant in the Manchester Regiment.

The Prisoner calling no Witnesses, the Jury found him Guilty.

JOHN BERWICK'S Case, July 17, 1746 †.

IN the Case of John Berwick, there was only one Witness that proved him to have been in Arms with the Rebels. This Witness proved that he was inrolled and reviewed as a Lieutenant in the Regiment called the Manchester Regiment, and did Duty as such at Penrith and Carlisle.

Two other Witnesses (Officers in the Duke's Army) swore, that after the Surrender of Carlisle, they were ordered by the Duke to take an Account of the Names of the Officers and of their respective Ranks in the Rebel Garrison; that accordingly they went to the Prison where the Officers were confined apart from the Common Men, and took such Account of them; that the Prisoner Berwick appeared among the Officers, and gave in his Name to them as Lieutenant in the Manchester Regiment.

Lord Chief Justice Willes and Mr. Justice Abney were of Opinion, that this Declaration of the Prisoner is not to be considered as a bare Confession after the Fact, but as an Evidence of the Fact itself, viz. That the Prisoner did appear and take the Rank of a Lieutenant in the Rebel Garrison. They thought too, that a Confession after the Fact proved by two Witnesses, was sufficient to convict within the 7 W. III.

Mr. Justice Foster doubted whether this Declaration, being made after the Surrender, can be considered in any other Light than as a Confession after the Fact §. And with regard to a Confession after the Fact, he said he never doubted whether it might be given in Evidence as a corroborating Proof. His Doubt was, whether it being proved by two Witnesses is a conclusive Evidence, nor an Evidence sufficient of itself to convict without other Proof. Since the 7 W. III. seems to require two Witnesses to Overt Acts, or a Confession in open Court ||; and says further, page 243. I would not in any thing I have said, be understood to arraign the Proceeding in the Case of Berwick, before-mentioned; he was found in a Prison assigned by the Duke (of Cumberland), after the Surrender, to the Officers in the Rebel Garrison, and to none but Officers, whither he went with the rest of them. He appeared among them, and took the Rank of an Officer. These Facts, together with his Declaration, all proved by two Witnesses, were, I think, properly considered by two learned Judges, not as a bare Confession after the Fact, but as an Evidence upon the Spot, and in the very Scene of Action.---See more relating to Confessions in Foster's Reports, Page 241, 242, 243, 244.

Berwick was convicted upon the Evidence of the Officers and of the other Witnesses.

This Prisoner was about 32 Years of Age, and was a Housekeeper in Manchester, and a considerable Dealer in chequ'd Linnen, where he kept a Shop, and had a good Trade; but not being so diligent as young Traders should be, and loving his Pleasure too well, 'tis thought he was running behind-hand in the World; and that not being able to settle his Accounts with his Creditors, was the principal Reason that induced him to take on with the Rebels.

The Commission he bore was a Lieutenantancy in the Manchester Regiment, given him by the Pretender; to whom he had been well recommended as a Man of undaunted Courage and Resolution, firm to his Party, staunch in his Principles, and of a bold, enterprising Disposition, of which he discovered manifest Tokens on every Opportunity that offered.

He was executed also on Kennington-Common, with Townley and the rest, according to the Sentence, on Wednesday the 30th of July, 1746, and his Head was put into Spirits, and sent to Manchester or Carlisle, to be put up in one of those Places; his Body being delivered to his Friends to be buried.

XXXIV. The Trial of DAVID MORGAN, of Monmouth, but late of Derby, Esq. for High-Treason, at St. Margaret's-Hill, Southwark, July 18, 1746.

The Names of the Jury.

James Glover,	Ralph Godfrey,	Thomas Symonds,
Joseph Brookes,	William Barnard,	John Jeffries,
John Mason,	John Voice,	Henry Rowd,
Joakin Faulk,	Thomas Clement,	John Clement.

THE King's Counsel opened the Indictment (which was the same as against all the rest), and proceeded, and called the following Witnesses to support the same against the Prisoner.

Solicitor General. Call Edward Tew (which was done accordingly) who appeared in Court, and was sworn.---Pray, Mr. Tew, inform my Lord and the Jury what you know relating to the Prisoner at the Bar.

Tew. I live at Preston next Door to the Sign of the Joyner's Arms, and when the Rebel Army was there, I assisted my Neighbour to wait on some Company that were at that House, most of whom were Officers belonging to the Rebels.

King's Counsel. Can you recollect ever having seen the Prisoner there? Tew. I remember him very well, for I waited on him at Dinner, when Lord Elcho and he dined there together.

King's Counsel. Do you remember any Discourse that passed?

Tew. The Prisoner asked Lord Elcho what Number of Men the Young Pretender [which the Prisoner called Prince] had landed with him.

King's Counsel. And what Answer did he make?

Tew. He said, not above half a dozen; but the Number soon increased when the Clans heard he was landed; and also that they had 17 Pieces of Cannon.

King's Counsel. And what further Discourse passed between them?

Tew. The Prisoner asked Lord Elcho what Religion the Pretender professed?

King's Counsel. And what was the Reply?

Tew. My Lord Elcho shook his Head, and said he could not very well tell; but he believed his Religion was to seek.

King's Counsel. And what passed then?

* The like Evidence was given in most of the Trials after the Rebellion of 1715, and admitted by the Judges upon the Commission in the North this Summer. See the Cases of Laver and Sir William Perkins in the State Trials.

† J. Foster's Reports, p. 9.

‡ Foster, p. 10.

§ Upon further Consideration I doubt there was too much Refinement in this Distinction. See 1. Disc. c. 3. S. 8. Foster, page 232.

|| The like Evidence was held sufficient upon the Commission in the North this Summer; upon the Authority of the Judges Opinions previous to the Trials of Gros and Francia. See Foster's Discourse on High-Treason, Chap. 3. S. 8.

Tew. The Prisoner asked if they had ever beat up for Volunteers in England, and Lord Elcho said they had not; and the Prisoner advised him to beat up for Volunteers, and said it would be an easy Matter to march forwards for London, for that there was not above 3000 Soldiers between there and London, and most of them were Dragoons, besides a few undisciplined Troops that were raised by Lord Gower and Lord Cholmondeley, who would make but little Opposition.

King's Counsel. Well, Sir, go on.

Tew. I know nothing more that is particular that passed at that Time; but the next Morning the Prisoner came, and asked for Lord Elcho.

King's Counsel. What Appearance did he make then?

Tew. He was in a white Cockade, and a Sword by his Side; and I saw him several Times walking up and down the Town with the Rebel Officers.

King's Counsel. Did you see the Young Pretender?

Tew. He marched at the Head of the Regiment, and did not lodge (as I have heard) but two or three Doors from the House where the Prisoner at the Bar lodged.

King's Counsel. What Number of People do you think the Young Pretender's Army consisted of?

Tew. The Talk in Town was, that they were 6000 strong: There was a great many, but as to the Number I cannot be positive.

King's Counsel. Do you imagine he was forced into the Rebels Service?

Tew. He was under no Force that I saw, for he appeared all along to be one of the Heads of them, and all of them seemed to have a great Regard to what he proposed, particularly about the Proposal he made for beating up for Volunteers.

King's Counsel. Will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Prisoner to Tew. I desire, Sir, that you would give the Court an Account how you came to know that my Name is Morgan.

Tew. I cannot say now that your Name is Morgan, but I am very positive to your Person.---I know your Face very well, and if I was not well assured that you are the very same Man, I would not swear it.

King's Counsel. Was the Young Pretender at that House?

Tew. I do not know; but they said that he lodged a few Doors farther.

JOHN BARRY sworn.

King's Counsel. John Barry, I desire you would inform the Court and Jury what you know relating to Mr. Morgan, the Prisoner at the Bar.

Barry. I came out of Monmouthshire with my Master and the Prisoner at the Bar, in the Month of November last, and at the Town of Preston we joined the Rebel Army. About a Mile on this Side of Preston, my Master and the Prisoner left their Horses, and walked to Preston on Foot to avoid any Suspicion of what their Design was.

King's Counsel. And what Part did the Prisoner at the Bar act; and how did he behave during the Time you was with the Rebel Army?

Barry. I saw him ride with the Rebel Army, from Preston to Manchester, and he was very active in encouraging the Rebel Officers and Soldiers. After that I saw the Prisoner at Ashborn, and he said there that he would not leave the Army as long as he lived.---I cannot say that he bore any Commission as an Officer: If he did, it is more than I know.

BENJAMIN BOWKER called and sworn.

King's Counsel. Mr. Bowker, acquaint my Lord and the Gentlemen of the Jury, what you know of Mr. Morgan the Prisoner.

Bowker. Upon the 29th of last November, I had this Paper delivered to me (holding a Paper in his Hand, and looking at it). It is a Paper ordering me to search for Arms.

King's Counsel. What are you, Sir?

Bowker. I am a Deputy-Constable of Manchester.

King's Counsel. Who gave you that Paper?

Bowker. The Prisoner at the Bar and Mr. Wallis, who was one of the Head-Constables.

King's Counsel. Then the Prisoner was with Mr. Wallis, when you had that Paper delivered to you?

Bowker. Yes, he was.

King's Counsel. What were the Contents of the Paper?

Bowker. It was a Warrant signed by Murray the Pretender's Secretary, to search for all the Arms I could find; and if any Body refused to deliver up and surrender their Arms, they were to suffer military Execution against their Goods and Effects.

[Then this Paper was delivered by Mr. Bowker to the Clerk of the Arraigns, and was read in Court; but it is so very treasonable, that it is improper to insert it. The Preamble called the Pretender's Son Regent of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and required all whom it may concern, to pay due Obedience to that Order.]

King's Counsel. What, did you get any Arms of the Town's People at Manchester?

Bowker. I did, and carried them to the Prisoner's Lodgings, and left them there, though I did not see him, but I asked for Esquire Morgan; and one of the Servants belonging to the House told me he would be there presently.

King's Counsel. Do you know any thing farther?

Bowker. I do not: I have spoke all that I can recollect.

King's Counsel. Call Samuel Maddox next, and swear him.

SAMUEL MADDOX sworn.

King's Counsel. Mr. Maddox, inform the Court where you first saw the Prisoner at the Bar.

Maddox. I saw Mr. Morgan, the Prisoner at the Bar, at Manchester, when he was joined with the Rebel Army; he had a white Cockade in his Hat, and a Sword by his Side, and publicly declared that he was of the Pretender's Party.

King's Counsel. Did he march away from Manchester with the Rebels?

Maddox. He marched with them to Derby; and there being an Information given that some Arms were secreted from the Rebels, he gave Orders for a Party of the Rebel Army to go and search for them.

King's Counsel. Did he go with that Party?

Maddox. Not to my Knowledge. I saw Capt. James Dawson* deliver him a Pair of Pistols.

King's Counsel. Whilst the Rebels were at Manchester, was not there some Talk of the Prisoner's being made Colonel of the Manchester Regiment, as it was called?

Maddox. I was in the Room at Mr. Cookson's, at the Dog at Manchester, when the Proposal was made for the Prisoner to be Colonel of the Regiment; but he refused it, and said, Mr. Townley was much fitter than he for such an Office; and then it was agreed amongst those that were present, that Mr. Townley should be Colonel; and he was declared so, and had the Pretender's Son's Commission.

King's Counsel. You say you saw him march from Manchester to Derby?

Maddox. Yes, I did; he marched as a Gentleman Volunteer, and was very active, and did all in his Power to promote the Interest of the Rebels.

(Mr. Maddox was cross-examined by the Prisoner.)

Prisoner. You talk so very exactly, I desire to know if you ever made any Memorandums of what passed?

Maddox. I did, but I have not got those Memorandums, for I delivered them to that Gentleman (pointing to the Solicitor of the Treasury's Clerk).

Prisoner. Are you sure they have never been altered?

Maddox. I am very sure they never were by my Direction; since they have been out of my Custody I have never seen them. I have made no use of them to refresh my Memory, for I can remember the Particulars very well without them.

King's Counsel. Call Captain Vere, and swear him. (Which being done, he stood up.)---Pray, Captain, inform us what you know of the Prisoner.

Vere. On the 3d of November I saw the Prisoner at Sir Peter Davenport's at Macclesfield, with several of the Rebel Officers; and I have seen him at several other Places march with the Pretender's People. I knew him very well, for he abused me, and called me a great Scoundrel, because he said I had prevented a Gentleman from getting a Commission under Sir Daniel O'Carroll.

King's Counsel. Are you positive the Prisoner is the same Person you saw at Macclesfield, and in the Pretender's Army?

Vere. I am sure he is the very same; I saw him at several Places, particularly I remember to have seen him about a Mile out of Derby, riding with the Pretender on a bay Horse.

King's Counsel. When was you at Macclesfield?

Vere. I saw him there on the 3d of November, and on the 5th I saw him at Derby; and I am sure he is the very same Man, because I know him very well.

Mr. How called and sworn.

King's Counsel. Mr. How, do you know Mr. Morgan?

How. Yes, I know him very well: This Gentleman (pointing to the Prisoner) who stands by me, is Mr. Morgan.

King's Counsel. What do you know of him?

How. He lodged at my House, and was accounted a principal Man amongst the Rebels, and they called him the Pretender's Counsellor.

King's Counsel. How do you know that he was a principal Man?

How. Because he seemed more active than any of them. He paid me the Reckonings when he used to dine with the Rebel Officers. He paid me a Guinea and three Shillings, and gave all Directions about every thing.

King's Counsel. Had you any Discourse with him?

How. Yes, I had; when the Rebels were at Derby, he asked me if I was surprized at their being there so soon? I told him, that I had expected them as that Night.

King's Counsel. What did he say then?

How. He said it was more than they expected themselves; and if I had heard such News, he was sure that the Devil had brought it me.

King's Counsel. And what do you know farther?

How. I have seen the Prisoner since he has been taken up.

King's Counsel. Where have you seen him?---How. In Newgate.

King's Counsel. Had you any Discourse with him there?

How. Yes, I had.

King's Counsel. Then relate it to the Court and Jury; speak all that you can remember.

How. I came to Town on Business, and being informed that Mr. Morgan was in Newgate, I went there out of Curiosity to see him; when I came there I spoke to him, and he seemed glad to see me, and asked me kindly how I did; and we drank together, and had some Discourse.

King's Counsel. What did that Discourse relate to?

How. I said I was very sorry to see him a Prisoner in such a Place.

King's Counsel. And what did he say to that?

How. He said he should soon be at Derby in spite of King George, or any body else.

The Prisoner's Defence.

Prisoner's Counsel. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I cannot speak so exactly to the Evidence that has been given against this unhappy Gentleman, as I could wish, because I have not had my Brief above half an Hour. If my Instructions be right, I will take upon me to say, that we shall produce Evidence of good Credit and Reputation, who will prove, that this Gentleman, the Prisoner, was forced into the Service of the Rebels, and at several Times, and several Places, endeavoured to make his Escape from them; which he at last effected, and was seized, after he had made his Escape, by a Magistrate, and committed Prisoner. And to prove that the Prisoner did make his Escape, I shall call Mr. Chatterton, who is the Master of the House where the Prisoner lodged at Ashborn, in Derbyshire.

* Dawson was the Day before convicted of High-Treason, being one of the Rebel Captains.

Mr. CHATTERTON being called and sworn.

Prisoner's Counsel. Sir, do you know any Thing of the Prisoner's endeavouring to make his Escape from the Rebel Army? — Chatterton. Yes.

Prisoner's Counsel. And how did he propose to make it?

Chatterton. He was to go out of Town one Morning about one or two o'Clock, and ordered me to call him at that Time.

Prisoner's Counsel. And did you call him?

Chatterton. I did; but he did not care to rise then, for fear he should be stoppt (in endeavouring to get away) by the Rebel Guard, who were posted all about the Town. He said, that about five in the Morning would be the most proper Time, for then the Rebel Pipes would begin playing, and they would be all busy, and that was his only Time to make his Escape from them.

Prisoner's Counsel. And did he go away from your House, and out of Ashborn Town?

Chatterton. Yes, he went away, and asked me to go with him as a Guide to shew him some Bye-way to Stone; and said, it would be very proper for us to get to some Farm-house, and hide ourselves, lest the Rebels should send in Search of him, and if we should be taken after he had got away, and brought again to the Rebel Army, he did not know what might be the Consequence.

Prisoner's Counsel. Did you go with him as a Guide, Sir?

Chatterton. When he proposed it to me, I said, Mr. Morgan, it is impossible for me to leave my House, for we are all in a Hurry, and therefore you cannot expect I should go; but I will send a Man with you that will do as well.

Prisoner's Counsel. And you did send a Man with him?

Chatterton. I spoke to a Man who worked Labouring-work with me, who I knew was well acquainted with the Country, and he agreed to go; and they both set out of Ashborn, and the first News that I heard afterwards, was, that the Prisoner and my Man were both seized on Suspicion of being of the Rebel Army. And what I heard was very true; so I went to the Gentleman by whose Order they were apprehended, and enquired about the Matter, and told him how the Affair was, just in the same Manner I have informed this honourable Court; but his Worship would not discharge my Man till I had given Security for his Appearance, which I was obliged to do; so he was set at Liberty, and the Prisoner at the Bar was kept in Custody. — This is all that I know of the Matter.

(Here the Prisoner's Counsel rested his Defence, there being no other Witnesses to examine on his Behalf.)

Court to Prisoner. You have heard, Sir, what has been sworn; whatever you have to say in your Defence, now is your Time to speak it, and the Court will hear you. — (And then the Prisoner spoke to the following Effect, after the Cryer had made Proclamation for Silence.)

Morgan. I have heard what has been sworn against me by the Witnesses on the Behalf of the Crown; and I appeal to the Court and the Jury, if there are not the greatest Improbabilities in the World in the Evidence they have given against me. I would speak particularly to what happened at Manchester. The Deputy Constable swears, That I gave him an Order to seize all Arms he could find, and to bring them to my Quarters: Mr. Maddox swears, That at a Consultation amongst the Officers at Manchester, I was proposed for Colonel of the Regiment, which I refused, because I thought Mr. Townley was more fit for such a Command than myself.

Now can any reasonable Man imagine that I, who had refused to be the Chief Commander of the Regiment, would do the servile Office of going up and down the Town in Search for Arms?

Every Gentleman of the Army (and I see several in this Court) very well know, that to go on such an Errand, would ill become any Officer of a superior Rank; and as to my own Part, I am sure I could not have done any such Business.

I do not deny my being at several Places with the Rebels; and if I had been indulged with a longer Time to prepare for my Trial, I should have made appear very clearly, that I was taken Prisoner by the Rebels, and detained with them much against my Inclination; for there was no resisting Force.

My Landlord, Mr. Chatterton, has made it plainly appear to this honourable Court, that I made my Escape as soon as it was in my Power; and if I could have done it sooner, or have had an Opportunity to get away from them, I should have been very glad to have embraced it.

As to my Capacity as one bred to the Law, I confess I never pretended to much Knowledge that Way, and therefore was a very improper Person to counsel the Chief of the Rebels; for my Advice, I am sure, could be of little Service to him.

There were Abundance of Gentlemen of Fortune seized as well as myself, who were obliged to go with the Army, till they found Means to escape as I did. I had been to pay a Visit to a Gentleman at Etherton-Hall in Cheshire, and I was seized by the Rebels, and they took my Horses from me.

The Laws of England are very just and equitable; and they say, that every Man shall be tried by his Neighbours, of the same State and Condition with himself.

God help me, I am deprived of that Benefit, and I am now amongst Strangers, who know nothing of me: They are upon their Oaths, and must give Credit to the Witnesses; but I hope, and do not in the least doubt, that they will do me Justice.

I have served the Crown of England in two Campaigns with some Reputation. And I believe no Gentleman belonging to the Army, who knows me, will deny what I now tell this honourable Court. I cheerfully gave all the Assistance I could in the public Service, and I was always glad when my poor Endeavours were crowned with Success.

Here have been many Witnesses examined against me, and it is very impossible that I should confute them, because of the short Time allowed me.

I think it a very great Hardship that I should be the last tried of all these Gentlemen, because I could have brought several of them to prove my Behaviour both at Manchester and in other Places, was quite different from what the King's Witnesses speak of; but as they are convicted, they cannot give any Testimony for me, and that Assistance I might have had, can now be of no Use to me.

If I was to speak it with my last Breath, I must deny that I went voluntarily into the Rebellion; but as the Evidence for the Crown is so strong against me, I must submit to the Determination of this honourable Court, and I submit myself accordingly.

(When the Prisoner had done speaking, Mr. Solicitor General stood up, and made a Reply, which was to the Effect following:)

Solicitor General. I should not have troubled your Lordships, or the Jury, with saying one Word more relating to the Prisoner that is now before you; but I find it necessary, from what has been offered in his Defence, to observe, that he has complained of many Hardships.

He seems to think it a great Grievance, that his being last tried has deprived him of many Advantages; but, in my Opinion, he has had a better Chance to defend himself, because it gained him more Time to get his Witnesses ready, and to prepare for his Defence.

Can any Man imagine, that either of the Persons who have been convicted (if Mr. Morgan had been first tried) would have appeared to clear him of the Charge that is laid against him? If they had done so, they would have been their own Enemies; for their Evidence would have been a plain Proof against themselves, and convinced every body that they were in the Rebellion.

The Prisoner has no need to complain of any Hardships; he has been used with as much Lenity and Tenderness as any Man in his Condition ever was; and nothing that he has asked, which the Law could grant, was ever refused him. He has had Counsel assigned him of his own choosing, to enable him to make his Defence, a Copy of his Indictment in due Time, and therefore he could not have any Pretence of being ignorant of what he stood charged with; and I am sure no one can say, but he has had a very fair and impartial Trial.

I think of all the Prisoners convicted, it is very evident, that the Prisoner's Case really appears the plainest of any; for of six Witnesses, there are four who were not concerned in the Rebellion, who positively swear to his Person, and that he was the most active of any one in the Rebel Service; and Mr. How particularly swears, That he lodged at his House, he gave Directions for every thing, and paid the Reckoning for himself and eight Officers who dined with him; and therefore he thought the Prisoner was one of the Heads of them: — These were his Words.

Then there is Mr. Bowker, the Deputy-Constable of Manchester, and he comes and swears, That the Prisoner at the Bar, with one Wallis (who is one of the Head Constables of Manchester, and Bowker's Principal) came to him with a Paper signed by the Pretender's Secretary, ordering him to search for all Arms, and carry them to the Lodgings of David Morgan, Esq. which he did accordingly, for in Case of Refusal, he, and all those who refused to deliver up their Arms, were threatened with military Execution. This Witness is positive to the Person of the Prisoner; and I think there can be no plainer Proof of High-Treason than what has been sworn.

As to what Mr. Chatterton has sworn of the Prisoner's Escape from the Rebels, and leaving Ashborn, I admit to be Matter of Fact, but this plainly makes against the Prisoner; for when he found their Affairs were desperate, he was willing to shift for himself, and went away privately from them, purposely that he might not be seized by the King's Forces. He had been amongst the Rebels a considerable Time before this happened, and if (as he pretends) he was detained against his Will, he undoubtedly had frequent Opportunities of leaving them; but that you find he never did, till his own Preservation and Safety required it.

As to his Complaint of Hardships, there is no one here that ever intended him any; but the Jury must go according to the Evidence; and I am sure that no Evidence in the World could have brought a Fact more home to the Prisoner than they have done this: And I doubt not but the Evidence that has been given will have a due Weight with the Jury, and that they will find him guilty of the Indictment.

The Jury, without going out of Court, brought the Prisoner in Guilty.

July 22, 1746.

All the Prisoners who then stood convicted were brought to the Bar to receive Judgment; and their Counsel, Serjeants Wynne and Eyre, took two Exceptions in Arrest of Judgment.

1. That the Teste of the Commission is not set forth in the Caption of the Indictment, and consequently, for aught appears on the Record, the Commission might issue before the Commencement of the Act, on which this Commission is grounded: And if so, the whole Proceeding is coram non Judice.

To this it was answered by the Attorney General, and agreed by the Court, that the Jurisdiction of the Court doth sufficiently appear on the Record. The Act of Parliament is undoubtedly the Foundation of this Proceeding: The Act, and this Commission grounded on it, are recited in the Caption: And it is expressly alledged, that the Commission did issue by Virtue of the Act; which could not be true, unless the Commission was subsequent to it.

Their second Exception, and on which they seemed chiefly to rely, was, that the Act impowers the Crown to issue Commissions for trying Persons then in Custody, or who shall be in Custody for High-Treason, in levying War before the first Day of January next, and it is not alledged in the Indictment that the Prisoners were in Custody at the Time of the Indictment: And consequently it doth not appear on the Record, that the Court hath any Jurisdiction over the Prisoners.

To this it was answered by the Attorney General, and agreed by the Court, that it doth sufficiently appear on the Record as it now stands, though not indeed on the Indictment, that the Prisoners are in Custody; the Record alledgeth that the Prisoners, at the Time of their Arraignment, being brought to the Bar in the Custody of the Sheriff to whose Custody they had before been committed for the Cause aforesaid, were asked, &c.

† The Common Commission of Gaol Delivery extendeth only to Prisoners in actual Custody; and yet it was never thought necessary to alledge in the Indictment that the Defendant was then actually in Prison: And if this Exception was to prevail, it would impeach all the Judgments that ever have been given at any Sessions of Gaol Delivery.

That the Act on which the Prisoners were tried runs thus in the very Words of this Act, all the Indictments at that Time were as these are, and this very Exception was then taken and over-ruled.

* See the Case of James Macdonald afterwards.

† V. 12 Mod. 449. the same Point.

Lord Chief Justice Lee produced a Note he took at that Time, in the Case of the King and Oxburgh; the same Exception was then taken and over-ruled upon the Reason last before given.

Judgment was then given as in Cases of High Treason. Mr. Serjeant Eyre afterwards, viz. August 2d, took an Exception that bears some Affinity to the last in behalf of Donald Mac Donald and some others who then stood convicted, and were brought to the Bar to receive Judgment: It was, that it doth not appear that the Prisoners were apprehended; and faith he, in fact they were not apprehended, but surrendered. Whereas the Act of Parliament, on which the Commission is grounded, speaks only of Persons that shall be apprehended and in Custody.

This fine-spun Objection was likewise over-ruled. The Surrender was as much upon Compulsion, as the Submission of a Person who cries for Quarter in the Heat of Battle is. In both Cases, the Submission is by reason of a superior Force, and for Fear of immediate Death.

David Morgan was about 51 years of Age, born in Wales, and bred to the Law, and had frequently (as a Barrister) attended the Courts at Westminster Hall, and elsewhere. He was a Person of a very mean Look, and seldom kept Company with any Gentlemen of his Neighbourhood; and if it had not been for his Estate, he might have starved, for he was so very lofty, and of so bad a Temper, that Nobody but such as were beholden to him cared to employ him. This Morgan was possessed of a very good Estate in St. Leonard's Shoreditch, but he let it all run to Ruin, because he would not pay the Ground-Rent.

The Rebels called Morgan the Pretender's Counsellor, and his Advice was consulted on every Occasion. Even after he was condemned, he was haughty and insolent beyond Expression; and the very Afternoon before his Execution, he grumbled to pay the Cook who dressed his Dinner, and said she was very extravagant in her Demands.

He read to his Fellow Prisoners above twenty Minutes at the Gallows, and died very unconcerned.

The Morning (about Six o'Clock) before he went to Execution he ordered Coffee to be made, and bid them take care to make it very good and strong, for he had never drank any since he had been in that Prison fit to come near a Gentleman; and because it was ready before he was unlocked, he seemed angry, and in a great Passion.

He was executed with the others on Wednesday, July 30, 1746, and his Body delivered to his Friends to be buried.

The Nine that were executed at Kennington Common, July 30, 1746, were Francis Townley, Col. of the Manchester Regiment; Thomas Theodorus Deacon, James Dawson, John Berwick, George Fletcher, and Andrew Blood (or Blyde), Captains in the Manchester Regiment; Thomas Chadwick, Lieutenant; Thomas Syddall, Adjutant to the same; and David Morgan, a Volunteer in the Pretender's Army; of these, Fletcher, Berwick, Chadwick, and Dawson, declared themselves Members of the Church of England; Townley and Blood died Papists; all their Speeches were filled with Treasonable Expressions, not fit to be repeated (as beforementioned): But we shall take notice what a strange enthusiastick Sort of Religion Syddall and Deacon were of, as they mentioned the Church they belonged to in their dying Speeches; and Mr. Morgan's Declaration as to his Faith.

Thomas Syddall the Peruke-maker says, "I die a Member not of the Church of Rome, nor yet that of England, but of a pure Episcopal Church, which hath reformed all the Errors, Corruptions and Defects that have been introduced into the Modern Churches of Christendom: A Church which is in perfect Communion with the Ancient and Universal Church of Christ, by adhering uniformly to Antiquity, Universality and Consent; that glorious Principle, which if once strictly and impartially pursued, would, and which alone can, remove all the Distractions, and unite all the divided Branches of the Christian Church. This only Catholick Principle is agreed to by all the Churches, Eastern and Western, Popish and Protestant; and yet unhappily is practised by none, but the Church in whose Communion I die. May God in his great Mercy, daily increase the Members thereof! And if any would enquire into its Primitive Constitution, I refer them to our Common-Prayer-book; which is entitled, a Complete Collection of Devotions, both publick and private, taken from the Apostolical Constitutions, the Ancient Liturgies, and the Common Prayer-book of the Church of England, Printed at London, 1734."

Mr. Thomas Theodorus Deacon said, in his Speech, "I profess I die a Member not of the Church of Rome, nor yet of that of England, but of a pure Episcopal Church, which has reformed all the Errors, Corruptions and Defects that have been introduced into the Modern Churches of Christendom: A Church, which is in perfect Communion with the Ancient and Universal Church of Christ, by adhering uniformly to Antiquity, Universality and Consent; that glorious Principle, which if once strictly and impartially pursued, would, and which alone can, remove all the Distractions, and unite all the divided Branches of the Christian Church. This truly Catholick Principle is agreed to by all Churches, Eastern and Western, Popish and Protestant; and yet unhappily is practised by none, but the Church in whose Holy Communion I have the Happiness to die. May God, of his great Mercy, daily increase the Members thereof! And if any would enquire into its Primitive Institution, I refer them to our Common Prayer-book; entitled as abovementioned."—This Book of Devotion was supposed to be wrote by Dr. Deacon, the Physician at Manchester, Father of the above.

The Speeches of the Rebels were suspected to be wrote by Mr. Creak, a Nonjuring Clergyman; (some said one of their Bishops) at least he had a hand in them.

Counsellor Morgan in his Speech said, "To conclude, my Brethren and Fellow Subjects, I must make Profession of that Religion I was baptized, have continued, and shall, through divine Permission, die in, which is that of the Church of England; and which I hope, will stand and prevail, against the Malice, Devices and Assaults of her Enemies; as well those of the Church of Rome, as those, equally dangerous, the Followers of Luther and Calvin, covered under, and concealed in, the specious Bugbears of Popery and Arbitrary Power. This my Faith, I have fully set forth in a Poem of two Books, intitled, the Christian Test, or the Coalition of Faith and Reason; the first of which I have already published, and the latter, I have bequeathed to the Care of my unfortunate, but very dutiful Daughter, Mrs. Mary Morgan, to be published by her, since it has pleased God I shall not live to see it. To these Poems I refer, which I hope will obviate all Cavil to the contrary."

XXXV. The Trial of ALEXANDER MAC GROWTHER, at the Town Hall, St. Margaret's Hill, Thursday, July 31, 1746, for High-Treason.

THIS Morning the Right Honourable the Lord Chief Justice Lee, the Right Honourable Lord Chief Justice Willes, Mr. Justice Wright, Mr. Justice Foster, Mr. Baron Reynolds, and Mr. Baron Clive, came into Court, and being seated, the Crier made Proclamation for Silence; and the Keeper brought James Nicholson, a Lieutenant in the Duke of Perth's Regiment, and Donald Mac Donald, otherwise David Mac Donald, otherwise Daniel Mac Donald, a Captain in Cappock's Regiment, to the Bar, and they desired to retract their former Plea; which the Court having granted, they pleaded Guilty, and hoped the Court would recommend them to his Majesty's Mercy.

Alexander Mac Growther was then called, and put to the Bar, and for his Trial put himself upon God and his Country, and after making some Exceptions, a Jury was sworn to try him.

The Counsel for the King having opened the Indictment, that the Prisoner was a Lieutenant in the Duke of Perth's Regiment, they proceeded to call their Witnesses, and Mr. Allen was called and sworn accordingly.

Solicitor General. Pray, Sir, acquaint the Court of all that you know of the Prisoner.

Mr. Allen. There are two Mac Growthers, but this is the oldest, and he was a Lieutenant in the Duke of Perth's Regiment; and the first Time he was in Arms in the Pretender's Service was the latter End of last August. He was a Tenant to the Duke of Perth, and accepted a Commission in the Rebel Service; he was called Lieutenant in Perth's Regiment by the Officers and Soldiers, and marched in his Highland Dress with the Rebels from their first beating up for Volunteers in Scotland. He was at Edinburgh, and seemed very glad when the Pretender had got Possession of the City, and encouraged the Soldiers to be diligent, for that there was no Fear of Success, and if they were hearty, vigilant and active, he did not doubt but they should succeed. He wore a white Cockade at Edinburgh, a Dirk by his Side, had Pistols in his Girdle, and a blue Bonnet, and the Highland Rebels paid a great Respect to him. He was at Perth when Possession was taken of that Town by the Pretender's Party, and always acted there as an Officer; and at every Place where the Rebels came was very warm in their Cause, bidding the Rebels under his Command keep a good Heart, and fear nothing.—He spoke this at the Battle of Preston Pans; and every Attack they made, he spirited up his Brother Officers, and desired them to keep a good Look-out, and take care the Soldiers did their Duty.

* Upon the Trials of the Lords Kilmarnock, Cromartie and Balmerino, to guard against this Objection, the Warrants for their Commitment were returned by the Lieutenant of the Tower, read and entered on the Journal.

† Foster's Reports, p. 13.

Mr. Maddox was next called and sworn, who deposed, That he saw the Prisoner at Carlisle, in his Highland Dress, at the Time when his Royal Highness the Duke besieged the City;—that he was in a Highland Plaid, a Bonnet, a White Cockade and Dirk, and was called Lieutenant Mac Growther, and greatly esteemed by the Rebels.

The Captains Vere and Nevet, who are Officers in the King's Service, deposed, That when the Rebels surrendered themselves, they had Orders from his Royal Highness the Duke to examine all the Rebel Officers; and when they examined the Prisoner, Mr. Mac Growther, he owned that he was an Officer (a Lieutenant) in the Duke of Perth's Regiment; and that he gave in his Name as an Officer;—and all the Witnesses agreed, that the Prisoner was under no Restraint, but acted as voluntarily as the other Rebel Officers.

Prisoner's Defence.

The Prisoner's Counsel insisted, that the Duke of Perth had compelled him to enter into the Rebellion, and had threatened him, if he refused to join them, to burn his House to the Ground, to destroy all his Cattle and Stock of Corn, and to lay waste all that belonged to him;—and to prove this they called four Witnesses, who, in general, deposed, That several of the Duke of Perth's Men came and threatened him, the Prisoner, with Destruction, if he refused joining the Rebel Forces; and to bind him with Cords; and that being compelled, he was forced to join them to save himself from Ruin.

The Evidence on both Sides being closed, my Lord Chief Justice summed up the Evidence to the Jury; and as the Proof was very strong, and it appearing that he marched with the Rebels, and enlisted at the Beginning of the Rebellion, and continued with them 'till the Surrender of Carlisle, the Jury (without going out of Court) found him Guilty.

ALEXANDER MAC GROWTHER'S CASE, July 31, 1746 †.

IN the Case of Alexander Mac Growther, there was full Evidence touching his having been in the Rebellion; and his acting as a Lieutenant in a Regiment in the Rebel Army called the Duke of Perth's Regiment. The Defence he relied on was, that he was forced in.

And to that Purpose he called several Witnesses, who in general swore, that on the 28th of August the Person called Duke of Perth, and the Lord Strathallan, with about Twenty Highlanders, came to the Town where the Prisoner lived. That on the same Day three several Summons were sent out by the Duke requiring his Tenants to meet him, and to conduct him over a Moor in the Neighbourhood, called Luiny Moor. That upon the third Summons the Prisoner, who is a Tenant to the Duke, with about Twelve of the Tenants appeared; that then the Duke proposed to them that they should take Arms and follow him into the Rebellion. That the Prisoner and the rest refused to go; whereupon they were told, that they should be forced, and Cords were brought by the Duke's Party in order to bind them; and that then the Prisoner and Ten more went off, surrounded by the Duke's Party.

These Witnesses swore that the Duke of Perth threatened to burn the Houses, and to drive off the Cattle of such of his Tenants as should refuse to follow him. They all spoke very extravagantly of the Power Lords in Scotland exercise over their Tenants; and of the Obedience, (even to the joining in Rebellion) which they expect from them.

Lord Chief Justice Lee, in summing up, observed to the Jury, that there is not, nor ever was, any Tenure which obligeth Tenants to follow their Lords into Rebellion*.

And as to the Matter of Force, he said, that the Fear of having Houses burnt, or Goods spoiled, supposing that to have been the Case of the Prisoner, is no Excuse in the Eye of the Law for joining and marching with Rebels.

* N. B. If Threats of this Kind were an Excuse, it would be in the Power of any Leader in a Rebellion to indemnify all his Followers.

† See in Foster's Reports, 1 Discourse, Chap. ii. S. 8. p. 216.

The only Force that doth excuse, is a Force upon the Person, and present Fear of Death; and this Force and Fear must continue all the Time the Party remains with the Rebels. It is incumbent on every Man, who makes Force his Defence, to shew an actual Force, and that he quitted the Service as soon as he could; agreeable to the Rule laid down in Oldcastle's Case, 1 Hale 50. that they joined pro timore Mortis & recessant quum cito potuerunt.

He then observed that the only Force the Prisoner pretends to, was on the 8th of August; and that he continued with the Rebels and bore a Commission in their Army 'till the Surrender of Carlisle, which was on or about the 20th of December.

The Jury without going from the Bar found him Guilty. But he was reprieved, and not executed.

N. B. All the Judges that were in Town were present, and concurred in the Points of Law.

N. B. Many of the Scotch Prisoners made Force their Defence, and produced the same Sort of Evidence as MacGrawther did; and the same Directions in point of Law were given as in his Case. And the Matter of Fact whether Force or no Force, and how long that Force continued, with every Circumstance tending to shew the Practicability or Impracticability of an Escape, was left to the Jury on the whole Evidence.

XXXVI. The Proceedings at St. Margaret's Hill, Southwark, relating to ALEXANDER and CHARLES KINLOCH (Brothers to Sir JAMES KINLOCH, Bart.), on August 23, September 2, October 28, 29, November 15, December 15 and 20, 1746. Before the Lord Chief Justice Lee, Lord Chief Justice Willes, Lord Chief Baron Parker, Mr. Justice Wright, Mr. Baron Reynolds, Mr. Justice Abney, Mr. Justice Dennison, Mr. Baron Clarke, Mr. Justice Foster, Mr. Baron Clive, Sir Thomas De Veil, Knt. and Peter Theobald, Esq. relating to their Plea of being born in Scotland, and ought to be tried according to the Laws of that Kingdom, &c*.

August 23, 1746.

THIS Day Bills of Indictment were found against Alexander Kinloch and Charles Kinloch, and others of the Rebels to the Number of twenty-two. The Overt Acts were laid in different Shires in Scotland, according to the respective Cases of the Prisoners. And then the Court adjourned to the 2d of September for the Arraignment of the Prisoners.

September 2, 1746. On this Day, (there being no other Judge in Town) Mr. Justice Foster sat with two other Commissioners, Sir Thomas De Veil, Knt. and Peter Theobald, Esq. for the Arraigning the Prisoners. Alexander Kinloch and Charles Kinloch, and the rest of the Prisoners, who were Scotchmen born, upon their Arraignment severally delivered a Paper into Court whereof the following is a Copy:

"As I intend to insist on the Benefit of the Act of Union, by which all the Laws in Scotland at that time which concern private Right are saved to the Natives of Scotland, and declared to be unalterable by the Parliament of Great Britain, except for the evident Utility of the Subjects within Scotland; and as I am a Subject born within Scotland, and stand indicted for Treasons charged to have been committed by me in Scotland, I humbly beg that the Court will be pleased to assign me Counsel and a Solicitor to advise me as to the Manner of Framing, and the Use to be made of this Defence; and that the Court will be pleased to indulge me in a few Days time to advise with them, before I am compelled to plead; lest by pleading I may be deprived of the Benefit of any such Defence."

Mr. Justice Foster told the Prisoners that Copies of their Indictments having been delivered to them in due Time, they ought now to have been ready to plead such Pleas as they would stand by; and that the Court expected they should now plead accordingly. He told them withal, that if the Matter contained in their Papers would avail them at all, they would have the full Benefit of it upon Not Guilty: Since it amounts to no more than that their Cases are not within the Act of the last Session, by Authority of which Act alone this Court sits. They then severally pleaded Not Guilty.

The Case of ALEXANDER KINLOCH and CHARLES KINLOCH, October 28, 1746.

PRESENT Lord Chief Justice Willes, Mr. Justice Foster, and Mr. Baron Clive. Alexander Kinloch and Charles Kinloch, who were the first of the Prisoners concerned in the Paper delivered the Second of September that were brought to Trial, were set to the Bar; and they agreeing in their Challenges, one Jury was sworn and charged with them by the Clerk of the Arraignments. The junior Counsel for the Crown opened the Indictment, and the Solicitor General in a few Words opened the Evidence.

When the Counsel for the Crown had proceeded thus far, the Chief Justice, before any Evidence was given, told the Prisoners Counsel, that he was informed they had some Objection to make in behalf of their Clients grounded on the Act of Union; which Objection he said was proper to be spoke to before the Counsel for the Crown went into their Evidence. Whereupon Mr. Joddrell, one of the Prisoner's Counsel, stated his Objection, and spoke largely to it. The Chief Justice then said, that the Objection being in nature of a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, could not be made on the Issue of Not Guilty; nor could any Evidence in support of the Objection be received upon that Issue; and therefore proposed that a Juror should be withdrawn; and that the Prisoners should have leave to withdraw their Pleas of Not Guilty, and to plead this Matter specially: and that the Attorney General might demur, and so the Point would come regularly before the Court.

Mr. Justice Foster said on this Occasion, that when he assured the Prisoners, they would have the full Benefit of this Objection on their Plea of Not Guilty, he had no Intention of leading them into a Difficulty, which they could not get clear of, without the Indulgence of the Court. He thought they would be intitled ex mero Jure to the full Benefit of the Objection without such Indulgence; and added, that the Principle he went upon was this, If there be any Weight in the Objection, it must be that the Case of the Prisoners is not within the Act of the last Session, under which Act alone this Special Commission is executed. And if it be not within that Act, it is a Case at Common Law; and consequently, taking it to be a Case at Common Law, if no Overt Act be proved in the County where the Commission sits, and whence the Jury comes, the Prisoners must of course be acquitted.

Sir John Strange, of Counsel with the Crown, strongly insisted, that in point of Law the Prisoners were intitled to the Benefit of the Objection on Not Guilty, if they could avail themselves of it; and the Attorney General offered to waive all Advantage that might be taken against the Prisoners, if any Advantage could be taken; and pressed that the Trial might go on upon the Issue joined by them, and that the Merits of the Objection might be now considered.

But it was otherwise ordered, and a Juror was withdrawn, and the Jury discharged upon the Motion of the Prisoners Counsel, and at the Prisoners Request, and with the Consent of the Attorney General. And the Prisoners withdrew their former Plea, in order that they might be ready the next Day with their Pleas to the Jurisdiction in Form. To which the Attorney General declared he would demur instantur.

And the Court adjourned to the next Day.

The Entry on the Record touching this Matter, is as followeth:

"Upon the Motion of Charles Hamilton Gordon, Esq. and Paul Joddrell, Esq. being assigned as Counsel for the Defendants in this Cause, and by their Consent, and also at the Desire and Request, and by the Consent of the Defendants now at the Bar here, and also by the Consent of Mr. Attorney General on behalf of the King: It is ordered by the Court here, that Richard Toy the last of the Jurors sworn and impanelled in this Cause be withdrawn out of the Pannel; and that the rest of the Jurors in this Cause be discharged; no Evidence whatsoever having been given to the said Jury in this Cause, either on the Part of the King or of the Defendants. And it is further ordered by the Court here, that the said Defendants have leave to withdraw their Pleas of Not Guilty by them formerly pleaded to the Indictment in this Cause, and have leave to plead to the Jurisdiction of this Court: And that the said Defendants have Time 'till To-morrow to put in such Plea. And that they deliver Copies of such Plea to Mr. Sharpe, Solicitor for the King in this Cause, by Eight of the Clock this Evening. And thereupon the said Defendants do now here at the Bar withdraw their said Pleas of Not Guilty, in order to put in such Plea to the Jurisdiction of this Court as aforesaid."

October 29, 1746. On this Day, present the same Judges as Yesterday. Alexander Kinloch was first set to the Bar and again arraigned, whereupon he tendered a Plea ingrossed on Parchment and signed by his

* We cannot find that any Trial of these two Kinlochs was ever printed; the Evidence against them (and the rest tried at St. Margaret's Hill) being so very plain, nothing remarkable happened at their Trials. Their principal Objection being in nature of a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, we shall insert their Plea, the Entry on the Record, Demurrer, &c. relating to this Point, with a brief Account of the Arguments of the Counsel and Court, and Judge Foster's Argument on the Case, from his Reports, p. 15. et seq.

Counsel Mr. Gordon and Mr. Jodrell; to which the Attorney General demurred, and the Prisoner instantly joined in Demurrer.

"And the said Alexander Kinloch in his own proper Person comes, and having heard the Indictment aforesaid read, and protesting that he is Not Guilty of the Premises charged in the said Indictment, for Plea nevertheless saith, That he ought not to be compelled to answer to the said Indictment: Because he saith that the Kingdom of Scotland, before and until the Time of the Union of the two Kingdoms of England and Scotland, was regulated and governed by the proper Laws and Statutes of that Kingdom, and not by the Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom of England; and that ever since the said Union of the said two Kingdoms that Part of the Realm of Great Britain called Scotland hath been, and yet is governed and regulated by the proper Laws of that Part of the said Realm called Scotland, and not by the Laws of that Part of the said Realm called England.

"And the said Alexander Kinloch further saith, That within the said Kingdom before the Union of the said two Kingdoms, and until the said Union thereof, and within that Part of Great Britain called Scotland ever since the said Union, there hath been, and now is a certain Court called the Court of Justiciary; and that all and singular Offences of High-Treason committed within the said Kingdom of Scotland before and until the said Union, and within that Part of the Realm of Great Britain called Scotland since the said Union by the Natives thereof, apprehended or taken for such Offences there (except Peers of the Realm of Great Britain), have been and of Right ought to be enquired of, heard and determined in the said Court of Justiciary before the Justices of that Court, or in some other Courts, or before other Justices within the said Realm of Scotland before the Union, and within that Part of the Realm of Great Britain called Scotland since the said Union; and not in any Court, or before any Justices within the Realm of England before the said Union, or within that Part of the Realm of Great Britain called England since the said Union.

"And the said Alexander Kinloch further saith, That Fochabars in the Shire of Murray in the said Indictment mentioned, the Place where the said Offence contained in the said Indictment is supposed to have been committed, before and until the said Union of the said two Kingdoms was within and Parcel of the said Kingdom of Scotland, and ever since the said Union was and now is lying within and Parcel of that Part of the Realm of Great Britain called Scotland.

"And the said Alexander Kinloch further saith, That he was born within that Part of the Realm of Great Britain called Scotland (to wit) at Fochabars aforesaid; and that at the Time when the said Offence in the said Indictment contained, is therein supposed to have been committed, and long before that Time, and since, he the said Alexander Kinloch was resident and commorant within that Part of Great Britain called Scotland (to wit) at Fochabars aforesaid. And this he is ready to verify. Wherefore the said Alexander Kinloch prays Judgment if the Court of our Lord the King here will further proceed upon the Indictment aforesaid against him, and that he may be dismissed from the Court here of and upon the Premises, &c.

Demurrer.] "And the said Sir Dudley Ryder, Knight, Attorney-General of our present Sovereign Lord the King, who for our said present Sovereign Lord the King in this behalf prosecuted, as to the said Plea of him the said Alexander Kinloch by him above pleaded as aforesaid, for our said present Sovereign Lord the King saith, That the said Plea and the Matter therein contained, are not sufficient in Law to preclude the Court here from their Jurisdiction to hear and determine the High-Treason mentioned and specified in the said Indictment, and above charged upon him the said Alexander Kinloch in and by the said Indictment. Wherefore for Want of a proper and sufficient Answer in this Behalf, he prayeth Judgment, and that the said Alexander Kinloch may answer in Court here to our said present Sovereign Lord the King touching and concerning the Premises aforesaid."

Joynder in Demurrer.] And the said Alexander Kinloch likewise. The Prisoner's Counsel admitted, that his Case is within the Letter of the Act of the last Session, by Authority of which this Court sits: But insisted, that by the known Rules of Construction, if any great or manifest Inconveniencies do arise from adhering closely to the Letter of the Act, the Court ought, and always doth depart from the literal Construction.

The Construction they insisted on was, that for Offences committed in England, Commissions might issue for hearing and determining the same in any County of England; and for Offences committed in Scotland, the like Commissions might issue into any County of Scotland, which would, they said, answer all the Ends of the Act mentioned in the Preamble; and would at the same Time avoid all the Inconveniencies which the Construction contended for in behalf of the Crown is attended with.

They then mentioned several Inconveniencies attending such a Construction of the Act: Some of which might possibly have merited the Attention of the Legislature at the Time the Act passed.

Mr. Attorney General in answer said, That the Rules of Construction as applied to Acts of Parliament grounded on Inconveniencies, whether imaginary or real, hold in no Cases but where the Meaning of the Act is doubtful: In plain Cases, where the Intention of the Legislature is evident, 'tis the Duty of the Court to put the Law in Execution, and to leave all Considerations of Inconveniencies to the Legislature. And if the Parliament had intended that different Commissions should issue for the Trial of Treasons committed in England and Scotland respectively, they would have said so: they would not have impowered his Majesty to issue Commissions into any County or Shire within the United Kingdom.

And the Objection he said is not new; it was made, but without Effect, in behalf of a Scotchman concerned in the Rebellion of 1715* (1 Geo. I. c. 33.).

The Lord Chief Justice declared his Opinion, in which the other Judges present concurred, that the Prisoner's Birth, Residence and Apprehension in Scotland are Facts perfectly immaterial to the present Question.

* This was the Case of William Hay upon the Special Commission at Carlisle, in the Year 1716. The Objection was then introduced, not by way of Plea to the Jurisdiction, but by Demurrer. And the Court after hearing the Prisoner's Counsel adjourned to the next Day. And having considered the Arguments of the Prisoner's Counsel, agreed to over-rule the Demurrer. Which being intimated to his Counsel, he by Leave of the Court, and with the Consent of the Solicitor-General, withdrew his Demurrer, and pleaded Guilty.

That they would have been so, if the Case had been at Common Law. For at Common Law every Man is triable, not where he was born, resided, or was apprehended, but where the Fact was committed: That these Facts being immaterial, and the whole Merits of the Objection appearing on the Face of the Indictment, the Prisoner might as well have Demurred to it, as pleaded in the Manner he hath done.

That in so plain a Case as this is, Arguments ab inconvenienti are of no Weight: The Law must take its Course: Inconveniencies in plain Cases are proper only for the Consideration of the Legislature.

His Lordship observed that the Words, This Realm, occur in four or five Places in the Act, and that in every Place where they do occur, except in the Clause in Question, they incontestably mean the United Kingdom of Great Britain, and can mean nothing else: And by no Rule of Construction can they be restrained in this single Clause, to that Part of the Kingdom called England.

The Court over-ruled the Plea, and ordered that the Prisoner should plead over to the Treason; and he pleaded Not Guilty. Charles Kinloch was then brought to the Bar, and being arraigned a second Time on the Indictment pleaded likewise Not Guilty. And both Prisoners agreeing to join in their Challenges, a Jury (the same Persons who were sworn and charged with them Yesterday) was sworn and charged with them. And they were both found Guilty, but not executed.

November 15, 1746. On this Day, Present the two Chief Justices, Mr. Justice Wright, Mr. Baron Reynolds, Mr. Justice Abney, Mr. Justice Foster, and Mr. Baron Clive. All the Prisoners who were convicted since the last Execution were brought to the Bar to receive Judgment. The two Kinlochs, Alexander and Charles, moved by (Mr. Jodrell) their Counsel in Arrest of Judgment: He took Notice of the Proceedings with regard to the Prisoners on the 28th and 29th Days of October, and insisted that their Trial on the 29th (a Jury having been sworn and charged with them on the 28th) was a Mis-trial, and the Verdict a mere Nullity.

He was proceeding to state his Reasons and Authorities, when Lord Chief Justice Lee interrupted him and said, that as there is a Variety of Opinions in the Books touching that Matter, which is really a Point of great Consequence, he thought it most adviseable to postpone the further Consideration of it to the next Adjournment, when he should desire the Assistance of all the Judges in the Commission. Then the Court, after passing Sentence on the others, adjourned to the 15th of December.

N. B. The Court being full, and the Bar crowded in Expectation of the Event of this Motion, Mr. Justice Foster thought it not improper to speak to the Purpose he spoke on the 28th of October. And he added, That from what was said by the Court on the 29th, he was confirmed in his Opinion, that the Prisoners might safely have pleaded the General Issue. For if, as was then admitted, the whole Merits of the Objection appear on the Face of the Indictment, the Prisoners undoubtedly might have had the Benefit of it in Arrest of Judgment. So that, quacunq; Via, whether they could have been let into it on Evidence (as they certainly might), or in Arrest of Judgment, they were not ill advised in pleading the General Issue.

December 15, 1746. On this Day, Present the two Chief Justices Lee and Willes, the Chief Baron Parker, Mr. Justice Wright, Mr. Baron Reynolds, Mr. Justice Abney, Mr. Justice Dennison, Mr. Baron Clarke, Mr. Justice Foster, and Mr. Baron Clive—Mr. Jodrell argued in Behalf of the Kinlochs in Arrest of Judgment.

He admitted that there is a Variety of Opinions in the Books touching the Power of the Court to discharge a Jury sworn and charged in a Capital Case. And that the Practice during the Reign of King Charles the Second at least, went in favour of that Power. But he said that ever since the Revolution the contrary Practice hath uniformly prevailed. And even in the Time of James the Second, the Judges in Lord Del-mere's Case (IV. State-Trials, 232.) declared, that a Jury sworn and charged in a Capital Case cannot be discharged, but must give a Verdict. And Common Justice, he said, requires, that when a Prisoner is brought upon his Trial, and a Jury is once sworn and charged with him, he is to stand or fall by the Event of that Trial; otherwise his Life may be brought in Jeopardy for the same Fact as often as the Court pleases, and even when he is not so well prepared for his Defence.

To shew that the Law and Practice before the Restoration was with his Clients, he relied on the Authority of Lord Coke in his 1st Inst. 227. b. and 3d Inst. 110. And to shew that the Judges since the Revolution concurred with Lord Coke, he cited Carthew 465; where it is reported to have been said by Holt at the Sittings in Guild-Hall, on the ninth Day of November 1698, in the Case of the King and Perkins, "That All the Judges of England upon Debate among themselves had agreed, that a Jury sworn and charged in a Capital Case cannot be discharged, though all the Parties consent to it."

He said that he had seen a MS. Note of the same Resolution by the late Mr. Justice Tracy, which agrees in Substance with Carthew's Report of it.

He observed, that according to Carthew's Report and Tracy's MS. the Judges at the same Time came to a Resolution, That in Criminal Cases, not Capital, a Juror may be withdrawn, or Jury discharged by consent of all Parties, but not otherwise.

That the Practice since that Time in Criminal Cases hath been conformable to this Rule. For this he cited the Cases of the King and Morgan, Hillary 9 Geo. II. on an Indictment for Perjury, and the King and Jelf, Trinity 7 Geo. II. an Indictment for Barratry; In both these Cases Lord Hardwick he said, at the Sittings, refused to withdraw a Juror at the Prayer of the King's Counsel, because the Defendant's Counsel refused to consent to it, and cited this Resolution in Carthew. The Use he made of these two Cases was, that since this Regard hath been paid to the Authority of the Resolution in Criminal Cases, as reported by Carthew, he hoped the same Regard would be now paid to that touching Capital Cases.

As to the Matter of Consent, he observed that Consent may cure an Irregularity, but cannot justify the breaking through any of the fundamental Principles of Law; especially such Rules as are in favour of a Prisoner who is answering for his Life. A Prisoner in this Circumstance, is hardly Sui Juris; he may be over-awed or surprized into a Consent, manifestly to his Prejudice: And therefore the Judges in the Resolution cited from Carthew (on which he relied as an Authority in Point with him) threw the Circumstance of the Consent quite out of the Case.

Upon the whole, he concluded that Judgment ought to be arrested.

To this it was answered by the Counsel on the Part of the Crown, (Mr. Attorney General, Sir John Strange, Mr. Solicitor General,) that except the Resolution reported by Carthew, there is not a single Authority in the Books which saith that a Juror may not be withdrawn, or the Jury discharged, even in Capital Cases, with the Consent of all Parties. That it was done in the Case of Mansell so long ago as the 26th of Eliz. (1. Ann. 103, 104.) And all the Judges of Serjeant's-Inn in Fleet-Street then agreed, that it might be done; and had often to their Knowledge been done. That the Rule laid down by Lord Coke in his first and third Institutes runneth in general Terms, and doth not indeed except the Case of Consent; but that Case must be supposed to be excepted.

That it frequently hath been done since Lord Coke's Time, even without Consent, where the Circumstance of the Prisoner, or the Demands of Publick Justice did require it. And for this they cited 2 Hale, 295, 296, 297. 1 Vent. 69. Keil. 46, 47. 52.

They said they did not cite these Books with an entire Approbation of the Practice in every Instance in which it prevailed; for some of the Cases, particularly Whitebread's, (II. State Trials,) ought never to be drawn into Example; but only to shew what the Opinion of those Times was.

That the Opinion of the Judges in Lord Delamere's Case doth not affect the present Question. For the only Question proposed to the Judges was, whether in the Trial of a Peer in the Court of the Lord High-Steward, the Court might, after Evidence given, adjourn the Peers-Triers from Day to Day. The Judges did not presume to answer that Question, it being a Point of Judicature of which that Court alone was the proper Judge. But they did say, that in the Case of a Common Jury sworn and charged, they ought to give their Verdict before they are discharged: Meaning only, that a Jury in a Capital Case cannot be adjourned and separated after Evidence given, but must be kept together till they agree on their Verdict. The Occasion which led them to say this sheweth, that the Case of an Adjournment was what they had then in Contemplation, and not the Case of a total Dismissal of the Jury. And so doth the Reason they give for the Practice; this, they say, is done for fear of Tampering and Corruption. In the Case of a bare Adjournment there may be Room for this Fear, but in the Case of a total Dismissal, when no Verdict is to be given, there cannot.

They insisted on Rookwood's Case (IV. State Trials) as a Case in Point. For had the Prisoner's Counsel taken Exceptions to the Indictment coming within the Restrictions of the Act of the 7th of King William, and had those Exceptions been allowed, the Indictment must have been quashed, and the Jury, though sworn and charged, must have been dismissed; and yet it cannot be imagined that the quashing that Indictment, and discharging that Jury, would have discharged the Prisoner from answering to the Treason on a fresh Bill of Indictment.

As to the three Resolutions reported by Carthew, the two last, they said, are manifestly against Law, in the Latitude laid down in that Book. The King in a Civil Case may by his Prerogative withdraw a Juror, for he cannot be nonfuit; and it is frequently done in Informations in the Exchequer on account of the Revenue: And though the Court refused to do it in the Cases of Morgan and Jelfs, cited on the other Side, yet in the Case of one Wilkinson, Pasche 6 Geo. II. which was an Indictment for misapplying Money raised on the Scavengers Rate, the Court did discharge the Jury at the Prayer of Mr. Justice Abney, then one of the King's Counsel, without the Defendant's Consent.

It is objected, that a Prisoner may be drawn into a Consent to his own Prejudice: But certainly a Prisoner may do much more than consent, he may abandon all Defence, he may plead Guilty. He may on his Trial waive all his Challenges, and put himself on the first Twelve that shall appear. An Accessory cannot be brought to his Trial before the Principal is convicted or outlawed; (2. Hale 224.) But if he pleaseth, he may waive that Privilege, and submit himself to a Trial, and it shall not be Error, because he consented. Besides, in the present Case, what was done was at the Prayer of the Prisoners, and, as the Court then took the Case, manifestly for their Advantage.

Cases may happen, where the Court, ex debito Justitiæ, and out of Regard to the Prisoner, ought to discharge the Jury, (1 Hale 35.) and postpone the Trial. The Case put by Lord Hale of a Madman putting himself on his Trial is strong to this Purpose. And other Cases of the like kind may be put.

On the whole, they prayed Judgment for the King.

Sir John Strange cited a Record of Hilary 8. H. VII. Rot. 3. a Copy whereof he brought into Court. It was an Indictment for Murder, and Not Guilty pleaded. The Jury having heard all the Evidence, withdrew to consider of their Verdict, and being returned, delivered their Verdict into Court in Writing. And being examined by the Court how they came by that Writing, confessed that it was delivered into their Hands by the Prisoner at the Bar as they passed by him. The Court thereupon discharged the Jury of the Prisoner, and committed them for this Misbehaviour. And a new Venire was awarded. And the second Jury brought him in Not Guilty.

The Arguments being long, and the Day far spent, the Court deferred giving their Opinion to the 20th.

December 20, 1746. On this Day, present the same Judges as on the 15th, the Court delivered their Opinions seriatim. And all except one (Wright) agreed that Judgment ought to pass upon the Prisoners. They agreed, That admitting the Rule laid down by Lord Coke to be a good general Rule, yet it cannot be universally binding: Nor is it easy to lay down any Rule that will be so. The Rule cannot bind in Cases where it would be productive of great Hardship or manifest Injustice to the Prisoner.

* He was an Irish Judge at this Time.

In the present Case, the Prisoners were advised upon their Trial to object to the Jurisdiction of the Court: But having pleaded to Issue, it was said that they were too late with that Objection. In order therefore to let them into the Benefit of this Objection, Liberty is given them, at their Request, to withdraw their Plea of Not Guilty, before Evidence given, and to plead to the Jurisdiction. Now the Plea of Not Guilty being withdrawn, the Jury had no Issue to try, nor Evidence before them, and must of course therefore be discharged; and consequently the Prisoners have no Right to complain of that which was a necessary Consequence of an Indulgence shewn them by the Court.

The Judges who concurred in this Opinion paid very little Regard to the Resolution reported by Carthew; not only for the Reasons insisted on by the Counsel for the Crown, but because, as no other printed Report of that Time taketh any Notice of this Resolution, it is very doubtful whether there ever was any such Resolution or no; especially since Mr. Baron Clarke informed the Court that he hath a MS. Report of the late Lord Chief-Justice Eyre of the Case of the King and Perkins, in which Case Carthew supposeth Holt to have reported this Resolution.

The Case was thus: Perkins was indicted for Perjury in an Answer in Chancery: The Issue came on to be tried before Holt at the Sittings in Guildhall the ninth Day of November 1698. When the Bill was produced by the Counsel for the Prosecution in order to intitle them to read the Answer, it appeared that the Bill had never been filed, so that neither Bill or Answer could be read. Holt offered to stay till the Prosecutors could send the Bill to the Office and have it filed. But they foreseeing that it could not be done in any reasonable Time, their Counsel insisted on behalf of the Crown, upon withdrawing a Juror; Holt would not allow of it, and the Defendant was acquitted.

Holt upon this Occasion said, "I have had Occasion to consider of this Matter. In Criminal Cases, a Juror cannot be withdrawn but by Consent. And in Capital Cases it cannot be done, even with Consent."

This is the whole of the Case as reported by Eyre, not a Word of any Resolution of the Judges on the Point. And Holt's Manner of Expression, I have had Occasion to consider, seemeth to imply that the Opinion he gave was the Result of his own Thoughts on the Subject.

With regard to Tracy's MS. it was observed by Mr. Justice Abney, that Tracy was not an English Judge at the Time the Judges are supposed to have come to these Resolutions, or even so early as the Year 1698. And therefore he must have taken up the Matter upon Report at second-hand.

They all agreed that the Opinion of the Judges in Lord Delamere's Case doth not affect this Question, for the Reasons insisted on by the King's Counsel; and joined in condemning the Proceedings in the Case of Whitebread and Fenwick, as cruel and illegal.

The learned Judge (Wright) who dissented, admitted that the discharging the Jury in the present Case was an Instance of great Indulgence towards the Prisoners. But he thought it safer to adhere to the Rule of Law, which is clearly laid down by Lord Coke, than upon any account to establish a Power in Judges, which it is admitted hath been grossly abused, and may be so again.

He observed, that Mansell's Case was the first, and except the present, is the only Case wherein the Prisoner's Consent appears to have been taken: And that the asking the Prisoner's Consent in Mansell's Case plainly betrayeth a Consciousness in the Judges that the Thing was irregular, and could not be done at the Discretion of the Court.

Cases he said have been put where the Circumstances of the Prisoner seem to require that such a Power should be lodged in the Court. And other Cases may be put, where publick Justice seemeth to require the same. But these are particular and single Inconveniencies. And the Policy of the Law of England, and indeed the true Principles of all Government, will rather suffer many private Inconveniencies than introduce one publick Mischief.

He considered the Trial by the same Jury which is sworn and charged with the Prisoner, as Part of the Jus Publicum; as a sacred Deposum committed to the Judges, which they ought to deliver down inviolate to Posterity. And concluded, that the Trial on the 29th being irregular, no Judgment ought to be given on that Conviction.

But Judgment was given as in Cases of High-Treason.

Mr. Justice Foster delivered his Opinion in this Case as followeth:

This Case hath been very well argued at the Bar; but the Counsel on both Sides went into the general Question, touching the Power of the Court to discharge Juries sworn and charged in capital Cases, farther than I think was necessary.

The general Question is a Point of great Difficulty, and of mighty Importance. And I take it to be one of those Questions, which are not capable of being determined by any general Rule that hath hitherto been laid down, or possibly ever may be. For I think it is impossible to fix upon any single Rule which can be made to govern the infinite Variety of Cases which may come under this general Question, without manifest Absurdity; and in some Instances, without the highest Injustice.

I therefore choose to consider the present Question singly as it standeth upon the Record, and to throw out of it every Consideration that is foreign to it. And possibly by so doing, most of the Objections that have been made in the present Case may receive this short Answer, That they are levelled at an improper Exercise of the Power, but do not reach the present Case.

The Question therefore is not, Whether a Jury may be discharged after Evidence given, in order to the preferring a new Indictment better suited to the Nature of the Case; where, through the Ignorance or Collusion of the Officer, or the Mistake of the Prosecutor, the Fact laid varrieth from the real Fact, or cometh short of it in Point of Guilt?

This was frequently done before the Revolution, (Keil. 46. 52. Comb. 401.) and in one or two Instances since. But this is not the present Question.

Nor is the present Question, Whether the Court may discharge a Jury sworn and charged, where undue Practices appear to have been used to keep material Witnesses out of the Way; (1. Vent. 69.) or where such Witnesses have been prevented by sudden and unforeseen Accidents?

† See Anne Hawkins's Case, inf.

This likewise is not the Question, and I give no Opinion on it; only let it be remembered, that Lord Chief-Justice Hale justifieth this Practice, (2. Hale, 295, 296, 297.) which he saith prevailed in his Time, and had long prevailed, by strong Arguments drawn from the Ends of Government and the Demands of public Justice.

Nor is it now a Question, nor I hope will it ever be a Question again, Whether in a Capital Case the Court may in their Discretion discharge a Jury after Evidence given and concluded on the Part of the Crown, merely for Want of sufficient Evidence to convict; and in order to bring the Prisoner to a second Trial, when the Crown may be better prepared.

This was done in the Case of Whitebread and Fenwick, (II. State Trials) and it was certainly a most unjustifiable Proceeding. I hope it will never be drawn into Example.

Nor is the present Question, Whether the bare Consent of the Prisoner, unassisted by Counsel, and consenting to his own Prejudice, will render the Court quite blameless in discharging a Jury after Evidence on both Sides gone through and concluded?

This was done in the Case of Mansell (1 Ann. 103.) which hath been cited at the Bar. But I think it ought not to have been done; for notwithstanding what the Record saith of the Uncertainty and Insufficiency of the Verdict, the Truth of the Case was no more than this: The Jury were not agreed on any Verdict at all; and therefore nothing remained to be done by the Court, but to send them back, and to keep them together, till they should agree to such Verdict as the Court could have received and recorded; and the Prisoner ought not to have been drawn into any Consent at all: For in Capital Cases I think the Court is so far of Counsel with the Prisoner, that it should not suffer him to consent to any Thing manifestly wrong, and to his own Prejudice.

I thought proper to premise these Things, in order to clear the present Question of every Consideration which I take to be foreign to it.

And now I will state what I take to be the present Question: And that is,

Whether in a Capital Case, where the Prisoner may make his full Defence by Counsel, the Court may not discharge the Jury upon the Motion of the Prisoner's Counsel, and at his own Request, and with the Consent of the Attorney General before Evidence given, in order to let the Prisoner into a Defence, which, in the Opinion of the Court, he could not otherwise have been let into.

And I am clearly of Opinion that a Jury may in such a Case be discharged. And that the discharging the Jury under these Circumstances, will not operate so as to discharge the Prisoner from any future Trial for the same Offence.

It seems that an Opinion did once prevail, that a Jury once sworn, and charged in any Criminal Case whatsoever, could not be discharged without giving a Verdict; but this Opinion (Ray, 84.) is exploded in Ferrar's Case; and it is there called a Common Tradition which had been held by many learned in the Law.

My Lord Coke was one of those learned Men who gave into this Tradition, as far at least as concerneth Capital Cases: And he layeth down the Rule in very general Terms, in the Passages which have been cited on Behalf of the Prisoners from his first and third Institutes.

The same Rule is laid down in Hale's Summary of the Pleas of the Crown (p. 269.); a very faulty, incorrect Piece, never revised by him, nor intended for the Press.

But as his Lordship, in his History of the Pleas of the Crown, justifieth the contrary Practice, his Authority is clearly on the other Side of the Question. And his Authority is the more to be regarded, because he had seen and well considered the Passages cited from Lord Coke; though I believe the Rule, as it standeth in his Summary, hath contributed not a little to the confirming many People in Coke's Opinion.

My Lord Coke layeth down the Rule in very general Terms; but he hath not given us any of the Principles of Law or Reason whereon he groundeth it. He hath indeed, in his first Institute, cited one, and but one Authority, in Support of it, and that Authority doth not, to my Apprehension, in the least warrant it.

A Man was indicted for Larceny, (21 E. III. 18.) and upon his Arraignment pleaded Not Guilty, and put himself upon the Country: And afterwards, when the Jury was in Court, he prayed the Liberty to become an Approver, and this was denied him; for when Issue is joined, it ought to be tried. And he was tried, and found Guilty, and hanged.

This is the Whole of that Case. Here is not the least Intimation given of any general Principle, that a Jury once sworn and charged cannot be discharged without giving a Verdict; nor did the Court, as I apprehend, go upon that Principle. It went upon a Principle quite different, a Principle adapted solely to the Case then before the Court, which I shall mention presently.

Indeed Fitzherbert (Corone 449.) who abridgeth this Case, doth say, that the Reason of the Judgment was, that the Inquest having been once charged, could not be discharged: Which possibly might induce Lord Coke to draw the same Conclusion from that Case.

But the Reason given by Fitzherbert is not the Reason given in the Book; nor doth it so much as appear by the Book that the Jury was sworn. The Words of the Book are, "Après quant l' Enquest fut icy," afterwards when the Jury was here, or in Court, whether sworn or not doth not appear by the Book. But whether the Jury was sworn or not, there was not the least Occasion to resort to any general Principle, That a Jury once sworn cannot be discharged; because there was, as I hinted before, another Rule at hand adapted to the Case of an Approver, which I think wholly governed that Case.

And the Rule was this; That a Person who had once pleaded to Issue, could not after that be admitted to a Confession in order to save his own Life, by charging other Persons supposed to be his Accomplices in the same Fact. For by once solemnly denying the Fact upon his Arraignment, he had, in the Opinion of those Times, lost all Credit, and so could not be received as an Evidence against other People.

This Rule is laid down by Stamford, (Pl. Cor. 144. B. Bro. Corone 42.) and it prevailed for a long Time: And 'tis observable, that Brooke, who abridgeth this very Case, carrieth the Reason the Court went upon no farther than the Law then went in the Case of an Approver: His Words are, "A Man was arraigned for Felony and pleaded Not Guilty, and afterwards would have become an Approver, and was not suffered, because he had joined Issue before." Not because the Jury was sworn, and could not be discharged, but because he had, on his Arraignment, denied the Fact.

Thus then standeth the Case with regard to the single Authority cited by Lord Coke: The Judgment did not go upon the general Principle laid down by him and Fitzherbert, but upon a Principle peculiar to the Case of an Approver.

It must be owned, that the Judges did in After-times abate of their Rigour with regard to the Case of Approvers: and did admit Persons to the Liberty of approving, not only after Issue joined, but even after the Jury was sworn and Evidence in part given; but seldom after the Evidence gone through and concluded; as appeareth from several Instances mentioned by Lord Hale, 2. Hale, 288.

But then it must be owned, on the other hand, that whenever they did so, they went in flat Contradiction to the general Rule laid down by Coke and Fitzherbert.

I will only add, with regard to this Point, That the admitting, or not admitting Persons to become Approvers, was always considered as a Matter of mere Discretion in the Court; as a Matter of Grace and not of Right. And yet we see that in a Matter of mere Discretion, the Court did frequently, upon the special Circumstances of the Case, discharge Juries after they were sworn and charged, and had in Part heard the Evidence.

These Instances therefore must be considered as so many Exceptions to the General Rule: Though I confess they do not come up to the Case of discharging one Jury, and bringing the Prisoner to his Trial by another.

But still they shew that the Rule now contended for on the Part of the Prisoners cannot be true, in the Latitude the Words import. And I think they do in Part shew, what I hinted in the Beginning, that no General Rule can govern the Discretion of the Court on this Question in all possible Cases and Circumstances.

But this will appear in a stronger Light in those Cases where the Circumstances of the Prisoner appear on his Trial to be such, as that the Trial cannot proceed without manifest Injustice to him.

A great Variety of Cases might be put upon this Head. But as this is a Point which ought to be treated with great Caution, I think it safer to cite a Case which I find stated to my Hand, than to suppose and argue from any Cases of my own.

The Case I mean is that put by Lord Hale (1. Hale, 35.) which was mentioned the last Time at the Bar.

"In case a Man in a Phrenzy happen by some Oversight to plead to his Indictment, and put himself on his Trial; and it appeareth to the Court on his Trial that he is mad, the Judge in Discretion may discharge the Jury of him; and remit him to Gaol to be tried after the Recovery of his Understanding."

But without resorting to Authorities in a plain Case, the common Sense and Feeling of Mankind, the Voice of Nature, Reason and Revelation, all concur in this plain Rule, that no Man is to be condemned unheard; and consequently no Trial ought to proceed to the Condemnation of a Man, who by the Providence of God is rendered totally incapable of speaking for himself, or of instructing others to speak for him. And common Sense will at the same Time tell us, that the bare postponing a Trial under these Circumstances, will not discharge the Prisoner from a future Trial, when his present Disability shall be removed.

This Case is surely an Exception to any general Rule that the Wit of Man can lay down on this Point.

Another Case which I take to be an Exception to the general Rule contended for in Behalf of the Prisoners, is, when by the Indulgence of the Court, and the Consent of the Attorney-General, the Trial of the Issue goeth off after the Jury sworn and charged; in order to intitle the Prisoner to some Advantage in Point of Defence, which in the Rigour of the Law he could not otherwise be entitled to.

And this, I apprehend, appeareth from the Case of Rookwood (IV. State Trials), which also was cited at the Bar.

In that Case the Jury was sworn and charged, and the Indictment opened by the King's Counsel. The Prisoner's Counsel then offered some Exceptions to the Indictment, apprehending, as they said, that since the Act of 7th King William declareth that the Exceptions therein mentioned shall not be taken after Evidence given, the Prisoner, by a favourable Construction of the Act, had Liberty to take Exceptions at any Time before Evidence.

The Court was unanimously of Opinion, that the Prisoner's Counsel had lapsed their Time for taking any Exceptions at all. That the proper Time for taking Exceptions is before Issue joined, or at least before the Jury sworn.

And yet it being a Case of Life, and on a new Act of Parliament, the Court did agree that in that Instance only, the Counsel should be at Liberty, with the Consent of the Attorney-General, to take their Exceptions; confining themselves to the Exceptions mentioned in the Act, of which they could not have the Benefit in Arrest of Judgment.

The Prisoner's Counsel declined to enter into their Exceptions under that Restriction, and so the Trial went on. But had Exceptions under the Restrictions of that Act been taken and allowed, the Indictment must have been quashed; and the Jury then sworn and charged must have been discharged without giving a Verdict.

Lord Chief-Justice Holt did not come readily into the Expedient proposed by the rest of the Judges, of letting the Prisoner's Counsel into their Exceptions, even with the Consent of the Attorney-General: And in the Conclusion declareth, that the Attorney could not consent to it, (IV. State Trials, 666.) unless he would also consent to discharge the Jury.

These are his Words, as I have taken them from the printed Trial. His Lordship surely at that Time entertained no Doubt, that at the Prayer of the Prisoner and his Counsel, and with the Consent of the Attorney-General, a Jury sworn and charged in a Case of High Treason might be discharged. The other Judges present (who were the Lord Chief-Justice of the Common Pleas, the Lord Chief Baron, and four of the puisne Judges) must certainly be of the same Opinion; otherwise they would never have given Way to the taking of Exceptions, which, if they had been allowed, must have ended in discharging the Jury; and at the same Time could not in the Nature of Things have operated, so as to discharge the Prisoner from answering to another Indictment for the same Offence.

It is said, on the Authority of a very short and imperfect Note in Cartwright, That in less than two Years afterwards, all the Judges of England, upon Debate

Debate among themselves came to a Resolution, that in Capital Cases a Juror cannot be withdrawn, though all Parties consent to it.

It was very properly asked by the Counsel for the Crown, Upon what Occasion this Debate among the Judges was had? Whether any Case was then depending in Judgment before them which gave rise to the Conference, and which was to be governed by this Resolution, and what were the particular Circumstances of that Case, if any such there was? These Questions, I say, were very properly asked. For the true Extent of all Rules of this kind, however generally they may be penned, is, and always will be, in a great measure, adjusted by the Circumstances of the Case under Consideration, at the Time when the Rule appears to be given.

It seems Endeavours have been used to come at the necessary Light in these Particulars, but to no Purpose. Only it is said upon the Authority of a MS. of a late learned Judge (Tracy), that this Resolution, among others, was taken upon a Conference among the Judges in relation to an Indictment against the then Sheriffs of London for a bare Misdemeanour; but what were the Circumstances of that Case, or what became of it, doth not appear. And therefore I freely own, this extrajudicial Opinion (for with regard to Capital Cases it is extrajudicial) weigheth very little with me in the present Question; and doth by no means shake the Authority of Rookwood's Case, which I take to be a Case very nearly in point with the present; and moreover was a Case where the Point did judicially come before the Court, and in which the Court had the Assistance of very able Counsel on both Sides of the Question.

The only Difference between the Cases is this: Rookwood could not have had the Benefit of his Exceptions without the Indulgence of the Court, and Consent of the Attorney General; whereas the Prisoners at the Bar might, in my Opinion, have had the full Benefit of their Point of Law without either. I need not repeat what I said on this Head the last Time I spoke of this Matter. But as a Doubt arose on that Point, the Expedient now under Consideration was thought of. This Expedient the Court came into at the Prayer of the Prisoners and their Counsel, and with the Consent of the Attorney General.

Not to bring the Prisoners Lives twice in Jeopardy, (which is one great Inconvenience of discharging Juries in Capital Cases) but merely in order to give them one Chance for their Lives, which it was apprehended they had lost by pleading to Issue.

Nor was it done to postpone their Trials to an unreasonable Distance, when their Witnesses might be dead or wearied out by a long and expensive Attendance, (which is another great Inconvenience which may attend the discharging of Juries at Discretion, and was an Ingredient of great Hardship in the Case of Whitebread and Forwick) but in order to bring them to a Trial with all the Speed that might be, in case their Plea should be over-ruled. And accordingly they were tried the very next Day, as soon as Judgment was given on their Plea.

Upon the whole, my Opinion is, that all general Rules touching the Administration of Justice must be so understood, as to be made consistent with the fundamental Principles of Justice. And consequently all Cases where a strict Adherence to the Rule would clash with those fundamental Principles, are to be considered as so many Exceptions to it. The Cases I have mentioned, and many others that might be mentioned, are Exceptions to the general Rule insisted on in behalf of the Prisoners.

The Case at Bar is I think an Exception to that Rule; and at the same time standeth clear of the Inconveniences mentioned by the Prisoners Counsel.

The discharging the Jury in this Case was not a Strain in favour of Prerogative, it was not done to the Prejudice of the Prisoners; on the contrary, it was intended as a Favour to them.

In that Light I say it was considered by the Court, in that Light it was considered by the Prisoners and their Counsel, and accordingly they prayed it; and in that Light Mr. Attorney General, with his usual Candour, consented to it.

And in that Light I know of no Objection in point of Law or Reason to it. And therefore I am of Opinion that Judgment ought not to be arrested.

The Difference of Opinion in the Court relating to their Cases, it is thought saved their Lives; for they were not executed, but pardoned, on Condition of being sent abroad.

XXXVII. The Trial of JAMES BRADSHAW, at St. Margaret's Hill, Southwark, October 27, 1746. for High-Treason.

JAMES BRADSHAW was indicted for High Treason, &c. The Counsel for the King opened the Indictment, that the Prisoner at the Bar stood indicted by the Name of James Bradshaw, for High-Treason, in compassing and imagining the King's Death, adhering to his Majesty's Enemies, and levying (with other false Traitors) a cruel and destructive War in these Kingdoms, &c. And the Treason was laid to be committed on the 10th of November, at Carlisle, in the County of Cumberland, in the nineteenth Year of his Majesty's Reign, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the King's Peace, and the Forms of the Statute, &c. Then Sir John Strange set forth, that the Prisoner, contrary to his Allegiance to our Sovereign Lord King George the Second, met at Manchester to raise a Regiment, which the Pretender intended to distinguish by the Name of the Manchester Regiment, of which Townley, who was lately executed, was made Colonel, and that the Prisoner Bradshaw accepted of a Captain's Commission in the said Regiment, and acted as such; that afterwards he marched with the said Regiment to Derby in a hostile Manner, and in a Highland Dress, armed with Pistols and a Sword, a white Cockade on his Bonnet: That he paid his Company and exercised them: That afterwards he retreated with the Rebel Army from Derby to Manchester, and from thence to Clifton-Moor, where he in a Skirmish headed his Men against the Duke's Troops: That when he came to Carlisle he often waited on the Young Pretender's Levee: That when the Rebels found themselves closely pursued by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland, there was a Counsel of War directly held amongst them, which Part of their Army should march for Scotland, and what Number should stay in the Garrison at Carlisle, to secure a Retreat for the rest of the Rebels.

The Prisoner, to pursue his avowed Disloyalty to the present happy Establishment, desired he might go on with the Rebels to Scotland, and accordingly did go with them in their Route to Glasgow, was at the Battle of Falkirk, where was such a Storm of Hail and Rain, that his Majesty's Men could not prime or discharge their Pieces: From thence he marched with the Rebel Army to Sterling, thence to Perth and Strathbogie, and finally was at Gulladen Moor, in the Lord Elcho's Troop of Horse, commonly called the Pretender's Life-Guards, where he was taken a Prisoner by his Majesty's Troops.—To prove which he called the following Witnesses.

Samuel Maddox being sworn, said, that Mr. Bradshaw, the Prisoner, was at the Bell in Manchester (the Young Pretender being present) where was a Consultation to raise a Regiment of Foot, for which Mr. Marroy, the Pretender's Secretary, delivered a Commission for that End; and that Francis Townley, a Roman Catholic Gentleman, was appointed Colonel of the said Regiment, which was to be called the Manchester Regiment; and that Mr. Bradshaw was nominated Captain, and himself (Mr. Maddox) was also appointed an Officer; that afterwards he enlisted several private Men and Volunteers into the said Corps; that he saw the Prisoner march with the Rebel Army to Derby, and from thence back again to Manchester (when they found his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland's Army was near them), and from thence to Carlisle, in a Highland Dress, with Pistols and a Sword by his Side, and a White Cockade in his Bonnet: That at Carlisle, when the Young Pretender had sent for the Officers of the Manchester Regiment, to take his leave of them, and to direct them how to act if attacked by his Majesty's Forces, the Prisoner was there in the Chamber; but on account of some Misunderstanding between him and Townley, the Prisoner refused to stay behind with the Rebel Army at Carlisle, and desired the Young Pretender would permit him to go on with them to Scotland; and that accordingly the Prisoner did march out of the Gates of Carlisle to go with the Young Pretender to Scotland.

James Patterson being produced and sworn, said, that Mr. Bradshaw, the Prisoner at the Bar, marched with the Rebel Army from Manchester to Derby, armed with Pistols and Broad Swords, Drums beating, Pipes playing, Colours flying, and retreated with them from Derby to Manchester, and from thence to Carlisle, which Place he left (upon some Discontent with Col. Townley, who commanded the Manchester Regiment under the Young Pretender) to go in the Rebel Army, and then he engaged a Volunteer in Lord Elcho's Troop of Horse Guards, who were esteemed the Life-Guards to the Young Pretender.

Henry Giffen was also produced and sworn, who said, that he himself was unfortunately seduced into the Rebel Army, and entered into Lord Elcho's Troop of Horse Guards; that the Prisoner, Mr. Bradshaw, marched with them as a private Man in the said Corps; that the Troop was drawn up at the Battle of Culloden, and that he there saw the Prisoner on Horse-back in the said Troop, with Pistols, and a broad Sword by his Side, and a white Cockade, and that he continued with the said Troop till he was taken Prisoner by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland's Army.

Then Captain Moore, an Officer in the Duke of Cumberland's Army was examined on Oath, and gave the Court the following Account of the Prisoner: That he saw the Prisoner (whom he had been acquainted with at Manchester) beyond the Wood of Gulladen Moor, and told him, that he was sorry to see him in such bad Company, having had Orders from his Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland to take an Account of all the Officers and Soldiers that should be made Prisoners; that Mr. Bradshaw

See IV. State Trials, and Holt's and Tracy's Opinion in 1704, in the Case of Anne Hawkins, were as followeth:

Mr. Justice Tracy's MS. having been cited in the foregoing Case by the Prisoner's Counsel, and taken some Notice of by the Court, I think it not amiss to subjoin from the same MS. which I had not then seen, a Report of the following Case:

"At the Sessions at the Old Bailey before Enslin Term 1704, Anne Hawkins was indicted for breaking the Mansion-house of Samuel Story in the Night-time. It appeared on Evidence that the House belonged to the African Company; that Story was an Officer of the Company, and that he and many other Persons, as Officers of the Company, had separate Apartments in the House in which they inhabited and lodged; and that the Apartment of Story was broke open. It was held by Holt Chief Justice, myself, and Baron Bury, that the Apartment of Story could not be called his Mansion-house, because he and the others inhabit in the House merely as Officers and Servants of the Company; and thereupon the Jury was discharged of this Indictment, and it was amended, and laid to be the Mansion-house of the Company."

The Record hath been looked into; it warranteth the Report of the learned Judge in the substantial Parts of it, though in some Points it is defective. Two Bills were in fact preferred against the Woman; the first for Burglary and Larceny in the Dwelling-house of Samuel Story, to which she pleaded Not Guilty, and put herself upon the Country; the second for Burglary and Larceny in the Mansion-house of the African Company, in which she is charged to have committed the Burglary upon the same Day, and to have stolen the very same Goods, as in the former Bill.

It appeareth upon this second Bill, that she was acquitted of the Burglary and found guilty of the Larceny. But it doth not appear by any Entry on the first, that the Court proceeded on it farther than the receiving and recording her Plea, and remanding her to Newgate, probably till the second amended Bill could be prepared and sent to the Grand Jury. But certainly it is more reasonable to impute this Defect to the Neglect of the Officer who omitted to make the proper Entry, than to imagine that the learned Judge was totally mistaken in a plain Matter of Fact, falling within his own Knowledge.

Another Circumstance which may beget some Doubt, might be, and probably was, owing to mere Accident. The first Bill is now found upon the File among the Indictments of the then next preceding Sessions (March 8th 1703). But it ought to be remembered that neither Holt, Tracy nor Bury attended at that time; and that it appeareth by the Record, that they all did attend at the following Sessions. At which Time, according to the Judge's Report, the Point came under Consideration, upon Evidence given on the first Bill, and the second amended by the Direction of the Court was preferred.

said he was a Captain in the Manchester Regiment, but afterwards (on the Road to Inverness) he said that he belonged to Lord Elche's Troop of Life-Guards.

After they had gone through the Witnesses for the Crown, Mr. Jodrell and Mr. Ford, who were Counsel for the Prisoner, stood up and pleaded on his Behalf, admitting that what the Evidence for the King had said was true, that the Prisoner did unfortunately engage himself in the Rebel Army, and did march with them from Manchester to Derby, and from thence retreated with them to Manchester, and so on to Carlisle, and then accompanied them to Scotland, until they came to Culloden Moor, where he was taken Prisoner; but that the unfortunate Gentleman at the Bar, had been troubled with an Insanity of Mind, from his Youth, so that he was Non Compos Mentis, and consequently, if they should prove it, he could not be deemed guilty of the High Treason laid in the Indictment: For, said they, he hath been melancholy from his Childhood, and in his Apprenticeship endeavoured to destroy himself by flinging himself out of the Window; and we shall be able to prove that once he did fling himself out of the Window, that he attempted to kill the worthy Gentleman his Master, that he hath been confined in a Madhouse for these Lunatick Pranks, that after the Expiration of his Apprenticeship he married a fine Lady, whom he dearly loved, and on whose Death his Insanity of Mind increased; that the Rebels esteemed him no other than a Lunatick, first giving him the titular Name of a Captain in their Manchester Regiment, where he sometimes marched in the Columns, and sometimes rambled from them, and at other times a private Man in Lord Elche's Troop of Horse, and sometimes he was left behind. We shall likewise, says he, be able to prove to your Lordships Satisfaction, and the Court, that this unfortunate Gentleman, after the Death of his only Son, was in such a mad Condition, that he was strapp'd down to his Bed, and a Watch set over him, to prevent him from injuring himself, and those about him; and quoted a Case from Lord Chief Justice Hale, wherein it is mentioned, that a Person insane in Mind cannot be deemed Guilty of Treason or Felony.

Then Thomas Buerdell was called and sworn, who said, that he served his Apprenticeship with the Prisoner, to Mr. Worral, a Manchester Factor in Lawrence-lane, in London; that when he came out of his Time he went down to Manchester to set up for himself with a handsome Fortune; that in Part of his Apprenticeship he lay in the same Bed with the Prisoner, who used often to jump out of the Bed, and skip about the Room, like a Madman, and several times attempted to jump out of the Window; that he (the Evidence) was in danger of his Life, and particularly, one time he caught him by the Throat, in such a manner as had like to have destroyed him, whereupon he complained to his Master, who ordered them separate Beds: that at another time, his Master called him to an account, to settle the Books, and make up his Cash, when the Prisoner attempted to stab his Master with a Penknife, and that he was discharged from his Master before the time of his Apprenticeship was out.

Cross-Examined.

The Witness admitted that he did Business sometimes very regular for his Master; and that he was deficient in his Cash; but that he (the Witness) was obliged to put the Poker, Tongs, Fire-shovel, and Chairs out of the Room, to prevent him from doing any Mischief, and that he used to walk in his Sleep.

Then the Judge asked this Witness, if the Prisoner used to get drunk? which he could not deny.

John Davis was examined, and said, he had known the Prisoner sixteen Years; that he used to be out of his Mind in the Night, and heard him make a Noise inwardly; and that he was often strapp'd down; but being cross-examined by the Attorney General, he admitted that his being strapp'd down was to prevent him from walking in his Sleep; and that the Prisoner used to help to fix the Straps, which in the Morning he used to unloose himself.

Charles Fernagan said, that there were Iron Bars put in the Window to prevent the Prisoner from jumping into the Streets, and that he was often strapp'd down for the like Consequences. He often appeared in the Day-time melancholy, and had on him the Symptoms of a Man out of his Mind. The Witness (being cross-examined) admitted, that he kept his Books regular, that he drew Bills of Exchange that were always honoured by his Correspondents, who made no Hesitation on account of his Infirmary; but at other times he was attended by the Doctors for his Disorder of Mind.

A Clergyman, Brother-in-law to the Prisoner's deceased Wife, said the Prisoner was disordered in his Mind, that he often laid with him, that he was strapp'd down in the Night, to prevent him from doing Mischief. That once he seized him by the Throat, and if he had not been a strong Man, he would have killed him; and that he once jumped out of the Window and bruised himself.

Being cross-examined by the Attorney General, if his being strapp'd down was not to prevent his hurting himself in his Sleep, and if he did not use to walk in his Sleep? the Witness appeared puzzled to answer the Question, 'till the Lord Chief Justice demanded a categorical Answer, Whether his Illness, or Insanity of Mind, was any otherwise, than from Fits, or walking in his Sleep? The Witness, after being asked the Question six or seven times, with some Hesitation answered in the Affirmative.

Then Mr. Roile, a Country Farmer, was produced and sworn, and said the Prisoner came to his House, seven Miles from Manchester, six Months before the Rebels came there, to be retired, and take Physick for his Illness; that he did several frantick Tricks that appeared to him to be the Acts of a Lunatick; but being examined by the Solicitor-General, what particular Instances he could give, he said, one Day he advised him to plow the Field the wrong way, but could not remember any other Acts of Frenzy; but insisted, that he used to walk up and down in the Day-time melancholy, and sometimes walked in his Sleep.

Jane Richardson was produced and sworn, who deposes, That she lived a Servant-maid with the Prisoner several Years; that he was very fond of his Wife, and that in his Frenzy he used to come into her Room, and without Provocation tear off her Cap, and pull her by the Hair of her Head; that he used to be distracted a Week together, sometimes would go into his Wife's Chamber, when she was in Bed, and pull off all the Cloaths, and fling them about the Room; and that at Manchester, he had jumped out of the Window; so that they contrived Straps to tie him down in his Bed.

[Here she opened a Handkerchief with two Sets of Straps; and showed them to the Court.]

These Straps, says she, I made myself; one Sett we kept at home, to tie him down in his Bed at Nights, to prevent him from hurting himself; or any Body else; and the other Sett he carried with him when he intended to lay Abroad: that when the Rebels came to Manchester, and some of them in his Parlour, she went into the Room to ask him how he did; upon which he got up, and pulled the Cap off her Head, and that she thought him a Lunatick. She farther added, That his Wife, on her Death-bed, desired, that she (the Witness) would live with her Husband, on account of his Weakness of Mind, to take Care of him; but on account of his rough Usage to her, she had some Thoughts of leaving him just before the Rebels came to Manchester: She likewise added, that the Prisoner's Illness had increased since the Death of his Child.

The Counsel for the Crown not being apprized that the Prisoner would make such a Defence, occasioned some Debate, whether they should examine more Witnesses, and then agreed they had a Right to examine Witnesses so far as to prove the Prisoner Compos Mentis, from the time of entering into the Rebellion, to the time of his being taken Prisoner at Culloden.

Sir John Strange then called Samuel Maddox; but first observed to the Court and Jury, that to him the Prisoner appeared to be the wisest Man in the Manchester Regiment, for nothing but Madmen would enter into such a Rebellion against so good and merciful a Prince, who had violated no Man's Property, and who, during a long Reign, had never invaded the Rights and Liberties of the Subject; but if an Instance could be given of the Wisdom of any of those People, who had madly engaged in the Rebellion, it was the Prisoner, who refused to stay with the others at Carlisle, where there was all the Probability that could be of their being taken by the Duke of Cumberland, to be delivered up to the Justice of their Country, some of whom had already been executed, and more like to undergo the same Fate, which the Prisoner hoped to avoid by the Retreat he made with the Rebels into Scotland.

Samuel Maddox being re-examined, said, That the Prisoner was his Captain, and inveigled him into the Rebel Army; that being short of Money, and discontented, the Prisoner gave him a Guinea; that he never knew the Prisoner out of his Mind; that often he used to send to Maddox's Master, who was an Apothecary, for Medicines that were cooling, which he apprehended to be for no other use, than after hard Drinking; that the Prisoner had sometimes been afflicted with Fits, but never to continue so as to deprive him of his Senses, so as not to know whether he was, or was not, engaging in a rebellious Act.

My Lord Chief Justice then summed up the Evidence in a very learned Manner, and explained the Quotations out of Hale's Pleas of the Crown; and without going out, the Jury brought the Prisoner in Guilty.

James Bradshaw, aged 29 Years, was descended from very substantial and reputable Parents, his Father being a large Dealer at Manchester in Lancashire, who having but an only Child, (this unfortunate Person) he gave him a liberal Education, by putting him to the Free School, where he learnt Writing and Arithmetick, and made a considerable Progress in the Classics. His Father then sent him up to London, James chusing to be a Tradesman rather than go to the University, of which he had his Choice; and accordingly was bound Apprentice to Mr. Charles Worral, an eminent Manchester Factor at the Golden Ball in Lawrence-Lane near Cheapside, where he continued six Years, well respected by his Master and the Customers, being very diligent and obliging in the Business; and by the young Gentlemen in the Neighbourhood, and through the whole Circle of his Acquaintance was very well beloved, being a very facetious, good-natured young Fellow. In the sixth Year of his Time, a young Lady, Daughter of Mr. Waggstaff, a wealthy Gentleman of Manchester, coming to London to see some of her Acquaintance as well as the Fashions and Curiosities of this Place, Mr. Bradshaw had frequent Opportunities of visiting her, and waiting upon her to all the gay and polite Places of Diversion which this Place afforded; he at length informed her of his Affection for her, and that his Intentions were honourable; if she could like him for a Husband, he should think himself the most happy Man in the World: After several Overtures and Addresses of this Sort, the young Lady kindly answered, that if both their Parents approved of it, she would consider on it; and Mr. Bradshaw growing very much in her Favour, she desired him to write to Manchester about it, which he did accordingly; but before he received an Answer to his Letter, he had Advice that his Father, who had been some time in a bad State of Health, was so very ill, that his Life was despaired of. On this he determined to go down to Manchester; and acquainting his Master with his Intention, and of his Father's Illness, Mr. Worral generously consented thereto; and moreover told him, that if his Father did not get over his Illness, or continued so long ill, that his Absence might be prejudicial to the Business, he should be at his Liberty with respect to serving out the Remainder of his Time and, that he should be glad to see him well settled where there was a good established Trade. Soon after his Arrival at Manchester his Father expired, and left him in Possession of a considerable Fortune to carry it on; and after he had made a decent Burial for his Father, he then renewed his Addresses to Miss Waggstaff, and in a little time was married to her, with whom he had a handsome Fortune, and an accomplished Lady sufficient to make any reasonable or prudent Man happy, in the State of Matrimony.

Not long after he entered into Partnership with Mr. James Dawson, a Manchester Warehouseman, near the Axe-Inn in Aldermanbury. In about two Years time he was so unfortunate as to lose his Wife, which it was believed affected him so as sometimes to cause an Insanity of Mind, and at other times, in his lucid Intervals, he appeared a bright Wit; but he gave himself up to the keeping of Company, whereby he contracted an Acquaintance with Jesuits and Popish Priests (for in those Principles he had been always educated), from whom he imbibed the Principles of Jacobitism more strongly, and from time to time contracted such an Affection to the Cause of the Pretender and his Adherents, as to declare publicly (soon after the Pretender landed) amongst his Associates, that he would embrace the first Opportunity to serve the Cause. When the Pretender came to Manchester, he with several others of the same Principles, waited on that mock Prince, and tendered his Service to him, who finding Mr. Bradshaw to be a young Gentleman of a good Family and Fortune, and of some Interest, conferred on him the Trust of a Captain of a Regiment to be raised in Manchester, under the Command of Col. Townley, who was since executed on Kennington Common, for High-Treason; and Mr. Bradshaw had no sooner got his Commission, than he went about Manchester, and the neighbouring Villages, to recruit for the same Regiment, in which he had such Success, that he raised a Number of Men for the Service of the said Pretender, by whom he was greatly caressed, and at whose Levee he often attended, and was consulted with in several of their Councils of War. He afterwards marched in a gallant Manner at the Head of his Company with the Rebels to Derby, and accompanied them in their Flight back to Manchester, when they heard the Duke was at their Heels, and from thence to Carlisle, where he waited (with the rest of the Officers) on the Young Pretender to take his Leave of him, it being agreed, that some Part of their Army should stay at Carlisle to secure a Retreat for the Rebels; and then he insisted that he would not stay behind under the Command of Col. Townley, with whom there was no good Harmony; for some Misunderstanding happened between them, on Account of a young Lady, which they had severally addressed at a Ball, which was kept at the Bull-Head Inn in Manchester, for the neighbouring Gentry; and indeed this Animosity was increased by the haughty Behaviour of Col. Townley, who now imagined the other to be under his Dominion, and used often to put Mr. Bradshaw upon Duty that was disagreeable to him.

What gave Mr. Bradshaw the greatest Disquiet was, that when the Pretender proposed to raise a Regiment of Horse, of which Townley was to be Colonel, Townley was labouring for Thomas Deacon (executed with Townley, &c. at Kennington) to succeed him in the Command; and soon after the Rebel Army had left Carlisle, Bradshaw went away incognito, and joined them again in Scotland, where he lifted himself a Volunteer in Lord Elcho's Horse, commonly called amongst the Rebels the first Troop of Guards; and he continued with the Rebels in that Rank, until he was taken Prisoner at the Battle of Culloden.

As to Mr. Bradshaw's Conduct in general, even from the Time of his engaging in the Rebellion, and till within a short Time of his Death, it must be confessed, that his Behaviour has been all of a Piece. Nothing but Infatuation could determine a Man to shut up his Shop, leave his Business and Effects, and ruin (with all honest Men) his Character, to follow a wicked and rebellious Multitude: And truly for what?—To be made a Captain!—Nay, it is Matter of Fact, that he was worth several thousand Pounds, his Trade flourishing, and his Credit well established in the World; yet was he so hearty in the good old Cause (as he called it), that he advanced Cash out of his own Pocket to support his ragged Company.

Soon after the Battle of Culloden-Moor, which put a happy End to this wicked and unnatural Rebellion, an Order was sent from the Secretary of State's Office for bringing to London such of the Rebels as had been most active in the Young Pretender's Service, and amongst those that were put on Ship-board was Mr. Bradshaw. There he behaved with the greatest Insolence imaginable, and did not scruple voluntarily to tell those Officers belonging to his Majesty who had the Care of him, that they could not hurt him, for he was above their Cut, or Words which carried the same Meaning.

When the Vessel on board of which they embarked arrived in the River, they were (viz. 43.) committed to the New Gaol in Southwark; by his Grace the Duke of Newcastle's Warrant, and continued Prisoners there till the necessary Proceedings were prepared for their Prosecution.

About the Time the Manchester Rebels were ordered for Execution (Bradshaw being at that Time a Prisoner in the New Gaol, Southwark), the Night before they suffered, he spoke to Mr. Townley and Mr. Berwick in a disrespectful Manner, saying, I find you must shortly march into other Quarters. Mr. Townley made no Answer; but Mr. Berwick, always remarkable for his Jocularities, said, "Johnny, you need not triumph at our Misfortunes, for, take my Word on't, you will find Mocking is catching."

Bradshaw, the Night preceding the Execution of the Manchester Rebel Officers, drank very freely, and seemed quite unconcerned at the melancholy Fate which was inevitably next Day to be the Consequence of their wicked Undertaking. Mr. Berwick told Mr. Chadwick, that Bradshaw seemed to reflect on them, rather than pity or condole with them. Mr. Chadwick replied, "What can you expect from him? I am only sorry that it reflects so much Dishonour on us all, as to admit such a Fellow an Officer in the Regiment."

In the Morning of the Execution of the Manchester Rebels, about seven o'Clock, when the Sledges came in to draw the Prisoners to Execution, Bradshaw was walking about the Gaol-Yard in his Morning Gown, with some Gentlemen, who came thither either out of Curiosity, or to take Leave of their dying Friends, and with a sneering and ungentleman-like Air, said, (pointing to the Sledges) "Don't you think these Things are very well contrived? Upon my Word, they will do exceeding well for the Purpose;"—and then raked amongst the Straw in the Sledges, telling the Drivers, that if they did not get more Straw, the Lads (meaning the Prisoners) would be wet; and many other silly Expressions, which, if inserted, the Reader would hardly credit.

When he was called upon his Trial, he appeared very gay, in a new Suit of Green Cloth Cloaths, and stood very unconcerned at the Bar, minding very little what was sworn against him: But when the Evidence was closed, and summed up to the Jury, and they brought him in Guilty, he was quite thunder-struck, and changed Colour very much, and was so feeble that he could scarcely walk from the Bar.

His Conviction and Condemnation made but little Alteration in him; for though he was not so ludicrous as he had been all along, he supplied that Part with an undaunted Assurance, and ill-grounded Hopes of a Reprieve, till his Master informed him on Tuesday Night, that all Endeavours that had been used to save his Life were ineffectual; and persuaded him to make his Peace with God.

He was executed as a Traitor on Friday, November 28, 1746; at Kennington Common.

XXXVIII. The Trial of Sir JOHN WEDDERBURN, Bart. at St. Margaret's-Hill, Southwark, November 4, 1746, before the Lord Chief Justice Lee, Sir Martin Wright, Sir James Reynolds, Sir Michael Foster, Knts. and Mr. Baron Clive, for High-Treason.

SIR John Wedderburn, Bart. was indicted for High-Treason; which Treason was laid to be committed on the 16th of April, in the 20th Year of his present Majesty's Reign.

Andrew Johnson said, He saw Sir John with the Officers of Lord Strathallan's Horse, in plain Cloaths, and a Sword by his Side, after the Battle of Preston Pans, free and not forced.

John Falkner said, He saw the Prisoner at Holyrood-House, amongst the Officers in the Rebel Army, in plain Cloaths, with a Small-sword by his Side.

Roger MacDonald said, He saw the Prisoner at Aberdeen, in a plain Dress and Small-sword (but no Cockade) with the Officers of Lord Strathallan's Horse, and that he lodged with Mr. Johnson at Aberdeen, without a Billet.

James Mortimer saw him at Aberdeen, with the Officers of Lord Ogilvie's Regiment, under no Restraint or Force.

John Bruce said, That he paid Sir John Ten Shillings for Ale-excise, and Twelve Shillings for Malt-excise; and unless he had paid it to him, the Rebels threatened to seize his Copper; for which Excise he took Receipts, but did not produce them, because he left them at Home.

Henry Edwards deposed, That he saw the Prisoner the latter End of October, at old Gordon of Glenbuck's House at Perth; that Sir John declared, he was not concerned in the Rebellion, that he had a Commission sent to him to collect the Excise; but it was in his Father's Name, and that he would go to Edinburgh to get it rectified; and he accordingly did go to Edinburgh, and about the Middle of November returned to Perth, where a Drum went about the Town proclaiming, that all Brewers, and Dealers in Leather, Candles, and other exciseable Goods, should go to Sir John, and pay the Excise, on Pain of Military Execution.

Then several Receipts for Money paid to him for Excise, were produced, and proved to be Sir John Wedderburn's Hand-writing for Excise, dated progressively from the 25th of November, to the 8th of January following.

Alexander Russell deposed, That he saw the Prisoner, Sir John, at Holyrood House, after the Battle of Preston-Pans, in a plain Dress, and a Small-sword by his Side, and that the Young Pretender issued an Order forbidding any Body from carrying Arms, but those who belonged to his Army; and that if Sir John had not belonged to the Rebels, he dared not wear a Sword.

Captain Eyre said, The Prisoner acknowledged himself a private Man in the Pretender's Life-Guards.

Andrew Robinson said, He was a Servant to Major Glasgow, and saw the Prisoner at Dundee with the Rebels, and at Burroughburgh, going to the Young Pretender's Quarters; that the Prisoner collected the Excise from six Persons in this Witness's Presence.

John Adamson said, he paid Excise to the Prisoner twice; and that the Prisoner had a Guard with him at his Quarters, where he received the Excise Duty.

The Prisoner's Defence.

The Counsel for the Prisoner alledged, by the Seventh of William the Third, No Overt-Acts of High-Treason shall be proved, unless the same is laid in the Indictment; and the bare Collecting the Excise was no Overt-Act, without they could prove him armed in the Rebellion; that the Prisoner's Father did collect the Excise for his present Majesty King George the Second; that the Rebels came and took his Horse out of his Park, and that he went after them to get them back again, where they seized him, and detained him a Prisoner, and forced him to continue with them to collect the Excise.

George Waters, Working-mason, was the first Witness examined for the Prisoner, and he deposed, That the Rebels came to Sir John's House in September 1745, and took away three of his Horses, for the Pretender's Service; when Sir John said, That he would not let his Horses go for such a Use; and went to get them back again; and that some of the Rebels told him, if he would not give them freely, he himself should go with them, and so forced him with them; that this Evidence went to him, when he found him guarded by the Rebels, so close, that he could not go out of the Room without Liberty from Lord Strathallan; that some time after he came to his House, and staid four Days at Home; that afterwards one hundred Men came armed, who guarded his House, and carried him away; that the Witness said, he saw him at the Day carried away by the MacIntoshes; that afterwards he came from the Day to his House, and staid at his House till the fifth of February, when forty or fifty Men came and pressed him, and carried him to Edinburgh in the Middle of March. The Witness further said, That his Brother was Collector of the Excise at Inverness for King George; that he had known the Prisoner two Years; that he always wore a Small-sword, and that he was a Prisoner at his own House every Day, from November to the Beginning of February.

David Hutcheson deposed, That he was a Servant to the Prisoner Sir John Wedderburn; that five armed Men came and seized several of his Horses in his Park, and that his Lady went to them, and prevailed on them to release a Mare; that they abused her and called her Rebel-Bitch; that they seized the Prisoner when he went after his Horses, to get them back, and carried him to Lord Ogilvie's; that the Prisoner returned, and a hundred armed Men came and retook him Prisoner, and threatened to stab him with their Bayonets.

The Jury, without going out, brought him in Guilty. Death.

Sir JOHN WEDDERBURN'S Case *

THE Overt-Acts were laid at Aberdeen, in the Shire of Aberdeen. It was proved by two Witnesses, that he was with the Rebels at Aberdeen; and by those and other Witnesses, that he was at divers other Places with them.

The King's Counsel called Witnesses, who proved likewise, that he was appointed by the Pretender's Son, Collector of the Excise; and that he did actually collect the Assize in several Places where the Rebel Army lay, by virtue of that Appointment, for the Use of the Rebel Army.

The Prisoner's Counsel insisted, that this Sort of Evidence ought not to be admitted. For though collecting Money for the Service of Rebels is an Overt-Act of High-Treason, yet it not being laid in the Indictment, no Evidence ought to be given of it; and they relied on the Statute of 7 K. W. But in this they were over-ruled, upon the Reasons given in the Case of Deacon †.

Sir John Wedderburn, Bart. was the Son of Alexander Wedderburn, of Aberdeenshire, whose Family have been long resident in that Part of Scotland, several of whose Ancestors are honourably mentioned in the Scottish Histories, especially Sir David Wedderburn, who was killed at the Battle of Muffelburgh. The late Sir Alexander, Father to this unfortunate Gentleman, was greatly esteemed for his known Attachment to the Revolution Principles, and the Hanover Succession; inasmuch that the Government thought proper to make him a Receiver of the Excise, and other Duties, which, with a small Estate he had near Dundee, enabled him to bring up a numerous Family; but being of a liberal and generous Spirit, he left the Estate incumbered, so that when Sir John arrived to his Honour of a Baronet, he had nothing to support it; though on the Expectation of having an Estate to descend to him free, he married a young Lady of a reputable Family in his Neighbourhood; for on his Father's Death the Estate was destined to be sold, in order to satisfy the Father's Debts; that when Sir John found nothing coming in order to support his Family, he retired to a small Farm, with a thatched House and Clay Floor, which he occupied with great Industry, and thereby made a laborious but starving Shift to support a Wife and nine Children, who used to run about in the Fields barefoot.

The extreme Poverty of Sir John, and his numerous Dependents, overcame Sir John's Duty to all kind of Society, and the present happy Establishment; and being tempted with a Commission from the Pretender to collect the Excise, yet in some Measure forced to do it, Sir John's Loyalty at last gave way to his Poverty; though it is admitted, that he never did any Acts of Violence to his Majesty's Subjects, any other than receiving the Duties arising by the Excise, having never bore Arms, or caused any one to enlist into the Rebel Service.

After Sir John was made a Prisoner, he was delivered to the Care of Captain Eyre, an Officer appointed by the Duke of Cumberland, to take charge of the Rebel Officers, who treated him with great Humanity, according to his Birth and Dignity; and conveyed him on board one of his Majesty's Ships of War to the River Thames, from whence he was carried with the other Officers, to the New-Gaol in Southwark, where he was lodged in the Master-Side of the Gaol with Sir James Kinloch, Mr. Hamilton, and others, during which Time he behaved like a Gentleman; being plentifully supplied, and indeed flattered himself with being acquitted, as he thought he had not armed himself in the Rebellion, but was very much shocked when the Jury found him Guilty; and after Sentence of Death, his Behaviour was consistent with the Character of a Gentleman, being sensible of his Error, and the Calamity he had brought on himself, his inoffensive Lady, and innocent Posterity.

He was executed at Kennington-Common as a Traitor, Nov. 28, 1746.

XXXIX. Proceedings at the Court of King's-Bench, Westminster, 21 Nov. 1746, against CHARLES RATCLIFFE, Esq. on a Conviction and Attainder of High-Treason in May 1716, before special Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer ‡.

HE was concerned with his Brother, the late Earl of Derwentwater, in the Rebellion of 1715; and in May 1716, was convicted and attainted of High-Treason before special Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, pursuant to the Act of the first of the late King. While he was under Sentence of Death, and probably before the Act of general Pardon of the third of the late King passed, (See the 45th Section of the Act) he made his Escape out of Newgate, and got over to France.

At the latter End of the Year 1745, he was, with some other Officers, French, Scotch, and Irish, taken on the Coast on board a French Ship of War; which was laden with Arms, Ammunition, and other warlike Stores, bound, as was supposed, for Scotland, where the Rebels were at that Time in Arms.

On Friday the 21st of November 1746, he was brought to the Bar by virtue of a Habeas Corpus, directed to the Constable of the Tower, or his Deputy; and the Record of his Conviction and Attainder was at the same Time removed thither by Certiorari.

The Habeas Corpus, with the Return, and also the Certiorari and Record of the Conviction and Attainder being read, the Substance of the Record was opened to him in English by the Secondary on the Crown Side; who then asked him what he had to say why Execution should not be done upon him according to the Judgment. He prayed that Counsel might be assigned him, and named Mr. Ford and Mr. Jodrell; who were accordingly assigned his Counsel.

They prayed a few Days Time that they might have an Opportunity of knowing from the Prisoner himself the Truth and Merits of his Case, which was granted.

They also prayed a Copy of the Record, which was denied them. But the Officer, by the Direction of the Court, read over the Indictment a second Time very distinctly, and the Prisoner's Counsel took Notes of it, and the Prisoner was ordered up on Monday next.

His Counsel moved for a Rule of Court that they might have Access to their Client at all seasonable Times. But his Solicitor admitting that he had obtained a Warrant from a Secretary of State to the same Purpose, the Court did not make any Rule in the Case; nor did the Counsel press it; but the Court declared, That if the Secretary's Warrant had not been obtained, they would have made such Rule; for the Prisoner is now the Prisoner of this Court, and the Lieutenant of the Tower is, as far as concerneth the Prisoner's Case, a Minister of this Court, and subject to the Rules of it.

November 24, 1746. The Prisoner was brought to the Bar, and being again arraigned, he, ore tenus, pleaded that he is not the Person mentioned in the Record before the Court. The Attorney-General, ore tenus, replied, the Prisoner is the same Charles Ratcliffe mentioned in the Record, and this I am ready to verify; and Issue was joined.

The Prisoner's Counsel pressed strongly to put off the Trial of this Issue, upon an Affidavit of the Prisoner, which was sworn in Court, that two material Witnesses named in the Affidavit are abroad; one of them at Brussels, and the other at Saint Germain; and that he believeth they will attend the Trial, if a reasonable Time be allowed for that Purpose. But the Court refused to put off the Trial, and a Venue was awarded returnable instantly. For, said the Court, this Proceeding is in Nature of an Inquest of Office, and hath been always considered as an instantaneous Proceeding; unless proper Grounds for postponing the Trial be laid before the Court. It was so considered in the Case of the King against Barkhead and others (Keil. 13, 1 Lev. 61. 1. Sid. 72.) upon the same Issue as this is; a Venue was awarded, and a Jury returned and sworn instantly to try that Issue. It was so considered likewise in the Case of the King against Roger Johnson in this Court, Michaelmas the Second of this King.

If Mr. Ratcliffe hath any thing to offer, which may give the Court reasonable Grounds to believe that his Plea is any thing more than a Pretence to delay Execution, we are ready to hear him; the single Issue is, whether he be or be not the Person mentioned in this Record. This is a Fact well known to him, and if he is not the Person, he might, if he had pleased, have made that Matter Part of his Affidavit; he may do so still if he can do it with Truth; And if he refuseth to give the Court this Satisfaction, touching the Truth of his Plea, the Court doth him no manner of Injustice in denying him the Time he prayeth.

As the Jurymen were called to the Book, the Prisoner challenged one of them, and insisted on his Right to a peremptory Challenge; but his Challenge was over-ruled. For though there are some Opinions in the Books (S. P. C. 163. Co. L. 157.) that in collateral Issues of this Kind, the Prisoner hath a peremptory Challenge, yet the later and better Opinion is, that he hath not; and the modern Practice hath gone accordingly,

Chief Justice Hale (2. Hale 267.) saith, "In case of an Issue joined on Error in Fact assigned for reversing an Outlawry, the Prisoner hath no peremptory Challenge;" and in p. 378. of the same Book, it seemeth to be admitted as a general Rule, that in Inquests of Office (and the present Trial is in nature of an Inquest of Office) the Prisoner hath no peremptory Challenge. In Barkstead's Case cited before, (1 Lev. 61. 1 Keb. 244.) the Prisoners were not permitted to challenge peremptorily; and in the Case of Roger Johnson, which hath likewise been already cited, the Court declared that the Prisoner had no peremptory Challenge.

The Jury being sworn to try the Issue, the Indictment was read over to them in English for their Information as to the Name and Addition of the Prisoner; and the Evidence being concluded, the Jury withdrew for a few Minutes, and then returned with their Verdict, that the Prisoner at the Bar is the same Charles Ratcliffe that is mentioned in the Record.

Note. The Prisoner, during the Trial of this Issue, had the Assistance of his Counsel; who cross-examined the King's Witnesses, and observed fully upon the Evidence.

After the Verdict was brought in, the Prisoner's Counsel took notice of the Act of general Pardon passed in the third of the late King; and said, that possibly their Client might upon Consideration be found to be intitled to the Benefit of it; and concluded with a Motion, that the Court, before they award Execution, would give them some Time to consider the Act, and to be informed by their Client touching the Circumstances of his Case, that they might be able to submit his Case to the Opinion of the Court, how far he is, or is not intitled to the Benefit of the Act.

But the Court declared, that the Prisoner having once pleaded in Bar of Execution, and that Plea having been falsified by the Verdict, his Plea is peremptory, and the Verdict conclusive; and nothing now remaineth but for the Court to award Execution.

Mr. Justice Foster was satisfied that the Principle the Court went upon is a good general Rule, but he thought it not universally true. He considered the Case of a parliamentary Pardon as an Exception to it; for surely the Court will never, in any State of a Cause, award Execution upon a Man who plainly appeareth to be pardoned. And therefore he thought that if any Person, whether as Counsel for the Prisoner, or as Amicus Curiae, will now shew that the Prisoner is intitled to the Benefit of the Act, he ought to be heard. But to this it was answered by the Chief Justice, That the Act of Pardon containing many Exceptions, both as to Persons and Crimes, the Party who would take the Benefit of it must plead it specially with all proper Averments; so as to shew that he is not within any of the Exceptions, according to the Resolution (Cartb. 131.) in the Earl of Salisbury's Case.

The Counsel for the Crown did not urge either of these Points against the Prisoner. And I have been since informed that, in favour of Life, they were determined to waive them; and were provided with Evidence, then attending in the Hall, to prove (which was the Truth of the Case) that the Prisoner, after his Attainder, made his Escape out of Newgate, which brought him within the Exception in the 45th Section of the Act. And the Prisoner's Counsel being apprized of this by the Counsel for the Crown in a Conversation between them at the Bar, thought it in vain to press their Motion any farther. And Execution was accordingly awarded, and a Rule made that it be done on Monday the 8th of December. And a Writ was ordered to the Lieutenant of the Tower to deliver the Prisoner to the Sheriff of Middlesex on that Day; and another to the Sheriff to receive him, and to cause Execution to be done.

N. B. Since the Prisoner's Counsel, after sufficient Time allowed them to inform themselves of the true State of his Case, had nothing to offer to induce the Court to think that their Client was intitled to the Benefit of the Act, only that possibly upon further Consideration, he may appear to be so intitled, there was certainly no Room to delay the awarding Execution upon so slight a Suggestion from the Bar. And Mr. Ratcliffe had no Injustice done him in that respect.

He was beheaded on Tower Hill on the Day mentioned in the Rule.

The Award of Execution in Mr. Ratcliffe's Case was agreeable to the Precedent in the Case (Cro. Jac. 495. Hist. 21.) of Sir Walter Raleigh. He was convicted and attainted at Winchester before special Commissioners, and being brought into the King's Bench by Habeas Corpus, Execution was there awarded on the former Judgment; Judgment not being pronounced afresh, it having been pronounced before.

In the Cases of H. Stafford (1 H. VII. 23, 24, 25. 1 Lev. 61. 1 Sid. 72.) and of Barkstead, Okey and Corbet, (State Trials, Vol. VIII.) who were attainted by Act of Parliament, the Tenour of the Acts was removed by Carters into Chancery, and sent thence by Mittimus into the King's Bench; and the Chief Justice pronounced the usual Judgment as in Cases of High-Treason.

* The Rule laid down in Cartb. 131. from Pleaden is laid down in the same Latitude in many of the old Books; but it is to be observed, that the Acts of General Pardon in those Times, had no Clauses enabling the Party to avail himself of the Pardon on the General Issue without specially pleading the same. The first Act which hath that Clause, that I have met with, is the Act of Oblivion (15th Car. II.) and all Acts of general Pardon since that Time have had Clauses to the same Purpose. Foster. p. 45.

† On Nov. 21, Charles Ratcliffe, Esq. (who was taken on board a French Ship bound for Scotland, with Fitz James's Horse) was brought under a strong Guard from the Tower to the King's Bench Bar, Westminster, in order to prove him the Person convicted of High-Treason for the Rebellion in 1715, and who escaped out of Newgate; when his former Judgment was read to him; but he told the Court he was quite unprepared, and desired longer Time, and prayed that Counsel might be assign'd him; accordingly the Court granted him Mr. Jodrell and Mr. Ford for his Counsel, and ordered him to be brought up to Westminster the Monday following.

Accordingly, on that Day, Nov. 24, he was again brought to the Bar, but refused to hold up his Hand, or acknowledge any Jurisdiction over him, but that of the King of France, where he had lived about 30 Years, insisting on a Commission he had in his Pocket from the French King; but on hearing his former Indictment and Conviction, which were read to him in English, he said he was not the Charles Ratcliffe therein named, but that he was the Earl of Derwentwater; and his Counsel informed the Court, that this was the Plea he relied on; to which the Attorney General replied, with an Averment of his being the same Charles Ratcliffe; and thereupon Issue was joined. Then the Counsel for the Prisoner moved to put off his Trial, upon his own Affidavit (to which he had subscribed himself the Count de Derwentwater), that two of his material Witnesses were abroad. To which Affidavit the Counsel for the Crown objected, as not being intitled in the Cause before the Court, nor the two Witnesses sworn to be material, in the Issue then joined between the King and the Prisoner; and also, because the Prisoner had not so much as undertaken to swear for himself that he was not the Person; which, as it was a Fact entirely in his own Knowledge, ought to be required of him, if he would intitle himself to this Favour from the Court; this being a Proceeding very different from the Trial upon a Not Guilty, in an original Prosecution on a Charge of High-Treason or other Crime, the Identity of the Person being the single Fact to be enquired of, and a Case in which the Crown had a Right by Law to proceed in instante. Upon this, the Prisoner amended his Affidavit as to the Witnesses, but refused to supply it so far as to swear he was not the same Person. And the Court said this was a new Precedent, there being no Instance of any Application to put off the Trial of a Question of this Sort before; and that this was like an Inquest of Office, in Order to inform the Conscience of the Court, and what the Publick had a Right to proceed in instante: And therefore that the Prisoner ought to give all reasonable Satisfaction to induce them to grant such a Favour as he desired, for that they could not in Conscience and Justice to the Publick, indulge him, without a reasonable Satisfaction, that his Plea was true. But the Prisoner still refusing to swear to the Truth of his Plea, the Jury were called, and after two or three of the Pannel were sworn, Mr. Ratcliffe challenged the next that was called, as of Right, without assigning any Reason; but upon Debate of the Question, How far he had right to challenge? the Court said it had been determined before in all the later Cases, and particularly in the Case of one Jordan, that the Prisoner in such a Case as this had no peremptory Challenge: Upon which the rest of the Jury were sworn, and after a clear Evidence of the Identity of the Person on the Part of the Crown, the Prisoner producing none on his Part, the Jury withdrew about ten Minutes, and then found their Verdict, that he was the same Charles Ratcliffe that was convicted of Treason in 1716. Then the Attorney General moved to have Execution awarded against the Prisoner on his former Judgment; to which the Prisoner's Counsel objected, tendering a Plea of Pardon by Act of Parliament, in Bar of Execution. But the Court said, as he had already pleaded such a Plea as he chose to rely on and stand by, and as that was found against him, nothing more remained for them to do at present, but to award Execution; and if his Counsel had any thing to offer on his behalf, they would have Time to do it before the Day of Execution: Then they ordered a Rule to be made for the proper Writs for his Execution on Dec. 8, and remanded the Prisoner to the Tower. From his Case, printed at that Time.

There was no Proceeding of this Kind in the Case of the Duke of Monmouth, who was attainted by Act of Parliament 1 Jac. II. For the Action at Sedgemoor happened on the 8th of July 1685, which in that Year fell out to be the last Day of Trinity Term, and on the 15th he was executed. But that was a Time of great Heat and Violence, and few Things then done ought to be drawn into Example.

N. B. The Act of the Third of the late King giveth the Party Liberty to take Advantage of it on the general Issue without specially pleading the same; (2 H. and M.) and so doth that on which the Earl of Salisbury relied. The Court therefore could not in the Earl's Case, ground itself on the Rule of Pleading laid down in Cartb. 131.; though the Rule might possibly be mentioned obiter by some of the Judges. I think the true Ground the Court went upon, which indeed the Reporter himself seemeth to hint at but very darkly, was, that the Earl having been committed by the House of Peers upon an Impeachment by the Commons for High-Treason, this Court cannot allow him the Benefit of the Act; it hath no Cognizance of the Crime he standeth charged with; the Matter lieth before another and higher Judicature, and thither his Lordship must resort.

And there he afterwards had the full Benefit of the Act without being put to plead it. For on the 10th of October 1690, upon reading the Earl's Petition, setting forth that he had been long a Prisoner in the Tower, notwithstanding the late Act of free and General Pardon, and praying to be discharged, the Lords ordered the Judges to attend on the Monday following to give their Opinions, whether the Earl be pardoned by the said Act; on the 6th the Judges delivered their Opinions, that if his Offences were committed before the 13th of February 1688, and not in Ireland, or beyond the Seas, he is pardoned. Whereupon it was resolved that he be admitted to Bail; and the next Day he was bailed, and on the 30th of October (See the Journals of the Lords) he and his Sureties were discharged from their Recognizances.

Charles Ratcliffe, Esq. according to a Rule of the Court of King's Bench, was executed on Little Tower-Hill; whither, two Troops of Life Guards, and one Troop of Horse Grenadier Guards, and a Battalion of Foot Guards, marched about eight in the Morning. The Horse lined the Way from the Scaffold to Iron-Gate, and the Foot with some of the Horse encompassed the Scaffold. About Ten, the Block, covered with Black, with a Cushion, and two Sacks of Sawdust, were brought up, and the Block fixed; and soon after the Coffin of the unhappy Gentleman, covered with Black Velvet, and having eight Handles, but no Plate upon it, was placed on the Scaffold.

In the mean Time, Mr. Alderman Winterbottom and Mr. Alderman Alles, the two Sheriffs, with their Under-Sheriffs, met at the Mitre Tavern in Church-street, and from thence proceeded, the Under-Sheriffs in a Mourning-Coach, and the Sheriffs in their Chariots, to the lower End of the Minories, where they were met by their Officers, who marched before them till they came over-against the Victualling-Office, where they stood, and then the Under-Sheriffs went down to the East-Gate of the Tower, which is next to Iron-Gate, when getting out of the Coach, they went up to the Gate, and seeing the Warders thro' the Gate, they demanded Admittance to the Lieut. Governor of the Tower; upon which the Gate was opened, and they went in, and in about ten Minutes returned, and went into the Mourning-Coach again, which waited for them; and in a short time after, the Prisoner was brought in a Landau, out at the East-Gate, and then the Procession began as follows; First, the Sheriffs Officers, then the Mourning-Coach in which were the two Under-Sheriffs with their Wands; then the Landau with the Prisoner, and the Officers of the Tower who had him in Custody; the Landau was guarded by a party of Foot-Guards with their Bayonets fixed. Thus they proceeded up Little Tower-Hill, till they came over-against the Victualling-Office, where the Sheriffs waited to receive him; and where the Prisoner got out of the Landau, and was put into the Mourning-Coach, which carried him about 100 Yards further, to a Booth built on purpose to repose himself in, and hung with Black, at the Foot of the Stairs of the Scaffold. When he got out of the Landau, seeing some Gentlemen he knew, he paid his Compliments in a very genteel Manner, and smiled, and coming to the Side of the Mourning-Coach, he asked the Officers who stood to wait, whether he was to go in there? And being answered that he was, he only said, It is well, and stepped in directly. Being come to the Booth, attended with the Sheriffs, he said there about ten Minutes, which he spent chiefly in his Devotions, speaking but very little to any body. He then walked up upon the Scaffold with great Calmness, being dressed in a Scarlet Coat, with Gold Buttons, the Sleeves faced with black Velvet, Scarlet Waistcoat trimmed with Gold Lace, a Scarlet Pair of Breeches, and white Silk Stockings, and his Hat with a white Feather round it. He soon asked for the Executioner, who coming to him, he took a Parcel of Gold out of his Pocket, and gave it him, saying, I am but a poor Man, there's ten Guineas for you; if I had more I would give it you; and I desire you to do your Execution so as to put me to the least Mifery you can. He then kneeled down before the Block, and putting his Hands together, made a short Prayer, when two of the Warders of the Tower came to him, one of each Side of him; one of them took off his Wig, and the other put a white Cap upon his Head; and then the unhappy Criminal rose upon his Legs, and with their Assistance pulled off his Coat and Waistcoat. He then turned about and took his Leave, in a respectful Manner, of the Sheriffs, and then untied the Collar of his Shirt, which was fastened with a black Ribbon, and began to tuck the Collar of his Shirt down; but not being able to reach far enough behind, he desired the Executioner to do it for him; which he did accordingly. Then, after saying a short Prayer to himself, and crossing himself several Times, he laid his Head down upon the Block; and desired the Executioner to strike far enough, adding these his last Words, When I spread my Hands thus, do you take my Head off. Which Signal he gave in less than half a Minute, when one Stroke of the Axe sever'd his Head, except a Bit of Skin, which was cut asunder at two or three Chops. The Body then fell down upon the Scaffold; and the Executioner searching his Pockets, found half a Guinea, a Silver Crucifix, and his Beads. Four Undertaker's-Men stood ready with a Piece of red Bays to receive the Head as it fell off, and the Body and Head were put into the Coffin, and conveyed in a Hearse, to the Nags-Head, in Gray's-Inn-Lane, and soon after interr'd at St. Giles's in the Fields.

Thus fell this unhappy Man, aged 53, 30 Years within three Days after his Escape out of Newgate, Part of which Time he spent with the Pretender in Italy, but the greatest part in France, where he married the Lady Newburgh, Relict of Levingston, Lord Newburgh, a Scots Nobleman, by whom he had a Son, who was some time Prisoner with him in the Tower, and thought at first to be the Pretender's younger Son: He was the youngest Brother of James Earl of Derwentwater, who was beheaded in 1716, they both being taken at Preston. They were the Sons of Sir Francis Ratcliffe, by the Lady Mary Tudor, natural Daughter to K. Charles II. by Mrs. Mary Davis.

Mr. Ratcliffe behaved with much more Decency at his Execution, than at the Bar of the King's-Bench, when the only Trial was, whether he was the same Person who was condemned for the Rebellion in 1715, and made his Escape out of Newgate: For there he behaved himself in an insolent Manner, which did him no Service: But at his Execution he was calm and sedate, and suffered with much Composure and Resignation.

XL. Proceedings against ÆNEAS MACDONALD, alias ANGUS MACDONALD, at St. Margaret's Hill, Southwark, December 10, 1747, and at the Court of King's-Bench, Easter Term, 21 Geo. II*.

IN the Year 1747, a Bill of Indictment was found against him under the special Commission in Surry for the Share he had in the late Rebellion. The Indictment ran in the same Form as those against the other Prisoners, without any Averment that he was in Custody before the first of January 1746. But the Counsel for the Crown were aware of the Exception taken in the Case of Mr. Townley and others, and that since the whole Proceeding against the Prisoner was subsequent to January 1746, the Answer then given would not serve the present Case. That Bill was therefore withdrawn before the Prisoner pleaded to it: And a new Bill, concluding with an Averment that he was apprehended † and in Custody before the first of January 1746, was preferred and found against him. On that Bill he was arraigned in July 1747, and his Trial came on the 10th of December following.

The Overt Acts charged in the Indictment were sufficiently proved. And also that the Prisoner was apprehended and in Custody before the first of January 1746.

The Counsel for the Prisoner insisted that he was born in the Dominions of the French King, and on this Point they put his Defence.

But apprehending that the Weight of the Evidence might be against them, as indeed it was, with regard to the Place of the Prisoner's Birth, they endeavoured to captivate the Jury and Bystanders, by representing the great Hardship of a Prosecution of this kind against a Person, who, admitting him to be a Native of Great Britain, had received his Education from his early Infancy in France; had spent his riper Years in a profitable Employment in that Kingdom, where all his Hopes centered. And speaking of the Doctrine of natural Allegiance, they represented it as a slavish Principle, not likely to prevail in these Times; especially as it seemed to derogate from the Principles of the Revolution.

Here the Court interposed and declared, that the mentioning the Case of the Revolution as a Case any way similar to that of the Prisoner, supposing him to have been born in Great Britain, can serve no Purpose but to bring an Odium on that Great and Glorious Transaction. It never was doubted that a Subject born, taking a Commission from a Foreign Prince, and committing High Treason, may be punished as a Subject for that Treason, notwithstanding his Foreign Commission. (Dyer. 298. 300. 1 Hale, 68. 66.) It was so ruled in Doctor Storey's Case: And that Case was never yet denied to be Law. It is not in the Power of any private Subject to shake off his Allegiance, and to transfer it to a foreign Prince. Nor is it in the Power of any Foreign Prince by Naturalizing or employing a Subject of Great Britain, to dissolve the Bond of Allegiance between that Subject and the Crown.

However, as the Prisoner's Counsel had mentioned his French Commission as a Circumstance tending in their Opinion to prove his Birth in France, the Court permitted it to be read, the Attorney-General consenting. It was dated the first of June 1745, and appointed the Prisoner Commissary of the Troops of France, which were then intended to embark for Scotland.

The Court, with the Consent of the Counsel for the Crown, permitted the Cartel between France and Great Britain for the Exchange or Ransom of Prisoners likewise to be read. And observed, that as it relateth barely to the Exchange or Ransom of Prisoners of War, it can never extend to the Case of the Prisoner at the Bar, supposing him to be a Subject born. Because by the Laws of all Nations, Subjects taken in Arms against their lawful Prince, are not considered as Prisoners of War, but as Rebels; and are liable to the Punishments ordinarily inflicted on Rebels.

Lord Chief Justice Lee in his Direction to the Jury, told them that the Overt Acts laid in the Indictment being fully proved, and not denied by the Prisoner, or rather admitted by his Defence, the only Fact they had to try was, whether he was a Native of Great Britain? If so, he must be found Guilty. And as to that Point, he said the Presumption in all Cases of this Kind is against the Prisoner; and the Proof of his Birth out of the King's Dominions, where the Prisoner putteth his Defence on that Issue, lieth upon him. But whether the Evidence that had been given in the present Case (which he summed up very minutely) did or did not amount to such Proof he left to their Consideration.

The Jury found him Guilty, but recommended him to Mercy. He received Sentence of Death as in Cases of High Treason; but was afterwards pardoned upon the Conditions mentioned afterwards.

Macdonald at the Suit of Ramsay.

While Mr. Macdonald lay under Sentence of Death, a Creditor of his, — Ramsay, obtained Leave from my Lord Chief Justice at his Chambers to charge him in Custody of the Sheriff, in an Action for a considerable Sum of Money; and accordingly he was so charged.

In Easter-Term, the 21st of the King, Mr. Attorney General acquainted the Court, that his Majesty had given Orders for preparing a Pardon for Mr. Macdonald to pass the Great Seal, upon Condition of his retiring out of his Majesty's Dominions, and continuing abroad during his Life. And that one of the Secretaries of State had sent his Warrant to the Keeper of the New Prison to deliver Mr. Macdonald into the Custody of a Messenger; but that the Keeper refused to obey this Warrant, alledging, that as his Prisoner stood charged in an Action at the Suit of Mr. Ramsay, he could not deliver him into the Custody of a Messenger without incurring the Danger of an Escape. Mr. Attorney concluded with a Motion, that the Process Mr. Macdonald stood charged with at the Plaintiff's Suit might be discharged.

He was supported in this Motion by Sir John Strange and the Solicitor General. It was said by Mr. Attorney, but not strongly insisted on, that a Person under an Attainder is civiliter mortuus; his Person and Estate are absolutely at the Disposal of the Crown; and consequently he is not liable to Civil Suits. And to this Purpose he cited Trusell's Case. (1 Leon. 326. Cro. Eliz. 213.)

To this Point Mr. Henley and Mr. Ford for the Plaintiff insisted, and so the Court agreed, that the later Resolutions have been, and the Law hath been long settled, that an attainted Person is liable to Civil Suits: but by the Rules of the Court he ought not to be charged, without Leave of the Court, or of a Judge at his Chambers.

The Point reported by Leonard and Croke to have been adjudged in Trusell's Case came afterwards under Consideration in Actions brought by other Persons against that very Mun (Co. Ent. 246. a. b. Cro. Eliz. 516. Co. Ent. 248. 2 Ann. 38. Moo. 753. 3. Inst. 215.) and was ruled quite otherwise.

The Point chiefly insisted on by the Counsel on the Side of the Motion was, that to charge the Defendant in this Case, so as to make his Person liable, would be a Means of defeating the King's Pardon; because he would be thereby disabled to comply with the Terms of it. It would be in effect saying, that his Majesty shall not grant a Pardon on these Conditions, he shall pardon absolutely, or not at all.

To this Purpose they cited Foxworthy's Case, reported in Salk. 500. 2. Ld. Raym. 848. Far. 153. And the Case of Coppin and Gunner in 2. Ld. Raym. 1572.

But the Court said, We cannot judicially take notice of his Majesty's Intentions touching the Pardon. The Crown, in case of Pardons, signifieth its Pleasure finally and irrevocably by the Great Seal, and by that alone. A Pardon may not pass at all, or it may be upon other Conditions than are suggested at the Bar, or it may be a free Pardon. And therefore till the Pardon is passed, it is too early for the Court to give any Opinion upon the main Question. Accordingly the Court gave no Opinion; and Mr. Attorney took nothing by his Motion †.

Mr. Macdonald having afterwards made his Creditor Mr. Ramsay easy with regard to his Debt, the Action was withdrawn. And he was in December 1749, delivered into the Custody of a Messenger by virtue of a Warrant for that Purpose from the Duke of Newcastle, one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

N. B. The Person of a Man under an Attainder is not absolutely at the Disposal of the Crown. It is so for the Ends of publick Justice, and for no other Purpose. The King may order Execution to be done upon him according to Law, notwithstanding he may be charged in Custody at the Suit of Creditors. But till Execution is done, his Creditors have an Interest in his Person for securing their Debts. (6 H. IV. 6. b. 7. a.) And he himself as long as he liveth, (Crom. 113. a.) is under the Protection of the Law. To kill him without Warrant of Law is Murder; for which the Murderer is liable to a Prosecution at the Suit of the Crown, and likewise to an Appeal (Bro. Appeal 5.) at the Suit of the Widow: For though his Heir is barred by the Attainder, which corrupteth his Blood, and dissolveth all Relations grounded on Consanguinity, yet the Relation grounded on the matrimonial Contract continueth till Death.

* Foster's Reports, p. 59.

† N. B. The Rule in Foxworthy's Case seems to have been over-hasty, and the Reasons on which it is grounded appear to me to be inconclusive: That in Coppin and Gunner seems more equitable; since it secured to the Defendant the Benefit of his Pardon, without Prejudice to the Plaintiff, who might resort for Satisfaction to the Effects of the Defendant, if he could find any.

And if a Person under an Attainder be beat or maimed, or a Woman in the like Circumstances ravished, they may, after a Pardon, maintain an Action or Appeal, as their Cases respectively may require (3. Inst. 215.) And though before a Pardon they are disabled to sue in their own Names, I make no doubt that they are intitled to prosecute, according to the Nature of their respective Cases in the Name of the King; who will do equal Right to all his Subjects.

N. B. During the Trials of the Rebels at St. Margaret's Hill, Southwark, under the Commission of 1746, one of the Prisoners challenged peremptorily, and for Cause, so many of the Jurors, that there was not a sufficient Number left on the Pannel to proceed on his Trial. In that Case the Court, ore tenus, (for it was, as hath been already observed, a Commission of Goal Delivery as well as of Oyer and Terminer) ordered a new Pannel, and adjourned for several Days. On the Day of Adjournment the Sheriff returned a Pannel of the same Jurors that had served through the whole Proceeding, those who had been challenged by the Prisoner, or sworn before, included. And a sufficient Number appearing, he was tried.

The like Case happened on the Trial of one of the Assassins in King William's Time. (IV. State Trials, 728. to 733) Mr. Cook on the 9th of May challenged in the like manner 'till the Jurors remaining on the Pannel were not sufficient to make a full Jury; whereupon the Court, ore tenus, ordered a new Pannel, and adjourned to the 14th. On that Day his Counsel insisted that a new Pannel ought not to have been ordered; but that an Habeas Corpora with a Tales should have been awarded, according to the Opinion in Stanford (f. 155). But the Court declared, that this being a Proceeding under a Commission of Goal Delivery as well as Oyer and Terminer, they might, and indeed always do in the like Case, award a new Pannel if necessary, ore tenus, without Writ or Precept.

In a mere Commission of Oyer and Terminer no Pannel is ordered 'till the Defendant hath pleaded to Issue, and Issue is actually joined; and then it is done by Precept in the Nature of a Venire. And if in such Case there should be a Want of Jurors, an Habeas Corpora with a Tales may, said the Court, possibly issue; but no Tales can be granted upon a Commission of Goal Delivery. And Mr. Justice Powell upon that Occasion said, that if the Sheriff had returned all new Men without regard to those who appeared and were sworn or challenged on the 9th, it had been well enough.

The Reason of the Adjournments in these Cases was, that the Prisoners might have Copies of the new Pannels in due Time, pursuant to the 7th of King William; otherwise new Pannels might have been ordered returnable instantly.

The original Pannel in 1746 was upon great Deliberation ordered, sitting the Court, ore tenus, as under the Commission of Goal Delivery; though, as I have already observed, a Precept in common Form for holding the Sessions had issued under the Seals of the three Chiefs and three senior Judges.

XLI. The Whole Proceedings in the House of Peers, upon the Indictments against WILLIAM Earl of KILMARNOCK, GEORGE Earl of CROMERTIE, and ARTHUR Lord BALMERINO, for High-Treason, in Levying War against his Majesty: Begun on Monday the 28th Day of July, and continued on Wednesday the 30th of July, and Friday the First of August, 1746.

Die Martis, 24^o Junii, 1746.

THE Duke of Newcastle, by His Majesty's Command, acquainted the House, That Bills of Indictment of High-Treason were Yesterday found, by the Grand Jury of the County of Surrey, against William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromertie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino.

Ordered, That the said Indictments be removed before this House by Certiorari: And that a Writ or Writs of Certiorari be issued for that Purpose.

Then a Committee was appointed to inspect the Journals of this House upon former Trials of Peers in Capital Cases; and to consider of the proper Methods of Proceeding, in order to bring the Lords above named to a speedy Trial: And to report to the House, What they shall think proper thereupon.

Their Lordships, or any Five of them, to meet To-morrow, at the usual Time and Place; and to adjourn as they please.

Ordered, That the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, do attend the said Committee.

Die Jovis, 26^o Junii, 1746.

THE House being informed, That the Writ of Certiorari, issued for removing the Indictments of High-Treason, found by the Grand Jury of Surrey against William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromertie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, was brought into the House;

The said Writ, Return thereof, and Indictments, were read.

The Lord Monson acquainted the House, That the Committee appointed to inspect their Lordships Journals upon former Trials of Peers in Capital Cases; and to consider of the proper Methods of Proceeding, in order to bring the Lords abovementioned to a speedy Trial, had agreed upon a Report: Which they had directed him to make to the House, when their Lordships will please to receive the same.

Ordered, That the said Report be received To-morrow; and the Lords to be summoned.

Die Veneris, 27^o Junii, 1746.

THE Lord Monson (according to Order) reported, from the Lords Committees appointed to inspect the Journals of this House upon former Trials of Peers in Capital Cases; and to consider of the proper Methods of Proceeding, in order to bring William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromertie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, lately indicted of High-Treason, to a speedy Trial; That the Committee have met, and inspected the Journals of this House, in relation to the Trials of Peers in Capital Cases; and were attended by the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and the Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer: And having heard the said Judges upon the Construction of the Act of the Seventh and Eighth Year of King William the Third, intituled, An Act for regulating Trials in Cases of Treason, and Misprision of Treason, and considered the Matter to them referred, have come to the following Resolution, viz.

I. That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That, by virtue of the said Act, upon the Trial of any Peer or Peeres in any of the Cases of Treason, or Misprision of Treason, within that Act, all the Peers, who have a Right to sit and vote in Parliament, ought to be summoned Twenty Days at least before every such Trial, to appear at such Trial.

II. That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That such Summons ought to be by Order of this House, requiring, That every Peer, who hath a Right to sit and vote in Parliament, do appear at, and attend such Trial; and by Letters, to be wrote by the Lord Chancellor, or Speaker of the House for the Time being, to each particular Peer: And that such Order of the House be fixed upon the Doors of this House, and of Westminster-Hall; and also be published in the London Gazette, at least Twenty Days before such Trial; and that such Letters be sent at least Twenty Days before such Trial.

III. That it appearing to this Committee, That the antient and usual Method of summoning the Lords to attend upon Trials of Peers in Capital Cases, in Parliament, has been, by sending the Letters of Summons, to such Lords as are not in Town, by the Post; it is the Opinion of this Committee, That the Letters, to such Lords as are not in Town, be sent by the Post, according to the antient Usage.

IV. That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That the House be moved to resolve and declare, That such Order, so fixed up and published as abovementioned, and such Letters, so sent as abovementioned, are a due Summons of the Peers in Cases of Trials during the Sitting of Parliament, within the true Intent and Meaning of the said Act of the Seventh and Eighth of King William the Third.

V. That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That every Lord, before he shall sit or vote upon such Trial, ought to take the Oaths, and make and subscribe the Declaration required by Law to be taken and subscribed by Lords, in order to their Sitting and Voting in Parliament.

VI. That it is the Opinion of this Committee, That, in the Letters to be wrote, pursuant to the Resolutions abovementioned, Notice be taken, that the Lords are summoned, pursuant to the said Act of the Seventh and Eighth Year of King William the Third; and that their Attendance is required at such Trial, upon Pain of incurring the utmost Displeasure of the House; and that, in case the Lord, to whom any such Letter is directed, shall be incapable of attending, by reason of Sickness, or other Disability, he do send Two Witnesses to attest the same upon Oath.

Then the said Report was read by the Clerk.

And the Three First Resolutions, being read a Second time, were severally agreed to by the House; and ordered accordingly.

And the Fourth Resolution being read, the House was moved pursuant to the Direction of the Committee.

And thereupon,

Resolved and Declared, That the Order for the Attendance of the Peers, who have a Right to sit and vote in Parliament, fixed up and published as abovementioned, and such Letters wrote by the Lord Chancellor, or Speaker of this House, and sent as aforesaid, are a due Summons of the Peers in Cases of Trials during the Sitting of Parliament, within the true Intent and Meaning of the said Act of the Seventh and Eighth Year of King William the Third.

Then the Two last Resolutions being read a Second time, were severally agreed to by the House; and ordered accordingly.

Ordered, That William Earl of Kilmarnock be tried on Monday the Twenty-eighth of July next, at Nine of the Clock in the Morning, upon the Bill of Indictment for High-Treason found against him: And that George Earl of Cromertie be tried on the same Day, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, upon the Bill of Indictment for High-Treason found against him: And that Arthur Lord Balmerino be tried on the same Day, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, upon the Bill of Indictment for High-Treason found against him.

Ordered, That the Trials of the said Peers be had in Westminster-Hall.

Ordered, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, to acquaint his Majesty, That this House hath appointed the Trials of William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromertie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, to begin, in Westminster-Hall, on Monday the Twenty-eighth Day of July next; and humbly to desire, That his Majesty will be graciously pleased to give Orders, That a Place be prepared in the said Hall for the said Trials; and also to appoint a Lord High Steward, to continue during the said Trials.

Ordered, That the said Address be presented to his Majesty by the Lords with White Staves.

Ordered, That every Peer, who hath a Right to sit and vote in Parliament, do appear at, and attend, the said Trials: And that this Order be affixed on the Doors of this House, and of Westminster-Hall; and also be printed and published in the London Gazette, at least Twenty Days before the said Trials.

Ordered, That the Lord Chancellor do write Letters to all the Peers, requiring their Appearance and Attendance at the said Trials, pursuant to the Directions contained in the foregoing Report.

Die Lunæ, 30^o Julii, 1746.

THE Lord Chamberlain reported, That the Lords with White Staves had, according to Order, presented to his Majesty the Address of this House Yesterday, for a Place to be prepared in Westminster-Hall, for the Trials of the Peers indicted of High-Treason, and for the Appointment of a Lord High Steward: And that his Majesty was pleased to say, He would give Orders accordingly.

Die Lunæ, 7^o Julii, 1746.

UPON reading the Petition of William Earl of Kilmarnock, now a Prisoner in the Tower of London, praying, in regard he has Notice given him, that his Trial is appointed upon the Twenty-eighth Day of this present July, That their Lordships will please to appoint Mr. George Ross to be his Solicitor;

It is Ordered, That the said George Ross be assigned Solicitor for the Petitioner, as desired; and that he may have Access to him at all seasonable Times.

Upon reading the Petition of George Earl of Cromartie, now a Prisoner in the Tower of London, praying, That this House will be pleased to appoint Mr. Adam Gordon, Attorney at Law, to be his Solicitor;

It is Ordered, That the said Adam Gordon be assigned Solicitor for the Petitioner, as desired; and that he may have Access to him at all seasonable Times.

Die Martis, 8^o Julii, 1746.

THE Lord Monson reported from the Lords Committees appointed to inspect the Journals of this House, upon former Trials of Peers in Capital Cases; and to consider of the proper Methods of Proceeding, in order to bring William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromartie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, lately indicted of High-Treason, to a speedy Trial, That they had again met, and taken into further Consideration the Matter to them referred; and were come to the following Resolutions; viz.

That it is the Opinion of the Committee, That all the Lords, who shall attend the said Trials, do attend the House, to take the Oaths, in order to their Sitting and Voting upon such Trials, on the Thursday and Friday next preceding the Day appointed for the said Trials.

That it is the Opinion of the Committee, That the said Resolution be printed and published in the London Gazette.

Which, being read twice by the Clerk, were agreed to by the House; and ordered accordingly.

Die Mercurii, 9^o Julii, 1746.

UPON reading the Petition of Arthur Lord Balmerino, now a Prisoner in the Tower of London, praying, That this House will appoint Mr. George Ross to be his Solicitor;

It is Ordered, That the said George Ross be assigned Solicitor for the Petitioner, as desired; and that he may have Access to him at all seasonable Times.

Die Veneris, 11^o Julii, 1746.

ON a Report made by the Lord Monson, from the Committee before-mentioned:

Ordered, That the Lord High Steward be directed to acquaint the Lords to be tried, and all other Persons, who may have Occasion to speak to the Court, that they address themselves to the Lords in general, and not to the Lord High-Steward.

Die Martis, 15^o Julii, 1746.

UPON reading the Petition of George Earl of Cromartie, now a Prisoner in the Tower, praying, in regard he is informed, several Resolutions have been agreed to by this House, in order to the speedy Trials of the Petitioner, and others, that he may have Copies thereof, the Indictment found against him, the Certiorari for removing the same, and the Return thereof, or any other Proceedings that shall be agreed upon in relation to his Trial:

Ordered, That the Petitioner may have Copies of such Proceedings as have been had in this House concerning him; together with a Copy of the said Indictment, Certiorari, and Return, as desired.

Die Mercurii, 23^o Julii, 1746.

ORDERED, That the Constable of his Majesty's Tower of London, or the Lieutenant of the same, or his Deputy, do bring to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, on Monday next, at Nine of the Clock in the Morning, the Bodies of William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromartie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, now in his Custody; together with Copies of their respective Commitments, signed by the said Constable or Lieutenant.

Die Jovis, 24^o Julii, 1746.

THE Lord Monson reported, from the Lords Committees appointed to inspect the Journals of this House upon former Trials of Peers in Capital Cases; and to consider of the proper Methods of Proceeding in order to the Trials of William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromartie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, lately indicted of High-Treason; That the Committee have taken into further Consideration the Matter to them referred; and have come to the following Resolutions (amongst others); viz.

That it is the Opinion of the Committee, That all Proclamations to be made in the Court in Westminster-Hall, during the said Trials, be made in the King's Name.

That it is the Opinion of the Committee, That the Three Lords, indicted of High-Treason, be brought to the Bar of the Court in Westminster-Hall, at the same time, in order to be arraigned.

That it is the Opinion of the Committee, That in case the Three Lords, indicted of High-Treason, should plead Guilty to their Indictments, the House be immediately adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; but if one or more of the said Lords should plead Guilty, and the other Not guilty, in that case, the Lord or Lords so pleading Guilty be forthwith remanded, in Custody of the Chief Governor of the Tower of London, to the said Tower; and that the Trial of the other Lord or Lords pleading Not guilty do proceed.

Which Report, being read twice by the Clerk, was agreed to by the House; and ordered accordingly.

Die Lunæ, 28^o Julii, 1746.

THE Lords met in the House of Lords in their Robes; and, after Prayers, adjourned into Westminster-Hall.

The First Day in Westminster-Hall.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock, the Lords came from their own House into the Court erected in Westminster-Hall, in the Manner following:

The Lord High Steward's Gentlemen Attendants, Two and Two.

The Clerks Assistant to the House of Lords; and the Clerk of the Parliament.

Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, bearing the King's Commission to the Lord High Steward; and the Clerk of the Crown in the King's-Bench.

The Masters in Chancery, Two and Two.

The Judges, Two and Two.

The Peers eldest Sons, Two and Two.

Peers Minors, Two and Two.

York and Windsor Heralds.

Four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, Two and Two.

The Yeoman Usher of the House.

Then the Peers, Two and Two, beginning with the youngest Baron.

Then Four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, Two and Two.

The Serjeant at Arms attending the Great Seal, and Purse-Bearer.

Then Garter King at Arms, and the Gentleman Usher of the Black-Rod, carrying the White Staff before the Lord High-Steward.

Philip Lord Hardwicke, Lord High-Chancellor of Great Britain, Lord High Steward, alone; his Train borne.

When the Lords were placed in their proper Seats, and the Lord High-Steward upon the Wool-Pack;

The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery having his Majesty's Commission to the Lord High Steward in his Hand, and the Clerk of the Crown in the King's Bench standing before the Clerk's Table with their Faces towards the State, made Three Reverences; the First at the Table, the Second in the Midway, and the Third near the Wool-Pack; then kneeled down; and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, on his Knee, presented the Commission to the Lord High Steward, who delivered the same to the Clerk of the Crown in the King's-Bench to read: Then rising, they made Three Reverences, and returned to the Table. And then Proclamation was made for Silence; in this manner:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up, and spoke to the Peers.

Lord High Steward. His Majesty's Commission is about to be read: Your Lordships are desired to attend to it in the usual Manner; and all others are likewise to stand up, uncovered, while the Commission is reading.

All the Peers uncovered themselves; and they, and all others, stood up uncovered, while the Commission was read.

GEORGE R.

GEORGE the Second, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth. To our Right Trusty and Well-beloved Councillor Philip Lord Hardwicke, Baron of Hardwicke, in Our County of Gloucester, Our Chancellor of Great Britain, Greeting. Know ye, That whereas William Earl of Kilmarnock, late of the City of Carlisle, in our County of Cumberland; George Earl of Cromartie, late of the Town of Perth, in the Shire of Perth; and Arthur Lord Balmerino, late of the said City of Carlisle, in Our said County of Cumberland; stand severally indicted before Our Justices and Commissioners, assigned and constituted by Our Letters Patent under our Great Seal of Great Britain, bearing Date the Fifth Day of June, in the Nineteenth Year of our Reign, by virtue and according to the Form of the Statute, made in this Our present Parliament, intituled, An Act for the more easy and speedy Trial of such Persons as have levied, or shall levy, War against His Majesty; and for the better ascertaining the Qualifications of Jurors in Trials for High-Treason, or Misprison of Treason, in that Part of Great Britain called Scotland; made to them, and to any Three or more of them; to deliver Our Gaol of Our County of Surry of the Prisoners therein being, or such as shall or may be detained in the same, on or before the First Day of January, in the Year of our Lord One thousand Seven hundred and Forty-six, for or on Account of the High-Treason mentioned in the said Act, in levying War against Us within this Realm; and to inquire, by the Oath of good and lawful Men of the same County, of all such High-Treasons, in levying War against Us within this Realm by the said Prisoners, or any of them, or by any other Person or Persons who are now in actual Custody for or on Account of the same, or who are or shall be guilty of High-Treason, in levying War against Us within this Realm, and shall be apprehended and imprisoned for the same, on or before the said First Day of January, in the said Year of our Lord One thousand Seven hundred and Forty-six; and the same Treasons to hear and determine, according to the Form of the said Statute, by the Oath of Twelve Jurors, good and lawful Men of the said County of Surry, of High-Treason, by them the said William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromartie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, committed and perpetrated in levying War against Us within this Realm; and considering, that Justice is an excellent Virtue, and pleasing to the Most High; and being willing that the said William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromartie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, should be heard, examined, sentenced and adjudged before Us, in this Our present Parliament, touching and concerning the said High-Treason whereof they stand severally indicted as aforesaid; and that all other Things which are necessary in this behalf, should be in due Manner done and executed; and for that the Office of Steward of Great Britain (whose Presence is required upon this Occasion) is now vacant (as We are informed); We, very much confiding in your Fidelity, Prudence, provident Circumspection,

Circumspection, and Industry, have for this Cause ordained and constituted you Steward of Great Britain, to bear, execute and exercise (for this Time) the said Office, with all Things due and belonging to the same Office in this behalf: And therefore We command you, that you diligently set about the Premises, and (for this Time) do exercise, and execute with Effect, all those Things which belong to the Office of Steward of Great Britain, and which are required in this Behalf. In Witness whereof, We have caused these Our Letters to be made Patent. Witness Ourselves at Westminster, the Twenty-eighth Day of July, in the Twentieth Year of Our Reign.

By the King Himself, signed with his own Hand.

Biffe.

Serjeant at Arms. God save the King.

Then Garter, and the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, after Three Reverences, kneeling, jointly presented the White Staff to his Grace the Lord High Steward: And then his Grace, attended by Garter, Black Rod, and the Purse-Bearer (making his proper Reverences towards the Throne), removed from the Wool-Pack to an armed Chair, which was placed on the uppermost Step but one of the Throne, as it was prepared for that Purpose; and then seated himself in the Chair, and delivered the Staff to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod on his Right Hand, the Purse-Bearer holding the Purse on the Left.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Clerk of the Crown, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, read the Certiorari, and the Return thereof; together with the Captions of the Indictments, and the Indictments certified thereupon, against the Earl of Kilmarnock, the Earl of Cromertie, and the Lord Balmerino, in hac verba:

The Certiorari } GEORGE the Second, by the Grace of God, of and Return. } Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, To Our Justices and Commissioners assigned and constituted by Our Letters Patent under our Great Seal of Great Britain, made to them, and to any Three or more of them, to deliver Our Gaol of Our County of Surry of the Prisoners therein being, or such as shall or may be detained in the same, on or before the First Day of January, in the Year of Our Lord One thousand Seven hundred and Forty-six, for or on Account of the High-Treason mentioned in the Statute made in this Our present Parliament, intituled, An Act for the more easy and speedy Trial of such Persons as have levied, or shall levy War against his Majesty; and for the better ascertaining the Qualifications of Jurors in Trials for High-Treason, or Misprision of Treason, in that Part of Great Britain called Scotland, in levying War against Us within this Realm; and to enquire, by the Oath of good and lawful Men of the same County, of all such High-Treasons, in levying War against Us within this Realm, by the said Prisoners, or any of them, or by any other Person or Persons who are now in actual Custody for or on Account of the same, or who are or shall be guilty of High-Treason in levying War against Us within this Realm, and shall be apprehended and imprisoned for the same, on or before the said First Day of January, in the said Year of our Lord One thousand Seven hundred and Forty-six, and the same Treasons to hear and determine, according to the Form of the said Statute, and to every of them, Greeting. We command you, and every of you, that all and singular Indictments for High-Treason, in levying War against Us within this Realm, whereof William Earl of Kilmarnock, late of the City of Carlisle, in the County of Cumberland; Arthur Lord Balmerino, late of the same Place; and George Earl of Cromertie, late of the Town of Perth, in the Shire of Perth; stand severally indicted before you in our said County of Surry; which said Indictments now remain in your Power, or in the Power of some or one of you, with all Things touching the same, as fully and perfectly as the same were taken before you, by what names, Stiles or Titles soever the said William Earl of Kilmarnock, Arthur Lord Balmerino, and George Earl of Cromertie, may be called or distinguished in the same, you do, without Delay, deliver, under your Seals, or the Seals or Seal of some or one of you, to Us, in this Our present Parliament, together with this Writ. Witness Ourselves at Westminster, the Twenty-fifth Day of June, in the Twentieth Year of Our Reign.

Biffe.

Return. } BY virtue of this Writ to us, and others, our Fellows, directed, we do deliver the within-mentioned Indictments for High-Treason; whereof the within named William Earl of Kilmarnock, Arthur Lord Balmerino, and George Earl of Cromertie, stand severally indicted; which said Indictments lately remained before us, and others our Fellows, but are now annexed to this Writ, with all Things touching the same, as fully and perfectly as the same were lately taken before us, and others our Fellows; to our present Sovereign Lord the King, in this present Parliament; together with this Writ, according to the Form of the said Writ, as we are within commanded.

The Answer of Sir William Lee, Knight; Sir John Willes, Knight; and Sir Thomas Parker, Knight; Three of the Justices and Commissioners within mentioned.

W. Lee.
J. Willes.
T. Parker.

Surry. } BE it remembered, That at a Special Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol-delivery, of our Sovereign Lord the King, of and for the County of Surry, holden at the Borough of Southwark, in the said County, on Monday the Twenty-third Day of June, in the Twentieth Year of the Reign of our said present Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, before Sir William Lee, Knight, Chief Justice of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, appointed to hold Pleas before the King himself; Sir John Willes, Knight, Chief Justice of the Court of Common-Pleas; Sir Martin Wright, Knight, one of the Justices appointed to hold Pleas before the King himself; Sir James Reynolds, Knight, one of the Barons of the Court of Exchequer; Sir Thomas Abney, Knight, one of the Justices of the said Court of Common Pleas; Sir Thomas Burnet, Knight, one other of the Justices of the said Court of Common Pleas; Charles Clarke, Esquire, one other of the Barons of the said Court of Exchequer; Edward Clive, Esquire, one other of the Barons of the said Court of Exchequer; Sir Thomas Deveil, Knight, and Peter Theobald, Esquire, and others their Fellows, Justices, and Commissioners of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, assigned by Letters Patent of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, under his Great Seal of Great Britain, made by virtue of the Statute made in this present Parliament, intituled, An Act for the more easy and speedy Trial of such Persons as have levied, or shall levy War against his Majesty; and for the better ascertaining the Qualifications of Jurors in Trials for High-Treason, or Misprision of Treason, in that Part of Great Britain called Scotland, to the said Justices and Commissioners above named, and others, and to any Three or more of them (of whom our said present Sovereign Lord the King willed, That any of them the said Sir William Lee, Sir John Willes, Sir Martin Wright, Sir James Reynolds, Sir Thomas Abney, Sir Thomas Burnet, Charles Clarke, Edward Clive, and Sir Thomas Deveil, and others, in the same Letters Patent named and appointed, should be one), to deliver the Gaol of the said County of the Prisoners therein being, or such as shall or may be detained in the same on or before the First Day of January, in the Year of our Lord 1746, for or on Account of the High-Treason mentioned in the said Statute, in levying War against our said present Sovereign Lord the King within this Realm; and to inquire, by the Oath of good and lawful Men of the same County, of all such High-Treasons in levying War against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, within this Realm, by the said Prisoners, or any of them; or by any other Person or Persons who are now in actual Custody for or on Account of the same, or who are or shall be guilty of High-Treason, in levying War against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, within this Realm, and shall be apprehended and imprisoned for the same on or before the First Day of January, in the said Year of our Lord 1746; and the same High-Treasons to hear and determine according to the Form of the said Statute, by the Oath of Sir William Richardson, of Bermondsey, Knight; Sir Abraham Shard, of Kennington, Knight; Sir Thomas Hankey, of Clapham, Knight; Sir Peter Thompson, of Bermondsey, Knight; Josias Wordsworth, of Adcombe, Esquire; Percival Lewis, of Putney, Esquire; Samuel Atkinson, of Croydon, Esquire; John Copeland, of Camberwell, Esquire; Charles Hoskins, of Croydon, Esquire; Joseph Creswick, of Stratham, Esquire; William Clarke, of Southwark, Esquire; Joseph Willoughby, of Croydon, Esquire; Thomas Bevois, of Bermondsey, Esquire; Elias Bird, of Rotherhithe, Esquire; Thomas Tarrant, of Southwark, Esquire; Edward Stevens, of Southwark, Esquire; Henry Robinson, of Wandsworth, Esquire; John Heathfield, of Croydon, Esquire; Nathaniel Green, of Southwark, Esquire; Isaac Eeles, of Lambeth, Esquire; John Smith, of Lambeth, Esquire; Hammett Richardson, of Bermondsey, Esquire; and Samuel Nicholson, of Croydon, Esquire; good and lawful Men of the said County, being then and there sworn, and charged to inquire for our said present Sovereign Lord the King, touching and concerning the Premises in the said Letters Patent mentioned; it is presented, that the Bill of Indictment, to this Schedule annexed, is a true Bill.

Surry. } THE Jurors for our present Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oath, present, That William Earl of Kilmarnock, late of the City of Carlisle, in the County of Cumberland, being a Subject of our said present most Serene Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, and not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor having any Regard for the Duty of his Allegiance; but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as a false Traitor and Rebel against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, his supreme, true, natural, lawful, and undoubted Sovereign Lord, entirely withdrawing that cordial Love, and that true and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said present Sovereign Lord the King should, and of Right ought to, bear towards our said present Sovereign Lord the King; and also devising, and, as much as in him lay, most wickedly and traitorously intending to change and subvert the Rule and Government of this Kingdom, duly and happily established under our said present Sovereign Lord the King; and also to depose and deprive our said present Sovereign Lord the King of his Title, Honour, and Royal State, and of his Imperial Rule and Government of this Kingdom; and also to put and bring our said present Sovereign Lord the King to Death, and final Destruction; and to raise and exalt the Person pretended to be the Prince of Wales during the Life of James the Second, late King of England, and so forth; and, since the Decease of the said late King, pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of, King of England, by the Name of James the Third, to the Crown, and to the Royal State and Dignity of King, and to the Imperial Rule and Government of this Kingdom, upon the Tenth Day of November, in the Nineteenth Year of the Reign of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, at the City of Carlisle aforesaid, in the County of Cumberland aforesaid, with a great Multitude of Traitors and Rebels against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, to wit, to the Number of Three thousand Persons, whose Names are as yet unknown to the said Jurors, being armed and arrayed in a warlike and hostile Manner, to wit, with Colours displayed, Drums beating, Pipes playing, and with Swords, Clubs, Guns, Pistols, and divers other Weapons, as well offensive as defensive, with Force and Arms did falsely and traitorously assemble and join himself against our said present Sovereign Lord the King; and then and there, with Force and Arms, did falsely and traitorously, and in a warlike and hostile Manner, array and dispose himself against our said present Sovereign Lord the King; and then and there, with Force and Arms, in Pursuance and Execution of such his wicked and traitorous Intentions and Purposes aforesaid, did falsely and traitorously prepare, order, wage, and levy, a publick and cruel War against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, then and there committing and perpetrating a miserable and cruel Slaughter of and amongst the faithful Subjects of our said present Sovereign Lord the King; and also then and there, during the said War, with Force and Arms did, with the said Traitors and Rebels so assembled, armed and arrayed, as aforesaid, falsely and traitorously, against the Will of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, enter into, and take Possession of, the said City of Carlisle, and the Castle thereto belonging within the same City (the said City and Castle being a City and Castle of our said present Sovereign Lord the King); and the said City and Castle, with Force and Arms, then and there did falsely and traitorously possess, hold, keep, maintain, and defend, against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and also against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided.

Lord High Steward. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring his Prisoners to the Bar.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, oyes, oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoners, William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromertie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, to the Bar, together with Copies of their respective Commitments, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords.

Then William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromertie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, were all brought to the Bar, by the Deputy-Governor of the Tower, having the Ax carried before them by the Gentleman-Gaoler, who stood with it, on the left Hand of the Prisoners, with the Edge turned from them. The Prisoners, when they approached the Bar, made three Reverences; and then fell upon their Knees at the Bar. The Deputy-Governor of the Tower also delivered in the Copy of the Commitment.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordships may rise.

Then the Prisoners rose up, and bowed to his Grace the Lord High Steward, and to the House of Peers; which Compliment was returned them by his Grace, and the Lords.

L. H. S. Let the Copy of the Commitment be read.

Which was read as follows:

Thomas Holles, Duke of Newcastle, Marquis and Earl of Clare, Viscount Houghton, Baron Pelham of Laughton, Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter, one of the Lords of his Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, and Principal Secretary of State, &c.

THESE are in his Majesty's Name to authorize and require you to receive into your Custody the Bodies of William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromertie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, herewith sent you, for High-Treason, in levying War against his Majesty; and to keep them safe and close, until they shall be delivered by due Course of Law: And for so doing, this shall be your Warrant. Given at Whitehall, the Twenty-seventh Day of May 1746, in the Nineteenth Year of his Majesty's Reign.

HOLLES NEWCASTLE.

To the Right Honourable the Lord Cornwallis, Constable of his Majesty's Tower of London, and in his Absence to the Lieutenant of the said Tower, or his Deputy.

This is a true Copy of the original Warrant.

CORNWALLIS.

Then Proclamation having been again made for Silence, the Lord High Steward spake to the Prisoners as follows:

4 G

L. H. S.

L. H. S. WILLIAM Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromertie, Arthur Lord Balmerino, your Lordships are brought before the most august Judicature in this Kingdom, in order to receive your several Trials, upon different Charges of High-Treason against you, returned before this House.

As the Crimes, whereof you stand accused, are of the most heinous Nature, so the Accusations against you are grounded upon no slight Foundations: They are no less than Indictments for levying War, and raising a Rebellion against his Majesty, found by a Grand Jury of Gentlemen, of great Worth and Consideration, in the County of Surry, upon Evidence produced before them.

But though your Charge is thus weighty and solemn, it is still but a Charge, and open to all such Defences as the Circumstances of your several Cases, and the Rules of Law and Justice will admit.

The Law is the solid Basis and Support of the King's Throne: It is the great Bulwark of the Property, the Liberty, and Life of every Subject; and it is the Security of the Privileges and Honours of the Peerage. By this Measure, which is uniform and equal to every Member of the Community, your Actions, which are now called in Question, are this Day to be examined and judged.

If your Lordships are innocent, this will be one Ground of a reasonable Confidence in your present unhappy Circumstances: But to this Consideration your own Thoughts cannot fail to add another; I mean, that the Rules of this Law are to be expounded and dispensed to you by this illustrious Assembly, the whole Body of the Peers of Great-Britain, in whose noble and discerning Minds nothing can have Weight but Evidence and Justice: Guilt alone can take place against you, and Innocence alone can acquit you.

Your first Consideration will be, What Pleas to put in to these Indictments: If your Lordships shall put yourselves upon your Trials, you may rest assured, from the Motives I have already mentioned, that they will be legal, fair, and impartial; and as you stand here to answer for your Estates, your Lives, your Honours, and your Posterity, it is incumbent upon you to recollect yourselves, and to call up all those Succours of Reason, Discretion, and Temper, which you are Masters of.

There is a Circumstance in your Case which is new, and makes it unnecessary for me to say much, by way of Admonition, concerning your Defence: Your Lordships are the first of your Rank and Quality who have been brought to Trial upon Indictments for High-Treason, since the Act made in the Reign of our great Deliverer King William the Third, for regulating of Trials in Cases of High-Treason, and Mispri-son of Treason.

It has been the peculiar Happiness of this Nation, since the Revolution, that our Princes have had that Confidence in the Affections of their People, and the Interests of both are become so evidently the same, that the regal Sanction has, since that Period, been graciously granted to Laws for the Security of the Subject, which were in vain wished for in former Reigns.

However injuriously that Revolution has been traduced, whatever Attempts have been made to subvert this happy Establishment founded upon it, your Lordships will now have the Benefit of that Law in its full Extent.

Before I conclude, I am by Command of the House to acquaint your Lordships, and all other Persons who shall have Occasion to speak to the Court, during these Trials, that they are to address themselves to the Lords in general, and not to any Lord in particular.

L. H. S. Your Lordships will do well to give Attention, while you are severally arraigned upon your Indictments.

Here the Earl of Kilmarnock was arraigned, in the Form of the said Indictment against him, by the Clerk of the Crown in the King's-Bench.

Clerk of the Crown. How say you, William Earl of Kilmarnock, are you guilty of this High-Treason whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?
Earl of Kil. Guilty.

L. H. S. The Distance I am at from the Bar is so great, that I am not sure whether I heard your Lordship right; and therefore desire to ask you, Whether you plead guilty, or not guilty?
Earl of Kil. Guilty, my Lords.

George Earl of Cromertie was arraigned in the same Manner, upon the said Indictment against him.

Clerk of the Crown. How say you, George Earl of Cromertie, are you guilty of this High-Treason whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?
Earl of Crom. Guilty.

L. H. S. Not perfectly hearing your Lordship's Answer, I must give you the same Trouble as I did the Earl of Kilmarnock, by asking your Lordship the same Question, Whether you plead guilty, or not guilty?
Earl of Crom. Guilty, my Lords.

Arthur Lord Balmerino was arraigned in the same Manner, upon the said Indictment against him.

Cl. of the Cr. How say you, Arthur Lord Balmerino, Are you guilty of this High-Treason whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?

Lord Balmerino. Will your Lordships be pleased to hear me, and I will be very short: I have only Two or Three Words to say: I will not take up your Time, my Lords.

L. H. S. Your Lordship is now arraigned; and the Indictment has been read to you: Now is your Time to plead.

Lord Bal. If I should plead guilty, there is no occasion to speak after that.

L. H. S. This is not a proper Time to speak to other Matters. It is my Duty to inform your Lordship of the Rules of Law, and Methods of Proceeding; which require that you should first plead to the Indictment.

Lord Bal. Then, my Lords, you will oblige me to take up more of your Lordships Time than I intended; for I cannot plead guilty. I desire to be heard: I will not take up your Lordships Time. I want an Answer to one Question, and then I will plead.

L. H. S. If your Lordship has any thing material, you may mention it. Lord Bal. My Lords, if there be any Fault in the Form of the Indictment, or if it is so faulty, that no Judgment can be given upon it, I want to know, Whether I can be indicted again.

L. H. S. If your Lordship has any Exception to take to the Indictment for Mis-writing, Mis-spelling, or any Informality of that Nature, now is your proper Time to offer such Exceptions.

Lord Bal. My Lords, I am indicted by the Title of Lord Balmerino, of the City of Carlisle; and, I am sure, that is no Title belonging to me: And I am indicted for being at the Taking of his Majesty's City and Castle of Carlisle on the 10th of November; and I can prove, that, at that Time, I was not within Twelve Miles of it: Now, my Lords, Will that be of any Use to me? I can prove I was Twelve Miles off, when they say I was at Carlisle.

Cl. of the Cr. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation for Silence.

Serj. at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Our Sovereign Lord the King doth strictly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

L. H. S. My Lord Balmerino, you have made Two Objections of different Natures; the first of them is to the Addition of Place given to you in this Indictment; and the other goes to the Fact thereby charged upon you. As to the First, I must inform your Lordship, that the Words late of the City of Carlisle in the County of Cumberland, are not made Part of your Title, but are only an Addition of Place, which the Law, for good Reasons, requires to be inserted by way of Description of the Defendant in all Indictments; and it is most commonly taken from that Place, where the Crime is by such Indictment charged to have been committed. As to your other Objection, it relates to the Fact alledged in the Indictment, and will depend upon the Evidence; which cannot be entered into till your Lordship has pleaded.

Lord Bal. Then, my Lords, though I could prove I was elsewhere, it would be of no Use to me at all.

L. H. S. Your Lordship mistakes me; I do not tell you so; but only, that this your last Objection cannot be taken into Consideration, till after you have pleaded, and the Evidence appears.

Lord Bal. I can make it appear, that I was not at Carlisle at that Time.

L. H. S. I have acquainted your Lordship according to my Duty, with the Method of Proceeding, and the proper Time for making use of your Objection. It must be left to your Consideration, how far you think it for your Advantage to insist upon it.

Cl. of the Cr. Arthur Lord Balmerino, Are you guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand indicted, or not Guilty?

Lord Bal. Not Guilty, my Lords.

Cl. of the Cr. Culprit, How will your Lordship be tried?

Lord Bal. By God and my Peers.

Cl. of the Cr. God send your Lordship a good Deliverance.

L. H. S. Let the Lieutenant of the Tower take my Lord Kilmarnock and my Lord Cromertie from the Bar.

These Two Lords were then taken from the Bar by the Lieutenant of the Tower; who returned again, and stood on the Right Hand of Lord Balmerino; the Gentleman-Gaoler standing all the Time on his Left Hand, with the Ax turned from him.

Cl. of the Cr. Serjeant at Arms, Make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! All manner of Persons, that will give Evidence on behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, against Arthur Lord Balmerino, the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and they shall be heard; for now he stands at the Bar, upon his Deliverance.

L. H. S. My Lords, The Distance of this Place from the Bar is so great, that I must desire your Lordships Leave to go down to the Table, for the Convenience of Hearing.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then his Grace removed to the Wool-pack, and delivered the White Staff to be held by the Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod; who, during the whole Trial, always received and delivered back the White Staff upon his Knee.

Sir Richard Lloyd, Counsel for the King.

May it please your Lordships,

ARTHUR Lord Balmerino stands indicted at your Lordships Bar for High-Treason; and the Charge against him, in the Indictment, is, That he being a Subject of our present most Serene Sovereign Lord King George, and not having any Regard for the Duty of his Allegiance, as a false Traitor and Rebel against our Sovereign Lord the King, his supreme, true, natural, and lawful, Sovereign, and withdrawing that cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which every Subject of his Majesty should and ought to bear toward him; and wickedly and traitorously devising and intending to change and subvert the Rule and Government of this Kingdom, and to depose and deprive his Majesty of his Title, Honour, and Royal State, and Imperial Rule and Government of these Kingdoms, and to put and bring him to Death and final Destruction, and to raise and exalt the Person pretending to be Prince of Wales, during the Life of James the Second, and since pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of, King of England, by the Name of James the Third, to the Crown, and to the Imperial Rule and Government of this Kingdom; that he did, upon the Tenth Day of November, in the Nineteenth Year of his present Majesty's Reign, at Carlisle, in the County of Cumberland, with a Multitude of Rebels, armed, and arrayed, in a warlike and hostile Manner, with Arms, as well offensive as defensive, assemble themselves together; and then and there did falsly and traitorously array themselves, with Force and Arms, against our said Lord the King; and then and there did levy a public and cruel War against the King, and make a miserable and cruel Slaughter of his Majesty's Subjects, and, with the said Traitors and Rebels, so armed and arrayed, did enter into, and take Possession of, the said City and Castle of Carlisle, the same being a City and Castle of our said Lord the King, and did falsly and traitorously keep and defend the same against our said Lord the King, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of our said present Sovereign Lord the King, and against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided.

My Lords, to this Indictment he has pleaded, That he is not guilty: It is incumbent upon us, who have the Honour to serve the Crown in this Prosecution, to prove this Guilt upon him; and then nothing remains for us, but to pray your Lordships Judgment accordingly.

Mr. Serjeant Skinner, the King's Serjeant.

My Lords,

I AM Counsel, in this Cause, for the King, against the unfortunate Peer at your Lordships Bar; who stands accused of a Crime, the highest which is known to the Laws of this Realm.

For High Treason comprehends all other Offences: Murder and Rapine accompany, and are closely connected with High-Treason; and Waste, Destruction, and Famine, are the Marks it leaves behind.

To be guilty of the lowest of these, as a single Offence, would be abhorrent to a Person of a noble Heart: To be guilty of each of these Offences, is such a Weight of Crime, as would depress and bear down a noble Mind: Yet such is the Case of that unhappy Person, who is guilty of the Crime of High-Treason.

I will not bring a railing Accusation against this unfortunate Lord: Indeed, the Offence cannot admit of Aggravation: But, when I consider the inevitable Ruin which must have befallen our Country, if these pernicious Designs had taken their Effect; the total Subversion of our Religious and Civil Liberties; I then cannot help lamenting that neither high Blood, nor those generous Sentiments of Gratitude and Humanity, which are usually implanted in a noble Breast, that these could not restrain a high-born Peer from engaging in those wicked Councils; the uniting in which is a Stain to his Honour, and will be a Mark of Infamy to his Posterity.

For the most grievous Thought, to this unhappy Lord, must be, That the Consequences of his Crime will affect his Descendants: He was their Root of Honour; he now derives to them Disgrace and Infamy.

But the Law in this proceeds with great Reason and Justice: The Punishment of the guilty Person alone may not be sufficient to deter Men from the Commission of this Crime: He may be so hardened, as to think his own Suffering to be light; but he may lament for the Fate of his Children and Family: Such likewise were the Laws of Nations the most famed for their Rule and Polity.

In this House, so eminently distinguished for Learning as well as Honour, I want no Apology, when I repeat the Opinion of the great Roman Lawyer and Orator, upon this Subject: Tully states this as an Objection; and I submit, that he gives an Answer, natural and affecting: His Words are:

Nec verò me fugit, quàm sit acerbum Parentum Scelera Filiorum Pœnis lui; sed hoc præclarè Legibus comparatum est; ut Caritas Liberorum amici-ores Parentes Reipublicæ redderet.

Rebellion surely is the Sin of Witchcraft; otherwise what can engage a Person in an Attempt to destroy the Religious and Civil Liberties of his Country, tho' in the same Ruin he thus involves the Fate of himself and his Posterity? Our Religion is a reasonable Service; its Establishment is the Law of the Land; and for a Protestant Peer to endeavour to extirpate this our most holy Religion, and to introduce Superstition and Idolatry amongst us, is a Proposition as absurd as Transubstantiation: Our Civil Rights must have fallen a Sacrifice to the Ambition of France; for it was a vain Imagination, to think, that France would in earnest have set any King over us. Whoever is a British King, must, in Time, at least, act upon British Principles: From that Moment he is equally an Enemy to France, as any of the boldest or best of his Predecessors. France knows, and will pursue, her natural Interest: To make us Tributary, to make us Provincial, to destroy us as a Nation, was, and must, and can only be, the true Design of France.

But the Genius of the Nation exerted itself in the Cause of Liberty, under the Command of his Royal Highness the Duke; and when we consider our Misfortunes under former Leaders, and how the true English Valour prevailed, when animated and influenced by the Presence and Example of so great a Commander, we may justly apply to his Royal Highness what was said of Scipio, Tantus Exercitus, quantus Imperator.

Before I come to the particular Part, which the Lord at the Bar has acted; it may be necessary to give a short History of this unnatural Rebellion: And here the Names of the Two unfortunate Peers, who have just confessed their Guilt at your Lordships Bar, must often occur.

In June 1745, the Son of the Pretender landed in the West Highlands of Scotland: Few then were his Company or Followers; but the Cloud, which seemed, at first, to be no larger than a Man's Hand, quickly gathered, and blackened that Part of the Hemisphere. The first who appeared were the Macdonalds and the Camerons, Men famed for Rebellious Acts: They were soon joined by the Duke of Perth, the Marquis of Tullibardine, Lord Elcho, and Lord George Murray; and when they came to Perth, their Number was five thousand Men; from thence they marched to Edinburgh, and there they proclaimed the Pretender; and soon after, September the Twenty-first, followed the Battle of Preston-Pans. I wish that we could forget the Miscarriages of that Day!

In October the Pretender's Son was joined by another Body of Rebels, under the Command of the Earl of Kilmarnock: His Lordship made his first Appearance on the Banks of the River which divides England from Scotland: Here I wish, for the Sake of the Nation, and for his own Sake, that the noble Lord had made some Stop, and had well considered the Enterprize on which he was going: Could he have then foreseen the Calamities, which his rash Undertaking has brought upon his Native Country; could he have then beheld with his Eyes the Rapine, the Violence, and the Oppression, which have ensued; the Opposition of the Son to the Father, of the Brother to the Brother, and how all the Charities of one Man to another were destroyed; could he have foreseen his own shameful Retreat, and final Overthrow, his Feet had never passed the Banks of that River.

From thence they marched into England, laid Siege to Carlisle, and took it; and here again they proclaimed the Pretender: From thence they went to Penrith, and to many other Places in England, till they came to Derby: In this Town they heard, that his Royal Highness the Duke was advancing towards them. Here Rebellion grew pale; the Fame of the Duke's Approach made them retreat: Their March was expeditious; yet they left behind them so many Marks of their Cruelty and Barbarity, as if their only Design was to plunder and destroy.

His Royal Highness, with a Detachment, pursued the Rebels to Clifton; and it is doubtful, whether their Cowardice or Cruelty was here the most remarkable: They fled, and yet, in their Haste, they took Time to murder the King's Soldiers, who lay wounded on the Ground: From hence they got back to Carlisle, and from thence proceeded to Dumfries and Glasgow. And here I must remember the noble Zeal and Firmness which the Magistrates and Citizens of Glasgow expressed for their Royal Master, Our most Gracious Sovereign: They paid, indeed, most heavy Exactions for this their Loyalty; which remain like so many Scars; but the Wounds were honourable.

From thence they marched to Bannockburn, and so to Stirling: Here they were joined by the Earl of Cromartie, and then laid Siege to Stirling-Castle: This occasioned the Battle of Falkirk: To this Place the Lord Balmerino, the Prisoner at the Bar, marched at the Head of his Regiment: Here the Rebels retired; but Victory was reserved for his Royal Highness. But, before I leave this Field, I must lament the Fate of a valiant Soldier and Commander; wounded, indeed, in the Field of Battle, but afterwards murdered in cold Blood: Let one more Mark of Infamy, at least, be fixed on this Rebellion, for this murderous Act, committed on so worthy and brave a Gentleman.

From Falkirk the Rebels retired to Stirling; from thence into the Highlands, those Hills of the Robbers: After some Time they joined again at Inverness; they attacked Fort George, then in the Possession of his Majesty's Forces, and took it; they took Fort Augustus, and demolished it; before Fort William they met with a Repulse: From thence they marched to Culloden Field; a bloody Field! where fell Rebellion, I hope, never to rise again. To point out the Conduct, to celebrate the Courage of his Royal Highness, to paint the Glory of that memorable Day, is an Attempt too bold: The Gratitude of the Nation, the united Thanks of the Parliament, and the Approbation of his Royal Father, shew the Greatness of the Merit by the Richness of the Reward.

My Lords, the particular Circumstances attending the Case of the unfortunate Peer at your Lordships Bar are considerable: High-Treason is an Offence foul and black in itself; it wants no Colouring to make it appear more deformed and hideous: But the Lord Balmerino has heightened every Feature of this Deformity: He was, in the Service of the King, a Captain in the Regiment commanded by the Lord Shannon; not only therefore by his Oath of Allegiance, as a Subject, but by his Military Oath, as his Majesty's Soldier, as a Soldier trusted by his Sovereign with a Command, he lay under the strongest Obligations to be faithful: But he betrayed this Trust; he deserted his Station, in the which Virtue bid him stand.

As a Reward for his Treachery, the Prisoner, my Lords, was advanced to be the Captain of the Second Troop of Life-Guards attending on the Person of the Pretender's Son: We shall shew, that soon after the City of Carlisle surrendered to the Rebels, the Prisoner entered that City at the Head of his Troop, with his Sword drawn, Colours displayed, and Drums beating; he, dressed in the Uniform of the Regiment, with a white Cockade in his Hat: He went the same Progress through the several Places in England with the Rebel Army, an Army of Locusts; as they went, they devoured the Land: Before them was Plenty, behind them Destruction and Desolation: He was present at the several Places and Times when the Pretender was proclaimed; and, on the Return of the Rebels into Scotland, he appeared in all Places at the Head of his Troop: He commanded them at the Battle of Falkirk; and with them he was defeated, and made a Prisoner, in the Field of Culloden.

To answer for these Treasons is this unfortunate Peer now brought to your Lordships Bar: An awful Tribunal! The illustrious Judges who here preside, are under the strictest Obligation to do impartial Justice; for their only Oath is their Honour: To this Tribunal we submit the Cause of the King, and of our Country: We will endeavour to prove the Fact; and then we shall, with all Deference and Submission, expect your Lordships Judgment.

MR. ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

May it please your Lordships,

YOUR Lordships have heard the Nature of the Charge against the Noble Lord at the Bar, as it is laid in the Indictment; and have likewise heard the Rebellion, in which he was engaged, traced from its Rise to its happy Conclusion. There is little Room, in a Case so notorious, for me to trouble your Lordships in the Opening. But, as the Crime charged on the Noble Lord, is Part of that great Treason which was aimed against his Majesty's Throne and Royal Person, it may be incumbent on me to say something upon this very solemn Occasion.

And however disagreeable it must be, to prosecute and try a noble Person, one of your Lordships high Order, for a Crime of this Nature, public Justice requires it, and it must be submitted to. Even your Lordships, from your great Regard to your King and Country, will be easy in the Discharge of that Part of it, which belongs to your Lordships.

As the Noble Lord has thought proper to plead Not guilty, and thereby put the Proof of his Guilt on the King's Counsel; there are Two Things that will fall under your Lordships Consideration: The one, relating to the Nature of the Crime; the other, to the Proof in Support of it.

As to the former, your Lordships can have no Trouble: It is a Charge of High Treason, in levying War against his Majesty; a Crime declared to be so by the express Words of the Statute of the Twenty-fifth of Edward the Third, framed on Purpose for the Ease and Safety of the Subject; to remove that Anxiety which attended the Obscurity of the Law, in a Point of the greatest Importance to themselves and their Posterity; and to reduce the Law of Treasons, which before lay hid in the Breast of the Judges,

Judges, to a Certainty: Or, if that Law had never been made, This is one of those Sorts of Treasons that never did admit of a Doubt; and, if the Noble Prisoner had impartially consulted his own Breast, it must have told him it never could.

As that Act makes it necessary to Conviction, that the Treason should be proved by some Overt Act; it has been usual, in Indictments for this Species of Treason, not only to charge the levying War generally, but to specify those Circumstances of Hostility which usually accompany it, as a kind of Overt Act; such as joining himself to great Numbers of other Traitors, armed and arrayed with various Sorts of Weapons in a warlike Manner, with Colours displayed, Drums beating, and the like: These Circumstances are charged in the present Indictment; to which another more particular Overt Act is added, of entering, possessing, and detaining the City of Carlisle against his Majesty.

If these Charges are proved, the Consequence cannot be disputed. This brings me to that which alone will demand your Lordships particular Attention; how this Charge is brought home, in Point of Evidence, to the Prisoner at the Bar.

And in this likewise, I believe I may venture to say, your Lordships will have no Difficulty; but you will have that great Satisfaction, of being perfectly clear in the Judgment you shall give.

The Charge is not of that Nature, which rests principally in the Breast of the Offender, to be discovered and proved by a Variety of Circumstances, set together and connected by Art, to find out the secret Designs of Conspirators. It consists in a great Number of Facts, done in open Day-light, in the Face of the World, avowed and justified, and in which the Noble Lord did not rely on the Secrecy of his Treason, but the Power of the Traitors, for his Defence.

Your Lordships therefore will permit me very shortly to point out some of those Facts, which will be fully proved by the Witnesses: I don't mean to enter into a Detail of what passed during the Course of the Rebellion; but only to touch on those Matters, which will directly affect the Prisoner, and shew the particular Part he acted in this great Scene of Treason and Confusion.

The Noble Prisoner seems to have engaged early in the Rebellion. Whether it was owing to that, or his former Attachments, he soon obtained a Trust about the Person of the Pretender's Son; which could be reposed in none but the most zealously affected to that Cause. He was made the Commander of the Second Troop of Horse, called His Life-Guards.

In this Post, he accompanied the Rebel Army in their First March into England, and entered Carlisle, at the Head of his Troop, in November last. In the same Command, he followed them through the Counties of Cumberland, Lancaster, Cheshire, Staffordshire, and Part of Derbyshire, till they came to Derby; and when they were stopped there by the Approach of his Royal Highness the Duke, and forced to fly before him by the Way they came, he kept with them in their Flight, and entered Carlisle a second Time, with his Troop. He did not wait till his Royal Highness came up, but with the rest of the Rebel Army, except the Garrison, continued his Flight into Scotland. He went with them to Glasgow and Sterling, was present at the Battle of Falkirk, and, tho' not personally engaged, was drawn up at the Head of his Troop, to support the Rebels that were. He still continued to attend the Rebellion in all its Stages, till the same great Commander, who gave the first Check to its Progress, put a final End to it at Culloden.

Your Lordships will see him, by the Evidence, in all the Places I have mentioned, clothed in the Uniform of the Rebel Guards, with a white Cockade, his Sword drawn, heading, commanding, and leading his Troops, guarding the Pretender's Son, proclaiming the Pretender, entering and seizing his Majesty's Towns, and acting as an Enemy in his Majesty's Dominions, in open Defiance of the Laws, and to the infinite Mischief of his Majesty and his Subjects; and all this with a direct View of Dethroning his Majesty, Extirpating his Royal Family, and Setting up a Popish Pretender in his Room.

The several Instances of his Lordship's marching with the Rebels in a hostile Manner, will be so many distinct Proofs of the First Part of the Charge; and the particular Acts of his Entering and Continuing in Carlisle, in the same hostile Manner, will fully prove the Second.

I have stated all these Things, not because they are all necessary to the Conviction of the Noble Lord, but for the clearer Manifestation of his Guilt. A very small Part of these Facts would be sufficient, if proved to your Lordships Satisfaction: Nor would it avail his Lordship, if we should fail in the Proof of any Part of the Charge on the very Day it is laid in the Indictment, as the Noble Lord vainly seems to think. The precise Point of Time, as it is, in its own Nature, immaterial to the Guilt, is equally so in the Forms of our Law.

All that remains is to call the Witnesses; which, I doubt not, will fully make out the Facts we have stated.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, we will now proceed to call our Witnesses.

Lord Balmerino. My Lords, may I be heard? I thought, when a Person was indicted, if there was any one Article in the Indictment that was not good against him, that all the rest was good for nothing.

Lord High Steward. You must hear the Evidence. This cannot now be determined, till the Evidence is heard.

Lord Bal. Will your Lordships please to examine them as to the Time of my being at Carlisle?

Lord H. S. The King's Counsel must proceed in their own Method, provided they proceed according to Law.

Lord Bal. My Lords, I humbly thank you for your Advice.

L. H. S. Would your Lordship have Counsel assigned you?

Lord Bal. No, my Lords; I don't want any.

Sir John Strange. Call William McGhie.

William McGhie sworn.

Sir John Strange. Look at the Noble Lord at the Bar. Do you know him?—McGhie. Yes; I know him very well.

Sir J. Strange. Pray, will you acquaint my Lords, whether you saw him at any time, and where, in the Rebel Army?

McGhie. I saw the Noble Lord at Carlisle, going and coming.

Sir J. Strange. Do you mean the Noble Lord at the Bar?

McGhie. Yes, I do.

Sir J. Strange. Pray, do you recollect the First Time of your seeing him?

McGhie. It was some time in November last; but the Day I am not very sure of.

L. H. S. The Witness's Voice is so low, that some of my Lords desire, That a Clerk may repeat what he says. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that one of your Clerks be appointed to stand by the Witness, and report to your Lordships what he says?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then One of the Clerks was sworn, truly to report what the Witness should say; and stood within the Bar, near the Witness, and repeated his Answers.

Sir J. Strange. If it is your Lordships Pleasure, I will begin the Examination again.

L. H. S. I desire he may repeat again what he has said.

Sir J. Strange. I ask you, if you know the Noble Lord at the Bar?

McGhie. Yes; I do know the Noble Lord at the Bar.

Sir J. Strange. Will you please to acquaint their Lordships, at what time, and where, you saw his Lordship with the Rebel Army?

McGhie. I saw him at Carlisle, going and coming. The First time I saw his Lordship there was in November last.

Sir J. Strange. Did not you see him before you came to Carlisle?

McGhie. I saw him before we came to Carlisle; I also saw him coming into Carlisle, and in Carlisle.

Sir J. Strange. What Company was he in then?

McGhie. He was in Company with the Rebels.

Sir J. Strange. How did he appear, and what Command had he then?

McGhie. I don't know whether he had a Command; but he was heading a Troop of Horse.

Sir J. Strange. What Horse were they called?—McGhie. I don't know.

Sir J. Strange. Were they Part of the Rebel Army?—McGhie. Yes.

Sir J. Strange. Did you see them enter into the City of Carlisle?

McGhie. Yes.

Sir J. Strange. Fix the Time as near as you can.

McGhie. It was about the Eighteenth of November, as near as I can guess.

Sir J. Strange. Can you tell what Number there was of them?

McGhie. I cannot really.

Sir J. Strange. Will you acquaint the Lords, whether the Noble Lord at the Bar had any Arms?

McGhie. He had Pistols, and a Sword.

Sir J. Strange. Was his Sword drawn, or undrawn?

McGhie. I do not mind to have seen it drawn.

Sir J. Strange. Did you observe, whether he had any thing in his Bonnet or Hat, by way of Distinction?

McGhie. I do not mind that.

Sir J. Strange. Did you observe in what Manner the Noble Lord was dressed?—McGhie. In a common Dress.

Sir J. Strange. When you call it a common Dress, do you mean the Dress that the Officers wore, or his own Habit?

McGhie. I mean his own former Habit.

Sir J. Strange. Was there any thing particular in the Form of the Habit that the Officers of that Regiment wore?

McGhie. I do not mind any body, but himself.

Sir J. Strange. You saw him march at the Head of that Body going to Carlisle, after it was in Possession of the Rebels?

McGhie. Yes; and I saw him in the Going back from Derby.

Sir J. Strange. I ask you, Whether you observed the Noble Lord in Carlisle, after it was in Possession of the Rebels, and after the Marching you talk of, and before the Rebels left Carlisle, to come Southwards?

McGhie. Yes; I saw him in Carlisle when the Rebels were there.

Sir J. Strange. Did you observe what he was doing then?

McGhie. Nothing, but riding on Horseback.

Sir J. Strange. Was that with the Troop, or without?

McGhie. It was with the Troop.

Sir J. Strange. Did you observe whether his Sword was drawn?

McGhie. I did not.

Sir J. Strange. How long did the Rebels stay in Carlisle, before they marched Southwards?—McGhie. About Two Days.

Sir J. Strange. Did you observe the Noble Lord to go out of Carlisle?

McGhie. No; I was not South.

Sir J. Strange. Did you observe him then?

McGhie. I was in the Hospital; but when I came back again, I saw this Lord.

Sir J. Strange. Did you observe him to march out of Carlisle?

McGhie. Yes.

Sir J. Strange. What time was that?—McGhie. It was in November.

Sir J. Strange. What Distance of Time was there between their going and coming back? You can tell us when they marched back again?

McGhie. It was about Christmas, or a Day or Two before it.

Sir J. Strange. Did you observe the Noble Lord coming into Carlisle upon the Return? Or do you only speak of seeing him there?

McGhie. I saw him coming back again from Derby to Carlisle.

Sir J. Strange. Will you acquaint my Lords, whether you saw him at the Head of his Troop, or in what Manner?

McGhie. I saw him at the Head of a Troop of Horse in Carlisle.

Sir J. Strange. What were they? Were they Part of the Rebel Army?

McGhie. Yes.

Sir J. Strange. Had they any Drums, Colours, and Musick?

McGhie. They had both Colours and Drums, and Pipes playing.

Sir J. Strange. How long did my Lord stay at Carlisle upon his Return?

McGhie. Only one Night.—I am very sure of it.

Sir J. Strange. Did the Noble Lord go out of Carlisle in the Manner you have mentioned, at the Head of his Troop?

McGhie. In the same Manner, riding at the Head of a Troop of Horse.

Sir J. Strange. Will you acquaint my Lords, Whether, at the Time the Noble Lord was there, the Young Pretender was in Carlisle?

McGhie. Yes, he was there.

Sir

Sir J. Strange. Was he there when they first went into Carlisle, before they came Southward?

M^cGhie. No; he did not come till the next Day.

Sir J. Strange. Did you see the Pretender's Son the next Day?

M^cGhie. Yes.

Sir J. Strange. In what Manner did he enter Carlisle?

M^cGhie. He came in with Horse Life-Guards.

Sir J. Strange. Whose Life-Guards were they?

M^cGhie. The Young Pretender's.

Sir J. Strange. Who commanded those Guards at that Time, or any Part of them?

M^cGhie. I don't well know, there were so many commanded.

Sir J. Strange. Did you observe the Noble Lord at the Bar to command any?—M^cGhie. No, I did not.

Sir J. Strange. When they marched away from Carlisle for Scotland, did the Young Pretender go along with them?—M^cGhie. Yes.

Sir J. Strange. And did the greatest Part of the Rebel Army go with him?

M^cGhie. All, except those that were left at Carlisle, and those that were upon the Road.

Sir J. Strange. Was there a Garrison left at Carlisle?—M^cGhie. Yes.

Sir J. Strange. By whose Order?

M^cGhie. By Order of the Young Pretender.

Att. Gen. My Lords, we have done with this Witness: Will the Noble Lord ask him any Questions?

L. H. St. My Lord, if you would ask this Witness any Questions, now is your Time.

Lord Bal. I think, my Lords, he has contradicted himself: He says first it was in November, and then in December, and then in January.

L. H. St. If you want him to explain himself as to the Time, you may ask him any Question.

Lord Bal. What was done in November?

M^cGhie. The Rebels came first to Carlisle in November; and, when they came back, on their Return, it was December, about Christmas.

L. H. St. He applies November to your first coming to Carlisle, and December to your returning thither.

Lord Bal. I can't tell the time myself, unless I was at home to look at my Notes.

L. H. St. Will your Lordship ask him any more Questions?

Lord Bal. No, my Lords.

Sir J. Strange. I would beg Leave to ask the Witness one Question. He says there was a Garrison left in the City of Carlisle; I would ask him, Who that Garrison was to defend the Place against?

M^cGhie. Against his Majesty King George.

Hugh Douglas sworn.

Mr. Solicitor General. Look at the Noble Lord at the Bar, and see whether you know him.

Douglas. Yes, I know him.

Sol. Gen. Then give my Lords an Account, Whether you saw him in the Rebel Army at any Time; and when, and where, and what he did: And give your Account, as near as you can, in Order of Time.

Doug. I saw him at Diddeston, before the Pretender marched out of Edinburgh.

Sol. Gen. Now, go on: Where did you see him next?

Doug. I saw him at Kelfo.

Sol. Gen. Where next?—Doug. At Carlisle.

Sol. Gen. In what Manner did he march along with them from these several Places to Carlisle?

Doug. He was Colonel of the Second Troop of the Pretender's Life-Guards.

Sol. Gen. Did he, during this March, command this Second Troop, or ride at the Head of them?

Doug. He commanded them, and rode at the Head of them.

Sol. Gen. How were they armed?

Doug. They had each a Carbine, a Brace of Pistols, and a Broad Sword.

Sol. Gen. Did you see him at Carlisle?

Doug. He marched from Penrith to Carlisle, and back again into Scotland, at the Head of the Troop of Life-Guards. I saw him all the Way.

Sol. Gen. What did you see him do at Carlisle?

Doug. I saw him at the Head of his Troop of Horse in the Street, when they were drawn up, upon coming in there.

Sol. Gen. Where did you see him else? Did you see him in the Return?

Doug. I saw at Derby, and at Manchester, in returning.

Sol. Gen. Did you see him any where else?

Doug. I saw him at Falkirk, and saw him march all the Way from Penrith to Carlisle, in returning.

Sol. Gen. Did you see him at Carlisle, on his Return?—Doug. Yes.

Sol. Gen. When you saw him at Carlisle, was he with the Rebel Army?

Doug. Yes.

Sol. Gen. Did you see him at the Head of his Troop?

Doug. Yes; I saw him at the Head of his Troop of Horse march from Penrith to Carlisle.

Sol. Gen. Did you see him, at any Time in that March, act as an Officer?

Doug. Yes, he acted so far as an Officer, that he rode at the Head of his Troop all the Way.

Sol. Gen. Did you afterwards see him?

Doug. Yes, I saw him at Diddeston.

Sol. Gen. Do you speak of your seeing him in Going, or in the Return?

Doug. I speak of the Return. I saw him at Carlisle, and at the Battle of Falkirk.

Sol. Gen. Did you see him engaged in that Battle?

Doug. No, he was not engaged; none of the Horse were engaged.

Sol. Gen. Did you see him with his Sword drawn?

Doug. All the Men had their Swords drawn; but I don't remember particularly as to him, whether I saw him with his Sword drawn, or not.

Sol. Gen. Did you see him there at the Head of any Troop of Horse?

Sol. Gen. Did you see him there at the Head of any Troop of Horse?

Sir Rich. Lloyd. What Distinction had he in his Hat?
Gray. Nothing but a white Cockade.
Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was that any Mark of Distinction?
Gray. No, it was no Mark of Distinction at all; for they all wore it.
Sir Rich. Lloyd. You say you saw his Lordship march Southward: Did you see him afterwards on his March Northward?

Gray. I saw him march from Elgin of Murray towards Inverness, a little before the Battle of Culloden.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was he then armed?—Gray. Yes.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. How was he armed?

Gray. In the same Form as he was before.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. How was he dressed?

Gray. In the same Cloaths he was before.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Was he then at the Head of his Troop?

Gray. Yes, he was.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. Do you speak of the same Life-Guards?—Gray. Yes.

Sir Rich. Lloyd. How long was it before the Battle of Culloden that you saw him at the Head of his Troop?—Gray. About ten Days.

Mr. Attorney General. I desire he may explain who he meant, when he said, they all wore a white Cockade.

Gray. The Rebel Army.

Lord Bal. I observe, that none of the Witnesses who have been called, have made good the Charge against me, that I was at Carlisle on the 10th of November, nor for some time afterwards. I believe it will be to little Purpose to go any further; and am sorry I have taken up so much of your Lordships Time; for I was of Opinion, that, if any Article in the Indictment was not good against me, all the Indictment fell.

Lord High Steward. What does your Lordship insist upon? Do you insist on the Day being mistaken in the Indictment, or that you were not present at the actual Taking either of the Town or Castle of Carlisle by the Rebels?

Lord Bal. That I was not at Carlisle, either at the Taking of the Town or the Castle.

Mr. Serjeant Skinner. I beg Leave to call another Witness.

James Paterson sworn.

Serj. Skin. Look at the Noble Lord there: Do you know the Noble Lord?—Pater. Yes, I know the Noble Lord very well.

Serj. Skin. How long have you known him?

Pater. Ever since we marched from Lauder.

Serj. Skin. What Time was that?

Pater. I remember it was the first Night we marched from Dalkeith.

Serj. Skin. What Time was that you marched from Dalkeith?

Pater. I don't remember the Time particularly.

Serj. Skin. How long before Christmas was it?

Pater. I can't say I remember how long it was before Christmas.

Serj. Skin. Where was it this Noble Lord lodged?

Pater. He lodged at the same House I happened to be in.

Serj. Skin. What Command had he at that Time?

Pater. I did not know that he had any Command then.

Serj. Skin. Do you remember his coming to England?—Pater. Yes.

Serj. Skin. Do you remember what Month that was?

Pater. No; I don't remember the Time exactly.

Serj. Skin. Do you remember being at Long Town?—Pater. Yes.

Serj. Skin. Was the Pretender's Son at Long Town?—Pater. Yes.

Serj. Skin. Was Lord Balmerino there?

Pater. He was there as a Witness to the proclaiming the Pretender.

Serj. Skin. Was you present when the Pretender was proclaimed? And was he there?—Pater. Yes.

Serj. Skin. In what Manner did the Noble Lord attend there, when the Pretender was proclaimed?

Pater. My Lord only appeared as one of the Volunteers with the Pretender's Life-Guards.

Serj. Skin. Was that Lord at the Bar with them?—Pater. Yes.

Serj. Skin. Was he at the Head of them then?

Pater. No; he stood only among the rest.

Serj. Skin. What Dress had he on?

Pater. A blue Coat with red Facings.

Serj. Skin. What was the uniform Dress of those Guards?

Pater. A blue Coat with red Facings.

Serj. Skin. Had he any Thing in his Hat?

Pater. Yes; he wore a Cockade.

Serj. Skin. What Colour was his Cockade?—Pater. White.

Serj. Skin. Was that wore by all the Pretender's Forces?—Pater. Yes.

Serj. Skin. Where did you see my Lord next?—Pater. At Lancaster.

Serj. Skin. What was he doing there?

Pater. He was Witness to the proclaiming the Pretender there.

Serj. Skin. Were there any Guards there?

Pater. I remember very well all the Life-Guards were present there, and the Prisoner was with them.

Serj. Skin. How did the Prisoner at the Bar appear there?

Pater. He was at the Head of his Troop there.

Serj. Skin. How was he armed?

Pater. With a Brace of Pistols and a Sword.

Serj. Skin. What Sort of a Sword was it?—Pater. A Highland Sword.

Serj. Skin. Was it drawn?—Pater. Yes.

Serj. Skin. Where did you see him next?

Pater. I remember to have seen him at the Battle of Falkirk.

Serj. Skin. Was he at the Head of any Forces there?

Pater. Yes; he was at the Head of his Corps there.

Serj. Skin. Was his Sword drawn then?—Pater. Yes.

Serj. Skin. Was the Troop engaged?—Pater. No; I think it was not.

Serj. Skin. Do you know what became of him afterwards?

Pater. I saw him frequently afterwards; but I can't tell any particular Place, but at the Battle of Culloden.

Serj. Skin. Where did you see him then?

Pater. I remember to have seen him drawn up at the Head of his Corps at the Battle of Culloden.

Serj. Skinner. Was his Sword drawn?

Pater. Yes, his Sword was drawn.

Serj. Skin. Did you see him any where afterwards?

Pater. I saw him afterwards at Castle Gram; I saw him come in there after the Battle of Culloden.

Serj. Skin. Was he taken Prisoner there?

Pater. As far as I can tell, my Lord surrendered there.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember to have seen the Noble Lord at Carlisle?

Pater. Yes, I remember to have seen my Lord march into Carlisle on their Retreat, at the Head of his own Corps.

Mr. At. Gen. We have done with this Witness: Will the Noble Lord ask him any Questions?

Lord Bal. He might see me at Long Town, but not at Carlisle at the proclaiming the Pretender; for I was not there till a Fortnight after.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you see the Prisoner at Carlisle?

Pater. As far as I remember any thing in the World, I saw my Lord there.

Lord Bal. What was this Witness there?

Pater. My Lord, I was a Gentleman's Servant.

Lord Bal. I don't remember him: I want to know what Regiment this Man was in; or what he was; and what was his Business?

L. H. S. You hear what his Lordship says: What was you there?

Pater. I was a Gentleman's Servant in the First Troop of Life-Guards.

L. H. S. Whose Life-Guards?

Pater. The Pretender's Guards: I was Servant to Mr. Hume.

Lord Bal. I was at Long Town then.

Roger McDonald sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Give an Account, whether you saw the Prisoner march with the Rebel Army, at the Time of their first Setting-out, either in Scotland or England, and where.

McDon. The first Time I saw him was at Holyrood-House.

At. Gen. What did you see him do there?

McDon. The only Thing that I observed was, That I saw the Prisoner with the Guards; but he was in no Place of Distinction.

At. Gen. What Guards?—McDon. The Pretender's Guards.

At. Gen. Where did you see him with them?

McDon. In the Court of Holyrood-House.

At. Gen. Was the Pretender's Son at Holyrood-House at that Time?

McDon. He was at Edinburgh at that Time.

At. Gen. Where did you see him the next Time?

McDon. The second Time that I remember to have seen the Prisoner, was on the Retreat, coming from Derby, entering into the Town of Manchester, when the Horse were formed at the Outside of the Town of Manchester.

At. Gen. How did the Prisoner appear there?

McDon. With his Sword drawn at the Head of his Squadron.

At. Gen. Was the Prisoner at the Bar at the Head of those Rebels that were drawn up?

McDon. Yes; I remember to have seen the Prisoner in particular.

At. Gen. Did he command any Part of the Rebel Army?

McDon. Not to my Knowledge; but I remember to have seen him there.

At. Gen. Do you remember seeing him any where else?

McDon. The next Time I particularly remember was, that I saw him at the Battle of Falkirk, after the Squadron was formed, and Lord Elche's Horse were drawn up there.

At. Gen. Did you see the Prisoner command any Horse there?

McDon. The Squadron was not fully formed when I saw him; but I remember to have seen the Prisoner at the Bar at the Head of a Squadron of Horse there.

At. Gen. Did you, at any Time see him marching out of Elgin of Murray to Inverness, at the Head of the same Squadron?

McDon. I remember to have seen the Prisoner at the Head of the same Squadron at Inverness.

At. Gen. Did you see him in any particular Dress at that Time?

McDon. I don't remember his Dress then; but at Manchester I remember it was a Suit of Blue turned up with red Cuffs.

At. Gen. Was it the Uniform Dress of any Part of the Pretender's Army?

McDon. It was the Uniform Dress of the Pretender's Guards.

At. Gen. Was there any particular distinguishing Mark that he wore?

McDon. I can't say I do remember any.

At. Gen. Had he a white Cockade?—McDon. Yes; he had.

At. Gen. Was that the common distinguishing Mark of the Rebel Army?

McDon. Yes; it was the distinguishing Mark. They all wore white Cockades; that was the general Thing that was worn.

At. Gen. We will trouble your Lordships with no more Witnesses.

L. H. S. Will your Lordship ask this Witness any Questions?

Lord Bal. No, my Lords; I am sorry I have taken up so much of your Lordships Time.

L. H. S. The King's Counsel having gone through their Evidence, now is your Lordship's Time to make your Defence.

Lord Bal. My Lords, I have said all that I have to say. I observe, that none of the Witnesses have agreed upon the Day charged in the Indictment; and I have nothing else to say.

L. H. S. You say the Witnesses have not proved, That your Lordship was at Carlisle on the particular Day laid in the Indictment: But the Witnesses have proved, That they saw you in Arms at the Head of your Troop of Rebels at Carlisle. If your Lordship can disprove that Fact, this is your Time to do it. Have you any Thing to say in Support of what you have observed, about the particular Day not being proved, as laid in the Indictment? I should be glad to know upon what your Lordship would put your Defence. They have proved you to be in Arms at Carlisle in November.

Lord Bal. But not at the Taking of Carlisle; and I can prove, I was not there at the Time Carlisle was taken; but was twelve Miles off.

Mr. Serj. Skinner. The Witnesses don't say he was at the Surrender of the Town; but he was in the Town after it was taken by the Rebels; and that he marched into the Town at the Head of his Troop. He was with them, on their March, at Long Town and Lancaster, and several other Places; and, if we have made out any one Fact laid in the Indictment.

ment, it is sufficient, and, I hope, your Lordships will think the Treason is proved.

Mr. At. Gen. I beg your Lordships would spare me a few Words upon this Occasion: And, if I am right, I take the Prisoner's Objection to be this, That the Witnesses for the Crown have not proved the Facts to be committed on the precise Day laid in the Indictment.

Lord Bal. That is not the Case: You mistake it intirely.

L. H. S. My Lord Balmerino objects, That it is not proved he was at Carlisle, when it was actually taken by the Rebels.

At. Gen. Then I apprehend the Objection to be only this, That he was not there at the Taking of Carlisle.

Lord Bal. That is the Objection.

L. H. S. What have the King's Counsel to say to that Objection?

Mr. Serj. Skinner. My Lords, the Objection made by the Noble Peer at your Lordships Bar, is, That on the tenth Day of November, the Day laid in the Indictment, he was not at Carlisle; and that he was not at the Taking of that City and Castle.

My Lords, The Day laid in an Indictment is merely Matter of Form. Some Days, previous to the Indictment, must be laid; but the Proof is not tied up to that Time: Any Proof, before or after the Day, may be admitted; and it is sufficient, if it be before the Time of preferring the Indictment.

And suppose the Noble Lord was not present at the Time that the City and Castle of Carlisle were actually taken; yet it is proved, that he marched into the City armed, and at the Head of his Troop, the second Day after the Castle was taken; so that he was in the Possession of the City and Castle. And the Detainer of the King's Town or Castle is High Treason: And where many Acts of Treason are laid in an Indictment of High Treason, if any one Charge be made good the Person must be convicted.

I therefore submit, That there is no Weight in the Objection made by this Noble Lord.

At. Gen. My Lords, The Objection, if it can be of any Use to the Noble Lord, must be to shew, that the Evidence is not sufficient to induce your Lordships to find him guilty. The Indictment consists of a general Charge of levying War, together with the Circumstances of being arrayed and assembled in a warlike Manner against his Majesty, and the particular Fact of entering, possessing, taking, and defending the City and Castle of Carlisle against his Majesty. The former is fully proved; for every one of the Witnesses prove, he marched in the Rebel Army, arrayed in a hostile Manner, riding at the Head of the second Troop of the Pretender's Son's Horse-Guards. As to the other Fact, of his entering and taking of Carlisle; it is proved by three Witnesses, That the Prisoner came into Carlisle, at the Head of his Troop, when the Rebels were in Possession of it, and held it for the Pretender: Which is a full, positive Proof of that Fact.

But the Noble Lord objects, That he was not present at the Taking.

There are two clear Answers to this: One, That neither the Law, nor the Charge in the Indictment makes that necessary, if it appears that he did enter it, and was in Possession of it, in a hostile Manner.

Another is, That if that particular Fact was not at all proved, it could be of no Service to his Lordship, while there is another Act of Treason charged and proved.

By the Law, every Entry and Possession of the King's Town or Fortrefs in a hostile Manner, against the King, is High Treason; nor does the Law distinguish how that Entry and Possession is obtained, if it is done by Rebels, and in Opposition to the Royal Authority. His Lordship neither denies his Entry and holding the Possession for the Pretender, nor disputes the Weight of the Evidence that proves it: And it can do him no good, if it appeared never so clearly, that the Time of his personal Entry was not till after the Rebel Army had made themselves Masters of it.

But if this Fact was as doubtful as it is clear, the Evidence of the other Part of the Charge is certain and unobjected to; and there is nothing plainer, in Point of Law, than that the Proof of any one Overt Act, laid in the Indictment, is sufficient, though no Evidence is given of any others that are charged.

The Noble Lord, though he now seems to give it up, did object at first, That the Evidence did not prove the Treason on the Tenth of November, the Day charged in the Indictment. Lest that should have any Weight, I would only say, That it has been frequently adjudged, that, though a precise Day must be charged, the Day is immaterial in Point of Proof: So it was particularly in the Case of Sir Henry Vane, in the Time of King Charles the Second: He was indicted for High Treason; and it was laid in the Indictment, That the Facts were committed on a certain Day, in the Eleventh Year of King Charles the Second. It was only proved, that they were committed in the First Year of his Reign, and yet held it was sufficient to support the Indictment.

The Question, therefore, on the Whole, will only be, Whether treasonable Acts of Hostility have been proved upon the Noble Lord? And, as that can admit of no Doubt, neither can his being guilty of the Treason, charged on him by this Indictment, admit of any.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I don't know whether it is necessary for all of us to speak in this Case. For my Part, I shall say but a Word or two. Here are several Acts of Treason that are alleged in the Indictment; and whoever hath given the Noble Lord, who is the Prisoner, to understand, that every particular Act must be proved (if any such Advice can have been given him) hath been mistaken; because it is clear and certain, in Point of Law, that though ever so many Facts are laid in the Indictment, yet, if there is legal Proof of any one of those Facts, which is High Treason, it is sufficient to found your Lordships Judgment, that the Person so proved guilty of any particular Fact, is to be adjudged guilty of High Treason.

Your Lordships, however, will be pleased to observe, how many particular Acts are laid in the Indictment, and whether they are not all proved. First, It is laid, That the Noble Lord at the Bar did, with many others, arm, array, and dispose himself in a warlike and hostile Manner against the King. This, my Lords, is clearly proved; for the Witnesses have told your Lordships, That he had the Command of the second Troop of the Pretender's Life-Guard, which was Part of the Rebel Army: That he marched at the Head of this Troop, with Drums beating, and Colours displayed: That he wore a particular Habit, which was Blue turned up with Red, a laced Hat, and a white Cockade, being the Uniform Dress of the Troop: And the being thus arrayed in this hostile Manner, my Lord Hale, in his first Volume, H. P. C. 150, 152, says, is levying War against the King; and this has been fully proved to your Lordships against this Noble Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, by more than two Witnesses. His being present at several Places at the Proclaiming of the Pretender has been likewise proved to your Lordships: And we use it as a Circumstance to lead your Lordships Judgment, with what Intent he was thus armed and arrayed in a hostile Manner, which was plainly in order to dethrone his Majesty, and place a Pretender upon the Throne. This has been proved against the Noble Lord at the Bar to have occurred at two Places, where this Proclamation was made.

Another Circumstance which has been proved, is, his being drawn up and formed at the Battle of Falkirk; and though the Witnesses do not say, that that Party of the Pretender's Life-Guards was actually engaged upon this Occasion, yet, I humbly apprehend, that is not material. There can be no Doubt, in Point of Law, but that every body, who is so drawn up in a warlike and hostile Manner, is waging War, though every Party is not engaged. He was there drawn up with his Forces, with his Broad Sword drawn, and ready to engage at that Time. And, my Lords, we trace him from thence to the glorious Field of Calloden; and your Lordships observe, he was there an Officer, leading his Squadron, and commanding the second Troop of Life-Guards of the Pretender; and after the Disaster which befel them that Day, and for which we have great Reason to be thankful, the Noble Lord at the Bar surrendered himself to the King's Forces, as one of those engaged against the King at that Battle. My Lords, lay all these Things together, and your Lordships will see, it is no way necessary to prove, whether this Noble Lord was present at the first Taking of Carlisle, or not: Which seems to be the only Point on which the Noble Lord has rested his Defence.

But, my Lords, if it was necessary to shew that, I apprehend it is proved. The Taking of a Town or a City is not the Act of a single Man, but the Act of a great Number of Persons, got together for that Purpose; therefore, as to any Man, who was a Part of the Rebel Army, and went into the City of Carlisle, after it surrendered to the Rebels, and joined with them, it is an actual Taking of that City: For it was the Force and Terror without the City, and the appearing in the hostile Manner, already described, which occasioned the Surrender of the Place. Every one, therefore, who joined in this Force and Terror, is instrumental in the Taking of the Town. It is proved, that he entered into Carlisle, and was in Possession of the Town; it is proved, by more than one Witness, that he did it at the Head of the Pretender's Life-Guards: He lay there one Night, while the Rebels were in Possession of the Town, and then he marched out Southward. Then there is his returning back to Carlisle; taking Possession of it the second Time; his being there with the Young Pretender; his going away with him and the Rebel Army, and leaving a Garrison in the Town, to defend it against the King's Forces, when they should come up. My Lords, this, with Submission to your Lordships, is a strong and clear Proof, that he entered and took Possession of Carlisle, and kept it against the King, as laid in the Indictment; and whether he remained there a longer or a shorter Time, whether he lay one Night or twenty Nights in it, makes no Difference in Point of Law.

I don't observe, the Noble Lord lays much Strefs upon the Tenth of November's being laid in the Indictment, as the Day on which the Treason was committed; and therefore I forbear to trouble your Lordships upon it; for, to be sure, it does not signify, whether the Facts committed were on the Tenth of November, or any other Day.

My Lords, I apprehend every particular Act of Treason laid in the Indictment, against the Noble Lord at the Bar, is fully proved; and therefore I submit the Whole to your Lordships Judgment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, —

Lord Bal. I am satisfied I was mistaken; and ask your Lordships Pardon, for taking up so much of your Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I was going to have said, That I did not apprehend it necessary for me to speak upon this Point from any Difficulty in the Objection. But as the Answer to the Objection depended not upon natural, but legal Reasoning, and established Forms, and as the Noble Lord had chose not to have the Assistance of Counsel in stating and enforcing his Objection, I would, for his Satisfaction, have said a Word or Two, not only to shew that the Matter is settled by the uniform Authority of all our Books, and many adjudged Cases; but to have explained why it has been settled, that the Treason must be laid in the Indictment to have been committed on a particular Day, and yet, at the Trial, need not be proved to have been committed on that precise Day. As he has declared himself satisfied, there is no Occasion to say any thing.

Then the Lord High-Steward returned back to his Chair.

Lord Pres. My Lords, I move your Lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Lords and others returned to the Chamber of Parliament, in the same Order they came down: And after some Time, the House was adjourned again into Westminster-Hall; and the Peers being there seated, the Lord High Steward in his Chair, and the House resumed, the Serjeant-at-Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as usual.

L. H. S. Your Lordships were pleased, in the Chamber of Parliament, to come to a Resolution, That the Opinion of the learned and reverend Judges should be taken upon the following Question, viz. Whether it is necessary, that an Overt Act of High-Treason should be proved to have been committed on the particular Day laid in the Indictment? Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges do now give their Opinions on that Question?

Lords.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. My Lord Chief-Justice.

L. C. J. Lee. The Question proposed by your Lordships is, Whether it be necessary, that an Overt Act of High-Treason should be proved to be committed on the particular Day laid in the Indictment?

We are all of Opinion, that it is not necessary to prove the Overt Act to be committed on the particular Day laid in the Indictment: But as Evidence may be given of an Overt Act before the Day, so it may be after the Day specified in the Indictment; for the Day laid is Circumstance and Form only, and not material in Point of Proof: And this is the known, constant Course of Proceeding in Trials.

L. H. S. Lieutenant of the Tower, take my Lord Balmerino from the Bar.

Lord Bal. Will your Lordships be pleased to allow me to speak two Words?

L. H. S. If you think fit, my Lord.

Lord Bal. Your Lordships may think I have had very bad Advice in this Case: But to do Justice to my Solicitor, Mr. Ross, he laid my Case before Counsel; and he told me, they were of the same Opinion with what the King's Counsel have offered: But I myself had a Notion, that not being at Carlisle, at the Time it was taken, I was not within the Indictment; and I thought there was something in the Objection; and that was the Reason of my giving your Lordships so much Trouble. I am very sorry for it; and ask your Lordships Pardon.

L. H. S. Has your Lordship any thing further to offer?

Lord Bal. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. Lieutenant of the Tower, take my Lord Balmerino from the Bar.

Which was done accordingly.

L. H. S. Your Lordships have heard the Evidence, and every thing that has been alledged on both Sides; and you have also heard the Opinions of the learned and reverend Judges on a particular Question stated to them. The Solemnity of your Proceedings requires, that your Lordships Opinions on the Question of Guilty or Not Guilty, should be delivered severally in the Absence of the Prisoner, beginning with the Junior Baron; and that the Prisoner should afterwards be acquainted with the Result of those Opinions by me. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to proceed now to give your Opinions on the Question of Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up uncovered; and beginning with the youngest Peer, said,

L. H. S. Henry Arthur Lord Herbert of Chisbury, what says your Lordship? Is Arthur Lord Balmerino Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Whereupon Henry Arthur Lord Herbert of Chisbury, standing up in his Place uncovered, and laying his right Hand upon his Breast, answered, Guilty, upon my Honour.

In like Manner the several Lords aftermentioned, being all that were present, answered as followeth:

Then the Lord High Steward, laying his Right Hand upon his Breast, said;

Lord High Steward. My Lords, I am of Opinion, that Arthur Lord Balmerino is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, upon my Honour.

L. H. S. Your Lordships have unanimously found, that Arthur Lord Balmerino is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that he should be called in, and acquainted therewith?—Lords. Ay, Ay.

Proclamation was then made for the Lieutenant of the Tower to bring the Prisoner to the Bar: Which was done in the same Order as before; and afterwards Proclamation made for Silence, as usual.

L. H. S. Arthur Lord Balmerino, The Lords have considered of the Charge of High-Treason which has been brought against you; they have likewise considered the Evidence, and every thing which your Lordship has alledged in your Defence; and, upon the whole Matter, their Lordships have unanimously found, that you are Guilty of the High-Treason, whereof you stand indicted.

Lord President, My Lords, I move your Lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament: Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords, Ay, Ay.

L. H. S. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then the Lords returned, in the Order before mentioned, to the Chamber of Parliament: And the House being there resumed;

Ordered, That the said Earls of Kilmarnock and Cromartie, and Lord Balmerino, should be remanded Prisoners to his Majesty's Tower of London, there to be kept in safe Custody; and that they should be brought to the Bar of the House in Westminster-Hall on Wednesday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon, that their Lordships might proceed in order to Giving of Judgment upon them.

Wednesday, July 30, 1746. The Second Day.

THE Lords and others came from the Chamber of Parliament into Westminster-Hall, in the same Order as on Monday last; and the Peers were there seated, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

L. H. S. The House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges may be covered?

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as usual; and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoners, William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromartie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords.

The Deputy Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoners to the Bar in the like Form as before; and then they kneeled down.

L. H. S. Your Lordships may rise.

The Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as usual.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, it appears, That the Three Noble Lords at the Bar have been severally indicted for High-Treason, in levying War against his Majesty. They have severally been arraigned; and, to their Indictments, Two of the Noble Lords, the Earls of Kilmarnock and Cromartie, have pleaded Guilty; and the other, my Lord Balmerino, has pleaded Not guilty, and put himself upon his Trial by his Peers. As to the Two Noble Lords, who have pleaded Guilty, I pray your Lordships Judgment against them, according to that Confession; and, as to the Lord Balmerino, who hath pleaded Not guilty, and put himself upon his Trial by his Peers, your Lordships, upon hearing the Evidence, having found him Guilty, I also pray your Lordships Judgment accordingly against him.

L. H. S. William Earl of Kilmarnock, you stand indicted of High-Treason, in levying War against his Majesty; to which you have pleaded Guilty, and are thereby convicted: What has your Lordship to say, Why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you, according to Law?

Here the Lord High Steward asked Leave to go down to the Table: Which being done; Proclamation was made for Silence, as usual.

EARL of KILMARNOCK.

My Lords,

I SHALL not attempt to say any thing in Justification of a Crime, which is of too heinous a Nature to be vindicated; and which any Endeavour to excuse would rather aggravate than diminish. With unfeigned Humility I am ready to submit to the Sentence I am too conscious I have deserved. I have already owned myself guilty; and, covered with Confusion and Grief, I throw myself at his Majesty's Feet for Mercy.

I shall plead no Excuse for my Behaviour, in a Circumstance which makes me so much the more unhappy, as it has effaced my former Character, and blotted out the Memory of my constant Attachment to his Majesty's Interest all the preceding Part of my Life.

But, if a Man's former uniform Conduct can be any Evidence of his Principles, and Way of Thinking, I may appeal to mine. My Lords, I appeal to the World, if ever any Sentiment, of the Nature of the Crime I am now arraigned for, ever appeared in it; or if the contrary was not very conspicuous through my whole Life and Conversation.

My Sphere of Action, indeed was narrow; but, as much as I could in that Sphere, it is well known, I always exerted myself to the utmost in every Part of his Majesty's Service I had an Opportunity to act in, from my first Appearance in the World, to the Time I was drawn into this Crime, for which I now appear before your Lordships; in which I did not engage till very late, not till many Weeks after the Battle of Preston.

While I was engaged, it was my constant Care, as far as it lay in my Power, to protect and prevent any Injuries to his Majesty's faithful Subjects in their Persons, Houses, or Estates: For the Truth of which I can appeal to every Town and Country, through which I passed, or at any time halted in.

I had the same Regard for the Prisoners that were taken: And, I believe, Officers, private Men, and others, will vouch for me, That they had better Usage, and their Condition was rendered more supportable, through my Means, though I never had any particular Charge of them. I must at the same time own, that all I did, or could do, in this Way, for the Service of particular Persons, is no Atonement for the Blood I have been accessory to the Spilling of; nor do I plead it as such, or at all in Defence of my Crime.

I have a Son, my Lords, who has the Honour to carry his Majesty's

VOL. IX.

Commission; whose Behaviour, I believe, will sufficiently evince, that he has been educated in the firmest Revolution Principles, and brought up with the warmest Attachment to his Majesty's Interest, and the highest Zeal for his most Sacred Person, and the Title of his Illustrious House to the Crown of these Realms.

That he was impressed with a firm and settled Opinion, That the Revolution was just and necessary; and that Civil and Religious Liberty and Property cannot be secured to the Nation, otherwise than by the strictest Adherence to these Principles, and maintaining and supporting the Succession to the Crown, as it is by Law established in the Person of his most Sacred Majesty, and his Illustrious House.

It was my chief Care to instruct him in these Principles from his earliest Youth; and to confirm him, as he grew up, in the Justice and Necessity of them to the Good and Welfare of the Nation. And, I thank God, I have succeeded: For his Father's Example did not shake his Loyalty; the Ties of Nature yielded to those of Duty: He adhered to the Principles of his Family, and nobly exposed his Life at the Battle of Culloden, in Defence of his King, and the Liberties of Britain; which I, his unfortunate Father, was in Arms to destroy.

I was instructed in the same Principles myself from my Infancy, by the best of Fathers, who distinguished himself early on his late Majesty's Accession, by his Zeal and Activity in suppressing the Rebellion in 1715 (in which he contracted his Death, that followed soon after), as was well known then, and may still be remembered by some of your Lordships. I then had the Honour to serve under him, as far as my Years would admit of, in the same Cause which my Family had always been remarkable for supporting, and which I have ever since strictly adhered to, both in my Heart and Practice, till this unhappy Period.

My Lords, I am not one of those dangerous Persons, who can raise a Number of Men when they will, and command them on any Enterprize they please: My Interests lie on the South Side of Forth, in the well inhabited and well affected Counties of Kilmarnock and Falkirk, in the Shires of Ayr and Stirling. I have the Honour to speak to those who know the Map, the Situations of these Countries, and the Dispositions of their People: These Places are so well affected (and, perhaps, partly through my Means), that any Influence I, or any other, could have on them to the contrary, would be very small; and if I could have had any, I did not use it on this Occasion. Though I was, in the Months of December and January last, some Weeks at Falkirk, I did not raise a single Man out of it; and though, immediately before that, I was a Week at Glasgow, a few Miles from Kilmarnock, I brought Nobody from thence. These last, indeed, were much strengthened in their loyal Principles by my Father's long Residence, and by my being much among them; and I used my Endeavours, with Success, to confirm them in those Sentiments, in a Visit I made them last September; when I passed some Days with them, about the Time of, and after the Battle of Preston: At that time I got them put in as much Readiness to act for his Majesty's Service, as the Law would then admit of; and procured their settling a Correspondence with their neighbouring Boroughs of Ayr and Irvine, for their common Defence: which had so good an Effect, that the Town of Kilmarnock alone had soon a good Body of Militia on Foot, which marched into Glasgow the Beginning of Winter.

I cannot omit to inform your Lordships, That, at the Battle of Culloden, I not only surrendered myself, but I surrendered when it was very easy for me to have escaped, as all that Body did with whom I was when they gave Way. Lord Ancrum, to whom I made my Surrender, can acquaint your Lordships, That, when I came up to him, I was quite alone, at a very great Distance from those I had left; and that I neither was running, nor pursued by any Enemy. But though I could have escaped, I did not choose it; because the Consequences, in an Instant, appeared to me more terrible, more shocking, than the most painful or ignominious Death. To throw myself into the Hands of a Foreign Power, the natural Enemy to my Country, with whom to have Merit, I must persist in continued Acts of Violence to my Principles, and of Treason and Rebellion against my King and Country; I had already been too far engaged with those, who were encouraged by that Power, to think of continuing in so criminal an Error; and therefore I chose to surrender, and commit myself to his Majesty's Mercy.

I beg leave to repeat what I said before, That I did not mean to advance any thing in Excuse, or even in Mitigation of my Crime: I only pray to be looked on, by your Lordships, as an Object of his Majesty's Compassion; and, if I am so happy, I beg leave to implore your Lordships Intercession with his Majesty for Mercy, in my Behalf. It is your Lordships Intercession, and that of my Countrymen alone, that I implore. I heard there was an Offer of Mediation made by a Foreign Prince at War with his Majesty; and I heard it with an Indignation that ought to fire the Heart of every Briton, when a French King dares attempt to direct, or in any respect influence, the Counsels or Determinations of a King of Britain; or presume to interpose between his Majesty and his offending Subjects. I was but too far drawn in, and unhappily engaged, with those who were assisted and influenced by that Prince; and I never can sufficiently testify my Sorrow and Repentance for it: But I would look on it as the highest Aggravation of my Crime, to hope, or even to wish for Favour through his Office, by whose Means chiefly, I believe, they were misled, with whom I was accessory to the disturbing the Peace of these Nations, and swerving from my Duty and Allegiance to his Majesty, which all the former Part of my Life I had kept inviolable.

It is by Britons only, that I pray to be recommended to a British Monarch. If his Majesty shall be pleased, from the steady Loyalty of my Family, from my Father's past Services, from my own constant Adherence to his Majesty's Interest, from my present Anguish for having ever been concerned in this unnatural Rebellion, and from my undissembled Sorrow and Remorse for it, which must attend me to my last Moments: If from these, but much more from his own unbounded Mercy, my Royal Master shall incline to spare that Life which I have justly forfeited, let me owe it to his Majesty through the Intercession of your Lordships, who are Witnesses to my Grief and Repentance.

4 I

But

But if Justice will not allow of Mercy, my Lords, I will lay down my Life with Patience and Resignation: My last Breath shall be employed in the most fervent Prayers for the Preservation and Prosperity of his Majesty, and his August House, and to beg his Forgiveness, and the Forgiveness of my Country.

Lord High Steward. George Earl of Cromartie, You stand indicted of High Treason, in levying War against his Majesty; to which you have pleaded Guilty, and are thereby convicted: What has your Lordship to say, Why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you, according to Law?

EARL OF CROMARTIE.

I HAVE now the Misfortune to appear before your Lordships, guilty of an Offence of such a Nature, as justly merits the highest Indignation of his Majesty, your Lordships, and the Publick: And it was from a Conviction of my Guilt, that I did not presume to trouble your Lordships with any Defence. As I have committed Treason, it is the last Thing I would mean to justify it: My only Plea shall be, your Lordships Compassion; my only Refuge, his Majesty's Clemency.

Under this heavy Load of Affliction, I have still the Satisfaction, my Lords, of hoping, that my past Conduct, before the Breaking out of the Rebellion, was irreproachable, as to my Attachment to the present happy Establishment, both in Church and State: And, in Evidence of my Affection to the Government, upon the Breaking out of the Rebellion, I can appeal to the then Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Forces at Inverness, and to the Lord President of the Court of Session in Scotland, who, I am sure, will do Justice to my Conduct upon that Occasion.

But, my Lords, notwithstanding my determined Resolution in Favour of the Government, I was most unhappily seduced from that Loyalty in an unguarded Moment, by the Arts of desperate and designing Men: And it is notorious, my Lords, that no sooner did I awake from that Delusion, than I felt a Remorse for my Departure from my Duty; but it was too late.

Nothing now, my Lords, remains, but to throw myself, my Life, and Fortune upon your Lordships Compassion; but those, my Lords, as to myself, are the least Part of my Misery.

I have involved an innocent Wife (no Party to my Guilt), and, with her, an unborn Infant, to share its Penalty: I have involved my eldest Son, whose Infancy, and Regard to his Parent, hurried him down the Stream of Rebellion: I have involved also Eight innocent Children, who must feel their Parent's Punishment, before they know his Guilt.

Let them, my Lords, be Pledges to his Majesty; let them be Pledges to your Lordships; let them be Pledges to my Country, for Mercy: Let the silent Eloquence of their Grief and Tears, let the powerful Language of innocent Nature, supply my Want of Eloquence and Persuasion: Let me enjoy Mercy no longer than I deserve it; and let me no longer enjoy Life, than I shall endeavour to efface the Crimes I have been guilty of. Whilst I thus intercede for your Lordships Recommendation to his Majesty for Mercy, let my Remorse for my Guilt, as a Subject; let the Sorrows of my Heart, as a Husband; let the Anguish of my Mind, as a Father, speak the rest of my Misery! Your Lordships are Men, you feel as Men; but may none of you ever suffer the smallest Part of what I suffer!

But, after all, if my Safety shall be found inconsistent with that of the Publick, and nothing but my Blood thought necessary to atone for my unhappy Crimes; if the Sacrifice of my Life, my Fortune, and Family, are judged indispensable for stopping the loud Demands of publick Justice; if, notwithstanding all the Allegations that can be urged in my Favour, the bitter Cup is not to pass from me; not mine, but thy Will, O God, be done!

Lord High Steward. Arthur Lord Balmerino, When you were last at this Bar, I acquainted your Lordship, That upon your Trial, your Peers had unanimously found you guilty of the High Treason of which you stand indicted, whereby you are convicted: What have you to say, why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you, according to Law?

Lord Bal. My Lords, I have here a Paper in my Hand, which says, There are some Reasons, why Judgment should not pass against me. I desire your Lordships will let it be read.

L. H. S. Will your Lordship please to read it yourself?

Lord Bal. I desire your Lordships would let it be read.

L. H. S. My Lords, This Paper, which is offered by my Lord Balmerino, cannot be read at the Table; but your Lordships may give Leave, that a Clerk may go down to the Bar, and read it for the Prisoner.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Clerk of the Crown reads the Paper; viz.

July 29th, 1746.

IT is conceived, that the late Act of Parliament, empowering his Majesty to transport such as are taken in Arms from one County to another, where they may be tried by the Course of the Common Law, did not take place, till after the Time that the Facts, implying Treason, were actually committed by the accused Prisoners; and, if so, the Grand Jury of Surry, or of any other County whatsoever, where these Acts of Treason are not alledged to have been committed, could not, agreeable to Law, find Bills against such Prisoners: And it may, on that score, be prayed, That the Indictment be quashed, or that an Arrest of Judgment be thereupon granted.

Nat. Williamson.

If the Bill, found by the Grand Jury, has any Flaw, so as to make it illegal, all the Superstructure falls of Course.

Nat. Williamson.

L. H. S. What has your Lordship to offer upon this Paper?

Lord Bal. I say, my Lords, if the Grand Jury of the County of Surry had not Power to find a Bill of Indictment against me, I can't have Judgment pass against me; for I can't see, how the Indictment can be good.

L. H. S. Has your Lordship any thing more to offer?

Lord Bal. No, my Lords.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordships hear what is alledged by my Lord Balmerino.

Earl of Bath. I desire, my Lord Balmerino may be asked, Whether he knows, that he is intitled to have Counsel, if he thinks fit?

L. H. S. Has not your Lordship been acquainted, before this Time, that you were intitled to have Counsel, if you thought fit to apply for it?

Lord Bal. Yes, my Lords; I was acquainted some Time ago, that I might have Counsel; but I have not had Time to speak to any on this Paper. I received this Paper but within this half Hour from the Constable of the Tower.

L. H. S. If you were told, that you might have Counsel, why did not your Lordship apply for Counsel before?

Lord Bal. I told your Lordships the other Day, That I did not know I should have Occasion for Counsel. I have had no Counsel to advise me on this Paper. Do your Lordships think fit to allow me Counsel now?

L. H. S. Doth your Lordship now move for Counsel?

Lord Bal. Yes, my Lords, I do, upon this Point only.

The Lord High Steward went back to his Chair.

L. H. S. My Lords, By the Statute of the Seventh of King William the Third, for regulating Trials in Cases of High-Treason, my Lord Balmerino might have had Counsel assigned him by your Lordships to make his full Defence, if he had thought fit to apply for that Purpose: And as he had long ago, by your Order, a Solicitor assigned him, with Liberty of Access to him at all seasonable Times, he admits, that he was rightly informed concerning that Matter. It seems his Lordship did not think it proper to apply for Counsel before now, though he admitted, on Monday last, that he had had the Advice of Counsel upon his Case; but he has now moved your Lordships to assign him Counsel, to speak to one particular Point offered by him in Arrest of Judgment. As this is the State of the Proceeding, it is proper for your Lordships Consideration, Whether before you appoint Counsel to argue a particular Point, you will not have that Point so far opened, as to see, whether there is any Colour in it, or not. This will best appear, by hearing one of the King's Counsel state the Matter upon the Act of this Session of Parliament, referred to by the Paper which was just now read; and then possibly my Lord himself may be so well satisfied, as not to insist on having Counsel assigned to argue it.

Duke of Newcastle. As the Prisoner at the Bar has made his Objection, and moved an Arrest of Judgment, I think one of the King's Counsel ought to have Liberty to be heard to that Matter: Your Lordships will then see, what Weight there is in the Objection insisted on by the Prisoner, and be the better able to determine about assigning Counsel to argue it. I am therefore of Opinion, that the King's Counsel should be heard in the Manner proposed by my Lord High Steward.

Earl Granville. By the known Rules and Usage of Parliament, there can be no Debate in this Place; and therefore I move your Lordships to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Lords, and others, returned to the Chamber of Parliament in the same Order they came down; and, after some time, the House was adjourned again into Westminster-Hall; and the Peers being there seated, the Lord High Steward in his Chair, and the House resumed, the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as usual.

L. H. S. My Lord Balmerino, The Lords have, in their House above, unanimously come to this Resolution, That I should ask your Lordship, Whether you do now desire that Counsel should be assigned you; and that I should acquaint you, that in case you do desire it, their Lordships will assign you such Counsel as you think fit to propose.

Lord Bal. Yes, my Lords, I do.

L. H. S. What Counsel does your Lordship desire should be assigned you?

Lord Bal. Mr. Wilbraham and Mr. Forrester, my Lords.

Lord President. I move, that your Lordships will adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

L. H. S. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. S. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then the Lords went back, in the Order beforementioned, to the Chamber of Parliament.

And the House being there resumed;

Ordered, That Mr. Wilbraham and Mr. Forrester be assigned Counsel for the Lord Balmerino, as desired; and that they may have Access to him at all seasonable Times.

Ordered, That the Earls of Kilmarnock and Cromartie, and the Lord Balmerino, be remanded Prisoners to his Majesty's Tower of London, and there kept in safe Custody, until the further Order of this House.

Ordered, That this House will proceed further, in order to the giving Judgment against the said Lords on Friday next, at eleven of the Clock; and that they be then brought to the Bar of this House, in Westminster-Hall, for that Purpose.

Friday, August 1st, 1746.

THE Lords, and others, came from the Chamber of Parliament into Westminster Hall, in the same Order as on Monday last; and the Peers were there seated, and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, the House is resumed.

Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

The Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence; and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoners, William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromartie, and Arthur Lord Balmerino, to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords.

The Deputy-Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoners to the Bar, in the like Form as before; and then they kneeled down.

Lord

Lord High Steward. Your Lordships may rise.

Mr. W. Graham and Mr. Forrester, the Counsel assigned to the Lord Balmerino, attended.

L. H. S. My Lord Balmerino, when you were last at this Bar, you thought fit to move in Arrest of Judgment; and desired, that Counsel might be assigned you: Whereupon the Lords have been pleased to assign you such Counsel as you proposed. Does your Lordship now desire that your Counsel may be heard?

Lord Bal. As your Lordships have been pleased to allow me Counsel, I have advised with them; and my Counsel tell me, there is nothing in that Paper, which I delivered in on Wednesday last, that will be of any Use to me: So I will not give your Lordships any further Trouble about it.

L. H. S. If I understand your Lordship right, you do not desire your Counsel should speak to that Matter.

Lord Bal. No, my Lords.

L. H. S. Do you desire your Counsel should be heard?

Lord Bal. I desire they should not plead.

L. H. S. My Lords, though the Prisoners have already been asked what they had to say, why Judgment should not pass upon them according to Law; yet as they are now brought up at a subsequent Day, it is the regular Course to ask them the same Question over again; because something material may possibly have arisen or occurred since the former Day.

William Earl of Kilmarnock, Has your Lordship any thing further to say, why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you, according to Law?

Earl of Kilmarnock. No, my Lords, I have nothing farther to offer.

L. H. S. George Earl of Cromartie, Has your Lordship any thing further to say, why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you, according to Law?

Earl of Cromartie. No, my Lords, I have nothing further to trouble your Lordships with.

L. H. S. Arthur Lord Balmerino, Has your Lordship any thing further to say, why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you, according to Law?

Lord Balmerino. No, my Lords; I only desire to be heard a Moment. My Lords, I am very heartily sorry, that I should take up so much of your Lordships Time, and give you so much Trouble: It was not to delay Time, or to gain a few Days; but only as I believed there was something in the Objection that would do me Service; and I beg your Lordships Pardon for the Trouble I have given you.

My Lords, I acknowledge my Crime, and I beg your Lordships will intercede with his Majesty for me.

L. H. S. Make Proclamation for Silence whilst Judgment is giving.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Our Sovereign Lord the King doth strictly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence whilst Judgment is giving, upon Pain of Imprisonment!

Lord High Steward,

William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromartie, Arthur Lord Balmerino,

IN the Course of this solemn Proceeding, you have already been acquainted, That you stand convicted of the High-Treason charged upon you by the several Indictments on which you have been arraigned.

By this Conviction it is now finally determined, That your Lordships are guilty of that Crime, which not only the Laws of Great Britain, but of all other Countries, for the wisest Reasons, adjudge to be the highest.

As it gives the deepest Concern to every one of my Lords your Peers, to find Persons of your Birth and Quality stained with so foul an Offence, so it must give them some Satisfaction, that all of you, in effect, have confessed it; two of your Lordships by expressly pleading Guilty upon your Arraignment; and the other, by openly declaring himself satisfied with the Determination of this House, upon the only Point on which his Defence was rested. Charity makes one hope, that this is an Indication of some Disposition to that Repentance which your Guilt so loudly calls for.

You, my Lord Balmerino, have since moved in Arrest of Judgment; and their Lordships were pleased to assign the Counsel you desired, to support that Motion: But, upon advising with your Counsel, you have now voluntarily at the Bar withdrawn it, as being wholly without Foundation.

To attempt to aggravate Crimes of so deep a Dye, and in themselves so incapable of Aggravation, against Persons in your unhappy Circumstances, would be a vain, as well as a most disagreeable Task. And yet the Duty of that Place, in which I have the Honour to sit, requires that I should offer some Things to your Consideration, to explain more fully the Necessity of that Justice which is this Day to be administered, and to awaken in your Minds a due Sense of your own Condition.

If any Rebellion can be heightened by the Circumstances attending it, it is that in which your Lordships have been engaged: A Rebellion against a King celebrated through the World for his mild and gracious Government; the whole Series of whose Reign has been distinguished by the strictest Adherence to the Laws, and the most indulgent Care of the Rights of his People, unblemished with any single Instance of an Attempt or Design to violate either.

To overturn the Government of such a King, you took Arms; and, in Consequence of this, to destroy the purest Religion, and subvert the best Constitution, formed and established upon the justest Balance of Prerogative in the Crown, and Liberty in the Subject, for the Preservation of the Whole.

What did your Lordships, who profess the Protestant Religion, and claim the Benefits of this Constitution, seek to introduce in the Room of these invaluable Blessings? In Religion, Popery, attended with its Train of Superstitions, and inhuman Principles of Persecution; in Government, Despotism and Tyranny; and to cement and support this horrid System, an abjured Pretender, deriving his Principles of Religion and Civil Policy from Rome and France.

When I name France, I find myself obliged to remind your Lordships of one Circumstance, which it will become you to reflect upon in your most serious Moments. The Time you chose to arm against your Country, was, whilst it stood engaged in a just and necessary War against that Crown, and Spain; a War, to preserve its own Commerce and Independdency, and its ancient natural Allies. Though some of your Lordships have thought it proper, at this Bar, to disclaim that Connexion, or any Advantage from it; yet, with that ambitious and incroaching Power, you avowedly joined yourselves; by this Aid, you endeavoured to effect the dreadful Change you meditated; and, to such a Matter, to enslave this free Nation.

Nor were the other Countries of Europe, which have united themselves against the pernicious Views of France, less essentially, though more remotely, interested in the Event. From Great Britain they derived their chief Assistance in this War: In her centered their Hopes of Support: But the Contrivers of this Scheme laid the Ax to the Root of the Tree; and, by endeavouring to deliver up this Kingdom a Province to France, strove to cut off that Resource, without which the Cause of publick Liberty must have sunk for ever.

Thus widely spread were the Calamities, which this Rebellion was formed to introduce. By calling off the Arms of Great Britain to her necessary Self-defence, some Progress was made towards effectuating one Part of the intended Mischief. How far it may be retrieved, and in what Manner, is still in the Womb of Time, and in the Hands of Providence: But is it not astonishing that Men, who call themselves Britons and Protestants, should become the Dupes and Abettors of so execrable a Design? A Design to erase the very Foundations of true Religion and Freedom, and to turn the Riches and Strength of this Kingdom, through a Course of Ages so differently employed, into Instruments of the common Slavery?

After all this, to mention the Plundering and Devastation of particular Towns and Counties; the Miseries brought upon private Persons and Families; or the many Murders committed (for the Death of every loyal Subject killed in this Rebellion was a Murder); to mention these Things, though most important and moving in themselves, after the other more extensive Considerations, would make them appear of less Weight.

Some of your Lordships, in what you have been pleased to offer for yourselves, have urged several Topics to excite Mercy and Compassion. Those, if of any Moment, are only proper for that Place, where the Seat of Mercy must be acknowledged to be fixed. But, when Arguments of Compassion have been urged in Behalf of the Guilty, let us balance those Arguments with a becoming Compassion for our Country, for those who have suffered innocently by the Miseries which this Rebellion brought upon it, and for those who died gloriously in its Defence.

Give me Leave to urge this a little further. Even the Sufferings of those, who so far forgot their Allegiance, as to adhere to, or favour, this impious Cause, are in Justice to be charged only to the Account of such as fomented and supported it. They who take Arms against a lawful established Government, create the Necessity of all Acts requisite to be done on the Side of that Government, in order to repel and subdue them; or which, in the Nature of Things, become unavoidable in the Course of suppressing them.

Upon such a Subject it is more difficult to stop than to enlarge. But, whilst I am endeavouring to raise in your Minds a just Sense of the many Evils involved in your Crimes, permit me to intreat your Lordships to deal impartially with yourselves, and to consider seriously, what could be your Temptation to commit them.

Every one of you enjoyed the common Benefits of that legal and mild Government, which, in Violation of the most solemn Oaths, you sought to destroy; and some of you had received particular Advantages from it. You, my Lord Kilmarnock, and my Lord Cromartie, have thought fit to appeal to your former Conduct as a Proof of your good Principles for the Support of the Revolution, and of our present happy Establishment. With real Grief I lament that you ever deviated from those Sentiments. If, as your Lordships would have us believe, they were sincere, and proceeded from the Heart, What could possibly be your Inducement to this sudden Apostacy? Your Lordships have left that a Blank in your Apologies; and I choose rather to leave it to be filled up by the Constructions of others, than to supply it myself.

Thus much I am warranted to say: No glittering Prospect of Success in the Beginnings of this Rebellion could tempt you. On the one hand, those Beginnings were so weak and unpromising, as to be capable of seducing none, but the most infected and willing Minds, to join in so desperate an Enterprize. On the other hand, it was impossible, even for the Party of the Rebels, to be so inconsiderate or vain, as to imagine that the Body of this free People, blest in the Enjoyment of all their Rights both Civil and Religious under his Majesty's Protection; secure in the Prospect of transmitting them safe to their Posterity, under the Protestant Succession in his Royal House (of which they see so many illustrious Branches); I say, it was impossible that they could imagine, the Body of this free People, under these Circumstances, would not rise up, as one Man, to oppose and crush so flagitious, so destructive, and so unprovoked an Attempt.

Happy is it for ourselves, happy for our Posterity, that this was verified by the Event. The Rebels soon saw his Majesty's faithful Subjects, conscious both of their Duty and Interest, contending to outdo one another in Demonstrations of their Zeal and Vigour in his Service. The Merchants and Trading Part of this great Metropolis, one of the most useful and respectable Branches of the Community, to their lasting Honour, associated themselves, at the Risk of their private Fortunes, to support the publick Credit of their Country. Men of Property, of all Ranks and Orders, crowded in with liberal Subscriptions, of their own Motion, beyond the Examples of former Times, and uncompelled by any Law; and yet in the most legal and warrantable Manner, notwithstanding what has been ignorantly and presumptuously suggested to the contrary. The Clergy, with a Zeal becoming their holy Function, regulated by Christian Charity, instructed their Hearers by their Doctrine, and led them by their Example, in Defence of the Crown, and of our common Liberties; of this Reformed Church, and consequently of the Reformation itself.

The Rebels soon saw many of the Nobility and Gentry, from amongst the first Families, the greatest Estates, and the best Blood in the Kingdom, surrounding the Throne, soliciting to be permitted to hazard their Lives in this glorious Cause, and to be authorized, at their own Expence, to raise Forces for the Support of it.

But,

But, above all, they saw both Houses of Parliament, the great Council of the Nation, the Representative Body of this People, warmed with a truly British Spirit, and treading in the Steps of their Ancestors, overcoming all Difficulties, and unanimously concurring in every Measure to strengthen the King's Hands, and to maintain that Government, on which the very Being of Parliaments, and the Preservation of this limited Monarchy, depend.

If these Enemies of our Peace had formed to themselves any false Hopes of contrary Appearances, it must be owing to the highest Degree of Infatuation, that they were not soon convinced of their Mistake. Great Reason have we to offer up our Thanks to Heaven, that they have been effectually disappointed. Even your Lordships, if you will allow yourselves to weigh your own Case in the just Balance of Religion and Conscience, will find Cause to be thankful that the Measure of your Guilt was not suffered to be filled up and enhanced by the final direful Success of it.

If, from any unforeseen Accidents, not uncommon in military Operations, these delusive Hopes were for some time kept alive, it seems to have been judicially designed by Providence to render the more signal that Vengeance, which was reserved for them at the Battle of Culloden. How much was owing, on that memorable Day, to the Bravery and Discipline of his Majesty's Troops, to the animating Example, the intrepid Valour, and the wise Conduct of a Prince descended from him, is so deeply engraven on the Heart of every Member of this Great Assembly, that I could only repeat what their own grateful Minds have already suggested to themselves, and represented to the Throne.

Then was experienced how much that Courage, which Virtue, true Loyalty, and the Love of our Country, inspire, is superior to the Rashness and false Fire of Rebellion, accompanied with the Terrors of Guilt.

I will add no more. It has been his Majesty's Justice to bring your Lordships to a legal Trial; and it has been his Wisdom to shew, that, as a small Part of his National Forces was sufficient to subdue the Rebel Army in the Field, so the ordinary Course of his Laws is strong enough to bring even their Chiefs to Justice.

What remains for me, is a very painful, though a necessary Part. It is, To pronounce that Sentence, which the Law has appointed for Crimes of this Magnitude;—a Sentence full of Horror! such as the Wisdom of our Ancestors has ordained, as One Guard about the Sacred Person of the King, and as a Fence about this excellent Constitution, to be a Terror to Evil-doers, and a Security to them that do well.

The Judgment of the Law is, and this High Court doth award;

"That You, William Earl of Kilmarnock, George Earl of Cromartie, and Arthur Lord Balmorino, and every of you, return to the Prison of the Tower, from whence you came; from thence you must be drawn to the Place of Execution; when you come there, you must be hanged by the Neck, but not till you are dead; for you must be cut down alive; then your Bowels must be taken out, and burnt before your Faces; then your Heads must be severed from your Bodies, and your Bodies must be divided each into Four Quarters; and these must be at the King's Disposal.

"And God Almighty be merciful to your Souls!"

L. H. S. Lieutenant of the Tower, Take the Prisoners from the Bar. Which being done, Proclamation was made for Silence, as usual.

L. H. S. My Lords, This Proceeding being at an End, nothing remains to be done here, but to determine the Commission.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. S. Let Proclamation be made for dissolving the Commission of High Steward.

Serj. at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Our Sovereign Lord the King does strictly charge and command all manner of Persons here present, and that have here attended, to depart hence in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord the King; for his Grace my Lord High Steward of Great Britain intends now to dissolve his Commission.

Then the White Staff being delivered to the Lord High Steward by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, upon his Knee, his Grace stood up uncovered; and holding the Staff in both his Hands, broke it in two, and declared the Commission to be dissolved; and then leaving the Chair, came down to the Wool-Pack, and said, Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. S. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then the Lords and others returned in the same Order they came down.

And the Prisoners were carried back to the Tower of London.

XLII. The Whole Proceedings in the HOUSE of PEERS, upon the Impeachment exhibited by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses, in Parliament assembled, in the Names of Themselves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, against SIMON LORD LOVAT, for High-Treason: The Proceeding in Westminster-Hall being begun on Monday the 9th Day of March, and continued on Tuesday the 10th, Wednesday the 11th, Friday the 13th, Monday the 16th, Wednesday the 18th, and Thursday the 19th Days of March, 1746-7.

Die Jovis, 11^o Decembris, 1746.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons, by Sir William Yonge, and others, to acquaint this House, That they, having Matters to communicate to their Lordships, of great Importance to the King and Kingdom, do desire that their Lordships will continue sitting for some Time.

To which the House agreed.

And the Messengers were called in again; and acquainted by the Lord Chancellor, That the Lords will continue sitting for some Time, as desired. The House was adjourned during Pleasure.

The House was resumed.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons, by Sir William Yonge, and others, as follows:

My Lords,

THE Commons of Great Britain, in Parliament assembled, having received Information of divers Treasons committed by a Peer of this Realm, Simon Lord Lovat, have commanded me to impeach the said Simon Lord Lovat of High-Treason: And I do here, in their Names, and in the Names of all the Commons of Great Britain, impeach the said Simon Lord Lovat of High-Treason: And I am further commanded to acquaint your Lordships, That they will, with all convenient Speed, exhibit Articles to make good the Charge against him.

Die Mercurii, 17^o Decembris, 1746.

A MESSAGE was brought from the House of Commons, by Sir William Yonge, and others, who said, he was commanded by the House of Commons to deliver to this House Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason against Simon Lord Lovat.—He said, He was also commanded by the Commons to acquaint their Lordships, That they are ready to maintain their Charge: And he delivered in the said Articles.

Which Articles being read:

The Duke of Newcastle acquainted the House, That the said Lord Lovat is already under Commitment for High-Treason in his Majesty's Tower of London.

Then the following Order was made:

Whereas the Commons, assembled in Parliament, have this Day exhibited to this House Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason against Simon Lord Lovat; It is Ordered, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament assembled, That the said Lord Lovat be brought to the Bar of this House To-morrow at Two of the Clock in the Afternoon, to hear the said Articles read; and to abide such further Order, as this House shall think fit to make concerning him.

To Charles Lord Cornwallis, Constable of his Majesty's Tower of London, and, in his Absence, to the Lieutenant of the said Tower, or his Deputy.

Die Jovis, 18^o Decembris, 1746.

THE Order being read, for bringing Simon Lord Lovat to the Bar of this House, to hear the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason, exhibited against him Yesterday by the House of Commons, read unto him;

The said Lord Lovat was accordingly brought to the Bar, by the Deputy-Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod: Where he kneeled until the Lord Chancellor directed him to rise.—Then

The said Articles of Impeachment were read unto him: Which done, the Lord Chancellor asked him, What he had to say thereunto; and informed him, That, if he had any Thing to request of the House, this was his proper Time.

Whereupon he acquainted the House with his Infirmities occasioned by old Age, and particularly alledged his Deafness, that he could not hear what the Contents of the said Articles were: Wherefore, having a Petition prepared to make known to the House his Requests, he desired the same might be read: Which being delivered in, was read by the Clerk, and is as follows; viz.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament Assembled,

The Humble Petition of SIMON LORD FRASER of LOVAT,

Sheweth,

THAT your Petitioner, by reason of his great Age, labours under many Infirmities and Weakness; and, being intirely ignorant of the Forms of Law, and Method of Proceedings in this August Court, is unable to make any Defence, or give in a proper Answer to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him, without the Assistance of able Counsel and Solicitors.

That your Petitioner, during his close Confinement in the Tower of London, for now near Five Months, has not been able to obtain One Shilling either out of his Estate or otherwise; which has been occasioned, as your Petitioner has been informed, by some Grants of a very extraordinary Nature, and which your Petitioner hopes, shall never again, in this Island, be drawn into Precedent; authorizing and empowering other Persons, Strangers to your Petitioner, to take Possession of his Estate, and to levy the Rents thereof; while such as had in their Hands any Money or Effects of your Petitioner's, were prohibited and restrained from paying any Part thereof to your Petitioner, or his Order.

That your Petitioner applied several Times to one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, complaining of the Hardships your Petitioner suffered by Means of such Proceedings; and your Petitioner is informed, that Two several Orders were made thereupon, in order to remove the said Prohibitions and Restraints, and to recal the said Powers so granted as above: But notwithstanding thereof, your Petitioner is still in the same deplorable Circumstances, without any Money even to procure him the common Necessaries of Life, and is wholly indebted to General Williamson for his Support.

That your Petitioner, when he was apprehended by a Party of his Majesty's Troops in Scotland, had, in his Strong-Box, Money and Jewels to the Amount of Seven hundred Pounds and upwards, which they seized, and retain; insisting the same is lawful Prize.

Your Petitioner therefore humbly prays, that your Lordships, moved by your innate Goodness, may be pleased to assign your Petitioner such and so many Counsel and Solicitors as your Lordships shall think proper: That your Petitioner may have a Copy of the Articles of Impeachment; and may not be ordered by your Lordships to begin and enter upon his Defence, while he remains stripped and deprived of all the necessary Means which the Law allows him for his Defence and Support; but that such a reasonable Time may be allowed your Petitioner to prepare and put in his Answer, that he may be enabled to receive Money sufficient to retain and fee his Counsel and Solicitors; without which, your Petitioner apprehends, he cannot have their Assistance and Advice: And that, for that Purpose, the Money and Jewels contained in the Strong-Box, and unjustly taken as above, may be immediately restored to your Petitioner, by your Lordships Order.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

L O V A T.

The Counsel that Lord Levat desires may be assigned are, Mr. Starkie, Mr. Forrester, Mr. Ford, and Mr. Wilmott: And the Solicitors are, Mr. George Ross, Mr. Hugh Fraser, and Mr. Goostrey.

The Petition being read, the said Lord Levat was asked by the Lord Chancellor, If he had any Thing further to offer.

To which he answering in the Negative;

He was directed to withdraw.

And the House taking the Requests of the said Petition into Consideration;

Ordered, That the said Lord Levat may have a Copy of the said Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him: And that he do put in his Answer thereunto, in Writing, on or before Tuesday, the 13th Day of January next: And that Mr. Starkie, Mr. Forrester, Mr. Ford, and Mr. Wilmott, the Counsel mentioned in the said Petition, be assigned to assist him in preparing his Answer, and likewise in his Defence, in Matters of Law: And that Mr. George Ross, Mr. Hugh Fraser, and Mr. Goostrey, be also assigned Solicitors for him: And that such Counsel and Solicitors may have Access to him at all seasonable Times: And that the said Lord Levat have Liberty to cause Search to be made, and Copies of Records and Journals to be taken out, in order to his Defence: And that he shall have Summons issued for such Witnesses as he shall send in the Names of, to be by him made use of at his Trial; which Witnesses shall have the Protection of this House for their safe Coming and Going, during the Time of the said Trial.

Ordered, That the Lord Chancellor do acquaint the Lord Levat, That it is expected by their Lordships, that he would send in the Names of such Witnesses as he shall desire to be summoned, as soon as conveniently he can; and that, in Case he do not, he must not expect to be indulged with any further Delay on that Account.

Ordered likewise, That the said Lord Levat be permitted to receive the Rents and Profits of his Estate, by his Factors or Agents, in like Manner as if he was not under an Accusation of High Treason: And that his Majesty's Advocate for Scotland do take the proper Methods to carry this Order into Execution.

Then the said Lord Levat was called in again: And the Lord Chancellor acquainted him with what the House had ordered.

And then he was a second Time directed to withdraw.

Ordered, That Lord Levat do stand committed to his Majesty's Tower of London, to be there safely kept, in order to his Trial, till he shall be thence delivered by due Course of Law: And that no Person shall have Access to him without the special Leave of the House.

Ordered, That the Lord Chancellor do write Letters to all the Lords who have not been present in the House either this Day or Yesterday, in the usual Manner, requiring their Attendance on the Service of this House (all Excuses set apart), on Wednesday, the 21st Day of January next, on Occasion of the Proceedings now depending in this House against Simon Lord Levat, who stands impeached by the House of Commons of High Treason.

Die Martis, 23^o Decembris, 1746.

A PETITION of Simon Lord Fraser of Levat was presented, and read; praying, That he may be allowed to the 1st Day of February for answering the Articles of Impeachment exhibited by the House of Commons against him; within which Time he hopes, that the Care and Diligence of his Agents in Scotland will, notwithstanding the Season of the Year, furnish him with the Papers and Materials necessary for that End.

And thereupon Mr. George Ross, one of the Petitioner's Solicitors, being called in, and heard at the Bar, touching the Contents of the said Petition;

He was directed to withdraw.

Ordered, That the said Petition be rejected.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do bring the said Lord Levat to the Bar of this House, on Tuesday, the 13th Day of January next, at Two of the Clock in the Afternoon, in order to the putting in his Answer to the Articles of Impeachment of High Treason, exhibited against him by the House of Commons.

Die Martis, 13^o Januarii, 1746.

THE Order of the Day being read, for bringing Simon Lord Levat to the Bar of this House, in order to the putting in his Answer to the Articles of Impeachment of High Treason, exhibited against him by the House of Commons, he was brought to the Bar accordingly: Where he kneeled, till the Lord Chancellor acquainted him he might rise. He then delivered in his Answer to the said Articles: And the same was read.

Then the Lord Levat was asked by the Lord Chancellor, If he had any Thing further to offer. Whereupon he acquainted the House, He had caused to be prepared two Petitions to their Lordships, which he conceived did concern the Justice as well as the Honour of the House. And his Lordship delivering in the said Petitions, the same were severally read;

VOL. IX.

The first complaining, That the Order of this House of the 18th of December last, relating to the Factory or Receivership of the Petitioner's Rents, had not been obeyed, so as to be made effectual to him; nor had the Contents of the Strong-Box taken from him, and now in Captain Ferguson's Possession, been delivered to his Agent, as had been promised him: And praying, that Obedience to the said Order might be compelled; and an immediate Restitution of the Money taken out of the said Box; or that such Order might be made concerning this Matter, as to the House should seem meet.

The other Petition setting forth, That Mr. William Fraser, Writer to the Signet, who for many Years had acted as his chief Agent, and had the Management of his Estate in Scotland, was by his Direction come to Town; but could not have Access to him without the Permission of this House: And praying, That the said Fraser might have Liberty to come to the Petitioner at all seasonable Times.

Then the Lord Levat was directed to be taken from the Bar.

Which done; The first Petition was again read: And, after Debate, and reading the said Order, relating to the Receipt of the Rents and Profits of the said Lord Levat's Estate,

Ordered, That the said Petition be rejected.

Then the other Petition being likewise read;

Ordered, That the said William Fraser be permitted to have Access to the Petitioner at all seasonable Times, between the Hours of Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, and Two of the Clock in the Afternoon, in the Presence of such Officer belonging to the Tower of London, as the Constable thereof shall appoint.

Ordered, That a Copy of the Answer of the said Lord Levat to the Articles of Impeachment of High Treason, exhibited against him by the House of Commons, be prepared: And that, when the same has been carefully examined by the Clerk, it be sent by a Message to the House of Commons, and left with that House.

Ordered, That the said Lord Levat be conveyed back to the Tower of London, by the Lieutenant of the same, or his Deputy, to be there kept in safe Custody, until he shall be thence delivered by due Course of Law.

Die Veneris, 16^o Januarii, 1746.

A MESSAGE was brought from the House of Commons by Sir William Yonge, and others, to acquaint this House, That they have considered the Answer of Simon Lord Levat to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses, assembled in Parliament; and do aver their Charge against the said Simon Lord Levat for High Treason, to be true; and that the said Simon Lord Levat is guilty in such Manner as he stands impeached: And that the Commons will be ready to prove their Charge against him at such convenient Time as shall be appointed for that Purpose.

Die Jovis, 22^o Januarii, 1746.

A PETITION of Simon Lord Levat, styling himself Simon Lord Fraser of Levat, was presented, and read; praying, That Mr. William Fraser may be appointed one of his Solicitors, in the Room of Mr. Hugh Fraser, he being necessarily required to go into the Country.

Ordered, That the said Mr. William Fraser be assigned the Petitioner's Solicitor, in the Room of the said Mr. Hugh Fraser, as desired: And that the said Mr. William Fraser may have Access to the Petitioner at all seasonable Times.

Ordered, That Monday, the 23d Day of February next be, and is hereby appointed for, the Trial of Simon Lord Levat, in Westminster-Hall, upon the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Commons for High Treason.

And a Message was sent to the House of Commons, by Mr. Spicer and Mr. Edwards, to acquaint them therewith.

Then the House appointed a Committee to inspect the Journals of this House, relating to former Cases of Impeachments; and to consider of the proper Methods of proceeding on the Impeachment against Simon Lord Levat; and to report to the House what they shall think proper thereupon.

Die Lunæ, 2^o Februarii, 1746.

THE Earl of Warwick reported from the Lords Committees appointed to inspect the Journals of this House, relating to former Cases of Impeachments; and to consider of the proper Methods of Proceeding on the Impeachment against Simon Lord Levat; and to report to the House what they shall think proper thereupon;

That the Committee had met, and inspected the Journals of this House, in former Cases of Impeachments; and had considered the Matters to them referred; and had come to several Resolutions: Which his Lordship reported. And thereupon several Orders were made, touching the Course of Proceeding to, and at the ensuing Trial, and for preserving the Peace; and amongst them as follows; viz.

Ordered, That an humble Address be presented to his Majesty, to acquaint his Majesty, That this House hath appointed the Trial of Simon Lord Levat, upon the Articles of Impeachment of High Treason exhibited against him by the House of Commons, to begin in Westminster-Hall on Monday, the 23d Day of this Instant February: And humbly desire, That his Majesty will be pleased to appoint a Lord High Steward, to continue during the said Trial.

Ordered, That the said Address be presented to his Majesty by the Lords with White Staves.

Ordered, That the Counsel assigned the said Lord Levat may be present when he is at the Bar, in order to be heard touching any Point or Matter of Law, if any such shall arise during the said Trial.

Ordered, That the Witnesses, which shall be produced by the Lord Levat to be examined in his Defence, shall be examined upon Oath; which Oath shall be administered in the like Form as an Oath was directed by this House to be administered to any Witnesses, who should be produced by the Earl of Wintoun at his Trial.

Ordered, That the Lord Great Chamberlain be desired to take Care and give Order, that Accommodations be made in the Scaffold already erected in Westminster-Hall for the Commons, as hath been used in Trials in Westminster-Hall upon Impeachments.

Die

Die Mercurii, 4^o Februarii, 1746.

THE Lord Steward reported, That the Lords with White Staves had (according to Order) presented to his Majesty the Address of this House of Monday last, for the Appointment of a Lord High Steward, to continue during the Trial of Simon Lord Lovat; and that his Majesty had been pleased to give Orders accordingly.

Ordered, That the said Commission for appointing a Lord High Steward shall be in the like Form as that for the Trial of the Lord Viscount Stafford, as entered in the Journal of this House the 30th of November, 1680, except that the same be in the English Language.

Die Mercurii, 18^o Februarii, 1746.

A PETITION of Simon Lord Fraser of Lovat was presented and read; setting forth, That upon the Appointment of his Trial, he immediately dispatched one of his Solicitors to summon the Petitioner's material Witnesses, who are at great Distances from each other, inhabiting in the Counties of Inverness and Ross; but by reason of the Inclemency of the Weather, the Badness of the Roads, and other unavoidable Accidents, none of them are yet arrived, nor can possibly be got to London by the Time of Trial; and praying, That this House will appoint some more distant Time for that Purpose.

And thereupon William Fraser and William Goostrey, two of the Petitioner's Solicitors, were called in, and heard at the Bar, to verify the Truth of the Allegations of the said Petition: And being withdrawn, Ordered, That the Time appointed for the Petitioner's Trial be, and is hereby, enlarged till To-morrow Fortnight, the 5th Day of March next.

Ordered, That a Message be sent to the House of Commons, to acquaint them, That upon the humble Petition of Simon Lord Lovat, for putting off his Trial to a further Day, for the Reasons therein alledged, the Lords have enlarged the Time appointed for the Trial of the said Lord Lovat till Thursday the 5th Day of March next.

And a Message was accordingly sent to the House of Commons, by Mr. Holford and Mr. Bennet, to acquaint them therewith.

Die Lune, 2^o Martii, 1746.

A PETITION of Simon Lord Fraser of Lovat, with an Affidavit of Hugh Fraser thereto annexed, were presented to the House, and read, as follows:

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament assembled;

The Humble Petition of Simon Lord Fraser of Lovat,

Sheweth,

THAT your Lordships having appointed your Petitioner's Trial for the 23d of February, your Petitioner did lately take the Liberty humbly to represent the Impossibility he was under to prepare so soon for Trial, in respect his Witnesses, from the Badness of the Road, were not then arrived; and your Lordships were pleased to indulge your Petitioner with a Delay till Thursday next.

That Hugh Fraser, whom your Petitioner had directed to serve your Lordships Summons upon your Petitioner's Witnesses, arrived in Town, with sundry of them, late on Friday Night, having duly served your Lordships said Order upon several other Persons, who were all material Witnesses for your Petitioner.

That Thomas Fraser of Struy, and Donald Fraser, alias Down, two of the Witnesses, served as aforesaid, were prevented, by Sickness, from setting out as early as some of the rest; but had declared to the said Hugh Fraser their Willingness to obey your Lordships Summons as soon as they were able to travel; which your Petitioner hopes may soon be the Case.

That William Fraser of Belloan, Alexander Fraser of Belnain, Thomas Fraser of Garthmore, Alexander Fraser of Belohyne, and the Reverend Mr. Donald Fraser, Minister at Killlearnan, who are all material Witnesses for your Petitioner, and without whose Testimony your Petitioner cannot safely proceed to Trial, have absolutely refused to attend, though regularly served with your Lordships Summons, as by Affidavit annexed appears; and that the Persons, named as aforesaid, are material and necessary Witnesses, your Petitioner is ready to make Affidavit of; but being strictly confined in the Tower, and no Person having Access to him without your Lordships Order, he has no Opportunity so to do.

That under these Circumstances, and that your Petitioner, without your Lordships Interposition, cannot compel the said Persons to attend his Trial, he is under a Necessity to apply to your Lordships for Relief, without which he must, as to the Charge in some of the aforesaid Articles, remain defenceless, should your Lordships in the Interim proceed to Trial.

Your Petitioner therefore humbly prays, your Lordships would be pleased to appoint a more distant Day for his Trial; and that your Lordships would be pleased to compel the said William, Alexander, Thomas, Donald, and Alexander Frasers, to attend your Petitioner's Trial at such Time as your Lordships shall think fit; or to grant him such other Relief, as to your Lordships, in your great Wisdom, shall seem meet.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray.

LOVAT.

In the House of Lords.

Upon an Impeachment for High-Treason against Simon Lord Lovat.

HUGH FRASER, of Grays-Inn, in the County of Middlesex, Gentleman, maketh Oath, That he this Deponent did, on the Tenth Day of February last, personally serve Thomas Fraser of Struy, and on the twelfth Day of the said Month of February, did also personally serve William Fraser of Belloan, Alexander Fraser of Belnain, Thomas Fraser of Garthmore, Alexander Fraser of Belohyne, and Donald Down, alias Fraser, with an Order of this Honourable House, bearing Date the Sixteenth of Janu- ary last past; whereby it was ordered, That the said several Persons, and others named in such Order, should attend this House as Witnesses for the said Simon Lord Lovat, who stands impeached of High-Treason by the House of Commons, by delivering to each of them a true Copy of the said Order, and, at the same Time, shewing to each of them the said original Order. And this Deponent further saith, That the said William Fraser of Belloan, Alexander Fraser of Belnain, Thomas Fraser of Garthmore, and Alexander Fraser of Belohyne, though served with the said Order as aforesaid, absolutely refused to obey the said Order; and this Deponent verily believes will not attend the said Trial: And the said Thomas Fraser of Struy, and Donald Down, alias Fraser, were both at the Time of such Service sick, and unable to travel; and declared themselves incapable of complying with the said Order.

HUGH FRASER.

Sworn the 2d Day of March, 1746. before me, at the Court of Requests.

M. THURSTON.

Afterwards the said Hugh Fraser, and Mr. Goostrey, one of the Prisoner's Solicitors, were called in, and examined at the Bar: And being withdrawn,

Ordered, That the said Petition be rejected.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do bring to the Bar of this House, in Westminster-Hall, on Thursday next, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, Simon Lord Lovat, in order to his Trial upon the Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited by the House of Commons against him.—Then

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by the former Messengers, to acquaint them that the Lords will be ready to go down into Westminster-Hall, at the Time above-mentioned, in order to the Trial of the said Lord Lovat.

Die Martis, 3^o Martii, 1746.

A PETITION of Simon Lord Fraser of Lovat, with the Affidavits of Mr. George Ross, and Mr. William Fraser, thereto annexed, were presented and read as follows:

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, in Parliament assembled;

The Humble Petition of Simon Lord Fraser of Lovat,

Sheweth,

THAT nothing but the utter Impossibility the Petitioner and his Agents are under, of preparing his Defence against Thursday the Fifth of this Instant March, could have induced him to trouble your Lordships with this second Application for some Days further Time.

But none of your Petitioner's Witnesses coming to Town till late on Friday Night last; and one of your Petitioner's Agents having received an Account by last Night's Post, that two other Persons, who were summoned as Witnesses for your Petitioner, set out from Edinburgh on the 24th and 25th of last Month, and are not yet arrived in London, but expected here by the End of this Week, your Petitioner cannot possibly be prepared to take his Trial before Monday next.

The Petitioner begs Leave further to represent to your Lordships, that in the present unhappy Situation of his Affairs, he has no Means of furnishing himself with Money, either for applying to Counsel, bearing the Charge of his Witnesses, or other necessary Expence, but from the Supply afforded him by his Agents, who have already advanced him considerable Sums for the above Purposes, which are already expended: That the Solemnity, and unavoidable Length of the Proceedings, making further Sums of Money still necessary, the Petitioner is afraid that his Defence may suffer on that account, unless your Lordships are pleased, in Compassion to his present Difficulty, to give some kind of Encouragement to his Agents, to hope they shall be repaid what they already have, or may hereafter disburse on the Petitioner's Account; it being, by the Loss of the Petitioner's Moveables, out of his own Power to give them any kind of Indemnification.

The Petitioner also prays your Lordships to assign Mr. Charles Hamilton Gordon to be one of his Counsel, in place of Mr. Starkey, who, on account of the bad State of his Health, has declined giving the Petitioner his Assistance.

May it therefore please your Lordships, in Consideration of the Premises, to put off the Petitioner's Trial until the next Monday; and to make such other Order upon this Application as to your Lordships shall seem meet.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

LOVAT.

In the Impeachment of the Commons of Great-Britain against Simon Lord Fraser of Lovat.

GEORGE ROSS, one of the Solicitors assigned by the Right Honourable the House of Lords to the said Simon Lord Fraser of Lovat, maketh Oath, That since his Appointment, he has at different Times laid out and expended upwards of Six Hundred Pounds, out of his own Pocket, in Feeing of his Lordship's Counsel, bringing up his Witnesses, and other Charges attending the several Steps already taken, towards preparing for the said Lord's Defence, without receiving any Money or Security whatsoever for his Indemnification.

In the House of Lords.

WILLIAM FRASER, Writer to his Majesty's Signet, maketh Oath, That last Night he received Advice from Edinburgh, that Thomas Fraser of Struy, and Mr. Donald Fraser, two of the Witnesses summoned on the Behalf of Lord Lovat, are now upon the Road, and will be here by Saturday or Sunday next: Which Information this Deponent believes to be true.

WILL. FRASER.

Sworn at the publick Office, 3d March 1746, before
THO. BENNET.

Ordered, That the Trial of the Petitioner be put off to Monday next, as desired.

A Message was sent to the Commons, by Mr. Burroughs and Mr. Allen, to acquaint them, that this House, upon the Petition of the said Lord Lovat, for the Reasons therein contained, hath enlarged the Time of his Trial upon the Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited against him by the House of Commons, to Monday next, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon; and that their Lordships will be ready to go down into Westminster-Hall at the Time above-mentioned, in order to his Trial.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do bring the said Lord Lovat to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, on Monday next, in order to his Trial upon the said Impeachment.

Monday, the 9th Day of March, 1746.

THE Lords met in the House of Lords in their Robes; and, after Prayers, adjourned into Westminster-Hall.

The First Day, in Westminster-Hall.

ABOUT Eleven of the Clock, the Lords came from their own House into the Court erected in Westminster-Hall, in the Manner following:

The Lord High-Steward's Gentlemen Attendants, Two and Two.

The Clerks Assistant to the House of Lords, and the Clerk of the Parliament, with the Clerk of the Crown in the Court of Chancery, bearing the King's Commission to the Lord High Steward.

The Masters in Chancery, Two and Two.

The Judges, Two and Two.

The Peers eldest Sons, Two and Two.

Peers Minors, Two and Two.

York and Windsor Heralds.

Four Serjeants at Arms, with their Maces, Two and Two.

The Yeoman Usher of the House.

Then the Peers, Two and Two, beginning with the youngest Baron.

Then Four Serjeant at Arms, with their Maces, Two and Two.

The Serjeants at Arms attending the Great Seal, and Purse-Bearer.

Then Garter King at Arms, and the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, carrying the White Staff before the Lord High Steward.

Philip Lord Hardwicke, Lord High Chancellor of Great-Britain, Lord High Steward, alone, his Train borne.

The Lords having taken their Places in the Court, according to their Degrees, the Lord High Steward being upon the uppermost Woolpack; and the Commons, and their Managers, being also in the Seats respectively prepared for them;

The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, having his Majesty's Commission to the Lord High Steward in his Hand, standing before the Clerk's Table, with his Face towards the State, made Three Reverences, the First at the Table, the Second in the Midway, and the Third near the Woolpack; then kneeled down, and, on his Knee, presented the Commission to the Lord High Steward; who delivered the same back to him; who, rising, made Three Reverences, and returned with it to the Table: And then Proclamation was made for Silence in this Manner:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Lord High Steward stood up, and spoke to the Peers.

Lord High Steward. His Majesty's Commission is about to be read: Your Lordships are desired to attend to it in the usual Manner; and all others are likewise to stand up, uncovered, while the Commission is reading.

All the Peers uncovered themselves; and they, and all others, stood up, uncovered, while the Commission was read; which is as follows: viz.

GEORGE R.

GEORGE the Second, by the Grace of GOD, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, To Our right trusty and well-beloved Councillor Philip Lord Hardwicke, Baron of Hardwicke in Our County of Gloucester, Our Chancellor of Great Britain, greeting. Whereas Simon Lord Lovat, before Us in Parliament, by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses, in Our Parliament assembled, in the Name of the said Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses, and in the Name of all the Commons of Our Kingdom of Great Britain, is and stands impeached and accused of High-Treason, by him the said Simon Lord Lovat committed and perpetrated; We, considering that Justice is an excellent Virtue, and pleasing to the Most High, and being willing, that the said Simon Lord Lovat should, before Us in our present Parliament, according to the Law and Custom of this our Kingdom of Great Britain, and according to the Custom of Parliament, be heard, sentenced, and adjudged, touching and concerning the said High-Treason whereof he stands impeached and accused, as aforesaid, and that all other Things, which are necessary in this Behalf, should be in due Manner done and executed; and forasmuch as the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in our present Parliament assembled, have most humbly besought Us, that We would vouchsafe to appoint a Steward of Great Britain for this Time; We, very much confiding in your Fidelity, Prudence, provident Circumspection, and Industry, have, for this Cause, ordained and constituted you Steward of Great Britain, to bear, execute, and exercise, for this Time, the said Office, with all Things to the same Office in this Behalf due and belonging: And therefore We command you, that you diligently set about the Premises, and, for this Time, do exercise and execute, with Effect, all those Things, which belong to the Office of Steward of Great Britain, and which are required in this Behalf. In Witness whereof, We have caused these Our Letters to be made patent.

Witness Ourself at Westminster, the Ninth Day of March, in the Twentieth Year of Our Reign.

By the King Himself, signed with his own Hand.

YORKE and YORKE.

Serjeant at Arms. God save the King!

Then Garter, and the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, after Three Reverences, kneeling, jointly presented the White Staff to his Grace the Lord High Steward: And then his Grace, attended by Garter, Black-Rod, and the Purse-Bearer (making his proper Reverences towards the Throne), removed from the Woolpack to an armed Chair, which was placed on the uppermost Step but one of the Throne, as it was prepared for that Purpose; and then seated himself in the Chair, and delivered the Staff to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod on his Right Hand, the Purse-Bearer holding the Purse on the Left.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, Make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Lord High Steward. It is your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?—Lords. Ay.

Then another Proclamation was made, as follows:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoner to the Bar, according to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

Then Simon Lord Lovat was brought to the Bar by the Deputy-Governor of the Tower, having the Ax carried before him by the Gentleman Gaoler, who stood with it on the Left-Hand of the Prisoner, with the Edge turned from him. The Prisoner when he approached the Bar, made Three Reverences, and then fell upon his Knees at the Bar.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

Then the Prisoner rose up, and bowed to his Grace the Lord High Steward, and to the House of Peers: Which Compliment was returned him by his Grace, and the Lords.

And Proclamation being again made for keeping Silence,

The Lord High Steward spake to the Prisoner as follows:

Lord High Steward.

SIMON Lord Lovat, You stand impeached of High-Treason by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses in Parliament assembled, in the Names of themselves, and of all the Commons of Great-Britain; and your Lordship is now brought to the Bar of this House to receive your Trial upon that Impeachment.

The Weight of this Accusation, the solemn Manner of exhibiting and prosecuting it, and the Awfulness of this supreme Judicature, the most illustrious in the World, are Circumstances, that may naturally strike your Mind with anxious and alarming Apprehensions. Reasonable and well-grounded must those Apprehensions be, if they proceed from that greatest of all Terrors, a Consciousness of Guilt. But if your Lordship is innocent; if you have really preserved yourself untainted with the heinous Crimes laid to your Charge, as you have averred by your Answer; these very awful Circumstances, when duly considered, ought to have a contrary Effect, and to afford you Support and Consolation.

Your Lordship can never doubt of the greatest Fairness and Candour in the Management of a Prosecution carried on by the House of Commons, intrusted and highly concerned to preserve the Rights and Liberties of their Fellow-Subjects. Neither can you entertain the least Doubt of a just and impartial Trial, where the Law of the Land, and the Custom and Usage of Parliament (an essential Part of that Law), constitute the Rule of Proceeding; and the Decision and Judgment rest in the Breasts of these noble Lords your Peers, who are to try you upon that Honour, which is inseparable from them, and to judge you by that Law, which is the great Security of themselves and their Posterity.

It is my Duty to put your Lordship in mind of some Things, which may be of Use to you in the Conduct of your Defence; but in this I shall be the shorter, since, at your own Request, Counsel have been already assigned you, with whom you must be presumed to have advised.

Your Lordship must give due and patient Attention to the Reading of the Articles of Impeachment, and what shall be said by the Managers for the House of Commons, or offered in Evidence against you, without giving any Interruption: But when the Managers shall have finished the Examination, on their Part, of any Witness produced by them, you will have Liberty to cross-examine that Witness.

When the Managers for the Commons shall have gone through their Evidence, and closed what they shall think fit to offer by way of Charge, then will be your Lordship's Time to make your Defence. In doing this, you and your Witnesses will be heard with the greatest Attention and Equity.

But your Lordship must take Notice, that your Counsel are not to examine or cross-examine any Witness, nor to give you any Assistance, while Matter of Fact only is in question; but, if any Point or Matter of Law shall arise during this Proceeding, they will, according to the known Rules in such Cases, be heard to it in your Behalf; and, for that Purpose, are permitted to be present whilst your Lordship is at the Bar.

The Witnesses produced in your Defence, must be examined upon Oath, pursuant to a very just and wise Provision made by Act of Parliament in the First Year of the late Queen Anne, and according to the Form established by their Lordships in former Cases of Impeachments.

By Command of their Lordships, I am further to acquaint you, and all other Persons, who shall have occasion to speak to this Court, that they are to address themselves to the Lords in general, and not to any Lord in particular.

Before I conclude, I must beg the Indulgence of the House to add one Thing more. If your Lordship shall desire to have the Use of Pen, Ink, and Paper, to take Notes in order to your Defence, I presume it will be permitted; and if, in the Course of your Trial, you should happen to omit any Advantage which in Law and Justice ought to be allowed to you for your Defence, such is the Candour of my Lords your Judges, that I trust I shall meet with their Approbation in giving you Notice of it.

The

The Articles of Impeachment, and the Lord Lovat's Answer thereunto, as also the Replication of the Commons to the said Answer, were (by Command of the Lord High Steward) read, and the same are as follow.

Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason against Simon Lord Lovat.

Whereas the Imperial Crown and Government of these Kingdoms have been long, duly, and happily established, in the Royal Family of his present most Sacred Majesty, upon Principles equally conducive to the Honour and Safety of the Crown, and to the Protection and Liberty of the Subject; whereby settled Laws are made the common Measure of Justice to both, and a Prerogative wisely calculated to promote the greater Good of the People, and answer the Exigencies of Government, has been ascertained and secured:

And whereas the Reigns of his present Majesty, and his Royal Father, have given the strongest and most illustrious Proofs of the happy Effects of those Principles, in the Exercise of their legal, mild, and equal Administration, under which every Subject, from the highest to the lowest, has had his Religion, his Person, and his Property, fully protected by the most inviolable Observance of the Laws, which have had their free Course, without the least Interruption on the Part of his Majesty, or of his Royal Father:

Notwithstanding which, there have been found many wicked and ungrateful Persons, who have themselves enjoyed all these Blessings in common with the rest of their Fellow-Subjects, and yet have been weak and desperate enough, from time to time, to contrive the Subversion of this happy Establishment, in order to introduce Popish Bigotry and Superstition, instead of the Protestant Religion, and an Arbitrary, Tyrannical Power, instead of a Free Government; and as the only Means of establishing and perpetuating those great Evils, to place the Pretender to his Majesty's Crown upon the Throne of this Kingdom; and, the more easily to obtain these Ends, have, from time to time, taken Advantage of the Distresses, which, in the Course of human Affairs, have happened to their Native Country, to set on foot and prosecute their traitorous Designs:

And whereas divers of the said Traitors to his Majesty have laid hold of the Opportunity arising from the just and unavoidable, but difficult and expensive Wars, in which this Nation has been for some time engaged, to renew their Treasonable Conspiracies, for the bringing their wicked Purposes to Effect, by the Assistance of Troops and Money from his Majesty's Enemies Abroad, and by raising a Rebellion at Home:

And whereas, by the Instigation of, and in Concert with the said Traitors, a great Number of French Troops, accompanied by the Eldest Son of the said Pretender, were ready, and had in part embarked, and actually set sail, to invade this Kingdom, in the Year One thousand Seven hundred and Forty-three; but were then prevented from accomplishing their Design by the wise Precautions of His Majesty, and the good Providence of Almighty God:

And whereas the same Traitors, restless and indefatigable in the Prosecution of their said wicked and traitorous Purposes, hoping that the French, by the great Superiority of their Numbers in Flanders, might be able to invade this Kingdom, and, at the same time, to prevent the Return of his Majesty's Troops from abroad, for the Defence of the Nation, did, in the Year One thousand Seven hundred and Forty-five, encourage the said Eldest Son of the Pretender to his Majesty's Crown, to land, at that critical Juncture, in this Kingdom, who, in pursuance of such Encouragement, did actually land in Scotland, and put himself at the Head of a large Body of armed Traitors, and commence and carry on, for a considerable Time, a cruel, unnatural, and bloody War against his Majesty, within this Realm, which has at last been happily suppressed:

ARTICLE I.

SIMON Lord Lovat, being a Subject of his said Majesty, one of the said Traitors and Rebels, and conspiring and joining with them in their said traitorous Designs, and having withdrawn that due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which, as a loyal Subject, he owed, and of right ought to bear, to his said present Most Sacred Majesty, the only true, lawful, and undoubted Sovereign of this Kingdom, his true and natural Lord, did, upon the 31st Day of December, in the Year of our Lord 1743, in the Shire of Inverness, and, on the 28th Day of October, in the Year 1745, in the same Shire, and at divers other Days, Times, and Places, wickedly, maliciously, falsely, and traitorously, compass and imagine the Death of his said Majesty.

ARTICLE II.

AND for accomplishing his said wicked and traitorous Purpose, he, the said Simon Lord Lovat, upon the said 31st Day of December, in the said Year 1743, in the Shire of Inverness aforesaid, did traitorously correspond with the said Pretender, obtain and accept a Commission from the said Pretender, to be a Lieutenant General of his Forces, and another Commission from the said Pretender, to be General of the Highlanders; and did also accept from the said Pretender, a Patent or Grant, importing to create him the said Simon Lord Lovat Duke of Fraser; and then and there did traitorously conspire and enter into an Association with many other Traitors, in order to raise a War and Rebellion against his Majesty, within this Realm, and to obtain Troops, Money, and Succours from France, for that Purpose.

ARTICLE III.

AND the said Simon Lord Lovat did further falsely and traitorously, at the Times and Place before particularly mentioned, and at divers other Times and Places, assemble himself, with divers other false Traitors and Rebels, against our said Sovereign Lord the King, being armed and arrayed in a warlike Manner, and did raise, and caused to be raised and assembled, great Numbers of armed Men, his Majesty's Subjects, for the Service of the said Pretender, and his said Son; and arrayed, and caused them to be arrayed, in a warlike Manner against his Majesty, and did traitorously levy, and cause to be levied, a cruel and unnatural War against his Majesty, within this Realm, at the Times and Place aforesaid, in Favour of the said Pretender.

ARTICLE IV.

AND for the more effectual bringing his said Treasons and traitorous Designs to Effect, he the said Simon Lord Lovat did, in the Month of November, in the said Year 1745, traitorously compose, write, and send, and cause to be composed, written, and sent, a treasonable Letter to the said Eldest Son of the said Pretender, then in Arms within this Kingdom, and joined by, and at the Head of, great Numbers of his Majesty's Subjects, false Traitors and Rebels against his Majesty, then also in Arms and Rebellion against his Majesty within this Kingdom; in which Letter he the said Simon Lord Lovat, among other Things, expressed the great Pleasure it would give him to end his Days in the Service of the said Pretender's said Son; That he was resolved to send to him his the said Lord Lovat's Eldest Son, to venture his Life in his Service, and deliver up his Clan to him; and further expressed and represented his own great Zeal and Attachment to the said Pretender, and his said Son, and their Cause and Interest, and the Service he had done, was doing, and intended to do, for the said Pretender and his said Son, with Intent and in order to confirm, animate, and encourage him the said Pretender, his said Son, his Adherents, and all the other said Traitors, in the Prosecution of their said Treasons, and traitorous Designs.

ARTICLE V.

AND the said Simon Lord Lovat, in further Prosecution of his said Treasons, did, at the Times and Place before-mentioned, and at divers other Times and Places, after the said War and Rebellion began, and while the same was carrying on, traitorously compose, write, and send, and cause to be composed, written, and sent, divers other treasonable Letters and Papers to divers false Traitors, then openly in Arms in this Kingdom against his said Majesty, and to divers others of his Majesty's Subjects, and other Persons, to assure them of his own Zeal and firm Attachment to the Cause and Interest of the said Pretender, and his said Son, and to confirm, solicit, excite, and persuade them to engage in, continue, and prosecute the said War and Rebellion, and to promise and assure them of his Assistance therein.

ARTICLE VI.

AND the more effectually to attain the End of his said Treasons, and treasonable Designs, the said Simon Lord Lovat did, at the said Times and Place, and at divers other Times and Places, traitorously aid and assist the said Pretender's said Son, and the said other false Traitors and Rebels, in the carrying on the said Treasons, War, and Rebellion, and furnish and provide them with great Quantities of Arms, Ammunition, Implements of War, Cloaths, and other Things useful and necessary for that Purpose; and also sent his eldest Son, and many of his Name, Family, and Dependents, to the Assistance of the said Pretender's eldest Son, and the said other Rebels; and also gave them Advice, Directions, and Instructions, in the Prosecution of the said Rebellion.

ARTICLE VII.

AND the said Simon Lord Lovat further, at the Times and Place aforesaid, and at divers other Times and Places, did unlawfully and traitorously hold, entertain, and keep Intelligence and Correspondence, both in Person and by Letters and otherwise, with the said eldest Son of the said Pretender, well knowing him to be so; and also with divers other Persons, who were employed by the said Pretender's said Son; and particularly with John Murray of Broughton, Esq. Donald Cameron the elder, of Lochiel, Donald Cameron the younger, of Lochiel, Alexander MacLeod, Advocate, of Edinburgh, John Roy Stuart, Doctor Archibald Cameron, and divers others: All which Persons were employed by the said eldest Son of the said Pretender in this Kingdom, in the said Rebellion, the said Simon Lord Lovat well knowing they were severally employed.

All which said Treasons and Crimes above-mentioned were contrived, committed, perpetrated, acted, and done, by the said Simon Lord Lovat, against our said present Sovereign Lord the King, his Peace, Crown, and Dignity, contrary to the Duty of his Allegiance, and against the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom.

Of all which said Treasons and Crimes, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses, in Parliament assembled, do, in the Name of themselves, and all the Commons of Great Britain, impeach the said Simon Lord Lovat.

And the said Commons, by Protestations, saving to themselves the Liberty of exhibiting, at any time hereafter, any other Accusation of Impeachment against the said Simon Lord Lovat; and also of replying to the Answer which he shall make to the Premises, or any of them, or to any Impeachment or Accusation that shall be by them exhibited, according to the Course and Proceedings of Parliament; do pray, That the said Simon Lord Lovat be put to answer all and every the Premises: And that such Proceedings, Examinations, Tryal, and Judgment thereupon, may be had and used, as shall be agreeable to Law and Justice.

The Answer of Simon Lord Fraser of Lovat, to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited against him, by the Name of Simon Lord Lovat, by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses, in Parliament assembled, in the Name of themselves, and all the Commons of Great Britain.

THE said Lord, saving and reserving to himself all Benefit and Advantage of Exception to the Uncertainties and Insufficiencies in the said Articles contained, and also all Advantages and Privileges belonging to him as a Peer of this Realm, in Answer to the afore-mentioned Article says, That being as fully sensible as any British Subject of the many Blessings these Kingdoms have enjoyed under his present and late Majesty's mild and equal Administration; and having, in the Rebellion of 1715, given the strongest Proofs of his Zeal for, and Attachment to, his late Majesty, and the Succession of the Crown in his illustrious Family, against such as had undertaken the Destruction of both; he cannot but lament his Misfortune, to have his Fidelity questioned at the End of his Days; and himself, when near worn out with Age and Infirmities, charged with intending

intending the Subversion of a Government he had, in the Strength and Vigour of his Age, exerted his utmost Power and Address to support. Under this heavy Pressure, attended with many other Calamities and Misfortunes, particularly his own Inability to manage his Defence, his only Resource is in your Lordships Justice, who will, he is well assured, regard only plain Facts, not as aggravated by Skill and Oratory, but as clearly and manifestly proved by the Testimony of credible and unexceptionable Witnesses.

Under this firm Persuasion, therefore, the said Lord, in Answer to the First and Second Articles, denies that he did wickedly, maliciously, falsely, and traitorously, compass or imagine the Death of his said present Majesty, or correspond with the Pretender, obtain or accept any Commission or Commissions, Grant, or Letters Patent, from the said Pretender, or traitorously conspire, or enter into any Association whatsoever, for raising a War or Rebellion against his said Majesty, within this Realm, or for obtaining Troops, Money, or Succours, from France, for that Purpose, in Manner and Form as by the said Articles is alledged.

To the Third Article, the said Lord denies, That he did assemble himself with any Traitors or Rebels; or raise, or cause to be raised or assembled, any armed Men, for the Service of the said Pretender, or his eldest Son; or array, or cause to be arrayed, any Person or Persons whatsoever against his said Majesty; or levy, or cause to be levied, any War against his said Majesty, in this Realm, in Manner and Form as in this Article is charged.

To the Fourth Article, the said Lord denies, That he did compose, write, or send, or cause to be composed, written, or sent, any Letter, Paper, or Writing whatsoever, to the said Pretender's eldest Son, to any such Purport or Effect as by the said Article is supposed, or to any other Purport or Effect whatsoever.

To the Fifth Article, he denies, That he did compose; write, or send, or cause to be composed, written, or sent, any Letter or Letters, Paper or Papers, to any Person or Persons, to such Purport or Effect as by the said Article is alledged.

To the Sixth Article, he denies, That he ever did furnish or provide the said Pretender's eldest Son, or any Traitors or Rebels, with any Arms, Ammunition, Implements of War, or other Things useful or necessary, for the Purpose in the said Article mentioned: Nor did he send his eldest Son, or any of his Name, Family, or Dependents, to the Assistance of the said Pretender's eldest Son, or any Rebels whatsoever; nor encourage, advise, direct, or instruct any of them, in the Prosecution of the said Rebellion.

To the Seventh Article, the said Lord denies, That he ever did hold, entertain, or keep, any Intelligence or Correspondence with the said Pretender's eldest Son, either in Person or otherwise; nor did he entertain or keep any Correspondence with any other of the Persons mentioned in the said Article, or with any other Person employed by the said eldest Son of the Pretender, in the said Rebellion, knowing any thing of them to be so employed.

And as to all other Matters and Things in the said Articles contained, and which is not herein particularly answered (if any such there be), the said Lord avers, That he is not guilty of them, or any of them, in Manner and Form as laid in the said Articles, or in any other Manner or Form whatsoever: And humbly submits himself to your Lordships Judgment.

Replication of the Commons to Lord Lovat's Answer.

Die Veneris, 16^o Januarii, 1746.

A MESSAGE was brought from the House of Commons, by Sir William Yonge, and others, to acquaint this House, that they have considered the Answer of Simon Lord Lovat to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses, assembled in Parliament: And do aver their Charge against the said Simon Lord Lovat for High-Treason, to be true: And that the said Simon Lord Lovat is guilty, in such Manner as he stands impeached: And that the Commons will be ready to prove their Charge against him, at such convenient Time as shall be appointed for that Purpose.

Lord High Steward. The Distance of this Place from the Bar is so great, that I am obliged to ask your Lordships Leave to come down to the Table, for the Convenience of Hearing.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Which was done accordingly.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, You will be pleased now to proceed.

Sir WILLIAM YONGE.

My Lords,

AS I was commanded by the House of Commons to lay before your Lordships the Articles of Impeachment of High Treason against the noble Lord at the Bar, which have been just read,

So it now becomes my Duty to open the general Charge to your Lordships, together with some of the Inducements which prevailed with the Commons to think this Accusation necessary.

In the first Place, my Lords, I cannot omit observing, That as every Impeachment is said to be in the Name of all the Commons of the Land, so this may most emphatically be declared to be so, as I am confident there is not a single Subject of the United Kingdom of Great Britain, who has not demanded Justice against this notorious Offender; excepting a few Miscreants, who may still be intestine Enemies to his Sacred Majesty on the Throne, his Royal Family, and by necessary Consequence, to the Religion and Liberties of their native Country.

The Crime of High-Treason has at all times been considered, in the most civilized and in the most free Countries, as an Offence of the blackest Dye; and as such, the severest Punishments have been inflicted on such Offenders; and this, my Lords, with the greatest Reason and Justice.

Government was instituted for the Happiness and Security of Mankind, to rescue them from the Rapine and Disorder,

The Murders and Destructions, which must be the Consequences of Anarchy and Confusion.

Treason tends to destroy all Government, whether Monarchical, or that of a Commonwealth of any Denomination; to introduce Confusion and Bloodshed: And if he that murders one Man, is by the Laws of God and Man to be punished with Death, how much more every Rebel, every Fomentor and Abettor of Rebellion, who is a Murderer of Thousands?

By our Law, He that but imagines the Death of the King (in whose Person all the Bands of Society are united), and discovers his wicked Imagination by any Overt Act, is a Traitor: If this be proved against the Prisoner (as I doubt not it will be to your Lordships full Satisfaction), the noble Lord at the Bar is then a Traitor.

Raising Rebellion, and levying War, is another Species of Treason by our Law, or rather the plainest and most notorious Overt Act of imagining the Death of the King: And we doubt not to prove the noble Lord at the Bar to be a Rebel.

It is High-Treason by Statute, to correspond with the Pretender to his Majesty's Crown, or with the Sons of the Pretender, or those employed by them.

But we shall amply prove it to your Lordships, That the noble Lord at the Bar has boasted, that he received a Patent as Duke from the Pretender; an Authority as Commander in Chief of the Highlands; is a General Officer in the Pretender's Service; and that he has openly corresponded with the Son of the Pretender, and his Followers, then in open War against his Majesty within this Realm, and given them Harbour, Encouragement, and Assistance.

Your Lordships have, I am persuaded, given due Attention to the Preamble, as well as to the Articles that have been read.

The Commons have there asserted, That, most unfortunately for this Nation, we have amongst us an obstinate, bigotted, restless Faction, who are not, and will not be, contented with the Enjoyments of Liberty, Peace, and Prosperity:

But who are perpetually watching for every favourable Opportunity to overturn our Constitution, and the present happy Establishment.

This is not only their Principle, but has been their constant Endeavour, at different times, from the late glorious Revolution to the present Hour,

By Plots and Conspiracies, by fomenting frequent Rebellions, by inviting our Enemies to invade us, and by that detestable Crime of Assassination.

These Facts require no Proof. Our Annals will afford, and your Lordships Memories will furnish, numerous Instances of some or other of these Attempts.

But, my Lords, we shall, in the Course of our Proceedings, make it appear, That the noble Lord at the Bar, so long as Seven or Eight Years ago, joined in an Association with other Traitors, under their Hands and Seals, for dethroning his present Majesty, and placing the Pretender in his Stead.

Not contented with this, the Association is signed and sealed was transmitted by a faithful Hand to the Cardinal, then Prime Minister of France,

In order to excite those our natural Enemies to give their Assistance, and to invade this Country with a foreign Force, even at a time when we were in actual Peace with that Kingdom;

His Lordship, and the other Conspirators, justly imagining, That this might be a favourable Conjunction, a War with Spain at that Time being commenced;

Wisely concluding, That when we were engaged with one Branch of the House of Bourbon, the other would not long be neuter.

So early was his Lordship in fomenting a Rebellion at home, and inviting an Invasion from abroad.

Nor was he only early in promoting, and active in supporting, but zealous in endeavouring to prevent the Extinction of the late Rebellion;

For, when the Rebels were broken, and their Chiefs Fugitives from the Victory at Culloden, his Lordship found Means to be present at a Sort of Council of War held by those Chiefs;

Where he earnestly encouraged them to reassemble the Remains of their scattered Troops, and to revive the War:

Which was resolved on, and might have happened, had not the Vigilance of his Royal Highness the Duke prevented its taking Effect, thereby shewing his own superior Abilities in using, as eminently as his Courage and Conduct in obtaining, Victory.

The noble Lord at the Bar was, at the Time of this Victory, within Fourteen Miles of Inverness.

What would have been the Conduct of any loyal Subject on this Occasion? Would he not have hastened thither, to congratulate his Royal Highness on the Success of that glorious Day?

What was the Conduct of the Prisoner at the Bar?

He received the Young Pretender, flying from his Defeat; embraced him with open Arms; assisted him in his Flight.

And the next News we hear of his Lordship is, that he fled from Justice himself, and appeared at the Meeting of the Rebel Chiefs I have just now mentioned.

This is the Substance of our Charge. And when I have said thus much, your Lordships will not be at a Loss for the strongest Inducements to the Commons to impeach. But, my Lords, there are other Inducements.

The Commons look upon it not only as their Duty, but as a Duty of the greatest Importance to this Nation, to take this Opportunity to let the World know, by the unanimous Voice of the Representatives of all the Commons of Great-Britain, their sincere and hearty Abhorrence of every Attempt to disturb his Majesty's auspicious Government, either from abroad, or at home:

To convince all the World, That we are determined to be a Free People, under our own King:

That we are determined to continue a Protestant Nation;

And that we never will suffer an arbitrary Government, or Popish Superstition, to be imposed on us by any Power whatsoever:

That we will give convincing Proof to all Europe, that we are not that dissatisfied, disaffected, turbulent People, they have been vainly made to believe,

By having adopted as Truths, all the seditious, discontented, and traitorous traitorous Libels, which have at different Times, and on various Occasions, been industriously scattered through the Nation;

And that our Enemies did foolishly and ignorantly imagine these Libels and Calumnies to be the general Sense of the People.

Permit me, my Lords, to put you in mind, that That scandalous Declaration of the Young Pretender published at Edinburgh, which your Lordships, with the hearty Concurrence of the Commons, ordered to be burnt by the common Hangman, was but a short Abstract of those very Libels.

This Belief of our Enemies was their Folly. The relying on it has proved, Thanks be to God, their Destruction.

Had they not been thus infatuated, would such a Nation as France have attempted, or thought it possible, to over-run, much more to conquer, a brave and warlike People, with a Handful of Men, so poorly provided at first, and throughout so weakly supported?

To convince Mankind of these false and vain Imaginations, was one of the Inducements which prevailed with the Commons to vindicate the People they represent from these vile Aspersions, in the most solemn Manner, in Presence of your Lordships and this great Assembly.

But, my Lords, the Body of the People themselves, from the highest to the lowest, have vindicated their own Loyalty and Honour.

After a small Body of the regular Troops had received a Check, when it was apprehended the Rebels would venture to march Southward, what a noble Spirit immediately arose throughout the Nation!

Not an artificial, false Clamour for Liberty, but the true old British Spirit of Liberty, the true REVOLUTION SPIRIT, that exerted and signalized itself, out of Hatred to Popery and arbitrary Power.

And, Thanks be to God, it still remains in its full Vigour amongst us; it cries aloud in our Streets for Justice against those that would have made them Slaves and Papists; it cries aloud for Justice against the Prisoner at the Bar.

Calumnies of the like Nature preceded the great Rebellion in the Year 1715; and most justly may our present gracious King now say, in the Words of his Royal Father, of glorious Memory, to both Houses of Parliament:

"My greatest Comfort is, That I cannot reproach myself with having given the least Provocation to that Spirit of Discontent and Calumny that has been let loose against me, or the least Pretence for kindling the Flame of this Rebellion. Let those whose fatal Counsels laid the Foundation of all those Mischiefs, and those whose private Discontents and Disappointments, disguised under false Pretences, have betrayed great Numbers of deluded People into their own Destruction, answer for the Miseries in which they have involved their Fellow-Subjects."

I have chosen to make this Quotation, because it will appear to your Lordships, that the noble Lord at the Bar, since his being taken, has frequently declared,

That one of the Causes of his late Behaviour, was Revenge to the Ministry, for having taken from him the Command of an Independent Company, which he enjoyed.

Now, my Lords, if there is such a Principle, that Men must be paid for being loyal, and hired to live free and happy,

Whom no Sense of Religion, or Love to their Country, can engage, Whom no Ties of Conscience, Oaths, or Abjurations, can bind:

If there is such a Principle, it is the lowest, the basest, and the meanest, as well as the most mischievous and wicked, that can enter into the Heart of Man.

My Lords, the Commons have still further Inducements for impeaching this particular Criminal.

Your Lordships have already done national Justice on some of the principal Traitors, who appeared in open Arms against his Majesty, by the ordinary Course of Law.

But this noble Lord, who, in the whole Course of his Life, has boasted of his superior Cunning in Wickedness, and his Ability to commit frequent Treasons with Impunity,

Vainly imagined, that he might possibly be a Traitor in private, and a Rebel only in his Heart,

By sending his Son, and his Followers, to join the Pretender, and remaining at home himself, to endeavour to deceive his Majesty's faithful Subjects:

Hoping, he might be rewarded for his Son's Services, if successful; or his Son alone be the Sufferer for his Offences, if the Undertaking failed. Diabolical Cunning! Monstrous Impiety!

My Lords, Secret Criminals of this Sort, and of all others, it is the peculiar Business of the Commons to explore, and to bring to Justice.

This is the first and great Offender: But should hereafter other concealed Criminals appear, who encouraged and supported the late Rebellion; but who, either through the Cowardice of their Hearts, or Fondness for their Estates and Riches, durst not join the Rebels,

I make no doubt, but the Zeal and Loyalty of the Commons will prompt them with equal Ardour, to bring them to condign Punishment.

Having thus opened to your Lordships the Nature of the Crimes of which the noble Lord at the Bar is accused, and several Inducements the Commons had for this Accusation, it is needless for me to awaken your Lordships Attention, by enumerating the Miseries which the late Rebellion occasioned, or the utter Ruin which must have attended its Success.

It is too fresh in your Lordships Memories to need any Aggravation: And I pray to God, that your Lordships, this Great Assembly, and the whole Nation, may for ever remember it.

It has too often been the Misfortune of this Country to have been involved in Civil Wars: A Calamity of all others the most to be dreaded.

In antient Times these unhappy Divisions have arisen from Contests between Princes and great Men, without the least View to the Liberties, or the Benefit, of the People:

Let who would be Victors, they were sure to be Slaves, and only fought for different Masters.

The Power and Imperiousness of Rome they were sure to submit to, while each Contender exerted his Interest there, for the Confirmation of his Title.

Henry the Seventh united the Two Branches of the contending Families: During his Reign, and those that followed, the Commons began to grow rich, and consequently powerful; they became jealous of their Liberties, and of their Property.

When they had something of their own to lose, they were too wise to risk their Fortunes, or their Lives, in vain Quarrels of the Powerful and the Great: They shook off the Yoke of Rome; Laws were enacted to limit the Power of the Crown, and the Days of Freedom began to dawn.

Still there was another Struggle, when the Crown began to inroach upon those Laws, and exert despotic Power: These virtuous Struggles at first soon degenerated into Faction; Civil War and Anarchy ensued, and ended (as it always will) in the most absolute Tyranny.

The Restoration re-established the Form of our Government; and new Privileges were gained for the People.

But, in the next Reign, the impatient Lust of Power, and the abject Bigotry of the Prince, produced the happy Revolution. The glorious Prince of Orange came to our Rescue: The People received him with open Arms; and then, and not till then, was established our present free Constitution.

Pardon, my Lords, this short Deduction, and be pleased to reflect, how odious and detestable the late unprovoked Rebellion must appear.

A Rebellion calculated to overturn this Constitution, so hardly acquired, and so carefully preserved, by all the succeeding Princes to this very Hour!

A Rebellion against our present indulgent Sovereign, whose Study has been the Happiness of his People; under whom the boldest Rebel cannot complain of the least Violence or Oppression!

The Laws of the Land have had their full and free Course, except where their Rigour has been restrained by the Royal Mercy.

Under such a Prince, and for the Destruction of such a Constitution, has the noble Lord at the Bar conspired and rebelled.

Be pleased then to remember the Depredations, the Bloodshed, that spoiled and stained those Countries through which the Rebels passed.

Let us remember the Distress of Public Credit, the Stagnation of Trade, the Loss of our Manufacturers, the reasonable, yet dangerous Apprehensions, which seized on the Minds of all the loyal Inhabitants of these great and opulent Cities of London and Westminster.

Let us remember the Loss of the Lives, the Blood, and the Limbs, of those gallant and brave Officers and Soldiers, who conquered, for our Sakes, in the famous Battle of Culloden. They are, and will be, a perpetual Memorial for whom, and by whom, they suffered.

Let us all remember these Calamities, and endeavour, as it is our Duty, to prevent the like Evils for the future, by doing Justice on Criminals; by putting a Stop to the Growth of Popery, that bloody Religion; by preventing the Education of our Youth in those Principles, which the Prisoner at the Bar has instilled into his Son; and by lessening the Power in those Hands, which have ever been ready to disturb this Government.

These, or such other Provisions, as the Wisdom of the Legislature shall suggest, are necessary to prevent the future Mischiefs which may arise from the frequent Disturbance of Government.

While we are in this State, 'tis in vain for this Country to hope to make the Figure she ought to do, or retain her due Dignity among the States of Europe, or to preserve the Peace, or hold the Balance, among foreign Powers.

If, while her Armies are employed abroad to humble the Pride of an assuming Nation, her Fleets to protect our Trade, or to annoy our Enemies,

If then our Troops are to be called Home to preserve domestic Peace, and our Fleets to prevent Invasions invited by these Patricides,

What Ally can depend on our Assistance? or what Pretence can we have to be Umpires in the common Cause of Europe?

Britain, united within herself, may, from her Situation, her Wealth, her Naval Power, and the Bravery of her Troops, justly claim that Title;

But divided, torn to Pieces by civil Discord, must fall under the ancient Reproach of this Country, and, while we are contending among ourselves, become an easy Prey to our most inveterate Enemies.

Let us now, my Lords, turn our Thoughts from these gloomy Reflections, which the Time and Circumstances of the late unhappy Rebellion of necessity must furnish: And Let us then call to Mind, with Thankfulness, the good Providence of God, which put an End to these Calamities, and a glorious Period to our Terrors.

Let us acknowledge, with Duty and Gratitude, all his Majesty's Labours for the Safety and Happiness of his People.

And let us remember, with Honour and Praise, his Royal Offspring, who, by his Courage and Conduct, has secured and established his Majesty's Throne, your Lordships Honours, our Liberties and Privileges, and the Protestant Religion.

Thus ended this wicked and unnatural Rebellion, of which the noble Lord at the Bar will appear to your Lordships to be one of the first Contrivers and Promoters, and a very considerable Support.

All I have said, I know, will avail nothing with your Lordships, unless the Evidence we shall bring against the noble Lord at the Bar be clear and full, as we doubt not it will appear to be.

In Cases where Life is concerned it is painful to be a Judge; it is uneasy to be the Accusers: But there is a Duty incumbent on both.

I know such is the generous Compassion of your Lordships noble Hearts, that you will acquit with Pleasure, but condemn with Reluctance.

And as I am persuaded, from the Fulness of our Proofs, the latter will be your Lordships Judgment, give me Leave to add a few Words to lessen that Concern, which your Lordships may feel as Judges, and we as Accusers.

When I look on his Lordship at the Bar, I pity his Age and Infirmities; but, when I consider that, at his Years, Pride, Vanity, Avarice, or Ambition, are so rooted in his Heart, as to tempt him to risk his Honour and Estate, to sacrifice the Religion and Liberty of his Country to those mean Passions, that Pity is mixed with Indignation.

But

But when I reflect on his having been already pardoned for this very Crime:

That he has been amply rewarded by his Majesty's Royal Father, and intrusted by his present Majesty in preserving the Peace of those Highlands where he rebelled; I own I feel the strongest Repentment of such heinous Ingratitude.

The bringing his grey Hairs with Sorrow to the Grave seems to be a Distress to human Nature; but when we consider how different the Distress when that Expression was first used, and that the Prisoner at the Bar is not brought into that wretched Circumstance by the Misfortune or Loss of a darling Child, but by sacrificing his eldest Son to his own Ambition, and by endeavouring to save his own worthless Life by his Son's Destruction, it must almost harden the most tender Breast.

One Word more, and I have done.

When your Lordships look towards the Bar, you will please to reflect, that had the Design of the noble Lord, who stands there, had its Effect, it would probably have happened to many of your Lordships noble Body, who should not have perished in the Defence of your Country, to have stood in that very Place;

While his Lordship, with a Number of mock Peers, had sat in Judgment on your Lordships, for the very Crime for which he is now accused.

Thus far, my Lords, I have gone, in Pursuance of the Trust reposed in me by the Commons. I am now, my Lords, for myself, humbly to implore your Lordships Indulgence for any Errors I may have been guilty of, either in Matter, or in Words. If I have omitted any Thing material, I am sure it will be supplied by the great Abilities of those who are to follow me, and who will lay before your Lordships the particular Evidence to support our Charge.

Lord COKE.

My Lords,

I AM likewise commanded by the House of Commons to assist my Honourable Friend in maintaining the Articles of Impeachment against the noble Lord at the Bar: And, my Lords, if I commit any Errors in what I shall offer to your Lordships, I hope I shall meet with your Lordships Indulgence, and, in Return, I promise you they shall not be wilful. It is a Business, my Lords, to which I am an entire Stranger; nor should I have undertaken it in a Case of so high Importance, if I did not think, that my Duty to my Country, as well as my Allegiance to his Majesty, to which I shall ever be faithful, equally called upon me to be instrumental, if I could, to find out concealed Treasons, and to bring the Contrivers of them to Justice, as to have ventured my Person and Fortune, if necessary, when the Rebels were in the Field. What I shall chiefly endeavour to prove to your Lordships, is, that the last Rebellion was not the Effect of Chance only, entered into by a few rash, inconsiderate Men, without Thought or previous Design, but the Result of long-considered and well-weighed Consultations, and of Schemes not so ill concerted, as to make the Success either impossible, or without some Degree of Probability in them: And, my Lords, the Reason why I choose to mention this general Design to your Lordships is, that, though I am not very old, I have twice seen this Country in very great Danger from the Disbelief of Jacobitism prevailing in it. In 1743, I, with Grief, remember, when a Message was sent from the King to a certain Place in this Kingdom, that an Invasion was projected from France; what popular Declarations were made to shew, that the Scheme was impracticable, and that it ought to be looked upon only as a Terror thrown out by the Ministry; because, as there was neither the Colour nor Appearance of Truth in it, there could be no Reality. And, in the Beginning of the last Rebellion, there was a Disbelief prevailed even among those who ought to have been more certain of the Truth: But that was not the Case of the Prisoner at your Bar: He did believe it; he sent one of his chief Agents into Lochaber, to the Young Pretender, to go and receive his Commands, and ordered him to express the greatest Satisfaction at his being come over. He did not content himself with beginning the Rebellion then; but in 1736, an Association was sent by him to Rome, signed and sealed by many of the People of that Country, to invite the Pretender then to come over; and that was afterwards carried to Paris, and shewed to the Cardinal; and, I believe, met with Approbation at both those Places.

My Lords, I say nothing to aggravate the Case of the Prisoner at your Bar: He is already oppressed with Misfortunes enough, and it is not in my Nature, I hope, to add to them. Nor should I, my Lords, make the following Observation, did I not think myself obliged, in Justice to an unfortunate young Man, whom this noble Lord has forced into the Rebellion: He did write a Letter, that he was afraid the disobedient Behaviour of his Son, would bring down his grey Hairs with Sorrow to the Grave; and therefore it will not appear astonishing to you, that when he had forgot that tenderest Tie of human Nature, the Love of a Father to his Child, so far as to desire to save the wretched Remains of a Life almost worn out, by the Destruction of his own Son, that he should forget his Allegiance to the Son of a King who saved his forfeit Life; the Remainder of which he has since employed in endeavouring to overturn and destroy his Family, and the Government established in him. I shall therefore conclude with my Honourable Friend, in saying, that we are ready to make good our Charge against the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Attorney-General (Sir DUDLEY RIDER).

My Lords,

I HAVE likewise the Commands of the House of Commons to assist in the Prosecution of the noble Lord at the Bar.

The Charge hath been fully stated and opened by the Managers who have spoke before me. The Prisoner has denied every Part of it, and thereby put the Proof upon us to be made out; not, as he rightly says in his Answer to the Articles, by Facts aggravated by Skill and Oratory, but by credible and unexceptionable Witnesses, in a plain and legal Way; against which he will have the full Benefit of any just Defence he can make.

I shall therefore avoid dwelling upon those many Circumstances of Aggravation, either in respect to the Rebellion in general, or to the noble Prisoner's own particular Conduct in it, which will necessarily occur in the Progress of this Prosecution: The Honourable Managers, who have preceded me, have very properly pointed them out to your Lordships. They have had their Effect already; all that Effect which your Lordships Wisdom and Justice would suffer them to have; all that the Commons would wish them to have: They have awakened your Lordships Attention, if that could possibly be wanting in the least Degree on such an Occasion: They have balanced that Compassion, which the Age, Appearance, and Quality of the noble Prisoner, must naturally raise in your Lordships humane Breasts; that is, they have cleared the Way for that Justice which the Nation calls for, and the Commons of Great-Britain in Behalf of themselves, and the People whom they represent, now demand at your Lordships Bar.

All therefore that I shall offer for your Lordships Consideration, will be a plain Narrative of Facts, with the Nature of the Evidence to prove them, and some short Observations, to shew the Force of those Facts to maintain the Charge, which the Commons of Great-Britain have undertaken to make good.

The Facts will be very numerous, to be proved by a Variety of Witnesses and Writings; and therefore must necessarily, in the Course of the Evidence, lie intermixed. I shall, therefore, in the Opening, endeavour to disentangle them: and, that your Lordships Attention may be the more easily fixed, and the Facts, as they shall arise in the Evidence, be the more readily applied to the several Parts of the Charge, I shall divide them into three distinct Periods of Time.

Those which happened precedent to the Pretender's Son's Landing.

What happened after that Time, and before the Battle of Culloden.

What arose since that happy Event.

And within each of these Periods, your Lordships will find many Things, which it will much concern the Prisoner at the Bar to give a satisfactory Answer to.

The First will open to your Lordships a wicked and traitorous Scheme begun and carried on for many Years, for bringing over the Pretender, by the Assistance of a Foreign Force, in which his Lordship will appear to have had a principal Hand.

The Second will include the more immediate Scene of Action in the late wicked Rebellion, and the particular Parts which the Prisoner took in it.

The Third will shew him in the Circumstance of a Defeat, and the Measures he then thought proper to take; and, in every Part of this whole Scene, he will appear plotting, associating, and supporting all the Steps that were taken for subverting this happy Establishment, dethroning his Majesty, and substituting a Popish Pretender in his room.

To begin with the First of these Periods: And here I shall be under a Necessity of going some Years back, in order to lay before your Lordships a View of those traitorous Schemes that have been set on foot, and prosecuted for some Time past, in order to prepare the Way for, and bring on the late Rebellion.

As soon as the War with Spain was declared, the Pretender, and his Agents, thought that a favourable Opportunity offered to promote his Interest; and a Project was immediately set on Foot, by several of his Friends in the Northern Parts of Scotland, for bringing in the Pretender by the Assistance of France; and Seven of the Chiefs of them entered into an Association for that Purpose. The Prisoner at the Bar set himself at the Head of them, and himself, together with the Earl of Traquair, Sir James Campbell of Auchinbreck, Cameron of Lochiel the younger, John Stuart, Brother to Lord Traquair, Lord Perth, and Lord John Drummond, signed and sealed an Association in Writing, in which they engaged to venture their Lives and Fortunes, to restore, as they called it, the Pretender, whom they styled their King, and his Family. They agreed to send one Drummond, alias Mac Gregor, of Bochaldie, a Relation and intimate Friend of the Prisoner's, to Rome, in order to have the Scheme for bringing over the Pretender digested there; and from thence carried to Paris, for completing the Execution of it. It was there to be delivered to Cardinal Fleury, then Prime Minister of France, with a Memorial, pressing, in the strongest Terms, for her Assistance.

In order to engage the French Court, he was to represent the great Interest and Strength of the Conspirators in the Highlands; to assure the Cardinal, that they could raise 20,000 Highlanders for the Service, and wanted nothing but a few French Troops, and some Money, to secure the Success. The Conspirators, at the same Time, sent over a List of many other Heads of Clans, who, they pretended, would join in the same Design.

Drummond accordingly went over, and carried with him the Association and List; and after he had obtained the Sanction of Rome, and the Pretender, he came to Paris, where he was introduced to the Cardinal by one Semple, whom they called Lord Semple, an Agent at that Place for the Pretender. He delivered the Association and List to the Cardinal, with an Assurance, that any of the Seven who had signed the Association would come over, and confirm it in Person, whenever he desired it.

Any Scheme to disturb the Peace of this Nation is but too acceptable to that Court at all Times. The Cardinal received it with great Attention and Encouragement, and promised their Assistance, as soon as the Conspirators could shew a reasonable Prospect of Success. Drummond continued at Paris, and kept a constant Correspondence with those who had joined in the Association. Nothing, however, appears to have been finally resolved on, till about the latter End of the Year 1742, or the Beginning of 1743, when the Court of France, finding how necessary it was to their Views of oppressing Europe, to take off the Weight of our Assistance from our Allies upon the Continent, thought it worth their while (though then at Peace with us) to enter seriously into this Design; and Drummond was, about that time, sent over hither by the Cardinal, to assure the Conspirators, and the rest of the Pretender's Friends in Scotland, that if they could procure Encouragement from England, they might depend upon being assisted by France with an Invasion the Autumn following.

Drummond came accordingly over to Edinburgh, where he had a Meeting with the Earl of Traquair, Lochiel the younger, and Cluny, and gave them an Account of his Negotiations, and particularly of his last Message and Promise from the Cardinal. Upon this it was agreed, that the Earl of Traquair should go immediately to London, and try what Encouragement ment he could meet with there. The Earl went accordingly, and Drummond accompanied him. The Earl, after some time spent in England, returned to Edinburgh, and assured his Friends there, that the People here were well inclined to the Pretender, and would join in the Design, provided they could depend upon Assistance from France.

About the same time Drummond went over to Paris, to satisfy the Cardinal of the Success of his Negotiation; and he gave him such Satisfaction, that a Project for an Invasion was soon after agreed on. The Plan was, that the French should send over 3000 Men, under the Command of Earl Marshal, who were to be joined with large Bodies of Highlanders, which the Conspirators had undertaken to raise. 1500 of the French were to go directly to Inverness, where the Prisoner at the Bar was to join them with his Clan of Frasers; the remaining 1500 were to land in the West, near Sir James Campbell's, who was to go to the Isle of Mull, and raise the Clans there, who all together were to march and join the Frasers, and the other Body of French. At the same time 12,000 French, under the Command of Count Saxe, were to march to the Coast of Flanders and France, and from thence embark, and land in England, within two or three Days March of London.

As soon as this Scheme was agreed upon, Drummond, about the Middle of the Summer 1743, wrote Letters to the Earl of Traquair, to inform him of the Resolution that had been taken; to direct him to acquaint his Friends of it; and to assure them, that it would very soon be put in Execution. The Earl communicated this Intelligence to John Murray of Broughton, Lochiel, and several others, who immediately sent the same Mr. Murray to France, in order to settle Matters beforehand for the Execution of it. He went over accordingly; but the Death of the Cardinal, about that time, suspended the Prosecution of it for a little while. As soon as he arrived at Paris, he was assured by Drummond of the Cardinal's good Intentions and Zeal for the Pretender's Cause; and that nothing but his Death could have prevented the immediate Execution of it; and that the Cardinal's first Design was, that the Army under the Command of Maillebois should be employed in it; but that some Persons about the King of France had prevailed upon him to order that Army to march towards Hanover. Murray of Broughton was then introduced to Cardinal Tencin, and afterwards to M. Amelot, who assured him of the late Cardinal's Sincerity in the proposed Invasion; and that the French King had ordered him to acquaint the Gentlemen who had entered into the Association, that he had the Pretender's Interest very much at Heart, and would certainly execute the Scheme which had been settled, as soon as his Affairs would permit. M. Amelot at the same time entered into a Discourse concerning the Number of Highlanders that might be expected to join them.

With these Assurances Murray returned to Edinburgh, and made a Report of his Proceedings to the Earl of Traquair, Lord Perth, and others of the Pretender's Friends. Drummond was sent at the same time with the like Assurances to the Pretender at Rome, in order to engage him to send the Young Pretender to come and put himself at the Head of the Expedition. Drummond soon after came back to Paris, and from thence to London, in order to settle Matters here for the intended Invasion, and returned again to Paris; from whence he acquainted the Earl of Traquair, by Letter, that the French Court had now settled every Thing for the Invasion; that it would be executed immediately; and that the Pretender's Son was come from Rome to accompany it.

This was in January 1743: And in February following an Invasion was attempted by a large Embarkation from Dunkirk, where a great Number of Transports were got ready; many of the Troops actually embarked, with a Design to have come up the River of Thames; and a Fleet of Men of War actually sailed from Brest to support the Descent, or to divert our Fleet, while an Army of 12,000 Men might land without Interruption.

Nobody can have forgot how that Expedition was happily disappointed, by the good Providence of God, and the Vigilance of his Majesty; nor what Terror it struck while it was depending, at a Time that our own Troops were necessarily engaged on the Continent, in the Defence of our own and the Liberties of Europe, and consequently, when we had so few left to defend ourselves at Home.

After this Disappointment, no Letters appear to have come from France for a considerable Time; which made the Conspirators, and their Friends here, very uneasy; and the Earl of Traquair engaged Murray to go again to Paris, in order to know in what Situation their Affairs stood there: But before he was actually gone, a Letter came from Semple, to account for, and excuse the Misfortune of the Invasion, and desiring that fresh Assurances might be sent from the Pretender's Friends both in England and Scotland, in order to engage the French Court in a new one.

This did not prevent Murray's intended Journey; and in June 1744, he went over to Paris, where he was introduced to the Pretender's eldest Son, at the House of one MacDonald a Banker, and had soon after a second Meeting with him. The Young Pretender then assured Murray, That the French had been very serious in the Invasion, which had been disappointed by nothing but Wind and Weather, and other inevitable Accidents: But, however, he had the strongest Promises, both from the French King, and the Ministry, that the Scheme should be put in Execution the then next Summer, in the Year 1745. And as for himself, whether it was or not, he was determined to come over, if he brought but a single Footman with him: And though Murray represented to him the Rashness and Danger of such an Attempt, he was so fully satisfied of Assistance from the Highlands, whenever he appeared in Person, that he would, in all Events, come over at that Time.

Murray returned to Scotland from Paris, and communicated what passed to the Earl of Traquair, Lochiel, Lord Perth, and others of the Pretender's Friends; and at the same time brought along with him several Letters from the Pretender's Son, but with blank Addresses, in order to be delivered to such as it should be thought proper, when Murray came over; and they were accordingly soon after delivered to such as it was apprehended would make the best Use of them.

The Time, however, running out, and no Preparations yet appearing in France for an Invasion, the Pretender's Friends, who were acquainted with the Design, began to fear the French would deceive them; and in June 1745, Murray received a Letter from the Pretender's Son, in which, without taking Notice of any Invasion from France, he informs Murray, that he was determined himself to come to the Northern Part of Scotland immediately; and desired his Friends might be informed of it, and ready to join him, with all the Forces they could raise. He tells him, That it would be the latter End of that same Month; and appoints the Place where he designed to land, together with the Signals that were to be given and taken.

This Letter was immediately communicated to the Pretender's Friends in the North, and, amongst the rest, to the Noble Lord at the Bar. So unexpected a Resolution, without mentioning any Assistance from France, much surprised them. They thought it, as was natural, rash, precipitate, and dangerous, to come without Force; and therefore determined, most of them, if they could not prevent his Landing, to advise him to return, and wait till he could be better prepared. About a Fortnight after, the Pretender's Son actually arrived, and landed in the North-West Part of Scotland, upon the 25th of July, 1745.

Your Lordships will permit me now to make a little Stand. I have stated these Facts as a short View of the Commencement and Progress of several wicked and treasonable Correspondences, Plots, and Schemes, contrived and carried on from the Year 1740, for bringing over the Pretender, by the Assistance of the Power of France.

I have hitherto, my Lords, but just named the Noble Prisoner at the Bar in the Account I have given of them; and I have avoided it on Purpose, that when your Lordships should have before your Eyes, in one View, the general Plan of that Series of Treasons which have been contriving, and, in Part, executing; for so many Years, I might the more easily point out to your Lordships, as it were in a Map, the particular, precise Parts which the Noble Lord acted in them; which is what I shall now apply myself to.

And in order to do this the more clearly, and agreeable to the Evidence which will be produced, I shall be under the Necessity of going back to some yet earlier Parts of his Life; and which, my Lords, I should not do, if your Lordships would not necessarily, in the Course of the Evidence, see the Prisoner himself taking Pains to connect the early with the latter Parts of his Life, in order to prove the Uniformity and Consistency of his Conduct, all tending to, and uniting in, one great Centre, the overturning the Protestant Succession, excluding or dethroning his Majesty, and his Royal Father, and setting up the Pretender to their Throne in their room.

So long ago as the Reign of Queen Anne, when the Nation was involved in a War with France, and Invasions from thence were continually set on Foot, and it became material for the Pretender's Service to arm his Friends in the Northern Part of the Island, the Prisoner, who had been from his Youth bred to War, accepted of a Commission from the Pretender of a General Officer. It must be owned, that it does not appear, that the Prisoner made any particular Use of it; and the first Time any Opportunity did offer, when the Rebellion broke out on the Death of Queen Anne, the Noble Lord at the Bar did important Services to his late Majesty. He himself will likewise admit, that he was amply rewarded for them. But he seems very soon to have repented of those Services, even while he was in the full Possession of the Reward of them.

In 1719, when a Spanish Invasion was undertaken in Favour of the Pretender, and Spanish Forces were actually landed in the North, the Prisoner thought proper to engage in it; and, while the Earl of Seaforth was raising his Men to assist in it, the Prisoner himself wrote a Letter to that Earl, with a Promise to join him with his Clan; but before he had actually done it, that Attempt was defeated.

From that Time till the Year 1736, the Managers don't take upon themselves to state to your Lordships any Thing concerning his Conduct, but that general Account, which your Lordships will find him giving of himself in his own Letters, That he had, ever since he had the Use of his Reason, been the most faithful and zealous Subject to the Person and Interest of the Pretender.

But in that Year, when one Roy Stewart, who had escaped out of Prison, to which he had been committed for High-Treason, and been afterwards harboured in the Prisoner's House, then High-Sheriff of the County where he had been imprisoned, was going to the Pretender to Rome, the Noble Lord sent by him an Assurance to the Pretender of his constant Fidelity even to Death; and desired a Commission from him to be Lieutenant-General of the Highlands, and to have a Patent of Dukedom, which he had before solicited, expedited, and which he claimed as a Matter of Right for the Services he had done that Cause.

In the Year 1740, when an Invasion was projected, the Noble Lord was not only one of those that signed the Association, and corresponded with the Persons that negotiated it beyond Sea, but himself proposed it, and seems to have been the original Projector.

In the Year 1743, when the Invasion was actually resolved, and a Person of Figure and Interest was necessary to conduct it in the Highlands, the Prisoner was pitched upon as the most proper for that Purpose, and accepted two Commissions from the Pretender at Rome in December 1743; one to be Lord-Lieutenant of all the Counties North of Spey, and the other to make him a Lieutenant-General. He likewise, about the same time, obtained the Patent, which he had been long soliciting, for creating him Duke of Fraser.

And though the Disappointment of that Expedition prevented his immediate Use of those Powers, they did not lie idly by as a private Ornament to his Person, and to gratify his Vanity only: They were made use of by him to propagate the Principles of Treason and Rebellion; to sow the Seeds of Disloyalty to his present Majesty and his Government; to discipline his Dependents in the Service of the Pretender, and make them ready, whenever his Master's Projects were ripe for Execution.

He was, as your Lordships will see him expressing himself in his Letters, always the most zealous and active Partisan that the Pretender had in those Parts. He was, in his own Words, the Life and Spirit of the Pretender's Affairs in that Country: He made it, as he says, his sole Business to keep up the Hearts of his King's Friends, though it was both fatiguing, troublesome, and expensive; and appeals for the Truth of it to the Knowledge of all the Gentlemen in the Pretender's Interest in the North.

North. He did, as he expresses himself in another Letter, more Service to the Pretender's Cause, than any one of his Rank in Britain.

He constantly made it his Business, as he says in another, to promote his Master's Interest, and to engage faithful Subjects to him; so that he had done, as he expresses in a still higher Strain of Language, more against this Government than would hang fifty Lords, and forfeit fifty Estates.

I have now pointed out to your Lordships the particular Share the Noble Lord will appear to have had in the Steps towards the late Rebellion; in which you must have observed him to be a most active Friend to it: I shall now open to your Lordships a State of the Facts that affect the Prisoner, since the Young Pretender's Landing, which was, as I mentioned, upon the 23th of July 1745.

Notice was immediately sent of it to the Chiefs of the Clans known to be in his Interest; and the Prisoner at the Bar was one of the first to whom it was communicated. The Conspirators, who expected an Attempt at the Head of a French Army, were surprised at his coming in a single Ship, without Soldiers, and without any material Friends, or even many Servants accompanying him; and were at first shocked at the Danger of a Design so prematurely executed. However, some of the Clans came in soon; and the Prisoner at the Bar seems to have early determined to have done so too, not indeed at first in Person, which he excused from his Age, and supposed Infirmities, but by sending his Son, at the Head of his Clan.

For that Purpose, he directed the Master of Lovat his Son, who was then at, or but just come from, the University of St. Andrews, to get ready: He likewise directed the Inferior Heads of the Clan of Frasers to send in Lists of their Numbers and Names; with severe Threats on such as neglected, or gave him incorrect ones.

He ordered the Arms which he had in his House to be cleaned and mended, Bell-Tents and Camp-Colours to be made, and the Arms of the Frasers Family to be painted on them: He appointed his Son the Colonel, and directed his Tenants and Dependents to follow him, exhorted them to be true to the Pretender's Cause, and encouraged them with an Assurance of Success.

The Men were brought together, and twice rendezvoused; Officers were appointed, who were entertained in his House and at his Table; where he used to call the Pretender's Son by the Name of Royal Prince, and Prince Regent, and drank to his Success. He ordered the Pretender's Declaration to be read; and when the Person whom he had commanded to do it, declined it, he declared it was High-Treason to refuse it. He provided the Men with Arms, Meal, Provisions, and Money; sent for Ribbands to make white Cockades for them; and had Taylors and other Workmen in his House, to make them Caps, Bonnets, and Brogues. He went still further; and, as some of his Dependents were unwilling to engage, he ordered the Fry Cross, as it is called, to be sent about his Country to force them. This is the last and most extreme customary, though illegal and cruel Sort of Process, if I may so call it, that the Highland Chiefs use, to compel their Dependents to perform their arbitrary Commands; and is a general publick Denunciation of Plunder, Fire, and Sword, on all that do not obey; and several were actually forced into the Rebellion, by taking away their Plaids, Beds, and Cattle, and turning their Wives and Children out of Doors.

While he was using Threats to some, he tempted others, by the Promises of Rewards to their Wives, and Commissions to themselves.

Soon after the last Rendezvous of the Men, the Earl of Cromartie's Clan marched near the Prisoner's House, in their Way to the Pretender's Son: The Earl, his Son, and some of the Officers called at the House, where they were entertained as Friends: And the Prisoner told the Earl, that his Clan should follow soon after, laying the Blame at the same time upon his Son, the Master of Lovat, that they were not yet ready.

The Prisoner, however, did not think fit, as yet, either by himself, or his Son, actually to join the Pretender. The Rebels were now but beginning to march Southward; the King's Troops were endeavouring to intercept them; and till they met, the Event, he thought, might be doubtful. The Rebels, however, escaped them; and upon the 17th of September, got Possession of the Capital of that Part of the united Kingdom; and in a few Days afterwards, the unfortunate Battle of Preston-Pans seemed, in the Opinion of those deluded People, to turn the Scale in their Favour.

At that Time, one Hugh Fraser, who had about a Year before been Secretary to the Prisoner, was at Edinburgh, where William Fraser, a Relation of the Noble Prisoner's, happened then likewise to be: They had both heard of his Design of sending the Master of Lovat into the Rebellion, and both were desirous of preventing it: For which Purpose William Fraser thought of an Expedient for getting the Master of Lovat out of the Way, by sending him to Holland to compleat his Education; the Expence of which he was willing to be at. With this Message Hugh Fraser went to the Prisoner, and made him the Offer. My Lord Lovat at first seemed to yield to it; but at last told him, he was too far engaged; and was resolved, that the Master should go with his Clan to the Young Pretender.

The Prisoner had early Notice of the Battle of Preston-Pans, and Barriisdale, one of the Heads of the Rebellion, came to his House, and told him, he was going to raise more of the Highlanders for the Service. This Battle seems to have determined his Resolution; and when Hugh Fraser was to return to Edinburgh, he charged him with a verbal Message to the Pretender's Son, to inform him, That his Age and Infirmities would not permit him to travel; and therefore hoped he should be excused attending him in Person; but that he would send his Son, at the Head of his Clan, which would be a much greater Mark of his Loyalty. And the Message was delivered accordingly.

The Rebels continued at Edinburgh till the 31st of October, when they were beginning their March towards England; but the Prisoner's Son not having yet joined them, it was thought necessary, that John Murray of Broughton, the Young Pretender's Secretary, should write to the Prisoner to hasten his Men, and meet them at Carlisle. The Letter was wrote, and sent, and soon after delivered by Hugh Fraser, who at the same time represented to him the bad Condition of the Rebel Army, the State of his Majesty's Forces, and the Arrival of the Dutch Troops; which he did, in order to prevent the Prisoner's going on with his Engagements: But the Prisoner told him, it was now too late to go back; and forbid him to mention any thing to his Son against it. He besides told him, That he had put his Name down as a Captain-Lieutenant in his Son's Company, and ever after called him by that Title.

His Dilatoriness, however, had made some of the Pretender's Friends uneasy, and apprehensive that he was playing a double Game; and as they thought it would be of great Service to their Cause, if the noble Prisoner would make a public Avowal of his taking Part with them, applied to him for that Purpose; and told him that a great deal depended upon his throwing aside the Mask: Upon which he pulled off his Hat, and threw it on the Ground, saying, There it is then.

In the Month of November he sent a Letter to the Pretender's Son, to assure him of his Fidelity; and about the same time, two others to Lochiel, and Murray the Secretary, both of them to the same Effect.

Though the two first of these Letters appear by the Dates to have been wrote in November, and the latter probably at the same time, yet as the Rebels were then going into England, they don't seem to have been sent till their Return. The Prisoner, in the mean time, went on with raising his Men, till it was universally known in that Country, that the Master of Lovat was to go at the Head of them, and join the Rebels.

My Lord Loudon, and the President of the Session, were then at Inverness, collecting a Body of Men to oppose them; and were then superior to the Rebels in those Parts. The Prisoner well knew, that the Design of the Master of Lovat's joining the Rebels could not be unknown to them; and that they must suspect, at least, that he himself was at the Bottom of it. This made him afraid for his own Person, as soon as his Son began to march. These Apprehensions made him suspend the Time of their March, till he could be better informed of the Measures the Lord Loudon, and the President, would take in that Event, with respect to himself: And therefore, after he had once ordered them to march, and those of his Country of Firth had actually begun it, and proceeded as far as Strathannan, in the Way to Pertb, which the Rebels were then in Possession of, his Courage began to fail, and he sent Orders for their Return; which they immediately obeyed, excepting Twenty: And he thought it more prudent, before they finally marched, to send Hugh Fraser to Inverness, to sound the Inclinations of Lord Loudon, and the President; and to represent to them, That the intended March of his Son was against his Inclinations, and contrary to his Commands; that his Son was obstinate and disobedient; and that it would be unjust that a Father should suffer for an undutiful Child.

The Lord Loudon, and President, took it to be, as it really was, a Pretence only, and the Effect of that double Part which the Prisoner was acting, till he thought it worth his while to throw off the Mask in reality. They knew that a young Man of Nineteen Years old, that had lived at the University, and but just come home, could have no Power over his Father's Tenants and Dependents, but just so far as his Father gave it him; and that the Prisoner was himself the most absolute Superior in all the Highlands: They therefore gave Hugh Fraser to understand, there could be no Safety for the Father, while the Son was in open Rebellion.

Hugh Fraser returned with this Answer to the Prisoner, and delivered at the same time a Letter from the President to the same Effect. About the same time News came, that Lord John Drummond, with French Troops, was landed; which seems to have determined the Prisoner's Resolution: And he told Hugh Fraser, that the Threats of the Lord President were but a Bugbear; and immediately gave the Master of Lovat his final Orders to march; which he instantly obeyed, and marched accordingly: And Lord Loudon, and Lord President, found Means soon after to secure the Prisoner's Person, who was carried a Prisoner to Inverness; from whence, however, he soon after made his Escape.

The Master of Lovat was now got to Pertb, at the Head of the Clan of Frasers, whither Hugh Fraser attended him, as his Captain-Lieutenant; and upon Notice from the Pretender's Son, who was then come as far as Glasgow, in his Return from England, was sent thither by the Master of Lovat for a Supply of Arms. Hugh Fraser, on his Return from Glasgow, was charged by Murray, the Pretender's Secretary, with a Packet, in which were inclosed three Letters, one from the Pretender's Son to the Prisoner, referring to a second, inclosed from Murray, Lochiel, and Clunie, to him likewise; and a Third to the Master of Lovat. There were also three Commissions inclosed, two of which were dated at Rome, 23d December 1743, from the Pretender himself; one of which was, to make the Prisoner Lord Lieutenant of all the Countries North of Spey, and the other, to make him a Lieutenant-General.

The Rebels, as soon as they had collected all their Parties together, marched towards Inverness. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cumberland followed them, as fast as the Season of the Year and the Nature of the Country would permit, till he came up with them, and obtained that signal and compleat Victory, at the Battle of Culloden, upon the 16th of April 1746; when all the Noble Lord's Schemes of Grandeur and Power, and for a new Revolution, were put an End to at once.

I am now come, my Lords, to that last Period of Time, from the Battle of Culloden. The Prisoner was waiting, not very far off, the Event of that important Day. The Night after, the Pretender's Son came to Gortuleg, where the Prisoner then was, and had an Interview with him. The Noble Lord did not even then disavow his Cause, but received him as his Prince; excused his not joining him in Person; and after the tenderest Embraces, parted from him, as a faithful Subject to his Royal Master.

The Prisoner, as well as those who had been in open Arms, was now obliged to fly. He knew his Guilt was the same; and therefore deserved the same Treatment. The Rebel Army, and their Chiefs that escaped from the Battle, were now dispersed; but some Correspondence among them was kept up; and upon the 15th of May a Meeting was had, at a Place called Mortleg, where there were present the Prisoner, Lochiel, his Brother Dr. Cameron, Murray the Secretary, and several others. The End of the Meeting was, to consider what was proper to be done for their common Safety.

The noble Prisoner met them himself, not as an innocent Person, to advise them to lay down their Arms, confess their Guilt, and beg for Mercy; not as a neutral Person, if Neutrality, in the Cause of our King, Religion, Liberty, and this happy Establishment, can be attended with a less Degree of Guilt; but as one involved in the same common Crime and Calamity, as a Chief whose Age and Experience intitled him to the Lead; and he took it. He advised them to raise a sufficient Number of Men to defend themselves against the King's Troops, till they could make Terms for themselves; and, after computing what each of those present were capable of procuring, he proposed the Number of 3500, of which each was to raise a certain Proportion: And he himself proposed, That his Son should raise 400; and desired Lochiel, as he himself had not been in Arms, to answer for his Son. Lochiel did so; and all the Company agreed to the Proposal; and there having been then lately come from France, 35,000 Louidors, it was likewise agreed, That each should have Ten Days Pay for their Men out of it; which was immediately distributed; and the Share of the Master of Lovat was paid to the Prisoner's Servant. In Consequence of this, about 400 Men, in the Whole, only were raised. But the Rebels made no Stand afterwards.

The Master of Lovat had afterwards a Meeting with his Father at Kilbogie, when the Matter proposed to surrender to his Majesty; but the Prisoner dissuaded him from it, and reflected upon his Son as a Person of mean Spirit to think of so dishonourable an Action; and determined to fly himself, but with a Guard of about Twenty Soldiers, whom he took into Pay for his Defence. However, he was pursued and taken by a Party sent by the Duke, under the Command of Captain Ferguson, who treated him with great Humanity. During the Time of his being in his Custody, they had frequent Conversations together concerning the Rebellion. He was asked by the Captain, How he could act as he had done, after all the Favours he had received from the Government? He answered, It was not against the King, but the Ministry, he had acted; that they had taken away his Company: And when he was told, It was a bad Revenge to endanger his own Life and Fortune; his Answer was, Who could have thought but that they, meaning the Rebels, would have carried all before them? And that, if the Young Pretender would have taken his Advice, he might have laughed at the King's Forces; and none but a mad Fool would have fought that Day; that they might have gone into the Mountains, and lived on Butter and Cheese, and given the Duke Twelve Months Work: Besides, that they were in daily Expectation of Assistance and Money from France.

The Prisoner was afterwards brought before Sir Everard Falkener. He did not think then of denying his Treason: On the contrary, gave the same Account of the Motive to it, which he had done to Captain Ferguson; but with this Addition, That he resented the Loss of his Independent Company so much, that if Kouli Kan had come, he should have been for him. He talked much of the King's Mercy, of the former Services he had done to his Royal Family; and that he could still do greater than Twenty such old Heads as his were worth. However, concluded with the following Passage out of Virgil,

In utrumque paratus,
Seu versare dolos, seu certæ occumbere morti.

I have now, my Lords, gone through those Three Periods of Time, which I proposed; in which your Lordships have observed many Things of great Moment to the present Cause. The Managers have, with the greatest Care, endeavoured, amongst that great Extent of Evidence which has come to their Knowledge, to discover the Truth; and I have, with the utmost Fidelity, stated to your Lordships no Fact, but what I take to be so. I know, my Lords, how unjust it would be to endeavour to mislead your Lordships: I know how idle and fruitless it would be to attempt it.

I have likewise endeavoured to throw all the Facts together in such an Order that they may serve to give Light to each other, and ease your Lordships in the Attention you will give to the Evidence that will prove them.

I shall now, therefore, endeavour to give your Lordships a short View of that Evidence. It will be of Two Sorts, Parol, and written Evidence. The former will consist of a great Number of Witnesses, concurring in the Account of the secret Preparations towards the Rebellion, the Steps taken in it; and many, in charging the noble Lord as the principal Actor in both. What they say, will be supported, confirmed, and illustrated, by the written Evidence.

As to the First Sort, it will be tedious and unnecessary for me to give your Lordships a Detail of the Names and Characters of each Witness, or the particular Facts they speak to. It will be sufficient to say in general, that I don't know of one Circumstance that I have opened, which will not be fully proved by some or other of them; that some of the Witnesses were principal Actors in the Steps leading to the Rebellion, as well as in the prosecuting of it; that some have been long acquainted with the Prisoner, seen his Life and Conversation, and had, from his own Mouth, the Truth of many of the Facts that preceded their own Time; and have attended his Person, and been Eye and Ear-witnesses of many others; that others of the Witnesses have heard and received his Commands, felt the Weight of his Power, or been employed by him in divers of those Acts of Treason, wherewith he is charged; that all have had full Opportunities of knowing the Facts to which they will be called; and none have any Imputation on their Characters, but that of having some of them been Accomplices in the same Treason.

The written Evidence which the Managers have been able to collect and produce, consists of Letters from and to the noble Lord. The former are of the Hand-writing of Robert Fraser, one of his Secretaries, dictated and signed originally by himself, though the Signatures of some appear now torn off.

They were all written during the Rebellion, not at the Beginning, when the Prisoner, surprised by the sudden Appearance of the Son of him, whom he had formerly called his King, might be drawn into Expressions of Affection and Zeal beyond his real Meaning, but after the Rebellion was grown to a great height, and the noble Lord had full Time to look about him, to foresee, weigh and balance all Consequences to his Country, himself, and his Family; and, upon the Whole, had deliberately chosen the Side he took.

Of this Sort of Letters there will be many produced to your Lordships. One of them written and sent to the Pretender's Son himself, dated November 1745. The Signature, and some Parts of the Body of it, are torn off; but that will be supplied by a Copy under the same Secretary's Hand, taken by his Lordship's own Order.

Two others were written, about the same Time, to Mr. Murray the Pretender's Secretary, and to Lochiel.

Two of the rest were written to the Prisoner's own Son.

Your Lordships will excuse my mentioning a few Passages out of them, as a Specimen of the Whole. That to the Pretender's Son, which is itself, in the Articles, made a distinct Overt Act of Treason, is addressed to him by the Title of Most Royal Prince; and in the Conclusion calls him, his Royal Highness. It mentions the Prisoner's having been made a General Officer by the Pretender himself above Forty Years before; excuses his Incapacity of serving him in Person, by his Age and Infirmities; and his Resolution to give him the next Mark of his Zeal, by sending his eldest Son, the Bearer, to venture his Life in his Service, with a great Number of Gentlemen, and Heads of Families, of his Clan, and Eight hundred of his common People.

The Letter to Murray is to engage him to become his Son's Patron at the Young Pretender's Court. It boasts of the same Merit in sending his Son and Clan, and sets out his own long Services to the Pretender in the strongest Light.

The Letter to Lochiel complains greatly of the Treachery, as he calls it, of an Honourable Person, in engaging on his Majesty's Side, and of the Mischief his Conduct had done to the Cause; and magnifies his own Clan and Services to the Pretender.

His Letters to his Son open the Secrets of his Heart; acquaint him with the Association he had formerly signed to venture his Life and Fortune to restore the Pretender; informs him of the promised Assistance of France, the Commission from the Pretender to make him General of the Highlands, the more favourite Patent for a Dukedom; and sets them all in a Light that would render him, as he says, a Monster of Ingratitude, if he was not attached to the Pretender more than ever.

The rest of his Letters are written in the same Strain, and founded upon the same Principles of Treason and Rebellion.

The Letters written to the Prisoner are, one from the Pretender's Son himself, referring to another written to him by Lochiel, Murray and Clunie; and one from the Prisoner's own Son.

The two former were written by way of Acknowledgment for his Services, and to engage him in an open personal Appearance on that Side, as the best Means to secure the Success of their Cause; and will shew the Pretender's Son's Employment of those Persons, with whom the Prisoner treasonably corresponded.

The Son's Letter is Part of a Correspondence with the Father upon the Subject of the Rebellion, and was the Occasion of the Letters before-mentioned to have been written by him.

My Lords, I have now done with that general View of the Evidence, which I proposed to give your Lordships. I would not anticipate what the noble Lord may say by way of Defence; but as the Evidence, on the Part of the Commons, will necessarily mention One Sort of Defence, which the Prisoner formerly made use of, when he apprehended his Person in immediate Danger from the President and Lord London, on account of the *Fraser*s rising to join the Pretender;

I can't help just taking notice of it here. His Pretence to them was, That his Clan was raised by his Son alone, without his Direction, and against his Command; and that the whole Conduct of the Clan of Fraser was an Act of Disobedience in his Son to him, as well as of Treason to his Majesty; and that it would be hard, that a peaceable Father should be answerable for the Guilt of his Son.

If this should be any Part of the noble Lord's present Defence, I shall obviate it only so far, as to observe to your Lordships, That it is as false as it is unnatural, and will appear to be so, not only by the Parol Evidence we shall produce, but by every one almost of the Prisoner's own Letters, in which he takes to himself the whole Merit of his Son's Services, and values himself to the Young Pretender, according to the Strength and Zeal of his Clan.

What remains, my Lords, is only to make a few Observations, tending to shew, how the Facts and the Evidence I have been stating will maintain the particular Charges, which the Commons have undertaken to make good: For which Purpose it will be necessary very shortly to point out the precise Nature of the Charge itself.

It contains Three Species of Treason; Compassing the Death of his Majesty:—Levying War against him within the Realm:—And Corresponding with the Pretender's Son, and his Agents.

As to the First of these: The Wisdom of this Constitution, foreseeing that the general Happiness must be most intimately connected with the Safety of that Royal Person, and providing against the remotest Dangers to which it may be exposed, has made the very Imagination of the Heart, when directed to its Destruction, an Act of Treason: But as the Intent, by itself alone, can be known to none but the great Searcher of Hearts, it has, with equal Prudence and Justice, provided, that this Imagination must be discovered by some external Act, which, in the ordinary Language of the Law, is called an Overt Act.

The Commons have pursued, in their Impeachment, the Law in both respects. They have charged the Prisoner with that traitorous Imagination; and they have stated many Facts that manifest it, such as, by the established Rules of Law, have, in all Times, been held sufficient.

The Overt Acts, particularly charged, are, His entering into an Association to raise a War and Rebellion against his Majesty, by the Assistance of French Troops; his Corresponding with a Pretender to his Majesty's Crown; His obtaining two Commissions from the Pretender, one to be General of the Highlands, and the other a Lieutenant-General of his Forces; his sending a treasonable Letter to the Pretender's Son, with Expressions and Assurances of that Fidelity and Loyalty to his Father, which was due to his Majesty alone; his sending many other treasonable Letters to his Fellow-Subjects, to engage and persuade them to join and continue in that Rebellion, which was then begun and raged in the Northern Parts of this Kingdom; his assisting the Pretender's Son with Arms, and sending his own Son, with his Clan, into the Service of the Pretender.

Your Lordships will be beforehand with me, in distributing the various Matter I have before opened, to these several Heads: I would only observe, that, besides the Evidence arising from the Witnesses, which will appear in Person at your Lordships Bar, the Prisoner's own Letters are not only special Overt Acts of Treason themselves, but will be the clearest Proof of the most material of the others.

When the Prisoner, in the Fulness of his Heart, opens himself to a Son, whose Parts and Proficiency were his own Pride, upon a Subject the most of all interesting to both, to the future as well as present Happiness of his Family, its Honours and Estate, your Lordships can have no possible Doubt of the Reality of that Association, those Honours, those Trusts, and that Attachment to the Pretender, on which he builds and communicates the Resolution he had then taken.

When he writes to the Pretender's Son himself, then in the Capital of one Part of the United Kingdom, at the Head of an Army of Rebels, acting the Part of Royalty, and subduing his Majesty's faithful Subjects, to boast of his former, and promising him future Loyalty, your Lordships must see, in the clearest Manner, what Side he had chosen, and whose Life and Throne he was striking at.

As to the Treason of levying War, the Prisoner seems to have thought, that nothing but an open personal Appearance in Arms would bring him within that Sort of Guilt; and, in Fact, whether out of greater Caution on that account, or from peculiar Views of Management with the Pretender, or more probably from both, he seems studiously to have avoided that particular precise Mark of Treason. But the Law, which, in Words, though not in Punishment, distinguishes, in some Sorts of Crimes, between Principals and Accessories, makes no such Distinction in this of the highest Nature; they are both, in Treason, equally criminal; and the various Acts of Encouragement, Persuasion, and Assistance, given and done by him, to those who were personally engaged, do, in the Eye of the Law, as indeed they do in Reason, make their Guilt his own.

The last Species of Treason charged, is founded on the Breach of a late Act, made in the 17th Year of his Majesty, on occasion of the Invasion attempted from Dunkirk in that Year, in Favour of the Pretender, and accompanied by his eldest Son: This Act extends the Treason made by the Act of the 13th of King William, of corresponding with the Pretender the Father, and his Agents; to a Correspondence with his Sons, and their Agents.

The Proof of this Treason will be manifest to your Lordships, both from the written and parol Evidence. The same Letters, which afford such conclusive Proof of the other Treasons, are direct and immediate Proofs of this; besides the personal Interview between the Prisoner and the Pretender's Son, and the many more personal Correspondencies with the Pretender's Servants and Officers.

I have now, my Lords, finished all that I proposed to lay before your Lordships. The great Variety of Matter must be my Excuse for the Length of it.

I am not under any Apprehension, that the Evidence will be insufficient to convince your Lordships of the Justice of the Prosecution. I am more afraid, lest your Lordships, and the World, should inquire, Why all this Load of Evidence? when one of those many Facts, fully established, would be enough to convict the noble Lord of this highest of Crimes, and draw down upon him, from your Lordships, that heaviest of Sentences, which is the Consequence of it. If that Question should be asked, the Answer I would give to it should be shortly this:

The Managers did not think it consistent with their Duty to the Commons of Great Britain, whose Commands they are to execute; that Regard they owe to your Lordships, at whose Bar they are to execute those Commands; nor to the People of Great Britain, whom the Commons represent, and who are greatly interested in the Event of this Impeachment; to suppress any Part of that Evidence, extensive as it is, which came to their Knowledge, material to the Prisoner's Cause.

The Commons have thought this a Matter worthy their own Interposition, and therefore have taken it into their own Hands, not to deprive the noble Lord of any legal Defence: The Candour of the Commons, and your Lordships Justice, will secure him against any Danger of that kind; not because they wanted that Evidence, which would be sufficient in the ordinary Courts of Justice; for far would it be from them to throw their Weight into the Scale of Evidence; but because of the wide extensive Part the Prisoner has had in this great Scene of Treason, as its Contriver, Promoter, and Finisher, so far as Providence suffered it to go.

As to your Lordships, the Managers did not think it becoming them to prejudge your Opinion, or deprive your Lordships of that full Day-light in which the Crimes of this Lord appeared to them, and of that greatest of all Satisfaction, which every Judge would wish to have, in every Cause, of being certainly right in the Sentence he is to pronounce.

As to the People in general, it is of no small Moment, that they should be enabled to behold, in one View, the pernicious Schemes that have, for many Years, been concerting between Rome, France, and unnatural Traitors at Home, that they might see a Rebellion, which they have so lately and severely felt, traced, in some measure, to its Source; and be fully convinced, that, whilst they are themselves enjoying, at their Ease, and too often asleep, their Religion, their Liberties, and their Properties, under the Protection of the best of Princes, and the Influence of the wisest Constitution, they have Enemies both abroad, and within their own native Country, who are constantly awake for the Subversion of them all; and learn this certain Truth, which should be imprinted, in everlasting Characters, on the Mind of every Briton; That there is no effectual Security against those determined and perpetual Enemies, but in a vigilant and firm Union of honest Men; and be persuaded, that every Attempt to prevent, weaken, or dissolve such an Union, is little less than Treason in its Beginning, and, if it takes Effect, must end in a real successful one, the worst that can happen to this Land of Liberty, the total Destruction of this Royal Family, and of this happy Establishment.

Sir JOHN STRANGE.

My Lords,

THE Managers do not think it necessary to take up any more of your Lordships Time, by way of general Opening of this Case; but propose to go directly to their Evidence: And the first Witness we desire may be called; is Robert Chevis, of Murtoun, Esq. a near Neighbour of the impeached Lord, but one at a very great Distance from his Way of Thinking or Acting.

Lord Levat. My Lords, I have not had the Use of my Limbs these Three Years: I cannot see, I cannot hear; and I beg, if your Lordships have a mind I should have any Chance for my Life, that you will allow either my Counsel or Solicitors to examine my Witnesses, and to cross-examine those produced on behalf of the Crown, and to take Notes.

Lord High Steward. What your Lordship says, if I understand you right; is, that, by reason of your Age and Infirmities, you cannot examine the Witnesses yourself; but pray, that either your Counsel or Solicitors might have Liberty to cross-examine the Witnesses against you, and to examine your own Witnesses. It is my Duty to acquaint your Lordship with what is the known and clear Law in these Cases; and I did acquaint your Lordship with it, in what I mentioned to you at first, that, by the Order of this House, you had Counsel and Solicitors assigned you, who had Liberty to assist you in all Matters of Law that might arise in the Course of your Trial; but that, by the known Rules of Law in Proceedings of this Kind, they have not Liberty to assist you in Matters of Fact, or in the Examination of Witnesses. As to taking Notes, I have observed, that one of your Solicitors has, during the Time that the Managers for the House of Commons have been speaking, taken Notes; and that has been allowed.

Lord Levat. My Lords, It is impossible for me then to make any Defence, by reason of my Infirmities. I do not see; I do not hear; I came up to your Lordships Bar at the Hazard of my Life; I fainted away several times, I got up so early; I was up by Four o'Clock this Morning; and I am so weak, that, if I am deprived of the Assistance I ask for, your Lordships may do as you please; and it is impossible for me to make any Defence at all, if you do not allow my Counsel or Solicitors to examine the Witnesses. I will therefore submit myself to the Lords.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, You have heard what has been asked by my Lord Levat, with his Reasons for it: Have you any thing to offer on that Head?

Sir W. Yonge. My Lords, It has been determined by your Lordships, That the Prisoner at the Bar cannot, in this Case, be allowed Counsel to assist him, except in Matters of Law: And, as that is known to be Part of the Law of the Land, whatever Inclination the Managers may have to indulge the noble Lord at the Bar, it is not in our Power to depart from the Law of the Land. We therefore hope your Lordships will excuse us in not consenting to what is contrary to the Law of the Land. We cannot do any thing of this kind without repairing to our own House.

The Witnesses being produced.

Lord Levat. My Lords, I object to this Witness being examined, because he is a Tenant of mine; and I am informed, that my Tenant cannot be Evidence against me.

L. H. S. My Lord Levat, There is no Rule of Law for that in England.

Lord Levat. My Lords, I am told, that there is an Act of Parliament, that no Vassal, Tacksmen, or Tenant, shall be a Witness against his Lord.

L. H. S. Your Lordship will please to name that Act of Parliament.

Lord Levat. My Lord, I am told it is in the First Year of King George the First, Cap. 19.

Then the Clerk, by Direction of the Lord High Steward, read the Title of the Act of Parliament passed in the First Year of his late Majesty King George the First, intituled,

"An Act for Encouraging all Superiors, Vassals, Landlords, and Tenants, in Scotland, who do and shall continue in their Duty and Loyalty to his Majesty King George; and for Discouraging all Superiors, Vassals, and Landlords, and Tenants, there, who have been, or shall be, guilty of rebellious Practices against his said Majesty; and for making void all fraudulent Entails, Tailzies, and Conveyances, made there, for barring or excluding the Effects of Forfeitures, that may have been, or shall be, incurred there on any such Account; as also for calling any suspected Person or Persons, whose Estates or principal Residence are in Scotland, to appear at Edinburgh, or where it shall be judged expedient, to find Bail for their good Behaviour, and for the better disarming disaffected Persons in Scotland."

And also the First Section, whereby it is Enacted,

"That if any of his Majesty's Subjects of Great Britain, having Lands or Tenements in Scotland in Property or Superiority, has been, or shall be, guilty of High Treason, by holding, entertaining, or keeping any Intelligence or Correspondence in Person, or by Letters, Messages, or otherwise, with the said Pretender, or with any Person or Persons employed by him, knowing such Person to be so employed, or shall, by Bill of Exchange, or otherwise, remit or pay any Sum or Sums of Money for the Use or Service of the said Pretender, knowing such Money to be for such Use or Service; and that whether the said Facts or Things be done within or without this Realm, or has been, or shall be, adherent to the said Pretender in this Realm, giving him Aid or Comfort in this Realm, or elsewhere; every such Offender, who shall be thereof duly convicted and attainted, shall be liable to the Pains, Penalties, and Forfeitures for High Treason. All and every Vassal and Vassals in Scotland, who shall continue peaceable, and in dutiful Allegiance to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, holding Lands or Tenements immediately of the Crown, shall be vested and seized, and are hereby Enacted and Ordained, to hold the said Lands or Tenements of his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, in Fee and Heritage, for ever, by such Manner of Holding, as any such Offender held such Lands or

Tenements

" Tenements of the Crown at the Time of the Attainder of such Offender: And where Lands or Tenements, belonging to any such peaceable and dutiful Subjects to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, lie within any Regality or Constabulary in Scotland, the same shall be, and they are hereby, dissolved from every such Regality or Constabulary for ever: And, in like manner, all and every Tenant and Tenants in Scotland, who shall continue peaceable, and in dutiful Allegiance to his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors aforesaid, bricking and occupying any Lands, Milns, Mines, Woods, Fishing, or Tenements, as Tenant or Tenants, Tacksmen or Tacksmen, from and under any such Offender, shall, and they are hereby ordained to bruck and occupy all and every such Lands, Mines, Milns, Woods, Fishings, and Tenements, for the Space of Two Years, or Crops, to be accounted from and after such Attainder, freely, without Payment of any Rent, Duty, or Service, for the said Two Years or Crops: And the Court of Exchequer in Scotland is hereby authorized and required, on Production of any such Attainder, to revise, compound, and pass Signatures, and that without paying any Composition, in favours of every such Vassal or Vassals, and his, her, or their Heir or Heirs, of the said Lands and Tenements above-mentioned respectively to be holden of his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, in Fee and Heretage, for ever, and by such Holdings as is above-mentioned, with Clauses of Nova Damus, and (where such Lands or Tenements hold Ward or Few cum Maritagio, or with Clauses irritant) with Change of Holdings from Waird to Taxed-Waird, according to the Rules now observed in the Court of Exchequer in Scotland, dispensing with Recognition and Clauses irritant in favours of the Crown in Time coming, in the most ample and best Form, to the End that Chartours and Infeftments may be thereupon duly exped."

And also the Ninth Section; whereby it is

" Provided always, and be it Enacted, by the Authority aforesaid, That no Person or Persons, who may reap, or have any Benefit or Advantage by the Attainder, Conviction, or Forfeiture, of any Person or Persons, by virtue of this Act, shall be capable of being a Witness or Witnesses, against any Person or Persons, by whose Attainder, Conviction, or Forfeiture, any Benefit shall or may accrue to such Witness or Witnesses."

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, are those the Clauses your Lordship means? or will you have any other Clause read?

Lord Lovat. My Lord, That is what I mean.

L. H. S. What your Lordship insists upon seems to me to be, That, by this Act of Parliament, as you understand it, a Person who is a Tenant or Tacksmen to any Lord, if his Lord is convicted of Rebellion, and such Tenant remains peaceable, the Tenant is discharged from Two Years Rent of the Lands held by him. And by the Ninth Section, No Person can be a Witness, who may reap or have any Benefit by the Attainder of the Person he is to be a Witness against. I am not now going to give any Opinion upon that Section, neither is it proper that I should; but it is necessary for me to inform your Lordship, that it is incumbent upon you to lay a Foundation of Fact, to shew, that the Person produced as a Witness is a Tenant or Tacksmen under your Lordship, within the Description of this Act of Parliament: And your Lordship may either prove this Fact, by calling Witnesses of your own, for that Purpose; or by putting the Question to the Person now produced by the Managers. Has your Lordship any Witness to prove this Fact; or will you examine the Gentleman produced upon a Voire dire?

Lord Lovat. I will ask it of this Gentleman.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, Have you any Objection to my Lord Lovat's asking the Question of this Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We have no Objection to having that Question asked of the Witness.

L. H. S. As the Question is to the Competency of the Witness, and he is to be examined touching that, he is not now to be sworn as a Witness in Chief; but the Oath is to be administered upon a Voire dire.

Then the Witness was sworn by the following Oath:

You shall true Answer make to all such Questions as shall be demanded of you; and you shall speak the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.
So help you GOD.

L. H. S. My Lords, As my Lord Lovat's Voice is low, whatever Questions his Lordship has to ask of this Gentleman, your Lordships, I presume, will (as you did upon a former Occasion) let my Lord Lovat propose the Question, and let the Clerk repeat it to your Lordships, and to the Witness. My Lord Lovat, You will now propose the Question, and the Clerk will repeat it to my Lords, and the Witness.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then one of the Clerks was sworn to make true Report of what should be said by the Prisoner.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I beg this Witness may be asked, Whether he holds any Lands of me, or within my Regality, either by Tack, Lease, or otherwise?

Chevis. I hold my Lands of the Crown: I never had a Tack of Land of my Lord Lovat.

L. H. S. Do you hold any Lands, either by Vassalage, Lease, or Tack, from my Lord Lovat?

Chevis. I never had a Tack of Land from my Lord Lovat.

L. H. S. You are to answer to the Whole of the Question, Whether you hold any Land, either by Vassalage, Lease, or Tack, of my Lord Lovat?

Chevis. I never had a Lease from my Lord Lovat: I was in Possession of a Farm of his there, which, by his own Consent, was given to other People; but I never had a Lease from him.

L. H. S. Did you hold that Land of my Lord Lovat?

Chevis. The Farm belonged to my Lord Lovat.

L. H. S. How did you hold it of him; by Tack, or Lease, or how?

Chevis. It was ceded to me by other People, who were in Possession before me.

L. H. S. Did you hold it by Lease, or Tack, or in what Manner?

Chevis. I never had any Lease, or Tack, from the Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you now hold any Lands from my Lord Lovat?

Chevis. No, I hold none of him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you held any Lands of him since the Beginning of the Rebellion?

Chevis. I have held none since the Beginning of the Rebellion; nor been in Possession of a Fur of Land under him.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I should be glad to know of this Witness, whether he holds any Lands within the Regality of Lovat.

Chevis. No, I hold no Lands of my Lord Lovat there: I had that small Farm I before mentioned.

Lord Cholmondeley. My Lords, The Question put to the Witness, at first, was, Whether he held any Lands of my Lord Lovat, either as Vassal, Tenant, or Tacksmen, according to the Description mentioned in the Act of Parliament? And if he does, then he comes within the Description there mentioned. He has told your Lordships, That he does not hold any Lands, by Tack or Lease, from my Lord Lovat. My Lords, I pray that the Question may be now asked him, Whether he holds any Lands of my Lord Lovat, either by Vassalage, Tack, or Lease?

L. H. S. Sir, You hear the Question proposed by the noble Lord. Do you hold any Lands under my Lord Lovat, as Vassal?—Chevis. No.

L. H. S. Do you hold any Lands under my Lord Lovat, as Tenant?

Chevis. No.

L. H. S. Do you hold any Lands under my Lord Lovat, as Tacksmen?

Chevis. No.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, I desire this Witness may be asked, Whether he apprehends he can receive any Benefit under this Act of Parliament, by my Lord Lovat's being convicted of High-Treason?

L. H. S. Sir, You hear the Question asked by the noble Lord.

Chevis. I never heard the Act of Parliament mentioned till this Day: I know of no Benefit I am to receive under it.

L. H. S. Do you know of any Benefit that you are to receive; or do you apprehend, that you can receive any Benefit from the Conviction of my Lord Lovat?—Chevis. No.

L. H. S. Do you hold any Lands at all within the Regality of Lovat?

Chevis. No.

Proclamation for Silence.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I beg this Witness may be asked, Whether he owes me any Money?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, on Behalf of the Commons, we do object to that as an improper Question, because I must submit it to your Lordships, that no Question is proper to be asked, but what tends to the Discovery of something material to the Point in Controversy. Now, my Lords, The Question proposed to be asked, be it answered one Way or the other, cannot tend to prove any thing material to the present Purpose.

Lord Lovat interrupting,

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, You are not to interrupt the Gentlemen of the House of Commons: You shall be fully heard in your Turn.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I say your Lordships will not permit a Question to be asked, which is totally immaterial to the present Purpose: And, I apprehend, this Question is totally immaterial, because the Questions now to be put to the Witness are only for the Purpose of disqualifying him to be an Evidence, which this Question does not in the least relate to; and be it answered the one Way or the other, it cannot tend to disqualify the Witness: Whether it be answered Yea or No, it cannot tend to disqualify the Witness.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I beg, that the Witness may be asked, Whether he receives any Rents, or other Profits, from those Lands lying within the Regality of Lovat?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, If this amounts to a Question, to bring the Witness under the Description of the Act of Parliament, it is a Question that has been already put by your Lordships; and answered particularly and precisely. If the Question tends to any other Matter, I cannot conceive to what Purpose it is to be asked. But, my Lords, it is incumbent on the noble Lord at your Bar, to mention what he intends to shew by the Question he asks.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, the Witness on this Examination hath sworn, That he holds no Lands or Tenements under your Lordship, either as Vassal, Tenant, or Tacksmen; and your Lordship would now have him asked, Whether he receives any Rents, or other Profits, from any Lands lying within the Regality of Lovat? As what the Witness has already sworn does fully answer all the Disqualifications mentioned in the Act of Parliament which your Lordship has quoted, what do you intend by the present Question?

No Answer being made by the Prisoner, Robert Chevis, of Murtoun, was sworn in Chief.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I desire this Witness may inform your Lordships, How long he has been acquainted with the noble Lord at the Bar.—Chevis. From about the Year 1733.

Sir John Strange. Whether he has been acquainted with him ever since the Year 1733?—Chevis. Ever since.

Sir John Strange. Do you live near the noble Lord at the Bar?

Chevis. I live within Two Miles of him.

Sir John Strange. Whether he has not been often in his Company since the Year 1733?

Chevis. A great many times.

Sir John Strange. Whether he went to his House frequently?

Chevis. Yes.

Sir John Strange. Whether he has had any Conversation, and what Conversation, with him, in relation to publick Affairs?

Lord High Steward to the Witness (perceiving him to have a Paper in his Hand),

L. H. S. What Paper is that in your Hand?

Chevis. Notes of my own.

L. H. S. Are they of your own Hand-writing?—Chevis. Yes.

L. H. S. To what Purpose did you take them?

Chevis. Only to refresh my Memory.

L. H. S.

L. H. S. Was that the only Reason you took them for?

Chevis. The only Reason.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I beg this Witness may be asked, What was the general Turn of the Conversation of the noble Lord at the Bar?

Chevis. The general Turn of his Conversation was in Favour of the Pretender, and his Family.

Sir John Strange. Whether the Witness speaks of the Conversation so far back as the Year 1733?—Chevis. Yes.

Sir John Strange. Whether the Witness had ever any Conversation with the noble Lord at the Bar, in relation to the Year 1719?

Chevis. I had.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I beg he will give an Account, What the noble Lord at the Bar has said to him, in relation to what was going to be done in the Year 1719?

Chevis. My Lord Lovat told me of a Letter he had written to the late Lord Seaforth; and that he had sent it by his own Lieutenant to Lord Seaforth, to encourage and desire him to come down with his Men; and that he, Lord Lovat, would join him with all his, in favour of the Pretender.

Notice being taken by some Lords, at the upper End of the Court, that they could not well hear the Witness, the Lord High Steward directed the Clerk to repeat the Answers of the Witness as he delivered them: Which was done accordingly.

Sir John Strange. Whether the noble Lord at the Bar acquainted him with his having sent such a Letter?

Chevis. He told me he had sent such a Letter by his Lieutenant.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I beg he may be asked, whether he ever knew, from the noble Lord at the Bar, that That Letter was delivered, or not?

Chevis. Lord Lovat told me, that the Letter was delivered.

Sir John Strange. To whom did he say the Letter was delivered?

Chevis. He said the Letter was first shewn to Chisholm of Knockford; and after that it was delivered to my Lord Seaforth.

Sir John Strange. I shall be glad to know, whether my Lord Lovat said any thing to the Witness, in relation to any Affidavit that had been made concerning that Letter?

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, The Transaction now inquired of happened in the Reign of his late Majesty; and there is no Charge, in the Articles of Impeachment, of any High-Treason committed against his late Majesty: You will therefore open to my Lords, how you would apply the Evidence which you are now examining to.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, Your Lordships will please to observe, that, in the Answer of the noble Lord at the Bar, he does particularly mention his great Duty and Affection for his late Majesty, and his Behaviour from time to time, in that respect; and we are now introducing this particular Evidence, in regard to that Matter, by first taking it up so long ago as the Year 1719, to shew what was then the Disposition, Behaviour, and Conduct, of the noble Lord at the Bar.

My Lords, We say, that, in the Year 1719, there was that Letter written, with a View to assist the Spanish Invasion then intended, in favour of the Pretender: That that Letter was sent; but before it was delivered to the Person to whom it was addressed, there was a Communication of it, in the manner the Witness hath mentioned; and that Person gave proper Notice, and made Affidavit of it, which was sent up to the Government, giving an Account of it: And, by the great Dexterity of the Prisoner at the Bar, he got the Letter back again.

My Lords, The Use we make of this is to shew, that this is no new Matter, arising from the present Rebellion: But, by deducing it from the Year 1719, we shall make the noble Lord's Conduct to be one continued Act of Treason, consistent with the Article of the Charge.

L. H. S. Then I apprehend you apply this Piece of Evidence, to encounter and contradict the Allegation in my Lord Lovat's Answer, which you have mentioned.

Then the Lord High Steward repeated to the House that Allegation, out of the Prisoner's Answer.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, That is what we propose to shew by this Evidence. The Witness has gone so far as to acquaint your Lordships, that That Letter, before it was delivered to the Person to whom it was addressed, was shewn to one Chisholm of Knockford. My Lords, I desire he may inform your Lordships, what the noble Lord at the Bar said was done, in consequence of that Communication.

Chevis. Chisholm made Affidavit of it, which was sent up to Court.

Sir John Strange. Did Lord Lovat acquaint you whether he heard of such Affidavit being transmitted?—Chevis. He did.

Sir John Strange. Did he tell you what he did upon that Occasion?

Chevis. That he went immediately to Court, and got himself introduced there. And Lady Seaforth being then in London, she applied to him to do something in favour of her Son; which he then absolutely refused, till her Son should return him that Letter; which being done, he shewed it to a certain Friend, who read the Letter, and who told him, That there was enough to condemn Thirty Lords there; and threw it into the Fire.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, I desire he will give an Account whether the noble Lord at the Bar said any thing at that Time, whether he had signed and sealed the Letter.

Chevis. He said he had not signed it; and therefore they could not fix him with it.

Sir John Strange. I desire this Witness may inform your Lordships, whether, when the noble Lord at the Bar told him, that he had not signed it, he said any thing further to him upon that Occasion, than that he had not signed it?

Chevis. He said, That he could not be fixed with it; and that That was the Way he intended to get off, by its not being signed.

Sir John Strange. I desire you will please to inform their Lordships, whether you remember the Time when Roy Stuart broke out of Inverness Gaol?

Chevis. Yes; it was in 1736.

VOL. IX.

Sir John Strange. Who was Sheriff at that Time?

Chevis. My Lord Lovat.

Sir John Strange. After Roy Stuart had escaped out of Inverness Gaol, where did he go to live? By whom was he entertained?

Chevis. He came to my Lord Lovat's House, and was entertained there.

Sir John Strange. How long was he entertained there?

Chevis. Much about Six Weeks, to the best of my Remembrance.

Sir John Strange. Was you often at my Lord Lovat's during these Six Weeks?—Chevis. Frequently.

Sir John Strange. Was you ever there when Lord Lovat and Roy Stuart were together?—Chevis. Very often.

Sir John Strange. Do you remember whether Roy Stuart was going abroad about that Time?

Chevis. He was going abroad then; and the Ship was prepared for him before he left Lord Lovat's House; and he went in my Lord Lovat's Chaise or Chariot.

Sir John Strange. I desire you will inform their Lordships, whether any Message was sent from the noble Lord at the Bar by Roy Stuart, and to whom?

Chevis. I heard the noble Lord at the Bar charge him with a Message to the Pretender.

Sir John Strange. What do you mean by charging him with a Message?

Chevis. To assure the Pretender, whom he called his King, of his Fidelity; and that he was determined to live and die in that Cause.

Sir John Strange. I beg that he may inform your Lordships, whether there was any Thing said at that Time in relation to any Commission or Patent.

Chevis. He charged him to expedite his sending his Commission of Lieutenant-General of the Highlands, and his Patent of a Duke.

Sir John Strange. I beg he may inform your Lordships, whether, at any other Time or Times, he heard the noble Lord at the Bar say any thing whether he had, or had not, succeeded in what he had sent for?

Chevis. About 1742, he owned to me, That he got his Commission and Patent to be a Duke.

Sir John Strange. What Commission did he tell you he had got?

Chevis. A Commission of Lieutenant-General of the Highland Clans.

Sir John Strange. From whom did he say he had received this Commission, and Patent to be a Duke?

Chevis. From his lawful Sovereign King James the Eighth.

Sir John Strange. Pray recollect yourself. Did he make use of that Expression which you have now repeated, that he had it from his lawful Sovereign King James the Eighth? Are you certain he did?

Chevis. Yes.

Sir John Strange. Did he tell you any thing what he would do, now he was invested with that Command, and had got such a Commission and Patent?

Chevis. He said, That he was in a Condition thereby to humble his Neighbours.

Sir John Strange. Have you at any other Time heard him speak of this Patent, or of this Commission?—Chevis. Several Times.

Sir John Strange. Is it often that you have heard him?

Chevis. Often.—He has told me, That he had a Right to it by his Services for that Family; and that he had the like Commission from the Pretender's Father from St. Germain's.

Sir John Strange. I desire the Witness may inform your Lordships, whether, during the Time that the noble Lord at the Bar and Roy Stuart were together, they diverted themselves with composing any thing, and what.

Chevis. They did, in composing Burlesque Verses, that, when young Charles came over, there would be Blood and Blows.

Sir John Strange. You have not mentioned it in a poetical Manner: Pray, can you recollect the Lines?

Chevis. When young Charley does come o'er,

There will be Blows and Blood good Store.

Sir John Strange. I beg that you will acquaint their Lordships, whether this Verse, that you mention, is a Translation, or whether this is the original Language in which it was composed?

Chevis. It was framed in Erse; and this is the Substance of one Verse.

Sir John Strange. I beg this Witness may inform your Lordships, whether he has at any Time heard the Prisoner say any thing in relation to any Association?

Chevis. I have.

Sir John Strange. Please to tell the Time you heard this Discourse, and what the noble Lord at the Bar said.

Chevis. It was between 1737 and 1740.

Sir John Strange. What did you hear the noble Lord at the Bar say then?

Chevis. That there was an Association of the Highland Clans in favour of the Pretender, whom he called his lawful Sovereign King James the Eighth; and that he had entered into that Association, and would live and die in that Cause.

Sir John Strange. I beg he may be asked, whether, at the Time he is speaking of, one Drummond of Bochaldie was at Lord Lovat's House.

Chevis. Drummond of Bochaldie was there much about this Time; and used to drink Success to the Association?

Sir John Strange. Do you remember Bochaldie's being at Castle-Downey, and staying there any Time?

Lord High Steward. What Place is Castle-Downey?

Chevis. It is Lord Lovat's Place of Residence.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, It is sometimes called Beaufort, and sometimes Castle-Downey. To whom does it belong?

Chevis. To my Lord Lovat.

Sir John Strange. Do you know whether you heard my Lord Lovat say any thing to Bochaldie at that Time?

Chevis. He mentioned an Invasion of Britain in favour of the Pretender.

Sir John Strange. What Year are you now speaking of?

Chevis. The Year 1739.

Sir John Strange. You say, That Drummond was then at Lord Lovat's, staid there a considerable Time, and heard my Lord Lovat propose an Invasion of Britain in favour of the Pretender?

4 N

Chevis.

Chevis. I did.
Sir John Strange. Did you hear him propose it? And did you hear of any-body else he proposed it to?

Chevis. I have heard the like was proposed to Cameron of Lochiel, and others.

Sir John Strange. From whom have you heard it?
Chevis. From my Lord Lovat himself.

Sir John Strange. Do you remember any Thing to have happened at Lord Lovat's about the Time of Ostend's being taken by the French?

Chevis. I was not there then; but he wrote a Letter to me, and told me, That the whole Coast of Flanders was now clear.

Sir John Strange. Did you hear my Lord Lovat say any thing in relation to the Coast of Flanders upon Ostend's being taken?

Chevis. I have heard him say as much as he wrote in that Letter.
Sir John Strange. What have you heard him say?

Chevis. That the Coast of Flanders was then cleared; and that the French would be over in one Night's Time, and carry all before them.

Sir John Strange. I should be glad you would inform their Lordships, whether, at any Time in the Year 1745, Lord John Drummond was at Castle-Downey, or not?

Chevis. To the best of my Memory, he was about that Time at Castle-Downey.

Sir John Strange. I should be glad you would inform their Lordships about what Time of the Year this was, whether it was Summer, or Winter?

Chevis. I think it was Summer; to the best of my Memory, between Summer and Harvest.

Sir John Strange. I beg you will inform their Lordships, whether at any Time, and in what Month, in the Year 1745, the Master of Lovat came to my Lord's House; or whether you saw him at my Lord's in 1745?

Chevis. I saw him there several Times in 1745.

Sir John Strange. Did you see him there when any Paper or Manifesto was produced?

Chevis. I saw him there when the Manifesto was produced.
Sir John Strange. At what Time was this?

Chevis. It was in September 1745. The Manifesto came in a Packet inclosed to Lord Lovat.

Sir John Strange. What Manifesto was it?
Chevis. The Pretender's Manifesto and Declaration, which he ordered the Master immediately to read.

Sir John Strange. Was it read accordingly by the Master of Lovat?

Chevis. It was accordingly read.
Sir John Strange. What did Lord Lovat say when it was read, or before it was read?

Chevis. I objected to the Manifesto's being read; and Lord Lovat told me I talked Treason.

Sir John Strange. Did he tell you what was his own Disposition in regard to that Manifesto, after it had been read?

Chevis. He told me, after reading the Manifesto, That he was to join the Pretender's Party in that Cause; and that he would live and die in that Cause.

Sir John Strange. I beg the Witness may mention to your Lordships, whether the noble Lord at the Bar expressed his Opinion in relation to the good or ill Success of it?

Chevis. He said he thought Success was morally sure: As sure as Light, as sure as God was in Heaven, the Pretender would prevail.

Sir John Strange. I beg you'll recollect, and give my Lords the very Words. Did he say the Pretender?

Chevis. Not the Pretender; but his right Master.
Sir John Strange. What was the Expression he made use of?

Chevis. As sure as the Sun shined.
Sir John Strange. That who would prevail?

Chevis. That his Master (the Pretender) would prevail.
Sir John Strange. I beg you will inform their Lordships, whether any thing was offered to you upon that Occasion?

Chevis. I was offered a Captain's Commission.
Sir John Strange. By whom?—Chevis. By Lord Lovat, in that Service.

Sir John Strange. In what Service?

Chevis. In the Service of that Person, whom he called his lawful Prince.
Sir John Strange. My Lords, I beg he may inform your Lordships, whether my Lord Lovat said any thing in relation to the Pretender, to recommend him to the Witness, at the Time he says Lord Lovat offered him a Commission?

Chevis. I have often heard Lord Lovat say, That whoever looked the Pretender, his lawful King, in the Face, he would own he was his only rightful King, as he himself owned him to be.

Sir John Strange. I beg he may be asked, whether he can recollect, during the Time of the late Rebellion, any Number of Frasers being assembled?

Chevis. I cannot say; for, after the Time of reading the Manifesto, I did not visit my Lord Lovat. I discontinued going to his House.

Sir John Strange. For your own Sake, I desire to ask you, Did you accept of the Commission offered you by Lord Lovat or not?

Chevis. I did not indeed; I refused it.
Sir John Strange. What Healths have you heard the Prisoner toast in your Company?

Chevis. Confusion to the White Horse, and all the Generation of them.
Sir John Strange. Are you certain you heard my Lord Lovat propose that Health?

Chevis. I have heard him propose it, and drink it.
Sir John Strange. What did you understand was the Meaning of that Expression, Confusion to the White Horse?

Chevis. Confusion to the present Royal Family: It could mean nothing else. It was in Allusion to the Arms of the Family.

Sir John Strange. I should be glad you would inform their Lordships, whether you know of any Message sent by my Lord Lovat, by Drummond of Bechallie, besides what he has mentioned; any Thing concerning the Reformation or Revolution?

Chevis. He was to execute the Message, and that with respect to his Commission and Patent.

Sir John Strange. With whom was he to execute that Commission?
Chevis. With the Pretender, at Rome.

Sir John Strange. Did he, at that Time, say any Thing more to him; and what was it?

Chevis. He talked of the Association, and of the Invasion.
Sir John Strange. Did my Lord Lovat say any Thing of Religion, at that Time?

Chevis. I heard him say frequently, he believed there was no true Religion in the World but one, which was the Church of Rome.

Sir John Strange. Was any Thing said of the Revolution?

Chevis. He cursed the Reformation and the Revolution too.
Sir John Strange. What did he curse the Reformation for?

Chevis. Because, he said, it brought a false Religion upon us; and the Revolution involved us in a Load of Debt.

Sir John Strange. Did he then propose any Scheme to get rid of this Grievance?

Chevis. The Scheme he proposed was, by favouring the Invasion, and by taking Part in it.

Sir John Strange. Did he say for what Purpose that Invasion was to be?

Chevis. To restore the rightful King.
Sir John Strange. Did he name him?

Chevis. To restore his lawful Sovereign King James the Eighth.
Sir John Strange. I beg you'll give their Lordships an Account, whether you ever heard Lord Lovat say any Thing in relation to a Marriage contracted for his Daughter?

Chevis. I heard Lord Lovat say, that when his Daughter was married to Mr. Pherfon of Clunie, he took it to be an Accession of Strength, by the adding one Highland Clan more to the Number.

Sir John Strange. Please to inform their Lordships, whether, through the Progress of the Rebellion, you heard the Lord Lovat say any Thing, as to what he would do with his Tenants that would not join?

Chevis. He said, It was very easy for him to cut them off in a Moment, as he was in such a Capacity now.

Sir John Strange. What did he mean by that?

Chevis. Any Tenant that should oppose him, or any of the Clan, or Neighbours.

Sir John Strange. I beg you will inform their Lordships, what is the Power and Authority that Lord Lovat insists to have over his own Clan? or whether they are under his Power and Command, or not?

Chevis. Lord Lovat certainly has the Power of an absolute King over them.

Sir John Strange. Inform their Lordships, whether you apprehend the Command of the Clan is in my Lord Lovat, or his Son the Master?

Chevis. It is intirely in my Lord's own Hands.
Sir John Strange. Do you know what Age my Lord Lovat's eldest Son is?—Chevis. Much about Nineteen.

Sir John Strange. Was he at Home at the Beginning of the Rebellion? or was he then at any other Place, and where, for Education?

Chevis. He was at Saint Andrews, the Place of his Education; and was called Home about that Time.

Sir John Strange. How long was that before Lord Lovat made his Son read the Manifesto which you have mentioned? How long was he at Home before that?—Chevis. Not very long before that.

Sir John Strange. You say the young Gentleman was at Saint Andrews, and was sent for Home by his Father; and that his Father set him to read the Manifesto: Pray how long had the young Gentleman been at Home, before he was ordered to read the Manifesto?

Chevis. It might have been about two Months, to the best of my Memory.

Sir John Strange. Do you think it was so long?

Chevis. I believe it might have been about two Months.
Sir John Strange. When my Lord Lovat offered you a Captain's Commission, did he acquaint you who was to be your Colonel?

Chevis. He did not acquaint me, at that Time, who was to be my Colonel; but he said he was in that Service in that Cause himself; and I understood, that I was to serve under him.

Sir John Strange. My Lords, As the Witness has informed your Lordships, that he did not go to Lord Lovat's, after he told him it was High Treason to object to the reading of the Pretender's Manifesto, I shall not examine him to any Thing subsequent in Point of Time to that; and therefore I shall not trouble your Lordships with asking him any more Questions.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, I beg this Witness may inform your Lordships, whether he has heard any Thing of any Threats made Use of by the noble Lord at the Bar, to his Tenants, or Clan, to come down upon them, if they refused joining?

Chevis. I saw a Party of the McDonalds in the Country; and I think they came to the Place where I lived; and I take the Design of them to have been, that they should be there, to overawe the Country.

Mr. Attorney General. Who commanded that Party of the McDonalds?

Chevis. McDonald of Barisdale.
Mr. At. Gen. Did you hear any Thing said by my Lord Lovat to McDonald, concerning him or his Clan?

Chevis. He said, in general, that, upon being invested with this Patent of Duke, he would be able not only to humble and keep in Awe his own Clan, but his Neighbours.

Mr. At. Gen. I beg he may inform your Lordships, whether he knows any Thing of Barisdale's going about to the Clans, to encourage them to join?

Chevis. I saw him at Lord Lovat's House the Day of the Rendezvous.
Mr. At. Gen. What did he do there?

Chevis. He spirited up the Country People, and carried them along to the Rendezvous.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was that?

Chevis. McDonald of Barisdale.
Mr. At. Gen. What do you know in relation to that Rendezvous?

Chevis.

Chevis. I saw the Rendezvous at a Distance, but I was not upon the Spot.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was at the Rendezvous?

Chevis. Four, or Five, or Six hundred Men.

Mr. At. Gen. Whose Men were they?

Chevis. The Frasers.

Mr. At. Gen. Under whose Command were they?

Chevis. I was told, they were under the Master's Command; but I was not personally present.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, Have you done with this Witness?

Managers. My Lord, We have done with him.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Levat, The Gentlemen of the House of Commons have gone through with their Examination of Mr. Chevis: Has your Lordship any Questions to ask him?

Lord Levat. My Lords, He has said so many false and wicked Things, that I do not know what Questions to ask him, or where to begin.

Lord High Steward. Your Lordship will be pleased to propose the Questions; and then they will be asked of the Witnesses.

The Clerk repeated the Prisoner's Questions to the Witnesses.

Lord Levat. My Lords, I pray he may be asked, Whether or no, since my Arrival here, and being before the House of Lords, and that many Witnesses had been summoned to give Evidence against me, whether this Witness did not go about to solicit Witnesses against me? and whether he did not examine Witnesses himself?

Chevis. I refuse it.

Manager. You mean, you deny it.

Chevis. I deny it.

Lord Levat. My Lords, I offer to prove it.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Levat, Your Lordship must do that when you come to make your Defence: Your Lordship will then have an Opportunity, by Witnesses, to contradict or invalidate the Testimony of this, or any other Witness produced against you.

Lord Levat. I beg this Witness may be asked, Whether he knows, or ever heard, that several People were threatened to be put in Prison; and were put in Prison, if they did not come up to be Evidence against me.

Chevis. I deny it.

Lord Levat. I beg he may be asked, Whether he discovered to any Person belonging to the Government, the Declaration which he says he heard read at my House?

Chevis. In September 1745, I told it in common Conversation; but I never went to any of the Government, to inform them of it: The Rebellion broke out then immediately.

Lord Levat. My Lords, I beg this Witness may be asked, Whether he ever said himself, or has heard others say, that the late Plot by the Master of Levat against me, was to hang the old Man, and save himself?

Chevis. I never heard of such a Plot; but have often heard of a Plot of my Lord Levat's, to try to hang his Son the Master of Levat, and save himself.

A Lord. My Lords, I don't doubt the Witness designs to pay the Money he owes to my Lord Levat; but I pray he may be asked, whether he expects to be forgiven that Debt, if my Lord Levat is convicted?

L. H. S. My Lords, While this Witness was examined upon a Voire dire, there was a Question proposed by my Lord Levat, to be asked him, which was, Whether he owed my Lord Levat any Money? That Question was objected to by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, as not tending to discover any Thing material to the Point then in Question: And what is now proposed by the noble Lord, to be asked of the Witness, is, Whether this Gentleman owes my Lord Levat any Money? and if he does, whether he expects to be forgiven that Debt, in case my Lord Levat should be convicted?

Chevis. In regard of that Debt, it was condescended some Years ago, that my Lord Levat should accept a Gentleman who was my Debtor, for the Payment of that Money.

L. H. S. Do you owe my Lord Levat any Money?

Chevis. A mere Trifle: This which he speaks of was to be compensated another Way.

L. H. S. Whether the Debt be more or less, do you expect to save that Debt, or to be favoured in the Payment of it, if my Lord Levat should be convicted?

Chevis. Not at all; I deny it.

A Lord. How long have you been in Town?

Chevis. Since Tuesday last about Noon.

A Lord. Whether have you lived at your own Expence since that Time; or who hath supported you?

Chevis. I did design to have lived at my own Expence; but I have been supported at the Expence of the Government.

[Then the Witness withdrew.]

Mr. Solicitor General (the Honourable William Murray, Esquire). My Lords, The next Witness we beg Leave to call, is Robert Frazer, late Secretary to my Lord Levat.

Robert Frazer called in and sworn in Chief.

Proclamation made for Silence.

The Prisoner rising up, the Lord High Steward said, My Lord Levat, Do you object to this Witness?—Lord Levat. Yes.

L. H. S. What is your Objection?

Lord Levat. He holds a Tack of Land of me.

L. H. S. Is it true? Do you hold a Tack of Land of his Lordship?

R. Frazer. No; I do not hold any Tack of Land of my Lord Levat.

Lord Levat. I am ready to prove it.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, My Lord Levat may have Liberty to examine a Witness, to prove that Fact. It has been frequently done after a Witness has been sworn in Chief. My Lords, at the Common Law, where a Witness is tendered by the Plaintiff to be sworn, the Oath to give Evidence in Chief is administered to him, unless the Defendant makes an Objection to his Competency, and then he may be examined touching that Objection, upon a Voire dire: But, after the Witness has been sworn in Chief, if any Objection is then made to him, he may be asked the same Question by virtue of his Oath in Chief, as he might have been asked upon a Voire dire. I have known it done both Ways. But, after the Witness has been examined by the Defendant to the Fact of the Objection, and has denied it upon his Oath, it is not usual to give the Defendant Liberty to call a Witness to prove it, in order to repel him from being a Witness, unless the other Side acquiesces in it.

Lord Levat. I have sent for my Witness.

The House having waited some Time, my Lord High Steward asked the Prisoner, where his Witness was: Who said, he was at the Coffee-house; and a little Time afterwards said, My Lords, The Witnesses are all gone about an Hour ago, not expecting to be called.

Lord High Steward. How came your Witnesses to go away whilst your Trial is going on?

Lord Levat. My Lords, They did not know they would be called To-day.

Mr. Solicitor General. My Lords, The Objection made by the Noble Lord at the Bar having been positively denied by the Witness, and there being no Evidence here to contradict him, we hope we may proceed to examine him.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, We hope your Lordships will not permit the Prisoner at the Bar to suspend your Lordships Proceedings whenever he pleases: And we hope the Candour of the Managers, in not opposing his going into this Objection, after the Witness has denied it upon his Oath, shall not be extended to delay his Examination, under a Pretence of this Kind. The Witness produced denying the Objection upon his Oath, and there being no Evidence here to contradict it, we hope we shall be permitted to go on with the Witness. My Lords, The Managers were aware of this; nevertheless did not at first oppose any Indulgence to the Prisoner that might tend to Justice; but as it is now known what Point the Witness is called to, though I do not suppose the Witness capable of being influenced, yet if a bare Allegation of this Sort is sufficient to put off your Lordships Proceedings, I must submit it to your Lordships, whether it will not give an Opportunity of something to be done which ought not to be done.

Mr. Noel.

IT is with great Difficulty and Disinclination, that we can prevail upon ourselves to object to the utmost Candour that can be shewn to the Noble Lord at the Bar. My Lords, This is an Occurrence which, in my little Experience, I never knew to arise. My Lords, I apprehend the Way is, upon this Occasion, to ask the Questions of the Witnesses upon a Voire dire. The Noble Lord at the Bar made the Objection, and applied to the Witness for an Answer to that Question, who has positively denied it: If, after that, the Prisoner is to say, I can falsify what the Witness has now sworn; allow me Time for it; and your Lordships should indulge him with it in this Manner; there is Nobody but must be apprehensive of very dangerous Consequences attending it: For any Kind of Evidence may, by that Means, be prevented.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, The Gentlemen of the House of Commons may proceed in their Examination of this Witness; and my Lord Levat will be at Liberty to ask what Questions he pleases, in his Cross-Examination; and will likewise be at Liberty to call Witnesses to prove this particular Fact in his Defence in another Shape; for he may prove this Fact, in order to impeach this Witness's Credit, and probably have as much Effect of it as if it had been properly taken Advantage of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, I beg this Witness may be asked, when he first came to live in Lord Levat's Family; and how long he lived with him?

L. H. S. Sir, you hear the Question.

R. Frazer. I entered into Lord Levat's Service in October 1744.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did you continue with him?

R. Frazer. I continued in his Service till his Lordship and I were taken Prisoners, the 7th of June last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I beg you may inform their Lordships, whether, in the Month of July 1745, you knew of any Information that was given to my Lord Levat, of an Intention of an Insurrection and Invasion; and what Intimation was given of it?

R. Frazer. Some time after the 25th July 1745, I heard a Gentleman came to my Lord Levat's House, to tell him, That the Pretender's Son was landed somewhere about Lochaber. I heard my Lord Levat say, He did not land like a Prince; that he had no Army with him, and only a few Servants.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did my Lord Levat say upon that Occasion? Was his Son at Home?

R. Frazer. He was at Home, or was then sent for.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Person that was sent by my Lord Levat to see the Pretender at that Time?

R. Frazer. Not at that Time; I can't say that I knew of any.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Endeavours that were then used to raise Men upon my Lord Levat's Estate? And if you do, please to mention the Times.

R. Frazer. I remember some time after he dictated a Letter to me, to be sent to Two of the Heads of the Tribes of the Frasers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Name them.

R. Frazer. James Frazer of Foyers, and John Frazer of Ferraine.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was that Letter for?

R. Frazer. To get Men ready to join the Master of Levat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where were the Men to go with him?

R. Frazer. The Letter does not particularize that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any body that was sent to take Lists of the Men to be raised?

R. Frazer. I took the Lists of the Names of the Men. My Lord Levat's Chamberlain ordered me to make a List of the Names of all the Men capable of bearing Arms North of Loch Ness.

Mr. Sol. Gen. For what Purpose were those Lists made?

R. Frazer. To get the best of my Knowledge to join the Master of Levat, with the Pretender.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were such Lists made out with my Lord Levat's Privy, or by his Direction?

R. Frazer.

R. Frazer. I am sure he was acquainted with it.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. How are you sure he was acquainted with it?
 R. Frazer. Because I went into the Room, and told him what I was doing; and that I was writing the List.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he say to you upon that Occasion?
 R. Frazer. I cannot remember now.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, did my Lord Lovat see the List after it was made out?
 R. Frazer. I can't tell; I returned it to John Frazer, my Lord's Factor.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Message that was sent or passed between my Lord Lovat, and Lord Louden, and Lord President?
 R. Frazer. Yes.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. What was it about?
 R. Frazer. Several Letters were sent by my Lord Louden, and my Lord President, to my Lord Lovat, to dissuade him from entering into the Rebellion.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. What Answer did my Lord Lovat make to these Letters?
 R. Frazer. He said his Son was so obstinate as to enter into the Rebellion; but that he could not help it.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that Fact true? Was the Son so obstinate?
 R. Frazer. No; I am sure it was not true.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Why are you sure it was not true?
 R. Frazer. Because, whilst I was preparing a Letter to the Lord President, which my Lord Lovat dictated, wherein he acquainted them of his Son's Obstinacy in going into the Rebellion (which Letter my Lord directed me not to let any body see), his Son the Master came in, and asked me for the Letter; and I refusing to give it him, the Son took the Letter out of my Hand.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Who took it out of your Hand?
 R. Frazer. The Master of Lovat took it out of my Hand; and, after reading it, said, Good God, how is this! Accuse me behind my Back! To call me stiff-necked and disobedient! I will set the Saddle upon the right Horse.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray repeat the Answer you made last.
 R. Frazer. The Master of Lovat said, If this Letter goes, I will go, and put the Saddle upon the right Horse, and will go and discover all to my Lord President.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he mean by putting the Saddle upon the right Horse?
 R. Frazer. That he would go and discover to my Lord President, that his Father, my Lord Lovat, had forced him to do what he had done.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Son say any Thing to my Lord Lovat upon that Occasion?—Frazer. Not that I know of. The Words stiff-necked and disobedient were left out of the Letter.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. How came these Words to be left out?
 R. Frazer. It was done by the Master of Lovat's Order.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear any Thing that passed between Lord Lovat and his Son about his Backwardness in going into the Rebellion?
 R. Frazer. I heard him blame the Master of Lovat for being dilatory.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Dilatory in what?—R. Frazer. In raising Men.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. For what Purpose?
 R. Frazer. To join the Pretender's Son.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any Thing of Lord Lovat's sending for People, as Painters, or of any Sort, to prepare his Tents?
 R. Frazer. Yes; I myself wrote a Letter to his Agent at Inverness, who was a Painter.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. By whose Order did you write that Letter?
 R. Frazer. By my Lord Lovat's Order.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. To what Purpose was the Letter wrote?—R. Frazer. It was to order the Agent, or the Painter, to make some Bell-Tents.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. What did the Painter do in Consequence of that Letter?
 R. Frazer. He made them.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Did my Lord Lovat know of it?—R. Frazer. Yes.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. How do you know he did?—R. Frazer. Because I was with my Lord Lovat when the Man was making them.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. What are Bell-Tents?
 R. Frazer. They are Lodges to keep Arms dry from the Rain.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know of any Colours being made?
 R. Frazer. Yes; we had one Pair of new ones made, and another Pair mended.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. About what Time was that? and what Month?
 R. Frazer. About the Month of September, I think.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it before the first Rendezvous?
 R. Frazer. I think it was after the first Rendezvous.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you give an Account of the Men being rendezvoused, and whether it was done by my Lord Lovat's Directions, or under his Authority?—R. Frazer. They were rendezvoused.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Where were they rendezvoused?
 R. Frazer. Upon that Part of Lord Lovat's Estate near Castle-Downey.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. About what Time was this? in what Month?
 R. Frazer. In the Month of August.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. What was the particular Purpose of their being reviewed then?
 R. Frazer. To see who was capable of bearing Arms, and who had any.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Were the Officers appointed then?
 R. Frazer. No, I believe not.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. How do you know that the Prisoner was made privy to this Rendezvous?
 R. Frazer. Because they came back to my Lord's House afterwards.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Were they in Officers Drefs?
 R. Frazer. They had white Cockades on.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. How far was the Place of Rendezvous from Lord Lovat's House?—R. Frazer. About a Quarter of a Mile.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Were the Persons there Tenants to my Lord Lovat?
 R. Frazer. They were his Tenants.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. What Arms had they?—R. Frazer. I can't say: I had my Lord's Liberty to go there and see them; but I did not stay there.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any other Rendezvous?

R. Frazer. About a Fortnight afterwards there was another Rendezvous.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Ammunition, Muskets, or Arms, that were given to the Men?
 R. Frazer. I don't know of any Arms that were given them. There was a Barrel of Powder sent from Inverness.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. By whose Order was that done?
 R. Frazer. By my Lord Lovat's Order; I wrote the Letter.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. What was done with that Powder?
 R. Frazer. It was distributed among the Men.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. How do you know that it was done by my Lord Lovat's Order?—R. Frazer. Because the House-keeper being disgraced, I got the Key of the Place where it was, and saw the Powder and Bullets there.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Key delivered you for that Use?
 R. Frazer. I told my Lord of my having the Key.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Bonnets being provided?
 R. Frazer. There were Bonnets provided for them.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. By whose Order?
 R. Frazer. By my Lord Lovat's.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. For what Purpose were they provided?
 R. Frazer. They were given to the Men.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know where the Officers went after the last Rendezvous?
 R. Frazer. The Officers came back that Night.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did they come to?
 R. Frazer. They came to my Lord Lovat's House.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Had they Cockades?
 R. Frazer. They had white Cockades in their Bonnets.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know for what Sign or Mark they wore white Cockades?
 R. Frazer. It was a Symptom of their being People to join the Pretender.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any thing that happened at my Lord Lovat's after the Battle of Preston-Pans?
 R. Frazer. Frazer of Dallcraig came to Castle-Downey with an Account of the Battle of Preston-Pans.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. What did my Lord Lovat say to him upon that Occasion?
 R. Frazer. He said, That his Men should be soon ready to go South.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. For what Purpose?
 R. Frazer. To join the Rebels, I understood.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Men passing by my Lord Lovat's House?
 R. Frazer. My Lord Cromartie's Regiment passed by; and he and the McDonalds, and several others, were entertained there that Night.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear any thing that passed upon that Occasion? any thing that was said by my Lord Lovat upon it.
 R. Frazer. Yes, that it was owing to the Master of Lovat's Disobedience, that the Frasers were not ready as soon as any other.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any thing else that passed then, or any particular Healths drank?
 R. Frazer. Yes, the Health of the Pretender's Son was drank.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. By what Name?
 R. Frazer. By the Name of Prince Charles.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray at what time did the Master of Lovat go and join the Rebels?
 R. Frazer. It was between the 10th and 20th of December that he went. My Lord Lovat was taken Prisoner on the 10th or 11th of December, and escaped about the 19th or 20th; and at the same time the Master marched with the Frasers.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat extremely displeased at his Son's so marching? or did he disapprove of it?
 R. Frazer. No.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he send Word for his Son to come back again?
 R. Frazer. He did afterwards send for him back, to raise more Men.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Person who was concerned in the Rebellion, that after the Battle of Falkirk, came to my Lord Lovat's House? and whether any thing passed in Company then, and what it was?
 R. Frazer. Yes; there was a French Gentleman came, that was said to be the French Ambassador.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did he come to?
 R. Frazer. To a Place belonging to my Lord Lovat.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. When was that?
 R. Frazer. It was after their Retreat from Stirling.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know who was there besides?
 R. Frazer. There were several others, particularly Lochiel, Keppoch, Camuran.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of my Lord Lovat's saying any thing to them about his assisting them?
 R. Frazer. He told them, he hoped they would excuse him, on account of his Age and Infirmities.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he say any thing to shew his Zeal for their Success, as he did not go himself?
 R. Frazer. Yes; he said, I cannot go myself; but I will send my only Son, the Darling of my Life.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any thing that passed between my Lord Lovat and his Son after that?
 R. Frazer. Yes; the Master came to Gortuleg; and my Lord had lately received a Letter from one Mr. Sheridan, who had some Office under the Pretender's Son, complaining of my Lord's not getting his Men ready.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any thing that passed between them in relation to the Men having Leave to go home?
 R. Frazer. Yes; my Lord was angry with the Master for giving them Leave.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, how long was this before the Battle of Culloden?
 R. Frazer. This was in the Month of February.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any thing of the Pretender's Son's coming to my Lord's House after the Battle of Culloden?
 R. Frazer. Yes; the very Night after the Battle, the Pretender's Son came to my Lord's.

Mr. Sol. Gen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was my Lord Lovat there then?—R. Fras. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any thing of what passed between them; or what my Lord Lovat said to him?

R. Fras. He made some Apology for not joining him in Person.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he mention any thing to shew his Zeal for him, tho' he did not join him in Person?

R. Fras. He said he had sent his Son to join him, whom he loved more than himself.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he mention his having sent any more?

R. Fras. Yes; he mentioned his having sent his Clan.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Excuse accepted; or what did the Pretender's Son say to him?

R. Fras. I cannot tell particularly: I do not understand French; and they spoke in French.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did all the Conversation, which passed between them, pass in French?

R. Fras. No; they spoke sometimes English, and at other times they spoke French.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Language was that Discourse spoken in, which you have given an Account of as to Lord Lovat's Son and Clan?

R. Fras. It was in English.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have said you did not understand all their Discourse: Pray did you perceive any other Demonstrations of Friendship that passed between them?

R. Fras. Yes; they embraced one another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Consultation or Meeting of the General Officers of the Rebel Army, which my Lord Lovat had at that Time?—R. Fras. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who were present?

R. Fras. There were several Gentlemen present.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Name them.

R. Fras. There was Cameron of Lochiel, John Murray of Broughton, Barrisdale, John Roy Stuart, Glenbuckie, and others.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long was this after the Battle of Culloden?

R. Fras. It was not very long.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long was it?

R. Fras. A matter of Ten or Twelve Days.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any body else there? Was the Young Pretender there?—R. Fras. No; he was not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any thing of the Conversation that passed then, or the Result of the Consultation?

R. Fras. No; I was turned out of the Room: I did not hear.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Money that was distributed? To whom was it distributed, by whom, and for what Purpose?

R. Fras. I saw the Pretender's Son's Treasurer give Money.

Mr. Sol. Gen. For what Purpose was the Money given?

R. Fras. To raise Men.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know what kind of Money was so given?

R. Fras. It was French Louisdors.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was you with the Prisoner till the Time he was taken? If you was, give an Account of his Retreat.

R. Fras. We staid in an Island for a Month; and when we escaped, we were obliged to take a Boat to come down a Loch.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was the Name of the Island?

R. Fras. The Island of Morer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you been with Lord Lovat from the Time of the Battle of Culloden to that Time?

R. Fras. We were in the Island from the Beginning of May till the 7th of June.

Mr. Sol. Gen. With what View did my Lord Lovat come there?

R. Fras. To screen him from the King's Troops, which were then in Pursuit of him, and several others of them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any thing that passed between the Master of Lovat and him at that Time?

R. Fras. I remember the Master proposed it to him to surrender himself to the Duke; but my Lord Lovat advised him against it, and said he could not do it consistently with his Honour; and he did not think he had been so mean-spirited as to offer it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any thing of any Advice that was given by my Lord Lovat about the Raising of Men?

R. Fras. Yes; my Lord Lovat was present at Morer, where they were speaking of the Raising of Men.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had the Prisoner any Guard that attended him whilst he was in Morer?

R. Fras. Yes; he had a Guard of twenty Men to attend him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did they resist any of the King's Forces that might oppose them?

R. Fras. Not that I know of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. By whom were they paid?—R. Fras. I paid them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. By whose Directions did you pay them?

R. Fras. By my Lord Lovat's Directions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you apprehend, that the Master of Lovat carried his Men into the Rebel Army without his Father's Permission?

R. Fras. No; I am very sure he could not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why are you sure of it?

R. Fras. Because my Lord Lovat is a very strict Man; and none of his Children could have done it without his Consent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had my Lord Lovat a Power over them?

R. Fras. Yes; he had a very great Power over them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, was the Guard my Lord Lovat had, armed?

R. Fras. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say there was no Opposition given by them to any of the King's Forces?

R. Fras. No; I think there was two or three of them fired: But my Lord Lovat sent me out to tell them not to fire.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any thing of my Lord Lovat's soliciting a Commission from the Pretender, to be Lieutenant-General of the Highlands, or a Patent to be Duke?

R. Fras. I remember, some time after I went into my Lord Lovat's Service, which was the 18th of October 1744, I saw in the Desk a Copy of an old Patent, which gave the Title of Duke to Lord Lovat only.

VOL. IX.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What other Papers did you see there?

R. Fras. Some time after I saw a new Patent, where the Title was to descend to the Heirs Male of the Family.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear from my Lord Lovat how he obtained the Patent?

R. Fras. I have heard my Lord Lovat say, That his Patent lay in the Hands of one Drummond in France.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he say what Drummond?

R. Fras. To the best of my Knowledge, he said it was Drummond of Bobaldie.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any thing of any other Commission which my Lord Lovat had?

R. Fras. Yes; I saw a Commission for his being Lieutenant-General of the Highlands.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you see that Commission?

R. Fras. Lying upon a Table in my Lord's Room. I read it, and made a Copy of it by my Lord's Order.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you sure whether he himself ordered you to copy it?

R. Fras. I am sure he ordered me to make a Copy of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any other Discourse with him about it? Did you hear with what View he had got it?

R. Fras. No; I had no other than what I have now informed you of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of any Complaint my Lord Lovat ever made about an Independent Company being taken from him?

R. Fras. I heard him complain, that the Court did not use him civilly in taking away his Company.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you hear him make that Complaint?

R. Fras. Frequently in Company, in speaking upon the Subject.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray what did my Lord Lovat say upon that Occasion?

R. Fras. I heard him say, That it was intirely owing to General Wade; and that he did not blame the Government.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he draw any Consequences from that?

R. Fras. I have heard him speak extraordinary well of his late Master King George.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What more did he say about this Treatment?

R. Fras. He said, That the Court used him so ill, that he could not help doing what he was doing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was he then doing?

R. Fras. Raising Men to join in the Rebellion. He said he had no Dislike to his present Majesty, but only to the Persons who took away his Commission.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray what do you apprehend was the Meaning of that Expression of the Master of Lovat, that he would go to the Lord President, and discover all?

R. Fras. I understood, that he meant, that he would go and join his Majesty's Forces.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, We have done with the Examination of this Witness for the present. We shall have Occasion, by-and-bye, to call him, to prove an Exhibit or Two.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Lovat, The Gentlemen of the House of Commons have gone thro' their Examination of this Witness: Would your Lordship ask him any Questions?

Lord Lovat. I am not able to ask him any Questions.

Then the Witness, by Order of the Lord High Steward, withdrew; and the Lord High Steward returning back to his Chair, the House was moved to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lord High Steward. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?—Lords. Ay, Ay.

The House was accordingly adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and the Lords, and others, returned in the same Order, in which they came down: And the House being there resumed,

Ordered, That this House will proceed further in the Tryal of Simon Lord Lovat in Westminster-Hall, To-morrow, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon: And

A Message was sent to the House of Commons, by Mr. Eld and Mr. Thurston, to acquaint them therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, or his Deputy, do take back the said Lord Lovat, and bring him again to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall To-morrow, at Eleven of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Tuesday the 10th of March, 1746.

The SECOND DAY.

THE Lords, and others, came from the Chamber of Parliament into Westminster-Hall, in the same Order as on Monday: Where the Commons, and their Managers, were in the Seats prepared for them respectively, as before: And the Lords took their Places in the Court; and the Lord High Steward in his Chair.

Lord High Steward. The House is resumed. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that the Judges have Leave to be covered?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence; and afterwards the following Proclamation:

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes, Oyes, Oyes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, Bring forth your Prisoner, Simon Lord Lovat, to the Bar, pursuant to the Order of the House of Lords, to you directed.

The Deputy-Governor of the Tower brought the Prisoner to the Bar, in the like manner as before. And then he kneeled down.

L. H. S. Your Lordship may rise.

Then the Lord High Steward asked Leave to go down to the Table: Which was done.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, You may proceed in your Evidence.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, The next Witness we beg Leave to call in Support of the Charge, is John Murray of Broughton.

John Murray of Broughton came into Court.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, We desire that he may be sworn.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I have Objections against this Witness. One or two I apprehend to be essential.

L. H. S. Make your Objections.

4 O

Lord

Lord Lovat. As I cannot read myself, I desire your Lordships will give Leave to the Clerk to read them.

Clerk reads. My Objection is, That he is attainted by an Act of Parliament made in the last Session, Page 443; and that he did not surrender himself before the 12th of July last.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, I observe, that the noble Lord at the Bar said, That he had several Objections to the examining this Witness; and that One or Two of them were essential; but the noble Lord has not mentioned more than one. I presume, my Lords, it would be proper that he should name all his Objections at once, that the Managers may have an Opportunity of answering them all, and receiving your Lordships Judgment upon the Whole: Therefore, if he has any other Objections to offer, it would be proper he should mention them now to your Lordships.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I submit it to your Lordships, that That is a very odd Proposition. I give your Lordships an essential one now; and when that is answered, I have another. I am not to be directed by those who are my Persecutors.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, You are not to be directed by your Accusers, but by the Lords who are your Judges; and the Course of Proceeding in this, and all other Courts, is, That a Person who objects to any Witness, should name all his Objections at the same time; and it is the more material in this Court, as it tends to prevent the Trouble of making several unnecessary Adjournments.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, As this Objection is very essential, I pray that it may be answered before I make another.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, If this is a material Objection to the Witness, then there will be no Occasion for any other; but if it is an immaterial one, then your Lordships may go into any other; but the Way proposed by the Managers may be very detrimental to the unhappy Person at the Bar.

L. H. S. Your Lordships hear what is proposed; and the Question is, Whether the Noble Lord at the Bar shall name all his Objections now, or take them up by One?

Sir William Yonge. My Lords, I should hope, that, in any Course of Proceeding, where Objections of this Kind are made, they should be made all together; for if they are made separate, we must consequently make distinct Answers to them all; which may oblige your Lordships to adjourn often to the Chamber of Parliament; which will create a great and unnecessary Delay of Time: And, my Lords, there can be no Objection to his naming the Whole at once, since they will all be distinctly considered by your Lordships, and undoubtedly receive distinct Answers. I therefore humbly insist, That he may be obliged to name all his Objections at once.

Mr. Noel. My Lords, What we are now upon, is no Point of Law at all: It is singly, Whether the noble Lord at the Bar, as is usual, should not name all his Objections at once? When he does name them, then to such as are clear Points of Law, he must be heard by his Counsel: But, at present, my Lords, we are upon a Question concerning the Course of Proceeding, Whether he shall name them all at once? that they may be taken into Consideration at the same Time.

My Lords, One Thing struck me in a very extraordinary Manner: It was said by the noble Lord at the Bar, That he was not to be directed by his Persecutors. My Lords, We are no Persecutors; we persecute no Man; we are entrusted by the Commons, who carry on this Prosecution against the noble Lord at the Bar for Treason; and we prosecute for the Preservation of the King's Government, and the Laws of the Land.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I said I was not to be directed by those who accused me. Your Lordships cannot expect, I can say what I have to offer in an eloquent Manner. My Lords, Should the Saving of a little Time be a Reason for taking away a Person's Life? I hope these will not act like the Parricides who took off the Head of both Kingdoms in a Day, by their Prosecution. I am a Peer of this Land; and I think no Excuse of saving Time should be allowed as a Reason to destroy me.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, The Lords will use all the Deliberation, and give you all the Time that is requisite for your Defence; but I must beg your Lordship will have so much Consideration as to keep your Temper, and not suffer yourself to be hurried into Passion; for that may greatly prejudice you in making your Defence. Your Lordship will find the Advantage in your Defence, by keeping your Temper.

Lord Lovat. I give your Lordship my humble Thanks: And, since your Lordships will not allow me Counsel, I have spoke the little Non-sense I had to say; but now your Lordships shall hear me say nothing out of Temper.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, The Question now is, Whether you shall name all your Objections at once? I must acquaint your Lordship, That is the Rule in the Courts below, That if several Objections are made to a Witness, they are all named at once, in order to prevent unnecessary Delays.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, To shew how much I desire to save Time (tho' according to the Course of Nature, my Time can be but short), I am so far from desiring to give your Lordships Trouble, or to prolong Time, that I do insist upon this Objection to the Witness, and rely upon it as the only material Objection.

Then the Lord High Steward directed the Act of the last Session of Parliament, for the Attainder of several Persons, and, amongst others, of John Murray of Broughton, to be read: And the same was read accordingly by the Clerk at the Table.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, You hear the Objection made by my Lord Lovat against this Witness: Which is, That he stands attainted by the Act of Parliament just now read; and that he did not surrender himself before the 12th of July, the Day prescribed by the Act. And this being a Question of Law, he desires to be heard by his Counsel to it.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, We have that which will appear to your Lordships, to be a plain and a clear Answer to it. It appears, that this is an Act of Parliament for attainting several Persons, upon a certain Condition; which is, That if those Persons do not, before the 12th of July 1746, surrender themselves to One of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, then every one, so not surrendering himself, shall be adjudged to be, and is thereby, attainted of High Treason. And our Answer to it is this, That the Condition has been complied with by Mr. Murray. I shall readily own, That, supposing the Condition had not been complied with, according to Law, in that Case Mr. Murray, being an attainted Person, could not be a Witness, unless he had been pardoned. But our Answer to that will be, That he hath surrendered himself; and the Surrender will appear upon Record; and the Manner of it is this: The last Term, Mr. Murray was brought by Habeas Corpus to the Bar of the Court of King's Bench; and a Transcript of the Act of Parliament being by Mittimus and Certiorari brought into that Court; and Mr. Murray brought up, and personally appearing before the Justices of the Court of King's Bench; and being asked by them, What he had to say, why he should not suffer Death, according to Law? upon a Supposition, that he was attainted upon that Act of Parliament, he pleaded in general, That he was one of the Persons named in the Act; and that, long before the 12th of July 1746, to wit, on the 28th of June then last, he did, at Edinburgh, in due Manner, according to the Meaning of the Act, render himself to Andrew Fletcher, Lord Justice Clerk, and one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace: And he says, That the said Andrew Fletcher had then Authority to admit him to make such Surrender. He then states, That on the said 28th of June, in consequence of this Surrender, he was committed by the Lord Justice Clerk to Prison, according to the Directions of the Act of Parliament; and that he had ever since that Surrender remained in Custody, and still continues in Prison, and is ready to take his Trial, and submit himself to Justice. My Lords, He having pleaded this Plea, the Attorney General, by virtue of a Warrant from his Majesty, confessed the Plea to be true: Upon which the Court of King's Bench made a Record of it. He was remanded back to Prison, and there remains to answer, according to Law, when he shall be called to an Account for this High Treason. My Lords, We have the Record, and beg it may be read.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I object to the reading this Record, because it is no Evidence against me; and I beg my Counsel may be heard to it. I am a Stranger to the Record, which is grounded only upon the Confession of the Attorney General, unsupported by any Proof; and I desire my Counsel may be now heard.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, As to the Objection against reading this Record, I apprehend there is no Foundation for it. It is a Record of the Court of King's Bench, concerning the Person to whom the noble Lord at the Bar has objected, as being attainted; and, upon the Face of the Record, it will appear, that he is not a Person attainted. As to what the noble Lord says, That he is no Party to the Record, It is true he is not; but it is a Record notwithstanding. It is a Record upon the Point in Question, to shew whether or no the Person who is proposed as a Witness, is attainted: And there is no other Way by which he can have an Opportunity, in a Court of Justice, to avoid that Attainder, but by being brought into that Court, and asked, What he has to say why Execution should not be awarded against him, upon the Foundation of his being attainted by the Act? The Law gives him a Right to make his Defence against that Demand of Execution. He has done it, by averring a Fact of a Surrender, pursuant to the Act; and the Attorney General having confessed that Fact, it appears, that the Witness is not attainted; and the whole is (as it ought to be) entered on Record, which is the proper Evidence of his not being attainted; and therefore must be proper to be read to your Lordships, to answer an Objection, founded on a Supposition, that he is, though the Prisoner is not, nor could possibly be, a Party to it.

L. H. S. My Lord Lovat, You have heard what the Managers say: Do you now insist upon the Objection to the Reading of the Record? or will you reserve your Objection to the Witness till after the Record has been read?

Lord Lovat. I desire, that it should not be read.

L. H. S. Do you desire, that your Counsel may be heard to that Question, as a Point of Law?

Lord Lovat. Yes, I do.

Mr. Att. Gen. To be sure, my Lords, if it is any thing, it is a Point of Law; but your Lordships will judge whether it is a Point of Doubt; and therefore deserves to have Counsel heard to it.

L. H. S. If my Lord Lovat insists upon it, his Counsel must be heard to this Point.

Mr. FORRESTER.

My Lords,

I AM, by your Lordships Order, assigned Counsel to the noble Lord the Prisoner at the Bar, to advise and assist him in Matters of Law. The Objection that the noble Lord has made to the reading this Record, is, That it is grounded upon a Plea of Mr. Murray, confessed by his Majesty's Attorney General, to which the noble Lord is no Party; that Nobody is bound by that Confession but the Crown; and consequently, that it cannot be read against the noble Lord at the Bar. And, my Lords, I apprehend, that a Plea resting merely upon the Confession of the King, and which, in Fact, may or may not be true, ought not, in point of Law or Justice, to conclude any Party but the Crown, in whom alone resided the Power of confessing it.

My Lords, I am ready to acknowledge, that the Law of England gives the greatest Credit to Proofs by Matter of Record; and that they are Proofs of the highest Nature: But, my Lords, there is a great Difference between Records grounded upon the Confession of the Party, and Records upon Verdicts.

The Reason is, That in Records grounded upon Confession, the Party may come in, and suggest a Thing that is true or false: And it would be extremely hard, in regard to Third Persons, who may be injured by it; I say, it would be extremely injurious, if they had no Method to be let in, to falsify a Plea thus confessed. But where a Record is grounded upon a Verdict, and Judgment given thereupon, the Case is very different, because there is always a full Hearing before a Court of Justice; the Facts are proved by Testimony of the Witnesses; and the Jury give their Verdict upon such Proofs: So that both the Matters of Fact and Law, if any arise, being fully debated and determined, it is highly reasonable such Proceedings should be conclusive, upon the Maxim, Ex auditu publico ut sit finis litium; since, if it was not, every Fact might be called in question over and over again, and so Courts of Justice would never come to an End of the Business before them. My Lords, The Distinction that I make is not purely of my own Imagination; your Lordships will find it in the best Writers on the Crown Law. My Lord Coke, in his Third Inst. fol. 231. and Lord Chief Justice Hale, in the First Volume of his History of the Pleas of the Crown, fol. 361. tells us, That if a Tenant in Fee aliens his Lands, and then is attainted of Treason, by Verdict upon an Indictment, supposing the Offence committed before the Alienation, the Alienor cannot falsify the Attainder, upon a Supposition, that there was no Treason committed before the Alienation; but that, had the Attainder been by Confession, the Alienor might falsify the Attainder in the very Point of the Treason, there being nothing conclusive done by the Alienor. This, my Lords, I apprehend is extremely strong to the present Purpose: Your Lordships will be pleased to observe how far it goes; it respects the Crown in point of Interest, the Lands actually forfeited to and vested in the Crown by the Attainder; which yet being grounded only on the Confession of the Party, cannot operate to injure a Third Person, but he may set it aside, and recover his Lands again, notwithstanding the Record by which it appears, that the Alienor committed Treason, and sold the Lands after the Treason actually committed. My Lords, I am aware of an Objection that may be made: It will perhaps be said, That it was in the Power of the Crown to have fully established Mr. Murray's Credit, by taking another Method, that of granting him a Pardon; which would have removed all Objection. My Lords, I grant it would; and had it been done, the noble Lord at the Bar, nor his Counsel, would not have troubled your Lordships with any Objections. But, my Lords, there is a very wide Difference between the two Methods: A Pardon takes away, as Lord Hobart expresses, both panam & reatum; it obliterates the Crime as much as if there had been no Crime at all; and when that has been once declared by the Crown, it is conclusive to all People: A Pardon removes all Objections to the Person, and to his Character. But the present Case is extremely different; for the Substance of Murray's Plea, tho' confessed by the Attorney General, still remains a Matter of Doubt, and a Matter of Evidence. My Lords, That Mr. Murray appeared in the Court of King's Bench, that he pleaded he was the Person named in the Act, so far is true, and so far I allow: But, my Lords, notwithstanding he pleaded that he surrendered on the 28th June, and was then committed to Prison, this may be false; Evidence might have been produced to the contrary; and, upon that Evidence, it might have appeared, that he did not surrender before the 12th of July.

My Lords, should that happen to be the Case, in what Condition would a Third Person be, was this Proceeding to be conclusive against him? It is a Maxim in Law, that Actus legis nemini facit injuriam. The Maxim holds equally strong as to the Acts of the Crown; and, if our Books are not so explicit on the latter as the former Head, their Silence proceeds from the great Modesty of our Laws, which, as they repose the highest Trust in the Honour and Justice of the Crown, won't suppose its prerogative will ever be turned to the Subject's Detriment: And indeed right Reason tells us, that neither the Acts of the Crown, or of any Party whatsoever, ought to affect a Third Person, who was a Stranger to them, and who has had no Opportunity of controverting them.

My Lords, I would trouble your Lordships with a very short Case to illustrate what I am contending for: A Copyholder is attainted, and flies, and the Land escheats to the Lord: Suppose that he is afterwards taken, and brought up into the Court of King's Bench, and there pleads, that he is not the Man; and that Plea is confessed by the Attorney General; would this be Evidence against the Lord, who had acquired a Property in the Land by Escheat? Would he be concluded by that Proceeding? Would the Tenant, by saying, I have pleaded I am not the Man, and the Attorney General has confessed it, avail himself against the Lord? My Lords, here is to be an Interest divested out of a Person by a mere Confession of the Parties, in a Proceeding to which he is a Stranger, and was never admitted to litigate: And as the Lord by Escheat would not be concluded in the Case I just now put, I do not see any Distinction can be made between that and the present.

The noble Lord at the Bar has a Right to object to every Person attainted; and that Right cannot be taken away by any Proceeding between other Persons, to which he is no Party.

My Lords, the Case is rather stronger here; because, by the same Reason that Mr. Murray is enabled to be a Witness, by having pleaded, that he surrendered within the Time limited by the Act, and that Plea confessed by the Attorney General, if a Person actually attainted by Verdict and Judgment (which is the highest Kind of Attainder) should, upon any Occasion, be brought up to the Court of King's Bench, and asked why Execution should not be awarded against him, that he should deny, as happened in Okey's Case, his being the same Person, and that Denial be confessed by the Attorney General, this Man, whom the Law disables by his Attainder for an Offence of the highest Kind, from giving Testimony in any Case, the Attorney General would, by his bare Confession, restore to Credit, and enable to give Evidence in any Case.

This would be investing the Attorney General with a legislative Power; and that, I believe, your Lordships will scarcely think proper or reasonable.

Mr. FORD.

My Lords, I AM likewise assigned of Counsel for the Noble Lord at the Bar. And the Question before your Lordships is, Whether the Record, now produced, can be received in Evidence to repel the Objection that arises from the late Act of Parliament to Mr. Murray's Evidence?

By that Statute, he is actually attainted, unless he surrendered before the 12th of July 1746; and, if attainted, it is admitted by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, that he is incapable of being a Witness. My Lords, the great Consequence of Questions of this Nature is obvious to every one, the Justice of all Judicial Determinations depending intirely on the Veracity of Witnesses, who are to prove the Facts, upon which such Determinations are to be founded: And there can scarcely arise a Question relating to Evidence of greater Importance to any Man, than the present to the noble Lord at the Bar, whose Estate, Life, and Honours, depend on the Evidence that may be received against him; and therefore your Lordships will be particularly cautious that he shall not be affected by any but legal, unexceptionable Witnesses.

As to the Record now offered to be read, it consists only of a Plea by Mr. Murray, that he surrendered in due time; which Mr. Attorney General has thought proper to confess. And it is argued, That this Plea and Confession are proper Evidence, that such Surrender was made, and the Provision of the Act, so far as concerns Mr. Murray, absolutely defeated.

My Lords, how far such a Proceeding may bind the Crown is not material in the present Question; but whether it shall conclude the noble Prisoner, who is an absolute Stranger to it, and who never had any Opportunity of contesting the Truth of the Fact, is of the utmost Importance. The Attorney General, by his Office, prosecutes and defends the Causes of the Crown, and, as such, may make many Admissions to bind the Crown; but it would be extremely inconvenient, if such Admissions should conclude any body else. In some Cases they are totally disregarded; and therefore, if things are confessed as Errors in a Record, which appear not to be Errors, the Court, where such Record is depending, is bound to give Judgment against such Confession, and according to Law.

So, if a Matter of Fact is offered to be admitted, which the Court knows to be otherwise, it seems to be their Duty to reject such Admission; and therefore suppose, upon the Statute of Edw. VI. one outlawed for Treason should be brought into the King's Bench, in order to have Execution awarded upon the Outlawry, and should plead what the Court knows to be false, That he surrendered himself within the Year to the Chief Justice, according to that Statute, and the Attorney General should be disposed to confess it, ought not the Court to reject such an Admission? Or must they be concluded by what is well known to be untrue? Certainly the Court would not suffer such an Attempt to prevail.

In the present Case, there is nothing offered to your Lordships to prove Mr. Murray's Surrender, but the Record of what passed between him and the Attorney General in the King's Bench; and if this Record is permitted to be read, tho' the Contents of it should be absolutely untrue, yet, when once read, it will be conclusive Evidence of the Fact it imports, and no Proof can be admitted to contradict it; and, if it is Evidence to be received on this Occasion, it must be Evidence in all Courts, and on all Occasions, where a Question may arise about Mr. Murray's Attainder.

My Lords, Mr. Murray may have Estates, which by the Custom of the Manors where they lie, or by the Grant of the Crown, may belong to the Lords of those Manors. If his Surrender was not made in proper Time, all such Estates are forfeited to such Lords; and yet, if this Record is to be admitted, it will be Evidence, that cannot be contradicted by them, and must divest those Rights and Estates, which, by this Attainder, they were lawfully intitled to.

But the Mischief of permitting such a Record to be read will not stop here: For Purchasers likewise must be concluded by it; and therefore, though Lands may have been long since sold and enjoyed, under a Title arising from an Attainder of the same Nature with Mr. Murray's, yet, if this amicable Proceeding between the Attorney General and the Party attainted, is to prevail, no Purchaser, even at any Distance of Time, can be secure.

In this Light, the Point seems of very extensive Consequence: For it is to give the King's Attorney Power to do more by the Admission of a Fact, which perhaps may not be true, than the King, by a Pardon, can effect: For the King's Pardon cannot restore Lands forfeited to others; whereas, if the present Attempt should succeed, the Rights and Titles of Strangers may be destroyed, though never so justly founded.

My Lords, whether Mr. Murray surrendered, or not, is a Matter of Fact capable of Proof, is a Fact of the utmost Importance to the Prisoner; and therefore, as the Rule of Law is general, That nothing done or transacted between Two Persons shall prejudice a Third, who does not concur in the Act, nor has an Opportunity of contradicting it, the present Record, which, for any thing apparent, may be an entire Fiction, ought not to be received.

And, my Lords, supposing there was a Possibility of proving this Fact by Matter of Record, yet, by the constant Rule of Evidence, the Record produced seems improper to be read; because it is not the best Evidence the Nature of the Thing will admit of, and, for that Reason, is not the proper Record to prove the Point in Question.

That the Judge or Justice, to whom Mr. Murray surrendered himself, made a Record of such Surrender, cannot be doubted. It was his Duty so to do, and must be presumed to have been done; and therefore, if this Fact is proper to be proved by any Record, the Original made by such Magistrate, who took the Surrender, ought to be produced.

My Lords, it may be said, this Record in Question imports an Admission by the proper Officer of the Crown, of a Fact which he must be supposed to have inquired into, and has therefore admitted, because he finds it to be true.

My Lords, this Answer might have been given, if Mr. Attorney had, at this Bar, offered originally to confess the same thing.—And suppose the Record, now attempted to be read, had never existed; and, upon an Objection to Mr. Murray's Testimony, the Attorney General had said, Here, I have the King's Warrant to confess, that he surrendered before the 12th of July;—would your Lordships have received such an Admission?—Would you conclude yourselves by the Confession of a Fact, without knowing whether it was so, or not?—Would the Court have suffered the Force of an Act of Parliament to have been defeated by such an Acknowledgment?—Or, would not clear and positive Proof have been required of an actual Surrender?

My Lords, if it could, upon what Reason can such a Confession in the King's Bench, in an inferior Court, in the Absence of the Prisoner, who who may be prejudiced by it, be received in Evidence against him?—If it is true that Mr. Murray surrendered in proper Time, it may be easily proved; if it is not, the present Method, by which it is attempted to be proved, is a certain one to draw the Court into an Error about it.—Your Lordships must perceive the Danger of allowing such a Proceeding; how mischievous it may be to the Prisoner, to Lords of Manors, to Purchasers, to all Strangers, who never can have an Opportunity of disputing the Truth of it.—And therefore, whatever Effect it may have between the Crown and Mr. Murray, it is humbly submitted, that it ought not to be read against the Lord at the Bar.

Mr. HAMILTON GORDON.

My Lords,

I HAVE likewise the Honour to attend your Lordships, as one of the Counsel for the noble Lord at the Bar, whose Province it is to lay before your Lordships, and enforce, with all humble Submission, what may occur to them in his favour in point of Law: But the Two learned Gentlemen, who have gone before me, have spoken so fully, and discharged their Duty so well, that I should trespass upon your Lordships Time, and also do them Injustice, if I consumed much of it. Besides, my Lords, I am too diffident of my own Abilities to speak long upon a Question, which is involved in the particular Laws of this Country; and therefore I shall, with your Lordships Indulgence, confine my Endeavours to serve my Client, to a few general Observations, which, I humbly think, must naturally occur to every Man upon that Point, which the noble Lord at the Bar has taken the Liberty to propose to your Lordships by way of Objection.

The noble Prisoner at the Bar has objected, That Mr. Murray is not a competent Witness against him; or, in other Words, that, according to the Rules of Law, his Evidence ought not to be received. And, to maintain that Position, he has laid down another, namely, That the Record of the Court of King's Bench, which proceeds singly upon the bare Admission of his Majesty's Attorney General, unsupported by any Proof, ought not to be read as Evidence of Mr. Murray's Surrender, so as to qualify him to give Evidence upon this Trial.

As to the First, I humbly apprehend it to be wholly unnecessary to use any Arguments to prove, that, if those Proceedings in the King's Bench did not stand in the Way of the noble Lord at the Bar, Mr. Murray must, of course, have been rejected as an incompetent Witness.

It remains therefore only to be considered, Whether such Proceedings, transacted only between the Crown and Mr. Murray, can affect the Interest of a Third Person.

My Lords, the Consequences of this Question are of the greatest Importance to the Subjects in general; and although the noble Lord is more immediately concerned in it, yet if it should be determined, that this is proper Evidence to affect him, the like Evidence must be received against every other Subject of Great Britain; for the Law cannot distinguish between him and others: And I beg leave, my Lords, to say, that it appears from the Authorities, which have been cited by the other Gentlemen, and which have always been considered as of the greatest Weight in this Country, that the Admission of the Attorney General, or any other, cannot affect a Third Person; and I take it, my Lords, to be a general established Rule, that the Interest of one cannot be affected by the Admission of another.

My Lords, I apprehend, that my Lord Coke's Sense of this Matter is so extremely clear and obvious, that it requires no Explanation; and so is the Opinion of another great Lawyer, my Lord Chief Justice Hale.

My Lords, the Law gives an Opportunity to falsify the Verdict of Twelve Men, where a Third Party, from the Want of it, may be injured only in a pecuniary Matter; how much more reasonable is it therefore, that this kind of Agreement should be set aside, and held of no Consequence, in a Case where the Life, Fortune, and Honour, of a noble Lord is concerned?

My Lords, I would humbly ask, What Kind of Acquittal was this? Not an Acquittal by Verdict, the legal Acquittal in this Kingdom; but by a bare Consent; a Consent that surely has not Force enough to repeal an Act of Parliament.

My Lords, the only Way the Act of Parliament left for Mr. Murray to avoid the Consequences of an Attainder, was the Performance of a Condition; that is, surrendering himself within a Time limited.

Now, I would suppose that this Act had been a Deed granting an Estate on a certain Condition, must not that Condition have been performed truly and effectually? Certainly it must, by the Rule laid down by Lord Coke. Shall not Acts of Parliament, therefore, be as strictly complied with as common Deeds and Conveyances? Surely the Gentlemen of the House of Commons will hardly deny it. Consequently the Attorney General could not, by any Consent of his, make this Record in the King's Bench tantamount to an actual Surrender.

Suppose, my Lords, the Act had attainted Mr. Murray of Felony instead of Treason, could this Admission of Mr. Attorney General have deprived the Lord of the Lands which would have escheated to him? No, my Lords, it could not, if any Regard is to be paid to the Rule laid down in 5 Coke 96. That the Estates of Third Persons shall not be divested by colorable or covinous Payments, but by such as are true and effectual. And what are Payments but Performances of Conditions? And the same Law that guides one, will the other.

The Fact is not as the Record states it; the Attorney General's Consent, which is the Fiat for this Record, was a Consent after the Impeachment of the noble Lord. I wish it rather had preceded it.

My Lords, if Mr. Murray had held by Copyhold from the noble Lord at the Bar, and had been attainted, the noble Lord would have been intitled to the Escheat or Forfeiture of those Lands; and no Admission of the Attorney General's could defeat him of it, any more than it could in the Case of a Forfeiture of Lands in a County Palatine, where the Grantee of the Crown became intitled to the Benefit of it. Shall therefore, my Lords, such Admission be permitted to affect the Life, Honours, and Fortune of the noble Lord at the Bar? or, indeed, of any other in his unhappy Situation? No, surely; for it is against the common known Principles of Law, and of Reason too, that a Man shall be attainted as to some Circumstances, and free from Attainder as to others; that he shall be incapable to hold his Lands or Chattels, and yet be restored in Credit, so as to affect the Life of an Innocent Man; for such, till Conviction, every one is, by Law, presumed to be: I say, my Lords, this is a Construction to unprecedented and new, that, we hope, it will never receive the Sanction of your Lordships.

My Lords, I hope your Lordships will never countenance the Admission of such an Evidence, an Evidence who is so strongly agitated by the Hope of Pardon, and Fear of Punishment; that, to procure the one, and avoid the other, he may give up all Sense of Honour, Humanity, and Justice.

My Lords, as the learned Gentlemen, who spoke before me on the same Side, have made it unnecessary for me to add any thing more, I shall not give your Lordships any further Trouble at present; and I beg your Lordships Pardon for that which I have already given you. But, if any Reply should be necessary to what shall be offered by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, I hope we shall have your Lordships Indulgence.

Lord High Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, You may proceed.

Mr. ATTORNEY-GENERAL

My Lords,

THE Managers do not dispute the Prisoner's Right to any good Objection against the Competency of the Witness, or insist, that it is not equally proper before your Lordships on this Impeachment, as it would be on a Trial in the ordinary Courts of Justice. But they dispute the Validity of the Objection, upon its own proper legal Foundation.

As the Objection is to the Reading this Record, the mere Stating of the Question will be an Answer to it, and obviate or refute every Argument used in support of it.

The original Objection was against Mr. Murray's being examined as a Witness, upon the Supposition of his standing attainted of High-Treason by the late Act, in not surrendering within the Time prescribed. The Managers allowed the Consequence, if the Allegation of his Attainder were true, as that would render him infamous, not as it would prove him guilty of Treason; for the Guilt alone, without the Attainder, would not render him incompetent, it being a clear established Point, that even a particeps criminis may be a Witness, to prove the Guilt of those who joined with him in the same Crime: And your Lordships, in the late Trial of the Lord Balmerino, admitted that Sort of Evidence. But the Managers answered the Objection, by denying the Attainder; and produced this Record, to shew the Surrender pursuant to the Act, which attaints him only on Condition of his not surrendering within the Time limited. This Record is of a Proceeding commenced on the Part of the Crown, on the Foot of this very Act, in the proper Court of Justice, against the Witness, and defended, on the Part of the Witness, by this Surrender; and that Defence and Surrender confessed by the Attorney General, by Warrant from the Crown; and this allowed by the Court, who, instead of awarding Execution against him, remanded him to Prison, where he now remains forthcoming to Justice, according to the Act.

Now, to say that such a Record, relating to the precise Point in question, cannot be read to disprove the supposed Attainder, and support the Competency of the Witness, would be to deny one of the first Principles of Evidence; and therefore the Counsel, aware of the Absurdity, have not ventured in Terms to assert a Proposition so contrary to the known Law of the Land, as that such a Record is not proper to be read; but seem rather, in the Way of Argument, to deny the Consequence of it when read, and have insisted on Reasons that tend to shew that it is not conclusive Evidence; and therefore, that the Fact of the Surrender may be still controverted by Evidence on the Side of the Prisoner, rather than that it is no Evidence at all.

Though this is more properly a subsequent Question, and a very different one in its Nature, yet, in the present Case, it is really, and in Effect, the same, and the necessary Consequence of the other: For to insist, that this Record is not conclusive Proof of Mr. Murray's not being attainted by that Act, must proceed on this Supposition, that he may still be held attainted under the Act, notwithstanding this Record. But, I presume, your Lordships will upon no Terms be induced to admit of that Suggestion, when it is considered, that the certain Effect of it must be, that he may be called up again for Execution, and put a Second Time on the Defence of his Life against the same Charge.

But to consider the Grounds, on which the Objection has been attempted to be supported,

There are Two general Reasons insisted on; one, That the Surrender insisted on in Behalf of the Witness, when he was brought before the Court of King's Bench, was neither proved to the Court, nor found by a Jury; but only confessed by the Attorney General: The other, that the noble Lord was himself no Party to the Record; and therefore not to be affected by it.

As to the First, in order to support that Reason, a Distinction is attempted to be set up between the Case of a Fact, on which a Judgment is grounded, appearing by a Verdict or Evidence, and where it appears only by the Confession of the Party; and it is said, That in the former Case it may, but in the latter, cannot be conclusive to any other Persons but those who were Parties.

And, for this Purpose, the Authorities of my Lord Chief Justice Coke and Lord Hale, and others, are cited, to shew the Difference, in point of Consequence to Third Persons, between an Attainder by Verdict, or by Confession; that, in the one Case, the Crime may be disputed by a Purchaser under the attainted Person; but, in the other, it cannot, though the Time of the Commission of it may.

It will be unnecessary for me to enter minutely into the nice Disquisition, How far, and for what Purposes, the Crime appearing on an Attainder, may be controverted by Strangers, whose Interest is affected by it; because I am satisfied your Lordships will see, that the Distinctions on that Head are totally foreign to the present Question; and one single Observation would be sufficient to make that manifest; that is, that none of the Cases cited, or that can be cited, prove, that any Stranger can controvert the Attainder itself, whether founded on a Verdict or Confession.

or by Default; and it is the Attainder, and not the Crime, that is the only material Thing on the present Objection.

All that will be necessary, therefore, upon this Point, will be to shew, that the Confession, in this Case, binds the Crown; and that, if it does, there is no Attainder. The Inference will then follow of Course, that the Record may be read, to prove Murray not attainted, as the precise Point to be proved in Answer to the Objection to his Competency.

The Authority of the Attorney General to confess the Truth of the Plea of Surrender, has not been directly denied by the Counsel; but as they have seemingly, in Consequence, done it, and the clear Establishment of that Right, in this Case, will, by certain Inference, establish the Right to read this Record, I shall state a little to your Lordships how that Authority stands, upon the Nature and Reason of the Thing, and the known constant Practice.

The Law and Constitution has intrusted the Crown, as the executive Power, with the Prosecution of Crimes; and though oftentimes such Prosecutions are carried on by private Persons, even those are, for the most part, in the Name of the Crown.

But those, as well as Civil Suits, may be commenced sometimes without a just Foundation, and the Party sued may have a just Defence to the one as well as the other. Where that appears, it is equally just, in both Cases, to put a Stop to them; and as a Subject-Plaintiff may confess the Defendant's Plea; so may the Crown, by the Attorney General, its proper Officer, confess the Prisoner's Defence; and such Confession, in both Cases, is, and ought to be, both in Law and natural Justice, a Security against future Action or Prosecution for the same Cause. Nor is there any Reason that can be given for the Power in the Case of a Subject, but what will hold equally strong, and stronger, in the Case of the Crown, as there could not be a greater Grievance to the Subjects in general, than to have it established as a Rule, that, when once a criminal Prosecution is commenced, the Defendant, how innocent soever, or how willing soever to make Satisfaction, must be put to the Vexation of a Trial, or the Charge of a Pardon, which might, in many Cases, be his Ruin. And how strange would it appear to say, that the King might not do the same Justice to Innocence, that every honest Man would do? or that he might not, for such wise and gracious Reasons as would induce him to grant a Pardon after Sentence, stop the Proceedings in the ordinary Course of Law, before they come to Sentence?

To avoid these Absurdities, the Law intrusts the proper Officer, the Attorney General, with the Power of confessing a Defendant's Plea, where it appears to be true, in Charges of a lesser Nature, and, in the higher, by the immediate Warrant of the Crown; and such Confession has the Effect it ought to have of an absolute Discharge; and, I should imagine, Nobody, who thinks of it for a Moment, would, for the Sake of the Subject, wish it otherwise.

And, my Lords, this has been the constant Practice, not only in Criminal Prosecutions, properly so called, but in all Crown Causes even for Civil Rights: And whoever has had the Honour of serving the Crown in the Office of Attorney General must have eased the Subject on that Head, when, on Applications by the Parties sued, and Attendances by the Officers of that Branch of the Revenue which is in question, the Plea has appeared to be a just one, and both the Crown and the Subject find their Account in this Method of Proceeding, in the Expence and Delay that are saved by it; and such Confession, being recorded, has, to all Intents, the same Effect, as if, on Issue joined, a Jury had found the Fact to be what the Attorney General confessed.

The Practice is the same in criminal Cases, where the Attorney General confesses the Plea, whether it be to the Merits of the Charge, or only in order to let the Defendant into an Opportunity of trying those Merits.

There is one sort of Case frequently happens, very parallel to the present, where a Person is outlawed for Treason or Felony, which amounts in Law to an Attainder for the Crime, and equally affects the Party, both as to his Life and Estate, as on a Verdict. The Party having no way of coming at the Trial, but by reversing the Outlawry by Writ of Error, which cannot be allowed without his Majesty's Consent, it is a frequent Practice to apply for that Indulgence; and it is very easily granted, provided there has been no great Delay. If the Party assigns an Error in Fact, as he may, the Attorney General confesses it, if true; and the Outlawry is reversed, and the Attainder avoided by it. And no one ever doubted, but the Record of that Reversal is conclusive Proof of his not being attainted.

Nay, the Crown has sometimes directed the Attorney General to confess Errors in Fact, as the Party's being beyond Sea at the time of the Outlawry, which have not been true; only that he may have an Opportunity of taking his Trial, and not suffer for a Default in not appearing only. And no Lawyer ever said, that such a Confession was not as effectual to avoid the Outlawry, as the Verdict of a Jury impanelled to try it.

And if, in the present Case, the Truth was, That Mr. Murray did not actually surrender, but was apprehended before the Day; and that should be thought, in Strictness, not a Compliance with the Act; and the Attorney General was now prosecuting for the Crown only; I believe he would be under no Difficulty of owning the Truth, or apprehensive, that your Lordships would say, that the Confession was either illegal or unequitable; or that, when the End of the Act was answered, by Mr. Murray's being ready to take his Trial, it was not agreeable to his Majesty's Royal Justice and Clemency, to remove the only Impediment to his having it. Nor can the Exercise of this Power be objected to from any Reasons but what would equally affect the Exercise of that great and excellent Prerogative of Pardoning.

What I have now said will fully shew, that the Cases cited are not applicable to the present: They are the Cases of innocent Purchasers, whose Estates were to be lost by the subsequent Attainder, and supposed Guilt, of the Vendors.

It would be unjust in itself, not to give them an Opportunity of defending their Property, by controverting the Fact on which it depended.

The Law, in Conformity to natural Justice, gives them, in some Cases Liberty of disputing the Crime itself, where the Conviction is by Confession; and the time of the Commission, where it is by Verdict: But, in those Cases, the Question was a Matter of Property between the Crown and an innocent Subject, and depended on the Crime's being committed before or after the Purchase, and not merely on the Attainder, which would stand good, let that Question be determined either Way; but, in the present Case, the Question is on the Incompetency of a Witness, which depends solely on his Attainder, and not on the Reality, or Time, of his Crime. Therefore, to make a parallel Case, it must be said, that if the Attorney General had confessed a Plea of Not Guilty to an Indictment of Treason, and the Prisoner, being thereupon acquitted, should be brought as a Witness either in a Criminal or Civil Suit, his Competency might be objected to, and the Objection supported by Proof of his actual Guilt: But this cannot be pretended; the contrary is so clear, that if he had never been indicted or acquitted, the clearest Proof of his Crime could not be admitted for this Purpose; and no Evidence can, in any Case, establish such an Objection, but a Record of an Attainder.

The only Colour of Distinction between the Case put, and the present, is, that the Attainder here appears prima facie, and must be avoided by a Surrender to be proved. This is true; and therefore puts the Proof on us, to remove the Objection; and it is for that Reason this Record is offered as the proper Proof: And, as in the Case where the Proof lies on the Side of the Objection, the Record of the Attainder is the proper Evidence; so in this, where it lies on the Side of the Witness, the Record of his Surrender is the direct Proof that he is not attainted.

My Lords, I come now to the Second Reason given for the Objection, That the Prisoner is no Party to this Record; and I shall have Occasion to say very little upon this, because it is, in Effect, answered by the first Reason insisted on by the Counsel themselves; which supposes, if the Surrender had been found by Verdict, the Record would be proper Evidence; and yet the Prisoner would then have been equally no Party. This, therefore, destroys the Rule and Supposition on which this Reason is founded, which is, that no Record can be read against a Man to which he was no Party; and, indeed, there is not, nor can be, any such Rule; it is most notoriously otherwise in the very Instance in question, of the Incompetency of a Witness, on account of his Attainder, which never can be proved by any thing but the Record; and yet the Party to be prejudiced by it neither is, nor can be, a Party to it.

The noble Lord is controverting no Property on the Foundation of Mr. Murray's supposed Attainder; he neither claims or defends any Right that is demanded on the Foundation of his Discharge; the Record has no more relation to him than to all the World; and if the Witness is disabled as to him, he is so with respect to all Mankind, and in all Causes Civil or Criminal, and must be put on the Trial of his Surrender, as often as he shall be called upon during his Life, to give his Testimony in any Court, and in any Suit. What Absurdities this would be attended with, I need not mention; your Lordships will be beforehand with me, in suggesting them to your own Thoughts.

Sir JOHN STRANGE.

My Lords,

THE Question arising upon the Objection made by the noble Lord at the Bar, is not what the Consequence of this Record will be, when it is read, but singly, Whether we shall be now admitted to read it, or no? My Lords, the Objection made by the noble Lord at the Bar against this Witness, was founded upon this Record. My Lords, it was called for, and read; which was the Act of Parliament made in the last Sessions, for the Attainder of several Persons; and, my Lords, upon that Sort of Attainder no Writ of Error could lie; and therefore, my Lords, there was no other Way to take off the Force of that Attainder, that was warrantable, than the Method taken in the present Case. And, my Lords, I must submit it to your Lordships, whether we are not intitled to read what we now call for, not as a distinct Record, but as Part of the whole Record relating to the Person now at your Lordships Bar; for the Record must come before your Lordships in all its Parts: Nobody can call for a particular Part of a Record to be read, but the Whole must be laid before your Lordships; and therefore, my Lords, I beg Leave to contend, that this is Part of the Record of the Proceedings against the Person whom we now call upon as a Witness, which the noble Lord at the Bar himself called for. My Lords, what the Consequence of it will be afterwards, is a Question of another Nature; but I must submit it to your Lordships, that as Part of the Record of the Proceedings against Mr. Murray, we are certainly intitled to have it read.

My Lords, One Objection taken by the Gentlemen on the other Side, is, That it is not the Record of the proper Jurisdiction, but that it ought to be a Record made by the Person to whom Mr. Murray surrendered himself: But, my Lords, I must beg Leave to submit it to your Lordships, by Way of Answer, That it is the Record of a proper Jurisdiction, in a Case of this Nature. My Lords, the Court of King's-Bench, as a Court of criminal Jurisdiction, may have Offenders of all Sorts brought before them. My Lords, in the present Case, a Certiorari issues out of Chancery, and by Mittimus the Record is removed into the King's-Bench: And I will call upon the Counsel for the impeached Lord, if they will venture to say, that a Certiorari will not lie for that Purpose. My Lords, if it will lie, it must be for some End or Purpose that a Certiorari was brought, and the Record transmitted thither; that was the proper Jurisdiction, and that Court then had a Right to call upon the Party brought up before them by Habeas Corpus, to know what he had to say, why Execution should not be awarded, upon the Footing of the Attainder by this Act of Parliament? My Lords, the Question was put by that Court to the Person who was then a Prisoner before them: He pleaded a Surrender within the Time; and insisted, that there he was amenable to Justice: He alleges, that as a proper Answer to that Court, upon the Question asked him; and whether it was, or was not a proper Answer, depended upon the Fact. The Court could have no Doubt, but if the Party surrendered himself in Time, and was amenable to Justice, but that was an Answer to their demanding to know of him, why Execution should not be awarded against him? And, my Lords, if that Fact had not been verified in a legal Way, there must have been Execution awarded; but if legal Satisfaction was given by the then Prisoner, it was the Duty of that Court to record that as a Matter of Fact, which was properly verified before them. And, my Lords, there are two Ways of verifying Matters of Fact; one is by the actual Proof of the Fact (if the other Party denies it), or by Confession; and if the Party knows that he cannot in Conscience deny it, then he ought to confess it, and not put the other to the Expence and Trouble of proving that which he knows to be true: If you know that to be Fact, that the Party surrendered himself to Justice, and was forthcoming, will any body say, that it is not right and just, to admit that Fact as alleged? Therefore, my Lords, the Question of Fact in this Case has been properly determined by that Court; the Consequence of which is, that That Court ought to make a Record of it; and that is to be considered, not as a distinct, separate Record of itself, but as the Proceeding upon this Record of this Act of Parliament, which had thus been removed there by Certiorari; and it is, to all intents and Purposes of Law, to be considered as a Record of the Proceedings; and they are to be considered as having the former Proceedings before them, upon the same Record; and all Courts are bound to admit that Record, which was thus made in a Court of legal Proceeding: and therefore, my Lords, if that Court was the proper Jurisdiction, can any body say, that the Record of what was there transacted is not as proper Evidence as what the Noble Lord at the Bar has called for, and which has been read to your Lordships, which is the Act of Attainder of the last Sessions of Parliament? My Lords, the Gentlemen on the other Side say, that this is an erroneous Method: Say they, you have not gone to the proper Person; here is a particular Jurisdiction to record a Surrender, and you should have gone to the Justice of Peace to whom the Surrender was made. My Lords, I have looked upon the Act of Parliament, to see what the Legislature had thought proper to prescribe, as the Duty of the Justice of Peace to whom the Surrender is directed to be made.

My Lords, all that is required of him by this Act of Parliament is, he is, upon the Surrender, to commit the Person so surrendering to Prison, for the High-Treason, there to remain till he is discharged by due Course of Law; and he is immediately to give Notice of it to the Secretary of State. Your Lordships will then be pleased to consider, what it is that the Gentlemen insist upon: My Lords, will any body say, that what is mentioned in this Act of Parliament, in regard to the Justice of Peace, will take away the Jurisdiction from a Supreme Court of Original Jurisdiction, in Cases of that Kind; and that without a Word being mentioned in the Act concerning it?

My Lords, they say, That the Jurisdiction of recording the Surrender is given to the Justice of Peace, though the Act of Parliament does not say a Word of his doing any Thing of this Nature: And, my Lords, if the Act of Parliament had made him the proper Person, whose Duty it was to record the Surrender, to what Purpose is he to send an Account of it to the Secretary of State? Was he to make up the Record? No; all the Justice of Peace was to do, was to give Notice of the Transaction before him, to those Persons who are appointed to do what shall be done upon such a Surrender. My Lords, there is something that was said by the Counsel for the Noble Lord at the Bar, which I will only just take Notice of: They were pleased to put this Case: Say they, Suppose this Record is now to stand, it is a Matter transacted, to which the Noble Lord at the Bar is no Party, and consequently ought not to be read against him. My Lords, I will venture to say, there is no such general Rule; Nobody will contend (because there are numberless Instances of it), that Records are not constantly permitted to be read as Evidence against Persons who are no Parties to them. My Lords, Suppose a Man is charged with having harboured a Person attainted of Treason or Felony; and, when he comes to be tried, say they, Gentlemen, you shall not read the Record of that Person's Attainder, because the Man now charged is no Party to it: Do not charge me with receiving or harbouring a Man attainted by that Record; for though the Record may be read as against him, yet it cannot be read against the Person charged, who was no Party to it. My Lords, Would any Court of Justice make the least Difficulty in admitting such a Record to be read? My Lords, the Reason of the Thing itself speaks it; for till the Record is read, it does not appear there is any Person attainted; and consequently no Charge against the Prisoner. And, my Lords, to make it a Civil Case, suppose a Lord of a Manor claims by Escheat the Estate of a Person attainted, and another Lord claims the same Estate, cannot the Record of the Person's Attainder be read as Evidence in that Case, though neither of them are Parties to it? My Lords, there can be no Doubt but it may; and therefore, my Lords, that Objection has no Force upon the present Question. My Lords, the Objection now made is to the reading of a Record, or Part of a Record, which the Noble Lord at the Bar himself called for; and I must submit it to your Lordships, that we are entitled to have it now read: What the Consequence of reading of it will be, is not now to be considered; for we argue singly upon the Question, Whether it shall be now read, or no?

Mr. SOLLICITOR GENERAL.

My Lords,
WHETHER the Record which has been opened may be read at all; and what shall be the Effect of it, after it is read (I mean, whether it may be falsified), are two separate and distinct Considerations.

Your Lordships were pleased to ask the Noble Lord at the Bar, and his Counsel, Whether they would rest their Objection to the reading of it? or suffer it to be read, and then object to the Consequence of it?

They chose to object to the Reading; and the Counsel were allowed to speak to that Point only: And yet there is not an Authority they have quoted, which don't prove, that at least it must be read.

The Competency of all Evidence, in a great Measure, depends upon the Nature of the Question to which it is applied; for that is Evidence in one Case, and to one Purpose, which is not so in another Kind of Case, or to another Sort of Purpose.

The Merits of this Objection, therefore, will depend upon thoroughly understanding the Purpose for which this Record is produced.

The Incapacity of a Person attainted to give Testimony, does not arise from his Life being thereby in the Power of the King; or any Presumption, that, through the Fear of Death, he may be induced to exceed the Bounds of Truth; but it is one of those many Incapacities which are the Consequences of his Attainder.

He is cut off from the Community; his Blood is corrupted; he loses his Credit; and therefore can be a Witness in no Case, neither for or against a Prosecution, nor in any Civil Suit between Subject and Subject.

All Proceedings upon which a Man can be attainted, at the Common Law, are between the King and the Party only: But such Proceedings are Evidence, and the only Evidence to prove the Attainder between all Persons, and upon all Occasions; which shews the Mistake the Gentlemen proceed upon, when they object, that my Lord Lovat was no Party to this Record; and therefore it shall not be read against him.

The Party who objects to a Witness, because he is attainted, undertakes to shew, that, according to the Course of the publick Law and Justice of the Nation, he is so; and therefore may read any Proceedings in the Course of that publick Law, to prove it.

So likewise, in Answer to the Objection, and to shew the Person not attainted, any of the like Proceedings may be read.

If a Conviction and Judgment is read, it may be answered by reading the Reversal of that Judgment upon a Writ of Error; and yet the King must be the only Party to both these Proceedings.

The likeliest Case to the present, at Common Law, is that of an Outlawry.

If an Outlawry is produced, to prove a Man attainted, the Reversal of that Outlawry may be given in Evidence, as a full Answer to that Proof: And yet most of those Reversals in High-Treason, are grounded upon the Attorney General's confessing an Error in Fact, by the King's Command; and this generally is a merciful Confession, contrary to the Truth of the Case: Several Noble Families now enjoy their Honours, and their Estates, by virtue of such Reversals.

I will not mention Instances; as your Lordships have the Assistance of the Judges, I am persuaded they will inform your Lordships, that there are many. Would an Objection be endured to the reading such a Reversal?

The present Case is that of a Parliamentary Outlawry, if I may so call it: Persons fled from Justice are attainted in a more expeditious and summary Way than could be done by the Course of the Common Law, unless they come in, and take their Trials within a limited Time.

The only Court in this Part of the Kingdom, which can award Execution against a Person, as attainted within this Act, is the Court of King's Bench: There can be no Party to such Proceedings but the King, who is intrusted with the whole Execution of the publick Law of the Nation. A Proceeding, therefore, in that Court, which shews a Man never to have been attainted within the Act, is Evidence to answer an Objection, which says, he is. It proves conclusively, that, in the Eye and Consideration of the publick Law, he is not an attainted Man; he may inherit, he may purchase; he can't be put to Death. By this Proceeding the King is bound for ever; all Magistrates are bound; no Judicature can now consider the Witnes in any other Light than he ought to be considered in, if the Act had never been made. It is possible then to doubt, whether (in Answer to an Objection, that by the Law of the Land this Witness is now looked upon as an attainted Man) a Record should be read, which proves, that by the Law of the Land he is not looked upon as an attainted Man? He is either a Person liable to all the Consequences of an Attainder, or none.

Mr. NOEL.

My Lords,

I SHALL be very short in offering my Sentiments to your Lordships upon the present Question, because three learned and able Gentlemen have already spoken very fully to it.

My Lords, The Question arises upon an Objection taken by the Noble Lord at the Bar, against the Competency of Mr. Murray's Testimony, as he stands attainted by the Act of the last Sessions of Parliament, which has been read to your Lordships: But after that, another Objection arose, in consequence of what we, on the Part of the Prosecution, offered, which was a Record we proposed to be read: To the reading of which the Noble Lord objected, and has relied upon that Objection, that it cannot be read at all.

My Lords, I was surpris'd at that Objection; and the Counsel for the Noble Lord have been so sensible, that there was no great Weight in it, that they have prematurely, in the Course of their Arguments, run into a Debate concerning the Force and Effect of it when read, and not to the actual reading of it; and, my Lords, it was a very strange Proposition to be insisted on before your Lordships, that in a Question relating to Mr. Murray, and him alone, when an Objection is made to his Testimony, that he stands attainted by an Act of Parliament, that your Lordships should shut your Eyes, and not receive Evidence of the Proceedings of a Court, having proper Jurisdiction to determine any Question which might arise upon that Act of Parliament: I say, my Lords, that would be a most extraordinary Thing indeed, when the Objection relates to Mr. Murray, upon the Attainder by Act of Parliament; and yet, they say, your Lordships shall not see the Record of the Proceedings of a Court of Justice, founded upon that Act of Parliament. But, my Lords, as the Gentlemen have, under a Notion of considering this Objection in some Degree, considered the Force of the Record itself, if it had been read, tho' they have done it improperly, yet I doubt it will be expected, that we should take Notice of the Foundation of that Argument.

The Question, therefore, seems to be, Whether Mr. Murray is to be considered under the Act, and the Proceedings in the Court of King's Bench upon it, as an attainted Person, or not.

My Lords, the Act of Parliament does not finally conclude any Person: It names several Persons, whom the Act declares shall be attainted by the Force of that Law, unless they comply with the Terms expressed in it; and the proper Court of Law must judge, when the Person comes before them, them, whether he was a Person within the Meaning of the Act of Parliament, or not. Therefore, my Lords, when he was before a Court, who had proper Jurisdiction upon that Question, Whether he was an attainted Person, or not, and they have determined that Question, That he was not, then there is an End of that Question. But it has been said, That this may affect, in consequence, the Property of a third Person; and that the Noble Lord at the Bar ought not to be affected by the Proceedings in the King's-Bench. But I apprehend this Question relates personally to Mr. Murray, and to no other. It is merely a Question as to his Capacity or Incapacity; that is, whether he be attainted or no, and therefore, my Lords, that distinguishes this Case from the Cases of private Property, alluded to by the Counsel for the Noble Lord in the Course of their Argument.

My Lords, I beg Leave to state this Matter in a stronger Light: If your Lordships shall say, That Mr. Murray is an attainted Person, you must likewise say, that he is liable to have Execution awarded against him upon this Act; for, when that is the Question, it must be considered in-tire, with all its Consequences.

My Lords, if no Execution can be awarded against him, your Lordships cannot say, that he is an attainted Person: Therefore your Lordships see what Difficulties will ensue, if you should determine, that he stands attainted, with respect to the Noble Lord at the Bar, but not to the Consequences that the Law draws from his being an attainted Person. My Lords, it would be the strangest Case in the World, if that should be your Lordships Sentiments, that he is not attainted in one Respect, and yet that he is attainted in another Respect.

My Lords, the Counsel for the Noble Lord object, That the Proceeding which has been had, has been by the Confession of the Attorney General, though they admit it was in the Power of the Crown to make such Confession. I must submit it to your Lordships, that though it is by the Confession of the Attorney General, as it is by proper Authority, and in a legal Court, having proper Jurisdiction, that it is as effectual and binding upon the Crown as any Act they can possibly do: And can your Lordships say, that Mr. Murray shall not have the Benefit of a legal Proceeding of a Court of Justice, having complete and lawful Jurisdiction, and who have determined the Case?

My Lords, it is said, That there is some Difference where it is upon the Confession of the Attorney General, and where it is founded upon a Verdict. My Lords, your Lordships will consider what are the Circumstances of the Case in regard to that Matter: A Gentleman is brought before a Court of Justice, to answer why Execution should not be awarded against him upon a supposed Attainder. He pleads a Fact that is sufficient, if true, to exempt him from that Attainder: Can the Gentleman say, that he must not avail himself of it, because the Attorney General will not put him to the Expence to prove it? My Lords, it is said, that if he had denied the Plea, the Consequence to Mr. Murray must have been, that he would not have appeared to have been a Person exempted from the Act? No: But, say they, because the Attorney General and the Crown are satisfied of the Truth of the Plea, and will not put him upon proving it, therefore he is not to have the Benefit of the Judgment of the Court upon that Question. I must submit it to your Lordships, that every Man, under those Circumstances, would be in a most fatal Situation, and that it would be attended with very bad Consequences. A Man is asked, what he has to say why Execution should not be awarded against him; and pleads a Fact that actually will clear him from the Attainder: The Attorney General confesses the Plea, does not join Issue, and will not give him an Opportunity of proving it; and, my Lords, what is to be the Consequence? Why, according to this Doctrine, he must inevitably be condemned as a Person attainted; whereas, if he had been put to the Proof of it, it might have been determined, that he was not attainted. I apprehend your Lordships will not suffer them to draw that Inference, that, because the Attorney General has not put him to the Proof of his Plea, he is to be considered as a Person attainted, contrary to the Judgment of the Court.

SIR RICHARD LLOYD.

My Lords,

THE Question has been so fully spoken to already, that I shall not have Occasion to take up much of your Lordships Time: But I cannot forbear expressing my Surprise at the Objection now made, viz. "That this Record cannot be read against the Noble Lord at the Bar:" The Reason given for which is, that he is no Party to it. Many Answers have been given; and I will not repeat them: But shall offer a Consideration or two to your Lordships, in order to shew that the Force and Effect of Mr. Murray's Attainder has been, by this Transaction on Record, totally taken off.

My Lords, the whole Argument on the Prisoner's Side is in this Compass; viz. they say, that Mr. Murray (the Person produced by us as a Witness, is still attainted; and therefore, by the Rules of Law, cannot be a Witness: And 'tis certainly true, that if he stands now attainted, he cannot, by our Law, be admitted to give Testimony. Let us come then to that Question, Does he, or does he not, at this Hour, stand attainted by virtue of the late Statute?

It cannot be doubted, but that a Parliamentary Attainder of this Sort may be dissolved by some Method or other; and the very Statute directs one Way; viz. by Surrender before a particular Day; and the only Way to ascertain that Fact is a Judgment on Record, that he did surrender.

I would ask the Counsel, for the Noble Prisoner, whether Mr. Murray can by Law be called to Judgment for that High-Treason for which he was by the late Act attainted? They must own, that this Record of Surrender would be an absolute Defence on such an Occasion; nay, it would be an absolute Bar to such a Demand of Judgment. If this Defence would not be his Security, the Consequence is, that there would be no Method at all of getting rid of such an Attainder.

It has been objected, that though this may be a good Discharge betwixt the Crown and Mr. Murray, yet it ought not to affect others, who are not Parties to that Proceeding. My Lords, 'tis true, others may be affected by Mr. Murray's being restored to his Credit. But that is no Objection; for though by virtue of this Record he is so restored, yet that is only a Consequence, which necessarily follows from the Facts ascertained by that Record. The Proceeding on the Record was a legal Transaction between the Crown and Mr. Murray, and no other Person whatsoever had a Right to be a Party to it. The King, at the Time of Mr. Murray's pleading on the Record, was the only Person to call him to account for his Guilt: The only Controversy at that Time was betwixt the Crown and the Party called down to Judgment: The Matter therefore being a legal Transaction, a Law Controversy betwixt the only proper Parties, its necessary Consequences must follow, let who may be affected.

But 'tis said, "That if it had been found by Verdict, that Mr. Murray had surrendered in due Time, then the Record might have been read in Evidence against all Persons; but that, as 'tis founded on Mr. Attorney General's Confession of the Surrender, it ought not." This is a strange Distinction. I would ask the Gentlemen who make it, whether this Record by Confession is not a full and complete Record? Has not his Majesty's Attorney a Right to confess it? No Lawyer will say, that he has not such a Right by the Laws of our Land.

My Lords, let me argue this Matter, not on the Principles of Law only, but on those of Reason, abstracted from the Law; and thence see, whether Mr. Murray is not as much discharged from his Attainder, or his Attainder as much avoided, by this Confession of the King by his Attorney, as he would be by Verdict.

Is the King the only Person in the Kingdom, who shall be compelled to say a Thing is not true, which he knows to be true? Or, is his Majesty the only Person who shall be hindered from owning that to be true upon Record, which he and all the World knows is true?

'Tis a Point of legal Controversy betwixt the Crown and one of his Subjects; and supposing it to have been a Fact notorious, that Mr. Murray (the Defendant in that Controversy) had come in and surrendered in due Time according to the late Act, would it not be absurd to say, that the Crown's Attorney should be bound by Law to say, that he did not surrender? i. e. shall be bound to deny and put to Trial a Fact, which he knows is indisputably true, and needs no Trial? Yet this, my Lords, must be the Doctrine to be maintained by the Counsel for the Noble Prisoner; or else they must agree, that this Record of the Fact of Surrender, by Confession of the Attorney General, is of equal Weight with any other Record whatsoever.

My Lords, his Majesty has a Right to the Life of every Person attainted; and would it not be a cruel Law, that should prevent him from admitting any Facts to be true, which such Person insists on for the saving his Life, when the same, within his own Knowledge, strictly are so?

There is no Doubt but that a Transaction of this Kind betwixt Subject and Subject is good, where each Party to a Controversy (Plaintiffs and Defendants) admit such Facts on the Record, which they know the Certainty of, and never, unless out of a Spirit of Perverseness, put them in Issue. Where is the Difference, since the Crown and Mr. Murray are, as to that Matter then in Controversy, the only Persons who could be Parties? The Capacity to be a Witness is only a Consequence naturally flowing from the Avoidance of the Attainder. Mr. Murray is not restored to his Credit by Act of Favour, but a necessary Consequence of Law, and such as the Crown could not prevent; for as the Attainder was the only Cause of his Loss of Capacity to be a Witness; when the Force of that is taken off, that Capacity is of Course restored, not out of Favour, but of strict Right, and by necessary Consequence.

My Lords, I would ask one Question; viz. Whether the Counsel for the Noble Lord at the Bar will say, that Mr. Murray has this present Day any Attainder against him? Or whether he can ever be called again to answer on the Foot of that Parliamentary Attainder, in which he was included?

If he cannot, as most certainly he cannot, then there is nothing now existing which takes away his Testimony; and as the present Record is of a Controversy betwixt the only proper Parties to it, and is produced only to manifest a Fact then depending, and then by the Rules of Law ascertained, it ought to be read.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, I suppose you have no Objection to the Counsels replying.

Sir John Strange. No, my Lords; provided we have the last Word; which is our Right.

MR. FORRESTER.

My Lords,

I Shall take up the less of your Lordships Time at present, because I admit most of the Propositions laid down by the learned Managers; though I conceive that none of them have answered the Objection we made to the Reading of this Record, which was the Possibility of Damage that might ensue to the Noble Lord at the Bar. My Lords, the Reason is plain why we object to it, because the Credit of the Fact depending merely upon the Confession of the Attorney General, if it be received in the present Case, it must be so in every other, whether the Questions relate to Property, or any other Matter; and if it be conclusive to the Noble Lord at the Bar, it is equally so to every Man in this Land. My Lords I admit every Case put by the learned Manager who spoke first, as relative to Criminal Proceedings; but what we insist upon is, That this Confession of the Attorney General does only bind the Crown, and the Parties to it; but binds no other Person: And, my Lords, they have cited no Authority to your Lordships to prove it binding upon any body else. My Lords, it was said by the learned Manager, That if Mr. Murray was brought a second Time into any Court of Justice, he would have the whole Benefit of this Record, and thereby, my Lords, prove himself not attainted by this Act of Parliament: And there is no doubt of it, because the Confession is the Act of the Crown, who is bound by it.

They likewise say, that any Person claiming under Mr. Murray might intitle himself under this Record. My Lords, I admit that also, because such Person would have the same Right as Mr. Murray himself; but, my Lords, that does not prove that it can affect any other Person.

My Lords, it is admitted that a Pardon would have taken off all Objection: But I humbly insist, that by this Method, the Gentleman still con-continues liable to be considered as an attainted Person in another Part of the Kingdom, I mean in Scotland, where this Record would be no Evidence; for should he escape from his present Confinement to Scotland, and be brought into the Court of Justiciary, to shew Cause why Execution should not be awarded against him, as attainted by this Act of Parliament, his Plea in the King's-Bench, confessed by the Attorney General, would be of no Avail to him: He must make out the Fact insisted on by other Proof, which, being Matter of Evidence, might as well come out one Way as the other, that he did not, as that he did, surrender before the 12th of July last; that he was taken by the King's Forces, as that he did surrender himself as the Act requires. Thus your Lordships see, in how high a Degree the Question affects the Noble Lord at the Bar; and your Lordships will be very tender how this Gentleman's Testimony is admitted in a Case of this Nature, until both his Competency and Credit be established by better Authority than the bare Confession of the Attorney General.

My Lords, I mentioned several Instances, where a Record of this Kind would not be Evidence against a third Person: But, say the Gentlemen, that is not the Case here; because my Lord Lovat is not affected by Murray's Attainder. The King, who had the sole Right of prosecuting, and had an Interest in the Attainder, has declared him not to come within the Act of Parliament. But I must submit to your Lordships, that my Lord Lovat is affected by, and concerned in, the Consequence of the Attainder. He has a Right to set aside the Testimony of Mr. Murray, if attainted; and that Right of setting aside his Testimony is equally strong as a Right to an Estate, or any other Right given by Law; and the same Methods must be used to deprive him of the one as the other. My Lords, it is said, That this Method of Confession is the proper Course; that it is daily made use of in that; and the Attorney General, upon a Writ of Error brought, and Errors assigned in Fact, or in Law, may admit them to be so. But, my Lords, in none of the Cases quoted by the Gentlemen is there any, wherein the Attorney General has, by his Confession, made that Error, which is not so: And although the Party should assign Errors, and the Attorney General admit them, yet would not that bind the Court to pronounce them to be Errors, if they appear otherwise. My Lords, as so much Time has been taken up already, I will not repeat any of the former Arguments; but shall conclude with an Observation delivered down to us by one of the greatest and most upright Judges that ever sat in this Hall; I mean my Lord Chief-Justice Vaughan, who tells us, That the artificial Reasoning of Law ought never to take place against the Principles of natural Justice and Equity: And, my Lords, it is a Principle of natural Justice, that a third Person should not be prejudiced by the Acts of others. The same learned Judge concludes his Paragraph, by adding, That in Cases which depend upon fundamental Principles, from whence plain and natural Conclusions may be drawn, Millions of Precedents are to no Purpose: But, my Lords, there has not been one single Precedent laid before your Lordships, where the Right of a third Person may be affected in the Manner now contended for; and as nothing of that Kind has been attempted, I beg leave to insist, That the Right of the Noble Lord at the Bar to set aside this Witness, is as much a Right, as that he has to any Part of his own Estate; and submit therefore to your Lordships, whether they ought not to substantiate this Testimony by some better Proof than so weak a Thing as a Record, founded only on the Suggestion of the Party, confessed by the Attorney General.

L. H. S. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, the Counsel for my Lord Lovat have done with what they had to offer by way of Reply: Would you say any thing to it?

MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL.

My Lords,

IT is said by the Counsel for the noble Lord at the Bar, That they do not deny any Proposition laid down by us; but that they deny the Consequence of those Propositions. My Lords, A Denial of the Premises would be a Denial of the Consequences; but an Admission of the Premises here is an Admission of the Consequences: They now say, all they desire to contend for, is, That the Confession in this Case does not bind a Third Person; and that they shall not by that lose their Right to this Objection. My Lords, What is that Objection founded upon? It is founded upon this Supposition, That the Witness called is an attainted Person. If he is not attainted, their Objection fails; for they cannot say, that he is an improper Person to produce as a Witness, upon any other Ground. If the Record therefore destroys the Pretence of an Attainder, it proves his Competency. Now the Counsel for the Prisoner have not been able to point out, or suggest, any one Instance or Respect, in which he can be said to be, or affected, as an attainted Person, unless for the present single Purpose. And it would be very extraordinary to say, that a Person who can lose neither his Life nor Estate, nor the Purity of his Blood, as a Person attainted of Treason, should be deemed attainted, for no other Purpose but to render him infamous. My Lords, What is the Offence by this Act? It is not High-Treason; the Offence is in not submitting to Justice; and the Record shews, that he did submit himself to Justice. This is stronger, as to that Point, than a Pardon, because it avoids the original Guilt. The Gentlemen say, That this Record cannot be made use of in Scotland; and that if the Witness was brought before a Court of Justice there, for Execution, upon the Foundation of this Act, he could never avail himself of this Record. My Lords, I deny that; and I take it to be clearly otherwise; for what would be the Consequence, if he could not? Much more than the Gentlemen are aware of: For by the same Rule that this Record could not avail him there, no Verdict, no Acquittal in England, could protect a Man from another Prosecution in Scotland, for the same Offence; and the Prisoners who have already had, or hereafter shall receive their Trial, either in England or Scotland, for the late Rebellion, and been acquitted; may, by being sent into the other Part of the Kingdom, be tried a Second Time, and be put twice in Hazard of their Lives. As this is contrary to the Laws of England, I believe it is equally so to the Laws of Scotland, as they stood originally; for I take it to be contrary to the First Principles of all Laws, that after a Man is fairly tried for an Offence, by a Court that has full Cognizance of the Crime, he should be taken up, and tried again for the same Offence. No Law will admit of it. But, with respect to Treason, it is made clear by the Statute of 7 Ann. which makes the Law of Treason, and the Manner of trying it in Scotland, the same as in England. My Lords, if the Gentlemen ask, How this Record may be made use of there? The Method is by producing the Record, or proving a true Copy of it, as is done in Case of the Record of a Judgment of any other Court: And the Judges in Scotland will be bound by this Record. My Lords, the absurd Consequences arising from the contrary Doctrine appear at first Sight; and are too many now to enumerate. The Gentlemen say, That a Confession of an Error in Law will not be admitted in any Court: I do agree that it will not, because the Court must judge upon the Whole of the Record, and determine upon their own Judgment and Knowledge of the Law, whether (supposing all the Facts to be true) there is Error, or not. The Reason is, because that is their proper Province; and they neither want, nor can be bound by, the Confession of the Attorney General. But it is quite otherwise as to Matters of Fact, which the Court do not ex officio examine into themselves; they must take them to be either as they are stated and admitted between the Parties themselves, or appear by the Verdict of a Jury. To apply this to the present Case: Mr. Murray says, That he did surrender, and submit himself to Justice, according to the Act of Parliament. The Attorney General, by Command of his Majesty, admits that Fact: As there is no Issue joined, a Jury can't be summoned to try it; and it is impossible the Court should try it themselves, by examining Witnesses; they have no Commission for it; and the Law gives them no such Power. The Fact, therefore, must be taken to be true; and, as it cannot be now controverted, your Lordships must judge, whether it don't clear him of any Attainder.

Sir JOHN STRANGE.

My Lords,

I SHOULD not now have stood up, to have taken up any more of your Lordships Time, but in regard to what was mentioned by the Gentlemen who are Counsel for the Prisoner, that this Record cannot be made use of in Scotland. My Lords, I will beg Leave to put them in mind of the Statute made in the Seventh Year of Queen Anne; which says, That Trials for High-Treason in that Kingdom are to be the same as if they were here; and whatever Benefit a Person will be intitled to here, they would be equally intitled to there: And therefore I would not have it now taken for granted, that in such Cases, That should not be admitted as Evidence in one Part of the Kingdom, which is Evidence in another Part of it.

Lord Talbot. My Lords, If the Record is now to be read, only to shew, That Mr. Murray surrendered himself within the Time prescribed by the Act, I should have no Objection to the reading of it; but if it is to prove Mr. Murray to be a competent, or an incompetent Evidence, then I think it of that Consequence, that I hope some Lord will move to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, if any Debate arises upon the Point that has been argued at the Bar, your Lordships must adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament, to debate and consider it.

Then the Earl Stanhope moved the House to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament: And the House was adjourned accordingly: And, after about Two Hours, returned in the same Order as before. The House was resumed; and Proclamation made for Silence.

Lord High Steward. The Lords adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament, upon the Question which had been argued before them, Whether the Record of the Court of King's Bench, offered in Evidence by the Managers, ought to be read, or not? And their Lordships have come to the following Resolution; with which I am ordered to acquaint the Managers for the House of Commons, and you, my Lord Lovat: And it is this; That the Managers for the Commons be admitted to prove, and give in Evidence, the Record of the Proceedings in the Court of King's Bench, upon the Certiorari; whereby the Act of the last Session of Parliament, for attainting John Murray of Broughton, and others, unless they surrender themselves by a certain Day therein mentioned, was removed before that Court.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lords, We desire Mr. Tully may be called, to prove the Record.

Lord Lovat. My Lords, I told your Lordships before, that I would give you very little Trouble; and now I am willing to give you still less. I acknowledge the Record; and shall not give your Lordships the Trouble of hearing it proved.

Lord High Steward. That will save the Trouble of proving it; but it must be read. Does your Lordship admit the Record to be read, without further Proof?

Lord Lovat. Yes, if your Lordships please.

Then the Record was read by the Clerk, at the Table; and is as follows:

Pleas before our Lord the King, at Westminster, of Hilary Term, in the Twentieth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the Grace of God, of Great-Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith amongst the Pleas of the King. Roll.
